to further divide the American people. I think we all have to acknowledge that they succeeded."

True outrage

Today, it came from U.S. Sen. Mitt Romney, the 2012 GOP presidential nominee, who said, "I am sickened at the extent and pervasiveness of dishonesty and misdirection by the president. I am also appalled that, among other things, fellow citizens working in a campaign for president welcomed help from Russia — including information that had been illegally obtained; that none of them acted to inform American law enforcement; and that the campaign chairman was actively promoting Russian interests in Ukraine. Reading the report is a sobering revelation of how far we have strayed from the aspirations and principles of the founders."

Perhaps the two potentially most vulnerable Hoosier Republicans in 2020, U.S. Reps. Susan Brooks and Jackie Walorski, were circumspect in their reaction. "I am pleased portions of the report that are legally allowed to be shared are now public and I am reading through Special Counsel Mueller's" Brooks tweeted. Walorski has not made a statement since the report was released a week ago.

Different from Nixon, Clinton sagas

Former congressman Mark Souder, observes the differences between Trump and the Nixon and Clinton impeachment sagas. "The allegations against Trump are scary, but occurred in a campaign by someone not in power. And, so far, no proof exists. No proof," said Souder, who voted for two of four impeachment amendments against President Clinton in 1998. "In Watergate, Nixon was president, used his power and proof existed – it just needed more proof. Bill Clinton was in power, used his power and boxes and boxes of proof existed. Instead the GOP leaders went after Monica because legal proof in a narrow case. Hillary was a sitting secretary of state, former First Lady and her husband still had people stacked in the federal government. Where was the gnashing of teeth on the Clintons from those who are doing so with Trump? Trump was a candidate, and watching for potential was important but this was not like previous cases and certainly not like Nixon, or Clinton. It does not justify behavior, but it is NOT the same. If he did something because of what was proven to have been done in the campaign, not alleged, then it would have more similarities."

Dysfunction and incompetence

Beyond the "Putin wins" acknowledgement, the more deeply disturbing aspect of the Mueller report is the stunning dysfunction and incompetence of the Trump/Pence White House. It goes back to the hours after the historic upset when Trump named Chris Christie as head of the transition team, throwing the binders into the Trump Tower dumpster, and giving the helm over to Pence, who orchestrated arguably the worst transition in presidential history. It was during this transition that Michael Flynn's contacts with the Russians were exposed along with his lying to Pence, and it put Trump on a collision course for allegations of conspiracy when he tried to protect Flynn to the point of dismissing FBI Director Jim Comey, who throughout 2016-17 had etched a dubious history himself.

Trump's actions throughout 2017 and 2018 only furthered the dysfunction. The solo meetings with Russian President Putin, the lack of read-outs to National Intelligence

Director Dan Coats, his verbal assaults on NATO and the European Union, his tariffs aimed at allies and foes alike, and his policy decisions (e.g., Syrian withdrawal) seemed to match up perfectly with Putin's diabolical playbook. My colleague Craig Dunn (see page 7) can take a shotgun "attempted coup d'état" approach to all of us who wondered what the hell was really going on, but it was Trump himself who stoked the conspiracy blazes. (Most of us prefer that coup d'états remain in the banana republic realm.)

As I noted last week, Mueller made two damning points as the acknowledgment that the Russians succeeded: "Although the investigation established that the Russian government perceived it as an opportunity from a Trump presidency and worked to secure that outcome, and that the campaign expected it to benefit financially from information stolen and released through Russian efforts, the investigation did not establish that members of the Trump Campaign conspired or coordinated with the Russian government in its election interference activities."

The second surveyed the Trumpian incompetence: "The president's efforts to conduct the investigation were mostly unsuccessful, but that is largely because the persons who surrounded the president declined to carry out orders or accede to his requests," Mueller concluded.

11 guardrails

There were at least 11 Trump administration officials who defied the president's orders to obstruct, spread over the course of his presidency. Mueller described 10 of them. These include Counsel Don McGahn, who refused Trump's orders to fire Mueller, and Coats, who refused to intercede and get the FBI probe halted. The full list is a who's who of the nascent Trump presidency, from Reince Priebus, to Corey Lewandowski, to Attorney General Jeff Sessions, to Rick Dearborn, K.T. McFarland, Rob Porter and Chris Christie.

These are the people described as "guardrails" and all but Coats are gone. Some believe Pence may be the ultimate barrier to keep Trump in reality, but that's speculation at this point.

Trump pushed on the institutional guardrails that may have saved his presidency. "Nobody disobeys my orders," Trump said Monday morning at the White House Easter Egg Roll. It's as if Trump is the only one not in on the joke. But we've seen this play out over and over, with Trump denying reality even as past videos and tweets provide the words emanating from him.

If Republicans are jubilation over such demonstrated incompetence, then that itself is a troubling portrayal of where the American body politic stands today. Or as Fox News judicial analyst Judge Andrew Napolitano observed, "Depending on how you look at them, there might be enough to prosecute, but the attorney general has decided it's not enough to prosecute. But it did show a venal, amoral, deceptive Donald Trump, instructing his aides to lie and willing to help them do so. That's not good in the president of the United States."

We've come a long, long way – as has Mike Pence – since he observed at the time of the Clinton presidency, writing, "If you and I fall into bad moral habits, we can harm our families, our employers and our friends. The president of the United States can incinerate the planet. Seriously, the very idea that we ought to have at or less than the same moral demands placed on the chief executive that we place on our next door neighbor is ludicrous and dangerous. Throughout our history, we have seen the presidency as the repository of all of our highest hopes and ideals and values. To demand less is to do an injustice to the blood that bought our freedoms."

This Mueller report comment shaped many of the headlines last week: "The evidence we obtained about the president's actions and intent presents difficult issues that would need to be resolved if we were making a traditional prosecutorial judgment. At the same time, if we had conducted enough investigation of the facts that the president clearly did not commit obstruction of justice, we would so state. Based on the facts and the applicable legal standards, we are unable to reach that judgment."

Mueller punts to Congress

Mueller punted this question to Congress, and if Democrats such as Sen. Elizabeth Warren get their wish and launch impeachment proceedings against President Trump, it will likely result in his reelection. Trump comes out of the Mueller end-sequence in precarious political position: His approval was just 39% in a Morning Consult Politico poll with 57% disapproving. But only 34% favor impeaching Trump, with 48% saying Congress shouldn't go there.

Unless further information beyond the outlined, Keystone Cops obstruction attempts surfaces, impeachment would be an epic fool's errand. With Republican support holding, the House passing impeachment resolutions will only result in a Senate acquittal. As Republicans learned in 1998 and 1999, President Bill Clinton actually came out ahead when that story played out.

Still, an array of dangers face President Trump. House Democrats will subpoena Mueller to testify soon, and his written report will be augmented by answers to questions on how and why he came to his conclusions. Such testimony on the Part II obstruction segment of the report may not be the catalyst for a move to impeachment, but would certainly add to Trump's emerging problem of mendacity and incompetence.

Mueller also dished off aspects of his work to 14 other investigations in New York and Virginia. Some of these could be tied to the payoffs to porn star Stormy Daniels, as well as the Trump Organization, the Inaugural Committee and Jared Kushner's various business interests and security clearance.

For Americans who loathe the cycle of investigation, the Trump presidency will be dogged by them to its conclusion. President Trump now extends to Congress. He is seeking to prevent McGahn from testifying and Treasury is resisting the release of his tax returns. Court battles and a potential constitutional showdown loom. While Trump declared a "Game Over" worthy of a Winterfell slaughter, this saga will continue on and on.

Foreign interference

The most compelling question for Democrats, Republicans and independents is the notion of foreign interference in presidential campaigns.

It's happened before. John Fund of "National Review" reminds us of the 1996 Chinese fundraising scandal involving President Clinton's reelection effort. A 1998 Senate Government Affairs Committee report on the scandal found "strong circumstantial evidence" that a great deal of foreign money had illegally entered the country in an attempt to influence the election.

As a result, Clinton was forced to give back more than $2.8 million in illegal or improper donations from foreign nationals.

So this means that twice in the past two decades, Chinese and Russian money and subterfuge impacted American presidential races. It was dangerous in 1996 and 2016. And it will be perilous in 2020, as well.

President Trump's lawyer Rudy Giuliani said Sunday on CNN's State of the Union, "There's nothing wrong with taking information from Russians. It depends on where it came from. You're assuming that the giving of information is a campaign contribution." When host Jake Tapper pressed Giuliani, the former mayor explained, "There's no crime. We're going to get into morality? That isn't what prosecutors look at — morality."

It is that morality poses the most compelling question facing the American people and Congress. We've been consumed by two years of incompetence and rogue behavior that is now being institutionalized and, perhaps, funded and impacted by foreign adversaries.

As I asked last week, is this our new reality? Is it acceptable? ❖

Gov. Eric Holcomb lauded the gains, saying, "I want to commend Speaker Bosma and Senator Bray for their extraordinary leadership, and a job well done to their members and staffs. With the investments we'll make over the next two years, we'll be able to make our strong state, even more so. We balanced our budget for the eighth straight time and protected our AAA credit rating. We're making historic investments in K-12 education, expanding our school safety efforts, and implementing all the recommendations to improve our child services. We are strengthening our already transformational road and rail programs, doubling down on our Next Level Jobs programs, and connecting more Hoosiers to affordable broadband service. We passed a bias crimes law and modernized our tax code. We'll help more babies roll." ys. Indiana is on a

Republicans cite education gains

Republicans are touting the budget as a historic success for K-12 public education in Indiana, and for teacher pay. From the start of session, the GOP was promising a budget that could deliver an immediate response to teacher pay concerns. With teachers resorting to walkouts in other states and recent data showing Indiana lagging behind its neighbors, the teacher pay issue was one that the General Assembly simply could not ignore.

ly, Republicans cite the additional K-12 tuition support in the budget, expansion of Teacher Appreciation Grants, and new savings brought on by the state's one-time payment toward the post-'96 Teacher Retirement Fund, combined with a bill encouraging schools to increase their ratio of education-to-facilities spending. They say these measures will free up enough money for teachers to see substantive raises in the short term. But GOP leadership, including the governor, have admitted that work on a systemic solution will need to come in sessions to follow.

Bosma said, "This session marks a historic win for rural, urban and suburban public schools as lawmakers worked hard to increase our commitment to K-12 education by $763 million in new state dollars."

For their part, Democrats argued all session that Republican efforts on teacher pay contained no guarantee of actual salary increases and thus fell short. They also repeatedly pointed out that while some school districts would indeed see money freed up under the GOP plan, many struggling districts, particularly in smaller communities, would receive minimal increases.

Teacher pay wasn't the only hot-button education issue though, as last year's shooting at a Noblesville middle school heightened efforts to strengthen protections for schools. Republicans had a priority school safety bill ys of session.

That bill mainly dealt with the establishment of parameters for the School Safety Grant Fund to provide mental health services for students. After passing the House in half of session, the mental health language would be removed in the Senate as a response to concerns over parental consent. Although bill author Rep. Wendy McNamara had the original language r er-ence committee report approved by both chambers left it out.

Another Republican effort on school safety that struggled was Rep. Jim Lucas' bill which would have allowed school corporations to arm and train teachers. The bill stayed alive y but faltered in conference committee. The conferees were ultimately unable to come to an agreement over which employees should be subject to training requirements. The idea will surely be back; it's becoming increasingly popular among conservatives.

The question of passing a meaningful hate crime statute, or simply what a meaningful statute would even be, dominated discussions for several weeks in the General Assembly. A long-time wedge issue in the Statehouse, it was anti-Semitic grafayed at a Carmel synagogue last July that gave rise to enough political pressure to see the legislature pass i e in over a decade.

This issue had a particularly up-and-down journey at the Statehouse. After taking on two very different forms in the Senate, House Republicans opted to disregard the initial measure, Senate Bill 12, altogether. Instead, they inserted Rep. Greg Steuerwald's "compromise" language into a separate bill. The compromise aspect lies in the fact that i ist of protections, but instead references an already existing list from Indiana's civil rights law, satisfying concerns of most of the rural Republicans.

Republicans heard criticisms on multiple fronts f oduct, with Democrats and some advocacy groups saying they didn't go far enough on protections, some conservative groups saying they went too far by employing enumerations, and others criticizing their procedural methods. The only version of a bias crime statute to receive public testimony, or even just a committee hearing, was the original form of SB12. Both of the most curred e there was very little actual debate. That drew ire both inside and outside the Statehouse. Still, Republican leadership stood behind the new sentencing guideline as a win for the state and a long-lasting solution.

Gaming compromise

On gaming, despite some late doubts, conferees were able to arrive at a compromise and get another of the session's headline-grabbing bills out in time for sine die. The bill had some predictable drama attached to it, even in the days of the session, but the version passed by both chambers late Wednesday turned out very similar to the initial conference committee report released Monday morning.

Still, the signal upon the bill's passage wasn't that the continuity meant it would be a few days, and it certainly didn't have an easy session. The man who carried the bill in the House, Rep. Todd Huston, ended up voting against his own bill in a 59-36 tally. Most of the controversy on the bill revolved around the casino aspect of the bill, though the sports wagering half also underwent some back-and-forth. In particular, hold-harmless provisions and how to handle the potential move of a casino to Terre Haute were the focal point of debate.

Huston had stripped the bill of its original hold-harmless language for payments from Gary to Hammond, East Chicago, and Michigan City when it came to Ways

State Rep. Regan Hatcher, D-Gary, makes an appeal on the gaming

& Means, expressing his preference that the state should not be involved. The language was later reinserted in conference committee, and also extended to include the city of Evansville. The conference committee also imposed a $20 million fee for one Gary casino to move inland to Vigo County, payable over five years, but tacked on a $40 million tax credit for the casino operator. Huston's version of the bill, which passed the House, had the fee at a one-time $50 million payment and contained no tax credit.

Legislators in both chambers were also keen to pass another big-money bill on Marion County's Capital Improvement Board this session, with hotels, the Indiana Pacers, and a soccer stadium as the big-ticket items. The bill had a fairly smooth ride through the Senate but concerns from Indy's hotel industry led to major changes in the House. The state was pulled out of any discussions of bringing new hotels to Indianapolis, but the end result of the rest of the bill remained largely the same: The Pacers will stay in Indy, the CIB has funding to seek further downtown improvements, and a soccer stadium is likely on the way.

Bosma and Bray both noted the CIB bill's passage as a major economic success in their closing remarks for the session. ❖

The coup d'état has been averted

By CRAIG DUNN

KOKOMO — The reader may be assured that I enjoy writing on this subject with the same joy and anticipation that one approaches a visit to the dentist. There are days when I would much rather be a sports commentator than one who slices and dices politics. If I were a sports commentator, this week's column would have been about the collapse of the Indiana Pacers in the NBA playoffs.

Alas, instead, I will tackle the attempted coup d'état orchestrated by elements in the former Obama Administration, Democrat operatives, the media and, regrettably, the United States Department of Justice.

Before I begin, I'd like to remind you that I am not a diehard fan of Donald Trump. In fact, I famously (or infamously) declared in the lead-up to the Indiana presidential primary in 2016 that the only way I could vote for Donald Trump would be if his opponent was Satan himself. (Note to self: Be very careful what you say to a national journalist at the end of a long, long interview.)

Needless to say, I found Satan in the form of Hillary Clinton and I cheerfully cast my general election vote for President Donald Trump. That being said, I do not condone, approve, like, admire or support many of the things that the man Donald Trump has said or done both before and after his election as our president. In fact, much of Mr. Trump's behavior has made me want to gag. However, I have learned to separate the conduct of Trump the man from Trump the president.

As president, Donald Trump has done a fairly admirable job. In the areas that are truly important such as the economy, our national defense, judicial appointments and reducing the mindboggling bureaucratic snafus that plague American business, President Trump's tenure has been very good.

This brings me to the sad and troubling realization that the United States has just survived a coup d'état aimed at destroying the president.

Fortunately, this coup has failed. In most countries, the perpetrators would have been taken out back of the Marine barracks in Washington, D. C., and shot. In South America, the principal architects of the coup would have just been disappeared. But, hey, this is America and in America we will make celebrities of the perpetrators, give them guest slots on CNN and the late-night talk shows. None of this rogues gallery of nefarious characters will be forced to slither into the trash heap of history as they should.

Let's start at the very beginning. The sole focus of the Robert Mueller investigation was to be collusion between the Trump campaign and the Russian government. The basis for launching this investigation and obtaining FISA warrants was the dubious "Steele Dossier," the salacious political hit piece written for Fusion GPS and later sold to the Democrat National Committee and the Clinton campaign.

Please understand this: The two-year-long, $35 million special investigation of President Trump was launched by a Democrat-purchased and -provided political hit piece joyfully supplied by a Fusion GPS employee, Democrat Nellie Ohr, to her husband, Bruce Ohr, a high-r or misconduct. Ohr delivered the document to disgraced, ed former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe. McCabe assigned the investigation to rabid anti-Trump FBI Assistant Deputy Director Peter Strz ed for his undisclosed anti-Trump emails between him and his girlfriend, FBI counsel Lisa Page. Mueller dumped Strzok from his investigation because of the conspiratorial nature of the pillow talk emails with Page, including the reference to an "insurance policy" to get rid of Trump should Trump defeat Clinton.

Summary: The Mueller investigation occurred because of a bogus dossier provided by Hillary Clinton's allies to their allies in the Justice Department who abused their power in an attempt to bring down the presidency of Donald Trump. This is criminal and treasonous, regardless of what you think about President Trump.

What was the fruit of the exhaustive investigation recently concluded by the special prosecutor? No collusion with the Russians and no obstruction of justice. Case closed.

Well, the case is not closed. The usual Democrat suspects in Congress, big money men and the media just will not write this sad situation off as another failed political strategy. They intend to use every tool at their disposal to remove or irreparably injure President Trump before the 2020 presidential election.

Facts and the truth be damned, the destruction of the president is a worthy end to their despicable means. Niccolo Machiavelli would be proud of his Democrat dis-principles and their dedication to results over truth.

The case is not closed on the investigation of the men and women who dredged up a Democrat-paid-for dossier and used it to illegally obtain FISA warrants and begin the process of intimidation and legal arm-twisting that led a litany of supporting characters to cop pleas. The Constitution was abused and twisted to suit the political ends of the Democrats. Light needs to be shown into the corners of the Justice Department and we all need to see the roaches run. Failure to fully investigate this abuse of the Justice Department will only lead to more egregious abuses in the future.

The American form of government only works because of an adherence to the rule of law. Once that principle is trashed, other forms of abuse and injustice will become prevalent and the rule of law falls to the wicked, then our country will become no better than some banana republic.

Yes, I understand that many of you wanted Hillary Clinton as president. I understand that you hate Donald Trump for his immigration policies, personal behavior, court appointments, tax cuts, economic success and his Electoral College victory. I get it. You hate him with a purple passion. Message received.

The question to be asked now is, "Do you hate Donald Trump more than you love your country and the Constitution?" The answer to this question will ultimately decide the fate of our nation. God be with us on this one!

Biden's entry becomes a big test for Buttigieg

By BRIAN A. HOWEY

NASHVILLE, Ind. — Perhaps the most important element in Mayor Pete Buttigieg's presidential fortunes becomes a reality today. Former Vice President Joe Biden kicked off his campaign with a video shot in Scranton, Pa.

How his campaign fares could determine whether Mayor Pete ends up with the Democratic nomination or is consigned as a veep nominee, a future cabinet member or an ex-mayor looking for think-tank work.

Biden's campaign launch ends a tormented pre-candidacy period in which we've watched the deliberations include family angst, age considerations and whether the Obama/Biden vision is still viable in leftward-veering Democratic politics. But it sets up the crux of Buttigieg's generational campaign where his polling surges have been prompted by his JFK "pass the torch" mantra.

It's working thus far. Buttigieg is third in national, Iowa and New Hampshire polling. Gravis Marketing has Buttigieg in third in Iowa with 14%, trailing Bernie Sanders and Biden at 19%. The Granite Poll in New Hampshire has Sanders leading with 30%, followed by Biden at 18% and Buttigieg at 15%. That is remarkable: The mayor of South Bend trails a two-term vice president by just 3%. In a national Monmouth University poll, Biden led with 27%, Sanders was at 20% and Buttigieg was at 8%, up from 1% in March.

"If Biden does enter the race this week, he starts off with a fairly stable amount of good will from Democrats," said Monmouth pollster Patrick Murray. "We might even expect to see a small bump after his announcement, but the bigger question will be what happens when those voters start taking a closer look at him on the campaign trail. It's a long way to Iowa and a lot can happen. This is the most divisive presidential candidates in history, but that doesn't seem to be a major consideration for Democratic voters at this early stage of the campaign. It's probably a large reason why a couple of old white guys are leading the pack right now."

Old white guys haven't fared well in Democratic presidential races in the past. John F. Kennedy, Bill Clinton and Barack Obama all won nominations in their 40s, and Lyndon Johnson and Jimmy Carter were in their early- to mid-50s when they took power.

Former vice presidents don't do well either. Only two of six vice presidents have won the presidency since World War II, Republicans George H.W. Bush and Richard Nixon (in a second attempt). Democrat veeps Hubert Humphrey, Walter Mondale and Al Gore all lost presidential races, and Dan Quayle's 2000 quest ended early, well short of the nomination that went to George W. Bush.

"There's a lot of talk about what lane he's in," a Democratic strategist told The Hill of Biden. "Is he a moderate or a progressive? I think he's trying to be above the fray and above all that."

Therein lies the "lane similarities" between Biden and Buttigieg. Both are likely to campaign as "storytellers" as opposed to trotting out white paper exercises such as the Green New Deal or Medicare for All that would invite criticism.

NBC's "Meet The Press" head explained on Wednesday, "Being a current or former vice president is a real advantage when it comes to name ID, raising money and cutting the downside is that you don't get to be the new/fresh/different candidate. You own the bad (as well as the good) of the administration you served. And you have a harder time portraying yourself as a change agent. And those potential downsides could end up being Biden's biggest challenges in 2020 – more than age, ideology and a long, long record in public service."

So if Joe Biden falters, it will be Mayor Buttigieg best positioned to pick up support, particularly with the considerable angst that a Sanders nomination would play right into President Trump's wheelhouse of running against a "socialist." Don't underestimate the generational pull that Buttigieg is touting as he works Iowa and New Hampshire.

Buttigieg is also taking aim at Sanders, saying, "I have a hard time seeing the coalition ultimately coming together there," adding that in 2016 "people were refreshed by the novelty of that boldness" of Sanders's ideas, but that they are now less excited.

Buttigieg's week since he kicked off his campaign on April 14 saw him presiding over Dyngus Day celebrations in South Bend on Monday, then to a second CNN Town Hall that night. Appearing at Dyngus Day, Buttigieg said, "In so many ways, South Bend is our message. This is the story of a city that changed its future, changed its trajectory." During his CNN Town Hall Monday night, Buttigieg said President Trump "deserves impeachment" and added, "God doesn't have a political party."

"My role in the process is trying to relegate 'Trumpism' to the dust bin of history," Buttigieg said on CNN. "To me there is no more decisive way to do that, especially to make Republicans abandon this deal with the devil they've made, than by an absolute thumping at the ballot box."

NBC News is reporting that Democratic rivals are now seeking "dirt" on the mayor in South Bend. Thus far the "dirt" includes the South Bend police tape controversy, Police Chief Daryl

Bo 1,000 zombie homes his administration razed in an effort to deal with blight. None of that rises to the so-called silver bullet category. Having said that, running a city can be a complex, even messy endeavor. We've seen mayors running statewide who failed to advance due to pragmatic stances such as tax and fee increases, or how a controversy has been handled. So, this will be a "stay tuned" aspect of the Buttigieg candidacy.

On the police tape incident, Buttigieg said on CNN that he has not heard the tapes. "These tape recordings were made in a way that may have violated the federal wiretap act," he explained. "I'm not going to violate it even though I want to know what's on those tapes like everybody else does."

Indiana Republican Chairman Kyle Hupfer called on Buttigieg to immediately release the hidden tapes at the center of a seven-year long court battle over the city's former African-American police chief, following a new court ruling that the case can now proceed to trial. "Mayor Buttigieg has wasted millions of taxpayer dollars in a seven-year effort to keep these tapes secret and hidden from the public," said Hupfer. "This court battle has gone on long enough and cost far too much. Mayor Buttigieg should release the tapes immediately before it costs the city even a penny more."

Just days after becoming mayor of South Bend, Police Chief

Boykins. Boykins v Buttigieg, while the South Bend Common Council has also fought to make the tapes public.

Parallel between Biden and Buttigieg is that both are now in the process of building out national campaigns. Biden has run twice before and has a reputation of lagging in fundraising and stump speech faux pas. A lot of Democratic talent has migrated to some of the other 20 candidates, so Biden will be under pressure to perform, quickly.

The AP reported that Buttigieg is now under the gun to build a viable national campaign apparatus: "There are no policy positions on his website. He has virtually no paid presence in the states that matter most. And his campaign manager is a high school friend with no experience in presidential politics. Welcome to the campaign of Pete Buttigieg, the 37-year-old Indiana mayor who has suddenly become one of the hottest names in the Democrats' presidential primary season. Yet there is an increasing urgency, inside and outside of the campaign, that his moment may pass if he doesn't take swift action to build a national organization capable of harnessing the energy he'll need to sustain his surge in the nine months or so before votes are cast."

strategic content creation and deployment

In the AP interview, Buttigieg conceded that his supporters across the country have essentially had to "organize themselves" so far. "We need to make sure we have the organizational strengths to sustain this wave of support that we've been getting for the last almost month and a half now," he said. "It's created some challenges to rise this far this fast, but I would put those in the category of a good problem to have."

Politico reported today that While Biden's campaign manager, Greg Schultz, led Obama's campaign efforts in swing-state Ohio, Beto O'Rourke hired Obama's 2012 deputy campaign manager Jennifer O'Malley Dillon and has enjoyed the support of Paul Tewes, the 2008 Obama campaign's director in the nation Iowa. Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren signed Joe Rospars, Obama's chief digital strategist in 2008 and 2012, and Emily Parcell, political director for Obama's 2008 Iowa caucus team. Several top former Obama administrators contributed to Pete Buttigieg.

So Joe and Pete will build, hope followers will come, and will likely compete in the so-called same lane. It may take a June debate moment with the two on the same stage that catalyzes their future trajectories.

Biden enters the race this morning

After months of deliberation, former Vice President Joe Biden announced his decision to run for president for a third time this morning with this video, answering one of the biggest outstanding questions about the makeup of the 2020 race. The video begins with Biden talking about Charlottesville, Va., invoking both Thomas Jefferson and neo-Nazi protests in 2017. "That's when we heard the words of the president of the United States ... who said 'there are some values that are more important than winning.' He said Trump created 'a moral equivalency' between haters and those who resist. 'If we give Donald Trump eight years in the White House' it will 'fundamentally undermine all the core values of the nation.' Later today, Biden will attend a fundraiser in Philadelphia, Pa. On Monday, he will hold his event in Pittsburgh, Pa. followed by a swing through early voting states like Iowa, New Hampshire, and South Carolina in the coming weeks. ❖

Mayor Pete's final Dyngus dalliance

By JACK COLWELL

SOUTH BEND – Mayor Pete was presented with a "POTUS Pete" shirt, bright red letters on white, as he was introduced Monday at Dyngus Day festivities at the West Side Democratic & Civic Club.

Some in the enthusiastic crowd packing the old club, traditional center for Dyngusing and where Bobby Kennedy campaigned for president, were initially unsure of the meaning of the lettering, referring to Washington alphabet lingo for President of the United States.

But they all knew that South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg is making a big splash nationally in his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for president. And they couldn't miss all the national news media coverage, TV camera crews and all.

Buttigieg told the crowd that he had urged journalists covering his events in Iowa and New Hampshire and elsewhere to come to South Bend for Dyngus Day to witness the celebrated event in his hometown.

What day? What is it? They didn't know. And the mayor told them: "You've just got to see it and you'll understand."

The Monday-after-Easter event has been celebrated for well over a century in Polish-American neighborhoods on South Bend's west side, with traditions traced back to Poland. Now, it's celebrated all over the area. It's sort of a Polish version of St. Patrick's Day; ethnic food (kielbasa) and music (polka) and abundant liquid refreshment, plus conviviality and crowds that bring campaigning candidates to meet one on one with voters.

Buttigieg called it "politics at its best." Easy to see why Buttigieg welcomed national coverage. Cheers of "Pete, Pete, Pete" came as he mentioned the presidency. He's at the height of his popularity here in his eighth year as mayor, and it didn't hurt to have the national news media around to see the enthusiastic support in the city he has made so much a part of his campaign.

"South Bend is our message," he told the crowd. Indeed, a central part of his campaign theme is that his city, with a new spirit, has moved on from the decades of gloom and "can't-do" despair after the demise of Studebaker automotive production. He stressed that he never made a Trump-like only-I-can-do-it claim or suggested that he turned around the city single-handedly.

"We grew together," the mayor said, referring to the growth of economic developments, jobs and population in the city and his own growth in political stature to rank among top contenders for the presidential nomination.

"South Bend is back," he declared, setting off more cheers and applause.

"Let the rest of the country learn from the city's story," he said. "Can I count on you to tell the real story . . . ?" They shouted ely. And most of the local residents interviewed by the national news media provided positive evaluations of the mayor and his policies. But not all.

Criticism of the mayor in quotes from Regina Williams-Preston, a council member seeking the Democratic nomination for mayor in the May primary, appear in numerous national accounts. She is highly critical of what had generally been hailed as a remarkable achievement, ver 1,000 empty and deteriorating homes in 1,000 days. Williams-Preston and some other African-Americans contend that the effort did not result in more affordable housing or better living in lower-income neighborhoods.

He does have the support of other prominent blacks, including City Clerk Kareemah Fowler ri- can-American elected to that post after Buttigieg provided key support for her in winning an election contest with a whi e regarded as the favorite.

It was a long Dyngus Day for Buttigieg. He went to a Dyngus site at 5 a.m. for TV interviews. Then, more interviews with national news organizations before going in late morning to unveil a "Solidarity Day" street sign at the site of the city's Solidarity Day observance, an African-American event held on Dyngus Day since 1971. It was started back then by blacks who didn't feel welcome at some Dyngus sites and decided to hold their own event and welcome all candidates to attend.

He also unveiled a "Dyngus Day" street sign at the West Side Democratic Club and spoke there at the traditional noon introduction of candidates - only Democratic candidates are introduced. Immediately after speaking, But e for a live CNN town hall meeting from 11 p.m. until midnight.

Some at the Dyngus event wondered why the mayor didn't skip it this year in order to prepare for and arrive fresh for his national TV appearance on CNN. He stressed, however, not only the importance he placed on showing off Dyngus Day for the national news media but also how appearing at the club for his eighth yor "is emotional for me." He noted how the Dyngus attendees at the club always "were there for me" in his political activities, to welcome him home from active duty in Afghanistan and to back him in the personal decision to come out as gay and be married.

His husband, Chasten Buttigieg, who has become an effective campaigner and political celebrity in his own right, joined the mayor on the platform and received applause, long and loud. Such a warm reception likely would not have occurred there 20 years ago or even 10.

Buttigieg concluded with a promise: "No matter what happens . . . South Bend will always be home."

Whether he will be home for Dyngus Day in 2021 as POTUS Pete or VP Pete or Secretary of Something Pete or just as former Mayor Pete will be determined over the presidential marathon that has just begun. ❖

Another twist in Carmel mayoral race

By BRIAN A. HOWEY

INDIANAPOLIS — The Republican Carmel mayoral primary has become, well, just weird. Clerk-Treasurer Christine Pauley accused Mayor Jim Brainard of inappropriate email she-nanigans.

"I have a peer who am I supposed to work with and looked to as a mentor who I have presenting these types of emails to me," Pauley told WTHR-TV's Scoop Jefferson.

"It's inappropriate. It's inappropriate."

Brainard's team quickly produced a photo of the mayor and Pauley in a warm embrace. "The clerk-treasurer is leaning in close with her hand on his back whispering in his ear. That was on May 2, during a national campaign stop," said city spokeswoman Nancy Heck. "It seems clear at city hall they were interested in developing a relationship more than professionally."

These allegations come on top of a complaint by Hamilton County Democratic Chairman Joe Weingarten that Brainard attempted to "bribe" Fred Glynn from running in the primary. "It's been alleged that Mayor Brainard's campaign offered a bribe to have his opponent Fred Glynn not run against him," charged Democrat Party Chairman Joe Weingarten.

Fox59 reported in late March, "There was a guy who was supposed to be representing me in that meeting.

His name is Dan Hennessey," said Glynn. "He went to discuss polling numbers. He came back and said he saw the polling numbers. It didn't say anything in the polling numbers but he said that they were willing to offer me $140,000 in campaign cash to not run in the mayor's race."

The Hamilton County Election Board will investigate the claim on May 14, a week after the primary.

At a Carmel meet-up this past week, the two candidates made a joint appearance. Brainard made his pitch, saying that he has added 1,000 acres of parkland, 200 miles of trails since he w we've built the safest street network in the country." He said "our debt is reasonable" while Carmel is home to 125 corporate headquarters. He also noted that Carmel had 11 armed robberies last year, and "we caught all 11 of them." He said the roundabout network has reduced personal injuries by 80%.

Glynn, a Hamilton County councilman said, "After 24 years, we need new leadership. I think we're putting all our eggs in one basket and we're putting all our debt downtown when other areas need attention. We need mor esponsibility in this city." Primary Horse Race Status: Likely Brainard.

South Bend: Mueller has big money lead

South Bend voters will see eight names on the Democratic ballot for mayor in the May 7 primary election, but two candidates have stood out from the pack in raising money for their campaigns (Parrott, South Bend Tribune). James Mueller outpaced the by a hefty margin, raising nearly $245,000 between Jan. 1 and April 12, according eports that candidates were required le by Monday. That was followed by Jason Critchlow's $139,000. Critchlow's campaign spent slightly more than Mueller's, about $98,000 compared to $91,000 spent by Mueller, meaning Mueller was left with about $153,000 cash on hand, compared to Critchlow's $40,000, entering the campaign' ailed in terms of fundraising: Lynn Coleman reported raising more than $19,000, with nearly $11,000 of that coming as a transfer from his failed congressional campaign in 2016.

Regina Williams-Preston raised about $16,600, while Oliver Davis raised about $15,300. Mueller said his fundraising lead shows that "we're getting our message out." "I didn't have a lot of name ID and hadn't ever run for public office before this," Mueller said. "I'm proud to have a lot of support from folks who realize this is a critical moment in our history and we need to keep building on the progress."

Primary Horse Race Status: Tossup

Buttigieg gave Mueller more than $100k

"Pete for South Bend," a holdover from Buttigieg's mayoral and Democratic National Committee chair campaigns, gave James Mueller's campaign $54,500 — $50,000 cash and $4,500 worth of polling service (South Bend Tribune). Three people each gave Mueller $5,000: Michael Browning, chairman of Indianapolis-based Browning Investments; Bob Urbanski, retired South Bend businessman and longtime local Democratic Party funder; and Chris Murphy, 1st Source Bank chairman and CEO.

Muncie: Republicans debate

Republican candidates for mayor of Muncie discussed the relationship between Ball State University and the city, changes to EMS service, the use of TIF districts and more at Tuesday night's debate (Ohlenkamp, Muncie Star Press). All three Republican candidates — Tom Bracken, Dan Ridenour and Nate Jones — participated in Tuesday's debate. Ridenour pushed the need for bipartisan support in tackling city issues. "We understand we are in a minority and we have to work together," Ridenour said. He added that working in the minority party on city council taught him how to look beyond someone's party when trying to improve the city. Ridenour is one of only two Republicans currently on Muncie City Council, but from around with Democrat council members. Jones stressed the need to talk to the whole city. According to Jones, he has not made a decision based on political stances and didn't plan to if he took office. Bracken said there was already a strong want from certain factions of the Democrat they saw in city hall. He believed that both parties had one goal in mind and that is to make a better Muncie. Primary Horse Race Status: Leans Ridenour.

Indianapolis: Hogsett has cash lead

Democratic Mayor Joe Hogsett outraised his top Republican challenger, State Sen. Jim Merritt, by a nearly three-to-one margin in campaign reports (Colombo, IBJ). Hogsett pulled in $769,022 from the beginning of January to April 12, while Merritt raised $266,939 during that period. Hogsett's take gives the Democrat an even greater fundraising edge for the fall municipal election when the two will likely compete head-to-head, assuming Merritt is successful in the May primary election for Republicans. With first-quarter results, Hogsett's cash-on-hand total is $3.88 million, which the Hogsett campaign says is a "record" for any mayoral pre-primary election in the history of Indianapolis." Meanwhile, Merritt's cash-on-hand is $223,960. That's substantially less than the Republican challenger raised in roughly the same amount of time in 2015, when then-candidate Chuck Brewer raised $671,730 from Jan. 1, 2015, to April 1, 2015.

Anderson: Mayor Broderick posts $222k

The four candidates seeking to replace Democrat Thomas Broderick Jr. as mayor of Anderson have raised a total that's 10% of the incumbent's funds. The campaign reports were due at the Madison County Clerk's Office on Monday (de la Bastide, Anderson Herald-Bulletin). Broderick started the reporting period that runs from Jan. 1 through April 19 with $180,827 cash-on-hand. The Broderick campaign reported spending $11,765 leaving a cash balance of $222,234. Longtime Republican farmer Herb Likens contributed $5,000 to Broderick's campaign. The campaign received a $1,000 donation from Greg Winkler, executive director of the Anderson Economic Development Department; $750 from John Paugh, president of Carter Express; $500 from John Brand; and $5,000 from Broderick's opponent in the Democrat Party primary on May 7 is Terry May. May reported itemized contributions of $2,552 and nonitemized donations of $3,350. May's campaign has spent $4,344 leaving a cash balance of $1,558. The campaign received $2,069 from Dan's Fish, $1,280 from Ann Chamberlain and $995 from C&H Signs. On the Republican primary ballot, there are three mayoral candidates. Primary Horse Race Status: Safe Broderick.

Anderson: Smith has narrow money lead

Former Mayor Kevin Smith, Madison County Auditor Rick Gardner and JobSource Director JoAnna Collette are all seeking their party's nomination (Anderson Herald-Bulletin). Gardner's campaign reported contributions of $8,387 and expenditures of $8,008, leaving cash on hand of $381. Gardner has spent $7,437 on the campaign. Smith reported starting the year with $2,109 for the campaign and received donations of $3,744. The campaign has $4,400 currently after spending $1,453. Collette has provided all $1,800 for her campaign and has spent $1,491, leaving a balance of $309. Primary Horse Race Status: Tossup.

Terre Haute: Bennett has cash advantage

Prospective Democratic challenger Karrum Nasser outraised and outspent Republican Mayor Duke Bennett in reporting period for the 2019 municipal election (Terre Haute Tribune-Star). But a starting balance of more than $139,000 gives the Duke Bennett for Mayor Commit a cash advantage, according to campaign reports for the period Jan. 1 through April 12. Bennett has no opponent in the May 7 primary. The three-term incumbent raised $2,700 and spent $875.34 during the period, giving him a balance of $141,056.52. Nasser began the year with $137.40, raised $4,350 and spent $3,715.75, giving him a balance of $771.65. He listed campaign debts totaling $4,212.71.

Valparaiso: Murphy has GOP money lead

Valparaiso City Councilman Matt Murphy doesn't have a challenger in next month's municipal primary election, but he's out-raised and out-spent both of his potential opponents in the city's November mayoral race (Russell, NWI Times). Murphy, a Republican, will vie against either Democrat Councilwoman Debora Porter or businessman Bill Durnell in November to replace present Mayor Jon Costas in the city's top role. Costas, a Republican, is not seeking reelection. Murphy report period with more than $70,000 cash-on-hand. Since Jan. 1, he's raised $23,500 and spent more than $28,000, according to the latest reports. Porter began the report period with just less than $4,000 in her campaign fund. She raised $880 and has spent $320. Durnell, who is new to politics and began with no funds, has raised just more than $10,000 and spent about $4,800. Primary Horse Race Status: Leans Murphy.

Portage: Tight Democrat primary race

In Portage, four Democrats are facing off in the primary, aiming to take on John Cannon, a Republican, who was elected mayor by precinct committee members after the conviction of James Snyder. He previously served as a city councilman (Russell, NWI Times). Economic Development Director Andy Maletta — son of former Portage Mayor Sammie Maletta — has so far just out-raised Councilwoman Sue Lynch. Maletta started with nothing in his coffers, raised just more than $32,000 and spent about $15,000. Lynch began with $10,000 in her campaign account, has raised $31,000 and spent just less than $20,000 on the primary campaign. Clerk-Treasurer Chris Stidham began with $7,500, raised just less than $9,000 and has spent about $9,700. Realtor Leo Hatch Jr. began with nothing and has raised $5,475. Of that, $5,000 came from himself, according to the report. He has spent $2,350. Cannon, who is unchallenged in the primary, began the 3½-month accounting period with $90 in his campaign account. He has raised just less than $4,000 and has spent about $2,600. Primary Horse Race Status: Tossup. ❖

What Indiana Makes, Makes Indiana

Braun spends his early days on health care

By BRIAN A. HOWEY

INDIANAPOLIS — Mike Braun entered the U.S. Senate last January with the government shut down. As a CEO, the notion of any organization coming to a halt due to a lack of compromise is a foreign one, but Sen. Braun found himself in the inert world of Congress where even a good idea can take a decade to pass.

His reaction to the shutdown was to propose a bill that would prevent congressional paychecks when that occurs. It has no chance of passage, but it provides early, symbolic notice that he's uninterested in BS. He is putting drug companies and insurers on notice that if changes don't come to that gigantic sector of the economy, "Medicare for all" could become the alternative.

When we sat down with Braun last Wednesday at Shapiro's Deli at Keystone at the Crossing, it was just hours before the Mueller report became public. We didn't talk about that, but in a follow-up question, I asked Braun if he had read the full report, did he have Section I (collusion) and Section II (obstruction of justice), and whether American campaigns should accept help and resources from foreign governments.

Braun declined to comment further, will send me this statement: "Attorney General Barr kept his promise and provided as much transparency on the Mueller report as was consistent with the law, which I strongly supported. Indeed, the report is unprecedented in its level of transparency. President Trump provided unfettered access to his campaign's records and his personnel to clear his name and now the American people deserve to know how this groundless investigation into the Trump campaign went. Now that the report is public, it is clear there was no collusion between Russia and the Trump campaign and that President Trump did not engage in obstruction of justice. It's time for the country to move forward and focus on real issues like delivering solutions to lower the cost of health care and keeping our red hot economy roaring."

What we did discuss at length were those "real issues" such as health care costs, which was a major thrust in his upset victory over U.S. Sen. Joe Donnelly last fall, and immigration and the border situation, which also played a major role in his victory. In other recent interviews, Braun has described the "gummed up" process of this dysfunctional Senate. He is engaging the freshman class of senators — notably Rick Scott of Florida and Mitt Romney of Utah — to forge health care solutions. He chastised his own party for seeking to repeal Obamacare (which he believes is also dysfunctional) without a credible plan to replace it.

In a Senate meeting with President Trump last month, he urged the president to act, and that produced Trump's vow for Republicans to become the "party of health care." That gave Majority Leader Mitch McConnell indigestion, but as you'll read below, it may be Braun who forges the "replace" part of the repeal-and-replace equation.

Here is our HPI Interview with Sen. Braun:

HPI: You get to Washington and the government is shut down. What are some of your initial impressions?

Braun: Yeah, we had to get through all of that. It was good to get that behind us. So often when the government shuts down, Republicans and conservatives get blamed for it. In this case, it was the issue of border security and Trump said, "We opened up the government" and he wanted to get a border security bill through. That was a tricky dynamic because it was also a budget bill.

Five of the seven appropriation bills went through at the same time and it kind of complicated that vote. Anyway, we got through it and I've been doing things focused on reforming the place. That's why I came up with a bill that Governor Rick Scott, now Sen. Rick Scott, co-authored with me: No budget, no paycheck. We're trying to get rid of senatorial pensions.

HPI: Any chance those pass?

Braun: No, but it shows you're there for more than to just nestle in and accept business as usual. Nothing has a chance of getting (done) quickly there anyway. It took 11 or 12 years to get the criminal justice reform through the Senate. Anything you tackle there happens over many, many years.

HPI: Isn't that going to drive you nuts? You're a CEO. You're used to ...

Braun: But you're there for the conversation and the fact that you're going to weigh in on whatever does happen. Yes, that's frustrating. Inherently, like you have to slow your metabolism down and get used to that. But I kind of knew that going into it. You have a big microphone to talk about things. I'm not going to sit back.

I'm not going to go there to not at least talk about what's wrong with the place and try to get others to buy into it. You might get a little victory here and there. Who knows?

HPI: Let's talk about health care. It was a key topic in your Senate race. You did a lot of innovative things at Meyer Industries. As a small businessman, I've had this conversation with Todd Young and just about every Republican colleague of yours in the delegation. I'm getting hammered. My monthly premiums have gone from $440 a month to $913 this year. And that's with a $5,000 deductible.

Braun: That's crazy.

HPI: Help me. What can you do?

Braun: First of all, the fact that there are individual payers and policies with just a few individual employees and you have to interact with this big monster of a health care industry, especially these health insurance (companies), that shouldn't be the case. When it came to covering pre-existing conditions, no cap on coverage, it won't be an issue for us, having kids on the plan until they're 26... mine are out of the nest. That was part of Obamacare. We shouldn't be discussing that any more. Most Americans and Hoosiers believe that should be the case. It was just done through Obamacare and big health care. It was doomed to fail because of costs. That's why your premiums went from $400 to $900. The insurance industry has, in the health care industry, come from a system that has been broken for many years. They don't want to change it because they all make a lot of money at it. It's not fair to you pay for your health insurance.

My mantra is, "Hey, you guys are smart. Do you really want the federal government to be your only business partner? Don't you think things will be a little different when that occurs? Fix yourself." The bills I've come out with are prodding them to become transparent and competitive. Do things like all other businesses, to compete for the health care dollar. It's almost like an entitlement through insurance policies that have gone way out of sight because of costs and doesn't allow you and I, as users of health care, to see any of the costs. We just gripe about how expensive it is. You pay it through your premium. You never pull your wallet out when you pay for health care. It ought to be the opposite where consumers are engaged and have choices. You, as a consumer, ought to be pooling with an association or other small companies. Insurance companies don't want to do it because they couldn't sell a policy where they wouldn't make as much money on (it). If that were the case, you'd probably be paying less than $400 a month. I found a way to do that, but most people don't take the time and energy to take on the industry.

HPI: Your comments to the Journal Gazette this past week where you said, let's stop talking repeal unless we have a plan to replace... You know, there are stunt congressmen and stunt senators who spew rhetoric and take votes that are meaningless, like the 50 votes to repeal Obamacare that had no chance of passage, with no viable plan to replace. And then there are those who dig down into the details and come up with proposals that make sense. I'm hoping you're not going to be the stunt senator; you're going to be the senator that's going to develop action and make it into law. Describe that process.

Braun: The plan if we want to avoid (high costs) is the plan where the government is the payor of all health care, which is Medicare for all. That will actually lower the costs. The government will say, "This is what I'm paying currently." Medicare and Medicaid pay less for particular procedures; the private health insurance industry, where most people get their health care coverage through, is paying those (higher) bills. The countries that do that, the costs are lower. I don't know how that's going to work in the U.S. because we've been used to a system that is not producing. But we also don't want to do some of the things that could occur with government-paid-for health coverage which would be like rationing, not getting the quality. Ironically, with most health care we're not ranked in the top 25. I want to create a system that engages individuals to have some skin in the game. Otherwise, the only way it can work is if the government does it for us, because it's the only cudgel with a heavy hand to take on the health care industry. And then it will be the industry bargaining with the government and they will end up getting less because the government will say, "I'm paying you this much and that's it." That sounds simple, but I think there will be trade-offs with it. I'm trying to prod the industry to be welcoming of transparency and competition, starting with drug prices. So they're forced to throw that information out there and then individuals with some skin in the game have incentives to shop around. With everything else, prices come down because consumers shop for lower prices. Just like a lot of drugs, generics are $10 here or $35 somewhere else. It wouldn't happen like that in other transparent markets. My idea is to start the process before it gets into business with the federal government only, which will happen.

HPI: So, are you having talks with the health care industry?

Braun: I'm putting bills out there. Hey, you've got to start publishing your prices so we can see what they are.

HPI: The reaction has been ...?

Braun: It has to make it thr

They know that's probably better than being in business with government only through Medicare for all. But I'm not sure they think ... maybe it's not urgent enough for them. They have been straddling, knowing that the day of reckoning is probably coming, but haven't had government, through bills like this, force them to do something.

HPI: So, are you forming alliances with Rick Scott and Mitt Romney and Sen. Cassidy who have been there and done that? Talk about your relationships both within the industry, and also with this new group of senators you came in with.

Braun:

I.

You know this can't keep going. The Brian Howes are complaining too much, as everyone else is. I can't expect them to do what we did (at Meyer Industries) where we found a method. I just had the nerve to do it and I got my employees to buy into it. All that was is that on any minor health care, there are no co-payments. You use your deductible to shop around for whatever you need. I forced them to have skin in the game and then I gave them tools. There are transparency tools out there: You can make a phone call like I did when I had a generic prescription renewed. That's when I found out it was $35 one place and $10 at one of six or seven other places in Jasper. You know why? I at least made the effort to shop. That's what I'm trying to do, convince the industry to start some of these things through introducing my bills. Hopefully, I'll get some Democratic buy-in along with the senators who are already working on it – Barasso, Cassidy, Mitt Romney will pay attention to it. And Rick Scott.

HPI: So you're forming a bond with those guys?

Braun: Yeah. We're talking. Hopefully, we'll get some of that through the legislative line and get a Democrat in the House to vote for it. Because they're going to try and lower costs in the meantime knowing they are not going to get "Medicare for All" across the line. That's not going to pass in the Senate.

HPI: Have you had chance to talk about these ideas with President Trump since you got to Washington?

Braun: Sure.

HPI: Since the campaign?

Braun: He was over in the Senate two weeks ago right after the Mueller report. I was happy that came out and we'll see what the full report says when it comes out on Thursday. It doesn't look like there's anything, if you're scrounging through the details, that's going to eat up more time up to this point.

HPI: Do you think President Trump is open if you and Sen. Cassidy or Romney come up with something on the health care front?

Braun: At the tail end he said, "By the way, Republicans are going to lead on health care."

HPI: But that caused a lot of heartburn for people like Mitch McConnell ...

Braun: That's because we weren't ready. You've got guys like me and Rick Scott, who know something about it. Cassidy and some of the others have been working at it as part of the system. We're working at it to disrupt the health care system. So, I don't know if they've been as aggressive as they needed to be. But we're all talking together and hopefully we'll get a plan together before 2020 that we can talk about, or the Democrats will win the discussion again. Whether it will win the election ... they've got to talk about the Green New Deal, the cost for Medicare for all, free college tuition and getting rid of the electoral process. That's going to occupy a lot of what they're doing. They'd be a lot smarter if they sat on some of those things until after 2020.

HPI: Have you found some Democrats you can work with?

Braun: Sure.

HPI: I've been watching Todd Young churn out all sorts of bills with Democratic co-sponsors.

Braun: Chris Van Hollen on the Budget Committee and Tim Kaine and a few others, we were sitting across the table from one another that day and I was routinely voting against their amendments, and they were routinely voting against our amendments. I turned to Rick Scott and said, "Hey, Chris Van Hollen has got a nice amendment here on prescription drug prices and it looks like it could be ours." I said, "I'm going to vote for it. Why not?" Rick said, "I will, too" and then every other Republican who came after us did, including the committee chair. That was a sign that maybe we shouldn't be saying "no" just because it was the other side's idea.

HPI: I'm sensing the people want to see some action.

Braun: They want to see that. Who wouldn't be for lowering drug prices by making the industry accountable and transparent? Who wouldn't be for that?

HPI: So, that's how you change the dynamic – by building these bonds and also putting the industry on notice?

Braun: You do it by leading, just like I led basically as a lone soldier, taking on the insurance companies. When I tell people that I crafted a plan and, yes, you've got skin in the game, you're going to pay for some stuff, but I pay 100% outside the deductible so there's no co-insurance. Most people don't think about that unless they get really sick or have a bad accident. Then they've got to pay up to a stop-loss. I got rid of that. I covered pre-existing conditions, no cap on coverage and your kids get to be on the plan, and it costs only $75 a month for an individual. You never heard that in the campaign. And a great thing is Democrats are all on record as saying that a year or two ago until it became Trump's mission. Anybody who has been watching the news can't say that's not a crisis. You have people charging the border, getting across in so many ways. Families now dominating who's coming across, using the system to where they can claim asylum, get in the country and we have no ability to process them on a timely basis. Who knows what has happened.

Braun: Of course, there needs to be something happening at the source of the problem.

HPI: Shouldn't we put together a Marshall Plan to address that?

Braun: We've got to do something to address the issue, otherwise people are going to keep coming. I think they're coming for two reasons. Lives in those three countries are di t. Coming all the way through Mexico says those are real issues. President Trump says we're full.

HPI: I don't know if I believe that. Our rural areas are emptying out.

Braun: I don't know if I believe that either, but I think we're fully occupied with dealing with what's at the border. I don't think we can take more of what's already happening. It all starts with securing the border, getting the resources to do that, and then putting the resources out there to process the people who want to come here. Ma age them from coming so they don't do that. Find out who is coming with legitimate asylum issues and who's coming just because they think they can come into the country because we've got a porous border.

HPI: Jeff Cardwell has worked diligently in El Salvador on all sorts of humanitarian issues there. Have you talked with him?

Braun: I have not talked to him, but all of these discussions need to be had. Since we have avoided this for years and years, both sides, everybody was willing to spend $25- or $30 billion two or three years ago, now it's Trump's main issue. I do think Democrats have calculated i tically, demographically, to have rather loose borders. That's why they've changed their tune. We've got to stem the of the problem in the and then hurry up and start addressing the problem.

HPI: Indiana farmers are really feeling the heat on the tariffs. They are now in their planting season.

Braun: They are feeling the heat because their markets are terrible beyond the tariffs. They are getting hit with everything. I think tariffs are a short term tool. I think everybody agrees with Canada and Mexico, that needs to be resolved. China just exports four times as much here as we do there. I think their economy is starting to struggle. I think we put the Chinese thing to rest in some fashion. Whatever they agree to, I wouldn't trust them. You have to get the USMCA, the old NAFTA, ac r ine, and the steel and aluminum tariffs are still there, and you probably need to do something with it. I think they've agr a way to get around that. I think Trump believes they're necessary to some extent with Canada and Mexico. I say they are not with them. I say they are a long-term stick with China if they don't change their behavior quickly.

HPI: Can the USMCA trade deal pass the Senate?

Braun: I think the USMCA will pass if the aluminum and steel tariffs aren't part of it. ❖

Peter Hamby, Vanity Fair: Now that Pete Buttigieg is growing more serious by the day. While he netted over $4 million for the first quarter, $2.5 million came from large donations, a sum likely to balloon in the coming months. Many L.G.B.T. donors who gave early to multiple candidates are now eyeing Buttigieg's corner or lining up to host big money events for his campaign. Broadway event for Buttigieg in New York in April. This week, Buttigieg traveled to Chicago for an event with Democratic donors Eric Janssen and Marco Zerega. In May, Buttigieg will attend a fundraising event in the Washington area hosted by lobbyist Steve Elmendorf, a top Hillary Clinton bundler who recently told CNBC that he's fully in Buttigieg's corner in the 2020 race. Buttigieg, of course, has attracted plenty of straight bundlers as well, including from well-connected Obama and Clinton donors like Susie Tompkins-Buell, Barry Karas, and Orin Kramer. But in conversation after conversation, it's becoming clear that the high-dollar L.G.B.T. donor community has never been as excited about a presidential candidate as they are right now. "The gay community should speak freely and clearly, and to have someone on the national and international stage is meaningful to us," said Rufus Gifford, the former Ambassador to Denmark who was Obama's National Finance Director in 2012. "As a public member of the gay community, it's an inspiring voice without a doubt. I have maxed out to Pete because of what you are seeing." Put simply, Buttigieg's identity is helping him tap into a deep reservoir of politically-engaged wealth that has, until recently, been watching the Democratic race somewhat tepidly. If Buttigieg manages to post a monster fundraising number in the second quarter of this year, it won't just be because small-donor millennials were hooked up about his CNN Town Hall appearances or his viral piano covers of Spoon songs. It will be thanks to a growing set of major fundraisers, many of them gay and lesbian, who are coalescing behind him early and fast, delivering substantial checks that other Democratic candidates are choosing to leave on the big money table. ♦

Alan Greenblatt, Governing: Gov. Eric Holcomb's success is only surprising when you realize how unlikely it was for him to become governor. At 6'5", Holcomb makes for an unlikely Cinderella – he habitually wears cowboy boots, cowboy boots, not glass slippers – but his rise to the top included as many twists and turns as a fairy tale. Holcomb has been in and around politics and government for his entire post-Navy career, serving as a state Republican Party chair and working as a top aide to Gov. Mitch Daniels, to a member of Congress and to a senator. But he'd never held elective office, failing at his one bid for the state House in 2000. Fate intervened. While he was driving home from a campaign event in February 2016 to catch the Super Bowl, Holcomb got a call from Gov. Pence, informing him that the incumbent lieutenant governor was leaving to run the state's community college system. Holcomb accepted the job and thrust from an understudy role to the top of the state ticket after Donald Trump tapped Pence that July as his running mate. Pence had already won the GOP nomination for a second term, so it was up to a party committee to choose a new nominee. To win the nomination, Holcomb had to overcome considerable sentiment in favor of two sitting members of Congress. But Pence pushed hard for him, and he prevailed on the second committee ballot. With the Trump-Pence ticket carrying Indiana by 19 points, Holcomb ended up winning election easily. "We had 105 days to raise $14 million and spend it and land safely, which we did," Holcomb says. Now that he's midway through his third year, the Indiana political class seems almost to have forgotten how many unlikely dominoes had to fall in order for Holcomb to end up as governor. At the time of his election, plenty of people, including some GOP stalwarts, wondered whether this relatively unknown governor had enough experience to do the job. No one is saying that now. His trajectory toward the governorship was so unusual that no one wants to say his reelection next year is a slam-dunk certainty, but it's hard to come up with a realistic scenario in which he doesn't win a second term. "He's a great governor," says longtime Republican House Speaker Brian Bosma. "I don't want to suggest my expectations were low, but he's certainly exceeded, greatly, what I expected. I've seen each of our previous governors really mad. I've never seen Holcomb mad. I've honestly never seen him in a bad mood or worked up about something." ♦

Juan Williams, South Bend Tribune: Is Pete Buttigieg the Jesse Jackson of his time? Or is Buttigieg the Barack Obama of his time? Jackson took the black rights movement of the 1960s and 1970s "from the streets to the suites" when he campaigned to be the Democratic party's presidential nominee in the 1980s. Twenty years later, Obama blasted his way into the stratosphere of American and global political power when he won the presidency and sealed the reality of black people as full participants in American politics. In the last 25 years, public acceptance of gay people has changed so much that Buttigieg is on track to skip the Jackson-like struggle and go straight to Obama's winner's circle. He currently trails only former Vice President Joe Biden and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) among Iowa Democratic primary voters in a Monmouth poll. And Buttigieg claims to have more than 65,000 donors to his campaign. That number qualifies him for the caucus and caucus primary debate. Keep in mind that Buttigieg is not hiding his homosexuality as he rises in the polls. ♦

Holcomb signs abortion bills

INDIANAPOLIS — Gov. Eric Holcomb has signed into law two measures approved by the Republican-controlled General Assembly that further restrict the availability of abortion in Indiana. The Republican chief executive did not issue any statement in connection with his enactment of House Enrolled Act 1211 and Senate Enrolled Act 201 (Carden, NWI Times). The governor' announced Wednesday evening that Holcomb had signed the legislation, along with more than two dozen other proposals recently advanced to his desk by the Indiana House and Senate. House Enrolled Act 1211, which takes effect July 1, prohibits dilation and evacuation abortions, which the law calls "dismemberment abortion," except when a woman otherwise would suffer "substantial and irreversible physical impairment of a major bodily function."

The procedure is considered by the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists to be the safest method for completing an abortion after 13 weeks of pregnancy. But anti-abortion lawmakers claim the procedure is "barbaric" because it requires a doctor to use forceps, tongs, scissors or similar instruments to remove a fetus from a woman's uterus. State records show just 27 women obtained an abortion in Indiana using the procedure in 2017, out of 7,778 total abortions. The second new law, which also takes effect July 1, expands the state's conscience-protection statute for medical professionals who do not want to perform an abortion or participate in any procedure that results in an abortion, including prescribing, administering or dispensing an abortion-inducing drug. The Indiana Code already authorizes physicians, hospital employees and health clinic staffers to opt out of providing abortion care.

The new statute gives the same right to nurses, pharmacists and physician assistants who are not directly employed by a hospital or health clinic.

IURC rejects Vectren plant

EVANSVILLE — The Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission Wednesday rejected a Vectren proposal to build an 850-megawatt natural gas-fueled power plant to replace its aging coal-burning A.B. Brown Generating Station (Wilson, Evansville Courier & Press). The IURC order took Vectren to task for not adequately considering various combinations of other less expensive alternatives, especially renewable energy sources, of which it said there was a lack of evidence that Vectren "...made a serious effort to determine the price and availability of renewables." In denying Vectren preapproval for the new power plant — which was projected to cost $781 million — the commission cited a "financial risk to customers who would be stuck paying for it over a 30-year period in a time when the energy industry is rapidly evolving. According to the 38-page order posted on the IURC website: "The proposed large scale single resource investment for a utility of Vectren South's size does not present an outcome which reasonably minimizes the potential risk that customers could sometime in the future be saddled with an uneconomic investment or serve to foster utility and reliability in an environment of rapid technological innovation."

NRA facing internal discord

INDIANAPOLIS — The National Rifle Association is battling forces that criticize its and unbending efforts to protect gun rights. But as the group gathers in Indianapolis this week for its annual convention, the NRA may be facing its toughest foe in decades: its own members (AP). NRA insiders and longtime observers describe an organization at war with itself over a central question: Has it strayed too far from its original mission of gun safety and outdoor shooting sports and become too political? It is rare for the NRA to betray any hint of internal turmoil. But it erupted very publicly recently when the NRA sued its longtime public relations man McQueen, accusing it of refusing to hand over records to account for its billings. In million. "The battle in the NRA board that must have occurred with this breakup of a decades-long relationship must have been something," said Adam Winkler, a professor at the University of California Los Angeles School of Law and gun rights expert.

Floyd County coroner dies

NEW ALBANY — Floyd County Coroner David Moore, who also served 20 years as the Greenville Town Marshal and as a volunteer for the department, died Monday. He was 72 (News & Tribune). Moore, a Republican, was elected coroner in 2016. Prior to being elected coroner he was president of the Greenville Town Board.

Bicknell police chief arrested

BICKNELL, Ind. — Authorities say a southwestern Indiana police chief has been arrested for allegedly trying to interfere in a misconduct investigation (AP). Indiana State Police say a Bicknell police the Knox County prosecutor' Monday and turned over a laptop that possibly contained evidence in the misconduct investigation involving an . State police say Bicknell police Chief Terry Stremming went to Tuesday, demanded the return of the laptop and tried to remove it. State police say Stremming allegedly put his hands on an investigator from the prosecutor's he tried unsuccessfully to take the laptop.

MYERS NEARING 2020 GUBERNATORIAL RACE DECISION: Former Indiana and New York City health commissioner Woody Myers is nearing a decision on whether to challenge Gov. Eric Holcomb in 2020 (Howey Politics Indiana). "I'm thinking about it very seriously," Dr. Myers told HPI Thursday morning. "I haven't made an irrevocable decision, but I'm leaning in that direction. I'm doing all the preliminary stuff, but I'm not quite there." In an email to supporters, Myers added, "Today I was interviewed by Brian Howey (a senior political reporter, Howey Politics Indiana), and I confirmed to him that I am strongly considering, and close to making the decision, to become a candidate for Governor in 2020 in Indiana, my home. As most of you know, I've been encouraged by many Hoosiers (and a surprising number of "non-Hoosiers") to rejoin the Public Sector and to fight daily and directly to bring better public education, better jobs, and of course better healthcare (with better "health") to the wonderful people of our state. I appreciate your words of encouragement and your expert counsel. This is a big decision and I am making it as thoughtfully as I can." Myers disputes Holcomb's assessment that "Indiana is on a roll," saying, "Indiana has been lagging in so many areas," Myers said. "There's an illusion that things are going great for us, but we are losing ground quickly." He cites public education, "integrity in office" and keeping talent in the state as top priorities. HPI reached out to 2012 and 2016 nominee John Gregg, who did not return the call.

SESSION DESCRIBED AS 'QUIET': A lot of Indiana lawmakers described the 2019 session the same way – it was a quiet one, with no big blowups or major controversies that typically characterize the General Assembly's annual term (Smith, Indiana Public Media). Heading into 2019, most agreed on what would be the biggest issues of the session: funding for teacher pay and the Department of Child Services, major changes to the gambling industry, and a hate crimes law. Yet those issues didn't generate much furor over the session's four months. House Speaker Brian Bosma (R-Indianapolis) summed it up: "This has not been a pulling-teeth session, as some are," he says. Take DCS. A year ago, controversy at the child welfare agency was highly charged. The former director said the governor's policies would lead to children dying. Democrats wanted investigations. This year, Rep. Ed DeLaney (D-Indianapolis) says the rhetoric settled down. "I think there's an unspoken hope that the new management of DCS will be able to turn that ship around," DeLaney says. Gov. Eric Holcomb said he hopes teachers are happy. "This is a historic increase to K-12 investment," Holcomb says.

INDIANA KEEPS $2B SURPLUS: Indiana's newly approved state budget anticipates the state keeping $2 billion in cash reserves, which Republican leaders maintain keeps the state protected in case of an economic recession. The budget plan approved Wednesday night in votes along party lines projects that the reserves will amount to at least 11.5 percent of state spending. Democrats argue those figures are unnecessarily high and were reached by ignoring important needs (Davies, AP). Republicans rejected that contention, saying careful spending will allow Indiana to maintain a top-level AAA credit rating and business growth to continue to be encouraged. "When the downturn in our economy happens, and it will, Indiana will be prepared for it," GOP House Speaker Brian Bosma said. "This was very purposeful." The GOP spending plan increases base school funding by 2.5% each of the next two years, which Gov. Eric Holcomb and other Republicans say makes strides toward their stated goal of improving the state's lagging teacher salaries. But their funding proposals never came close to the 9% increase that education advocacy groups estimated was needed to boost Indiana's average teacher pay to the midpoint of neighboring states. Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane of Anderson said Thursday more money could've been directed to schools and programs such as child welfare services and health screenings rather than just banking so much extra cash. "We worship at this altar of a $2 billion surplus," Lanane said. "My gosh, we're talking about real people's lives."

RV SHIPMENTS TUMBLE IN MARCH: The RV Industry Association's March survey of manufacturers found that total RV shipments ended the month with 38,015 wholesale shipments, a decrease of 26.3 percent from the 51,607 units shipped last March (Elkhart Truth). Towable RVs, led by conventional travel trailers, totaled 33,754 units for the month, a decrease of 25.8 percent compared to last March's total of 45,490 units. Motorhomes finished the month with 4,261 units, down 30.3 percent compared to the March 2018 total of 6,117 units.

HOLCOMB ORDERS CIVICS TEST: Gov. Eric Holcomb is directing all Indiana high schools to administer to students, as part of the mandatory U.S. government course, the naturalization test that's typically taken by immigrants hoping to become American citizens. The Republican chief executive on Thursday signed into law Senate Enrolled Act 132, obligating schools to include the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services exam in their government classes (Carden, NWI Times). The new statute does not set a mandatory minimum score for students to achieve on the 100-question test, which covers basic details about the function and organization of the federal government as well as U.S. history facts. The new law, which takes effect for the 2019-20 school year, also mandates Indiana high schools provide an "enhanced" study of the Holocaust in their U.S. history courses, without defining what is meant by "enhanced." It was approved 93-3 by the House, and 40-8 in the Senate.

BIDEN LEADS TRUMP BY 8%: As former Vice President Joe Biden enters the race for the Democratic presidential nomination, he's doing so as the front-runner, polling ahead of both fellow Democrats and President Donald Trump. A new Morning Consult/Politico poll conducted April 19-21 among 1,992 registered voters found Biden leading the president by 8 percentage points in a hypothetical matchup, 42 percent to 34 percent. Biden has a significant edge over Trump among women (17 points), millennials (22 points) and independents (10 points). The national, online survey has a 2-point margin of error.

BUTTIGIEG DRAWING SCRUTINY: Pete Buttigieg's early success in the Democratic primary has prompted scrutiny and rougher treatment from his rivals and the news media, creating new challenges for the rising star and his campaign. National media outlets are flooding the phone lines of local activists and politicians in South Bend, Ind., to churn out investigative pieces on Buttigieg's years as the city's mayor (The Hill). Competing Democratic campaigns have taken aim, engaging with Buttigieg over perceived slights on the campaign trail. After Buttigieg praised Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) this week for tapping into the anti-establishment sentiment that swept the country in 2016, the Sanders camp ripped the mayor for drawing a comparison between supporters of Sanders and President Trump. "Come one Pete Buttigieg," tweeted Rep. Ro Khanna (D-Calif.), who is Sanders's national co-chairman. "It is intellectually dishonest to compare Bernie to Trump. Bernie is for giving people healthcare, education, childcare, and more pay. He wants to blow up credentialed elitism — those who reject tuition free college for all." Some in Buttigieg's camp view the flap as evidence they're on Sanders's radar. Instead of ducking the fight, the mayor upped the ante on Wednesday by telling The New York Times that he doesn't believe Sanders can defeat Trump in the general election. "I have a hard time seeing the coalition ultimately coming together there," he said.

REV. GRAHAM CALLS ON BUTTIGIEG TO 'REPENT': One of the country's most well-known evangelical Christians, Franklin Graham, said Pete Buttigieg, an openly gay 2020 presidential candidate, should "repent" (Charlotte Observers). Graham called homosexuality a "sin" and "something to be repentant of, not something to be flaunted, praised or politicized," in a tweet Wednesday. In a CNN town hall Tuesday, Buttigieg said, "I get that one of the things about Scripture is different people see different things in it." "At the very least we should be able to establish that God does not have a political party," the South Bend, Indiana, mayor said at the town hall.

NRA CONFAB IN INDY WITH 42 HOMICIDES: More than 800 exhibitors continued putting final touches on their displays Thursday in the halls of the Indiana Convention Center in anticipation of Friday's opening of the NRA's 148th Annual Meeting (Fox59). The NRA's return to Indianapolis after five years is equal parts business meeting, trade show and fundraising extravaganza with a presidential visit and all-star country concert thrown in. Last year, there were 890,730 active firearms licenses in Indiana with 109,157 of them, approximately one out of eight, in Marion County. So far this year, 35 of Indianapolis' 42 homicide victims have died of gunshot wounds. Mayor Joe Hogsett told reporters Wednesday that he has not been invited to attend the conference. In 2014 then-Mayor Greg Ballard was also denied an official invitation. After that conference, Governor Mike Pence, who left the Indiana Statehouse to become Vice President, helped convince the NRA to sign contracts to return two more times, in 2019 and 2023, to Indianapolis for an unprecedented three visits in ten years. Pence and President Trump will address the NRA membership Friday at Lucas Oil Stadium.

TRUMP VISIT COULD SNARL TRAFFIC: President Trump is scheduled to arrive at Lucas Oil Stadium at 11:15 this morning and will speak shortly thereafter. As you can expect, with President Trump and Vice President Pence in town on Friday, there will be traffic delays (WTHR-TV). I-70 will be closed between I-465 and downtown at times. Delays will most likely happen between 10:00 and 11:30 in the morning for drivers heading east on I-70. Drivers going west on I-70 should expect delays from 11:30 to 2:00 p.m. And there will also be delays and closures around downtown until 6:30 Friday night.

WHITE HOUSE REJECTED ELECTION THREAT MEETINGS: In recent months before resigning from her position, Department of Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen was prevented from convening senior cabinet meetings at the White House on potential future Russian interference in the upcoming 2020 U.S. elections, two senior administration officials familiar with the matter told ABC News. Nielsen, whose department is charged with defending U.S. infrastructure including elections against cyber attacks, had been sounding the alarm publicly before the 2018 midterms. After the midterms, she pushed for the White House to convene a cabinet meeting to address the issue head-on, but the White House "refused," according to one of the officials, forcing DHS to start convening meetings with principals on its own. Nielsen was also told by White House staff the issue did not need to be brought to Trump's attention, according to the official. "The White House didn't want to focus on the issue at a principals level, period," the official told ABC News.

BRAINARD, FADNESS POST STRONG NUMBERS: Incumbent mayors Jim Brainard and Scott Fadness are outraising and outspending their opponents in an effort to win their primary races, and some of their big donors include companies with projects in Carmel and Fishers (Quinn, IBJ). Brainard, who is running for a seventh term against Hamilton County Councilor Fred Glynn, has raised $167,000 since Jan. 1. He spent even more—$251,000—leaving him with about $58,800 cash on hand, according to a recent campaign finance report, which covers the period between Jan. 1 and April 12. Brainard's biggest donor was DPBG Political Action Committee, which lists engineering firm American Structurepoint as its address. The PAC has donated $21,000 to Friends of Jim Brainard since Jan. 1, campaign finance reports show. Pedcor Cos. donated $10,000 to Friends of Jim Brainard, with Pedcor CEO Bruce Cordingley donating an additional $5,000. Pedcor is the lead developer of City Center, a project that's the result of a public-private partnership between Pedcor and the city of Carmel. Other notable donors giving at least $5,000 include Fishers-based RQAW Chief Financial Officer Troy Woodruff, United Consulting President Dave Richter and Trent Newport, president of CrossRoad Engineers. As of April 12, the end of the filing period for pre-primary campaign finance reports, Fadness had spent about $187,000, leaving him with about $356,800 on hand. Fadness received several donations of $5,000 from well-known executives, firms and PACs.

CHALLENGERS POST MODEST NUMBERS IN CARMEL, FISHERS: While the incumbents have brought in large sums of money, their opponents' campaigns have been more modest. In Carmel, Glynn has raised about $94,800, with notable donations from the Todd Rokita Election Campaign, which gave $3,000, and Seidensticker for Council, the committee of former Carmel City Councilor Eric Seidensticker, which gave Glynn $500 (IBJ). He also received $5,000 from Huntington-based The Fund for American Exceptionalism. Glynn loaned his campaign about $50,000. In Fishers, Day has raised $9,694 and has spent all but $20.

BIDEN KICKS OFF CAMPAIGN WITH CHARLOTTESVILLE: Former Vice President Joe Biden says the events in Charlottesville were an "epiphany" to him because he had never seen anything like it in his lifetime (AP). Video of Biden's remarks on Thursday evening at a fundraiser in Philadelphia were obtained by The Associated Press from attendees. Biden announced earlier in the day that he was running for president and said President Donald Trump's "moral equivalence" between white supremacists and counter protesters was a major motivating factor. The former vice president made frequent mention of Trump at the fundraiser, saying, "Every nation is held up by an invisible moral fabric, and it's being shredded, and our kids are listening." He says he hopes in a few years people will realize that the Trump era was "an aberration in American history" "because this is not who we are."

BUTTIGIEG SOCIAL MEDIA RISING: Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) is dominating the Democratic presidential primary on social media, but South Bend, Ind., Mayor Pete Buttigieg is on the rise, an analysis of Facebook, Instagram and Twitter data by The Hill shows. The data, gathered using an online tracking tool called CrowdTangle, offers a glimpse into how the 2020 Democratic primary is playing out on social media. Taken together, the data paints a picture of who's rising and who's falling in the race for digital dominance. The data shows Buttigieg's online popularity surging in recent weeks, while that of another 2020 contender, former Rep. Beto O'Rourke (D-Texas), has largely stalled. At the same time, Sanders has maintained a massive lead when it comes to his total interactions on Facebook and Instagram. In the wake of a March 10 town hall on CNN, Buttigieg's profile soared. That ascent is evident in his social media following. In the month following his CNN appearance, the number of "likes" on Buttigieg's campaign Facebook page grew by more than 140,000, or about 420 percent. His mayoral page gained some 45,000 followers. On Twitter, Buttigieg's follower growth was almost as fast-paced. He picked up 584,521 followers between March 10 and April 10, an increase of about 367 percent. And on Instagram, which is most popular with young people, Buttigieg's following saw a massive 588 percent increase – about 171,500 followers, according to CrowdTangle data.

BIDEN EMBRACES OBAMA ON DAY ONE: When Joe Biden entered the 2020 race on Thursday, he made no mention of Barack Obama in his launch video. But his former boss loomed large throughout the day (The Hill). In an Instagram post announcing his candidacy, Team Biden posted a photo of the former vice president with his arm around Obama. On Biden's website, the campaign highlighted how close their relationship was: "A running mate becomes a friend for life." Allies also noted that Biden had brought on board his campaign a former Obama hand in Anita Dunn to help steer his communications shop. "The band is back together," one ally said.

BIDEN CALLED ANITA HILL: Former Vice President Joseph R. Biden Jr. called Anita Hill earlier this month to express his regret over "what she endured" testifying against Justice Clarence Thomas at the 1991 Supreme Court hearings that put a spotlight on sexual harassment of women, according to a spokeswoman for Mr. Biden (New York Times). But Ms. Hill, in an interview Wednesday, said she left the conversation feeling deeply unsatisfied and declined to characterize his words to her as an apology. She said she is not convinced that Mr. Biden truly accepts the harm he caused her and other women who suffered sexual harassment and gender violence. "I cannot be satisfied by simply saying I'm sorry for what happened to you. I will be satisfied when I know there is real change and real accountability and real purpose," she said.

WASHINGTON MAYORAL DEBATE: More than 150 people attended the Washington Mayoral Debate sponsored by the Washington Times Herald and WAMW Tuesday night in the Washington High School auditorium to learn more about the vision of the four candidates who hope to become the next mayor of Washington (Owens, Washington Times Herald). "I have had the pleasure of knowing all the candidates since they were kids and have seen them in the performance of their duties for the city of Washington over the past eight years, and I can vouch that all four are conscientious and dedicated public servants," said Don Spillman who served as the moderator for the debate that lasted just over an hour and featured questions submitted by community members as well as from Washington High School government classes. Democrat Dave Rhoads and Republicans Jerry Sidebottom, Diana Snyder and Don Williams were each asked the same slate of questions by Spillman.

General Assembly

BRAY PRAISES MISHLER: Republican state lawmakers are touting the legislative session as a success, while Democrats say their opponents missed opportunities to move Indiana forward (Erdody, IBJ). The Indiana General Assembly ended the 2019 session on Wednesday night after passing a $34.6 billion two-year budget with an emphasis on K-12 school funding. Lawmakers weighed in on this year's legislative session Thursday morning during a wrap-up press conference. Republican leaders pointed to the additional $763 million that will be spent on education over the next two years as evidence that they fulfilled their commitment from the beginning of the session to prioritizing school funding. And they expressed pride that the state will still end each year with $2 billion in reserves. bray Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (photo to the right) praised Senate Appropriations Chairman Ryan Mishler for his work on the budget and for keeping spending at a responsible level. "In that job, you've gotta be able to say, 'No,' and he did so," Bray said.

LANANE COMMENTS ON VETERANS MISSPENDING: Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D-Anderson) had the following comments after state auditors discovered that the Indiana Department of Veterans' Affairs (IDVA) misspent over three quarters of a million dollars of federal funds (Howey Politics Indiana): "The money that IDVA misused includes $20,000 for couple retreats at high-end casinos, $56,000 in child care benefits, and $683,000 for contract employees. Due to actions of the department, the state's federal welfare dollars are now at risk because the Department of Health and Human Services can require Indiana to repay any misspent funding. The state currently receives over $200 million every year from Health and Human Services through the TANF program. Now, our relationship with this federal department is at risk, and our most vulnerable Hoosiers could be left out to dry. I want to know what the governor thinks about his department's mistakes. The budget he supports ignores foster children, expecting mothers and our public school teachers. Then, in a department which he oversees, employees are misusing funds meant for our veterans and disadvantaged Hoosiers. To top it all off, necessary federal funds are now at risk of disappearing."

GIAQUINTA CITES LOST OPPORTUNITIES: Statehouse Democrats on Thursday called this year's legislative session a missed opportunity on several fronts (Kelly, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). "The budget was a missed opportunity to put Hoosier families first," said House Democratic leader Phil GiaQuinta of Fort Wayne. He added that the hate crimes law passed didn't go far enough while the budget didn't fully fund the Indiana Department of Child Services. "We can't afford to go backward and I'm afraid that's going to happen," he said. Senate Democratic leader Tim Lanane of Anderson said the Republicans "worship at the altar of the $2 billion surplus" instead of putting money to critical needs. He noted that funding for colon and rectal screenings was cut, as well as for childhood immunizations.

LUCAS HOPES HOLCOMB SIGNS BILL AT NRA CONVENTION: For state Rep. Jim Lucas, a perfect start to the National Rifle Association's convention here would be for Gov. Eric Holcomb to sign one of Lucas' bills on stage in front of President Donald Trump, Vice President Mike Pence and a crowd of 70,000 (Miley, CNHI). Lucas' House Bill 1284 would allow licensed gun owners to carry firearms during religious services at church-schools. Currently, firearms are barred at schools unless school boards determine otherwise. The bill also would require state police, county sheriffs and other law enforcement officers to serve at voter registration sites. "It's one of those wishful-thinking things," Lucas, R-Seymour, a staunch supporter of Second Amendment rights, said of the possibility that the governor would sign the bill on stage. "That would be a dream come true for me."

HOLCOMB SIGNS NATURAL DISASTER BILL: Senate Enrolled Act (SEA) 513 was signed into law. State Senator David Niezgodski (D-South Bend) drafted this bill in an effort to maximize relief to Indiana families in times of disasters. Sen. Niezgodski had the following comments on the law's signing (Howey Politics Indiana): I'm glad the legislature and the governor agreed that Hoosier victims of natural disasters needed additional support. This proposal doubles the maximum compensation amount to individuals for property damages from the Disaster Relief Fund from $5,000 to $10,000. "The massive floods in recent years left many Indiana families devastated from the destruction that wrecked their homes. This is an important proposal that will help aid our Hoosier families when they need it most." SEA 513 goes into effect immediately.

SOUTH SHORE GETS FUNDING BOOST: Revisions to the budget bill in the eleventh hour of the Indiana General Assembly session will mean a cash infusion for improvements to the South Shore Line, but also substantial changes to the body that regulates it (Bauer, South Bend Tribune). That concerns some who say the measure diminishes local control of the commuter railway, which runs through four northern Indiana counties as it connects Chicago with South Bend. A conference committee on Tuesday inserted language in the bill that shrinks the size of the Northern Indiana Commuter Transportation District (NICTD) board from 11 members to five, allowing Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb to appoint all members of the board. And with the budget bill's passage Wednesday, Holcomb's signature is all that's left for it to become law. The move includes $185 million, as well as up to $20 million more, that was freed up in the state's transportation budget after Holcomb's amending of the Indiana Toll Road lease last year. That money is planned to leverage federal matching money for major railway improvements, including double-tracking between Gary and Michigan City and extending lines through Lake County as a part of the West Lake Corridor Project. The proposal for double-tracking has yet to be submitted, but is expected to be turned in to the Federal Transit Administration (FTA) by mid-summer.

VAPE TAX DIES: Indiana will not have a vaping tax this year. Legislation that would have imposed a tax on the liquids used in e-cigarettes died without a vote on the last night of the 2019 Indiana General Assembly. The original bill, authored by Rep. Tim Brown, R-Crawfordsville, would have set a 4-cents-per-milliliter vaping liquid tax (Erdody, IBJ). The tax, in part at least, was meant to discourage vaping, especially among teenagers, but lawmakers couldn't agree on how much the tax should be. The Indiana Senate increased the tax to 20% of the price to make it comparable to the total tax charged on a pack of cigarettes and to make it easier to calculate since it wouldn't be based on the volume of vaping liquid sold. But before the bill passed out of the Senate, it changed to only suggest creating a summer study committee to research the issue rather than imposing the tax this year. On Wednesday—the last day of the legislative session—Brown floated two other options to lawmakers that either would have been a 5% retail tax on the liquid or a 10% retail tax. House Speaker Brian Bosma said the House Republican caucus was split between those wanting to tax it at 10%, those wanting a 5% tax and those wanting to do nothing with it this year.

HEMP BILL HEADS TO HOLCOMB: Lawmakers in both chambers passed legislation Wednesday that would allow Indiana to regulate the growth and sale of hemp (Horton, Indiana Public Media). After months of deliberating, lawmakers took the final step in bringing the hemp market to Indiana and are now sending it to the governor for final approval. The final version of the bill creates a hemp advisory committee, consisting of regulators and industry leaders, and a regulatory structure. Sen. Randall Head (R-Logansport), one of the bill's authors, says the legislation gives a deadline for the committee so that its only purpose is to help set up the state's hemp laws. "[The committee] sunsets after two years," says Head. "So we're emphasizing it only has one purpose, which is to advise the governor and what our plan ought to be and no other rule making authority." Rep. Jim Lucas (R-Seymour) expressed concern about one element in the bill that he interpreted would turn the legal sale of hemp flowers to all but hemp processors into a criminal offense.

JUVENILE MURDER BILL FAILS: An effort to change Indiana law so that children as young as 12 could face attempted murder charges in adult court has failed in the state Legislature (Indiana Public Media). The push came after prosecutors couldn't seek adult charges against the 13-year-old boy who wounded a classmate and teacher at a suburban Indianapolis middle school because no one died in the May 25 shooting. Fourteen is the current minimum age for possible adult charges in attempted murder cases. The state Senate had supported moving such cases involving 12- and 13-year-olds from juvenile court, but that provision was removed from the bill's final version approved Tuesday.

ADULT EDUCATION BILL PASSES: The Indiana General Assembly passed a bill Wednesday that would give money to adult high school programs to reward student achievement. If signed by Gov. Eric Holcomb, it would create the Workforce Diploma Reimbursement Program (Indiana Public Media). The Workforce Diploma Reimbursement Program would give adult education programs up to $6,750 per graduate. To be eligible, education providers must have been established at least two years, grant high school diplomas to adults 22 or older and maintain a graduation rate of at least 50 percent, among other requirements. The Governor's Workforce Cabinet and the Office of Workforce Development will oversee the program.

PRE-K PROGRAM GOING STATEWIDE: On My Way pre-K, an early education program benefiting low-income families, could soon be available statewide, based on legislation authored by State Rep. Bob Behning, R-Indianapolis (Loughlin, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). The program gives 4-year-olds access to a high-quality pre-K program the year before they begin kindergarten. Currently, the state's early education pilot program serves fewer than 3,000 students in 20 counties. House Enrolled Act 1628, which is now eligible to be signed into law by the governor, would make the program available statewide. The goal "was to make it available to more kids," Behning said Thursday. "Obviously, we didn't spend all the appropriation [in the prior biennium]. I think there's probably a number of reasons why that may have occurred." More than $15 million dedicated to the program was not used during the last budget cycle. That money can now be used to expand it, Behning said. In addition, the new state budget appropriates just over $22 million each year for On My Way pre-K, the same level of funding as in the last biennial session.

ERRINGTON SAYS MUNCIE SCHOOLS WILL STRUGGLE UNDER BUDGET: The state budget adopted by the Legislature this week calls for a slight increase in per-student state appropriations to area schools, but projected declining enrollment means that Muncie Community Schools will face budget shortfalls in both the 2019-20 and the 2020-21 school years (Slabaugh, Muncie Star Press). "Under the funding formula, Muncie is still going to struggle," said state Rep. Sue Errington, D-Muncie, whose party is in the minority. "Schools that have a lot of poverty and are also losing population, it's hard for them." The funding formula for Muncie is based in part on estimates that Muncie will lose 200 students, Errington said. "I called (interim Superintendent) Steve Edwards, and he said we probably will lose students but they are doing things to keep that at a minimum," Errington told The Star Press. "Here they are having to pay for advertising to keep students in their district, and the biggest problem for Muncie schools is transfers to the county schools."

BILL TO CREATE NEW CLARK COUNTY COURTS DIES: An Indiana House bill that would have provided two new Clark County courts has died after the Senate and House failed to reach an agreement on an amendment that was added to the legislation (Rickert, News & Tribune). HB 1155, introduced in January by Ind. Rep. Terry Goodin, D-Austin, would have added two new courts to Clark County starting in 2021, increasing the number of circuit courts to six from four. The bill called for the two new judges to be elected in 2020 and take office the following January for their six-year terms. The bill had garnered large bipartisan support but stalled after an amendment introduced by Sen. Chris Garten, R-Scottsburg, in March, called for substantial changes to the original bill. Garten's amendment stated that the judges would not be elected in 2020, but be appointed by Gov. Eric Holcomb in July for their initial term, and serve five-and-a-half years before the seats would be up for election. After the amendment went back to the House, Goodin and Garten met for negotiations, but could not come to an agreement on the length of the appointments.

BERMAN CALLS SESSION 'SMOOTH': Indiana legislators are taking a break after what WIBC/Network Indiana Statehouse Bureau Chief Eric Berman calls a "smooth" legislative session. The Indiana General Assembly adjourned for the year Wednesday evening five days before the session's deadline, a stark contrast to last year when the legislature went to the wire (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). Berman says the most controversial piece of legislation was the hate crimes bill, but legislators were still able to pass it relatively quickly. In an interview with Inside INdiana Business, Berman said the gambling bill turned out to be the most difficult piece of legislation to get passed, but overall, there weren't any major surprises in the legislative session. "There wasn't anything terribly unusual, which is why it went so smoothly. Often, there is some surprise that explodes. It didn't really happen this time," said Berman. "It might have been a little bit of a surprise (with) gambling. This debate started as a sports betting debate. It became clear pretty quickly that sports betting was not going to be controversial. There was a little bit of a surprise when that turned into a big gambling bill (and) they rolled it up with the Terre Haute casino and the Gary casino and the live dealers at the racinos. That was a little bit surprising followed by the surprise that even that wasn't terribly controversial."

Congress

PENCE OPENS MUNCIE OFFICE: U.S. Rep. Greg Pence greeted constituents and The Star Press — for the first time — during an open house at his new Muncie office on Thursday (Slabaugh, Muncie Star Press). During an interview, the Republican congressman said constituents are tired of hearing about the Mueller Report; talked about getting things done with bipartisan support, and disclosed plans to file his first bill. So far, the freshman representative has co-sponsored 19 bills, of which 10 of the authors are Democrats, according to ProPublica, a non-profit producer of investigative journalism. "A lot of bills get passed but you don't hear about them on TV, the drama," Pence said. "A lot of bills are bipartisan. As an example, we now have a national park, Indiana Dunes. All of the delegation did that ... That is one of the things I share with people. 'Does anything get done?' Yeah, things get done every day."

REP. PENCE VISITS WINCHESTER: U.S. Rep. Greg Pence made multiple stops in Winchester Thursday, visiting The Journey Home veterans facility and hosting a roundtable discussion with constituents (Howey Politics Indiana). "It was great to update folks on what we're doing in Washington, as well as to get feedback from folks on their priorities," Rep. Pence said. "I want folks to know that we are doing what we can, despite our position at the minority party in the House, to get things done for Hoosiers in the 6th District." During the discussion held at Mrs. Wick's Pies, topics ranged from border security to infrastructure priorities. Healthcare and the need to address the opioid crisis was also discussed. Before the roundtable, Pence visited The Journey Home, a transitional home for homeless veterans in Winchester founded in 2013.

CARSON SHRUGS OFF SOCIALISM: Wednesday on "CNN Newsroom," Rep. Andre Carson (D-IN) shrugged off concern about Democrats embracing socialism. Carson voiced his support for "comprehensive and inclusive" health care, adding America is the "greatest country in recorded history" and should not "stifle innovation." "When you look historically, America is the wealthiest nation in recorded history. Our citizens should have some kind of health care system that is comprehensive and inclusive," Carson told host Poppy Harlow. "America being the wealthiest nation in the country should have other things that other countries have done phenomenally well."

REPUBLICANS NOT ACTING ON MUELLER REPORT: Senate Republicans see the special counsel's report — with its stark evidence that President Trump repeatedly impeded the investigation into Russian election interference — as a summons for collective inaction (New York Times). Republicans in the upper chamber, who would serve as Mr. Trump's jury if House Democrats were to impeach him, reacted to the report's release with a range of tsk-tsk adjectives like "brash," "inappropriate" or "unflattering." Only Senator Mitt Romney, Republican of Utah, called out the president's behavior as "sickening." Yet no Republican, not even Mr. Romney, a political brand-name who does not face his state's voters until 2022, has pressed for even a cursory inquiry into the findings by the special counsel, Robert S. Mueller III, that the president pressured senior officials, including the former White House counsel Donald F. McGahn II and the former attorney general Jeff Sessions, to scuttle his investigation. Where Democrats see a road map to impeachment, Republicans see a dead end. "I consider this to be, basically, the end of the road," said Senator Mike Lee, Republican of Utah, who once tried to thwart Mr. Trump's presidential nomination and now serves on the Senate Judiciary Committee, which has the authority to investigate Mr. Mueller's findings.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB SIGNS 13 BILLS - The governor signed 13 bills today. You can view more details at the 2019 Bill Watch webpage or by clicking here.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB SCHEDULE - Below find Gov. Eric J. Holcomb's public schedule for today: NRA-ILA Leadership Forum, the governor will give remarks. Event begins at 11:30 a.m. Lucas Oil Stadium, Indianapolis.

ABORTION: ACLU TO CHALLENGE NEW LAW - The American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana filed a lawsuit Thursday challenging the state's attempt to ban a second-trimester abortion procedure, a day after the governor signed the measure into law (AP). The bill passed by the Republican-dominated Legislature would prohibit dilation and evacuation abortions, which the legislation calls "dismemberment abortion." Federal courts have blocked similar laws in others states, but Indiana anti-abortion groups hope Justice Brett Kavanaugh's addition to the U.S. Supreme Court has pushed it further to the right on abortion questions. The ACLU of Indiana said it filed the lawsuit on behalf of two doctors who perform the procedure because the law would put a "substantial and unwarranted burden on women's ability to obtain second-trimester, pre-viability, abortions." Indiana's new law, set to take effect July 1, would make it illegal for doctors to use instruments such as clamps, forceps and scissors to remove a fetus from the womb unless to save the pregnant woman's life or prevent serious health risk to the woman. The law specifically excludes "psychological or emotional conditions" as acceptable considerations. The person performing such an abortion could face a felony charge punishable by one to six years in prison.

DNR: PUSH TO MAKE FRANCES SLOCUM A STATE PARK - A conservation group is spearheading a campaign to turn Frances Slocum State Forest into a state park as part of an effort to stop a logging project there and improve road access and trails at the site (Gerber, Kokomo Tribune). Members of the Friends of Salamonie Forest on Thursday joined residents who live near the forest to drop off a petition calling for the area to be designated a state park to the Indiana Natural Resources Commission, located in downtown Indianapolis. The petition had signatures from more than 870 residents who live mostly in north central Indiana, including people from Kokomo, Russiaville, Greentown and Tipton. The appeal also calls for Salamonie River State Forest in Wabash County to be designated a state park. The petition comes after the Indiana Department of Natural Resources continues to move forward with logging projects at both forests. At Frances Slocum State Forest, a 91-acre tract that runs between the Mississinewa River and the forest's access road has been pegged for the project, which aims to restore native hardwood trees.

BUSINESS: CELADON HIT WITH $42M FINE - Indianapolis-based trucking company Celadon Group Inc. has agreed to pay $42.2 million in restitution to settle securities fraud charges announced Thursday by the U.S. Department of Justice (IBJ). Under the settlement, the company acknowledged "filing materially false and misleading statements to investors and falsifying books, records and accounts," federal prosecutors said. The restitution will go to "shareholder victims," according to the agreement. In addition, Danny Williams, former president of Quality Cos.—a Celadon subsidiary that owned trucks and leased them to drivers—has reached a plea agreement with prosecutors after being charged with one count of conspiracy to commit securities fraud, making false statements to a public company's accountants, and falsifying books, records and accounts of a public company.

MEDIA: NEW FILM ON FATHER HESBURGH - A new documentary film about the Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, the late longtime president of the University of Notre Dame, will open Friday at AMC Movies 16 in South Bend (South Bend Tribune). Advance tickets are available at amctheatres.com. After the 7:15 p.m. Friday showing, there will be a free post-film Q&A with director Patrick Creadon and producer Jerry Barca. The film also will be shown May 2 to 11 at the DeBartolo Performing Arts Center at Notre Dame. Advance tickets are available at: performingarts.nd.edu. "Hesburgh," directed by Patrick Creadon and produced by Jerry Barca, details than 50 years of American history as seen through the eyes of Hesburgh, who died in 2015 at age 97. Hesburgh led Notre Dame as its president from 1952 to 1987. He is remembered as a Catholic priest, educator, civil rights activist, and an adviser to presidents and popes.

SPORTS: COLTS STOCK UP 2ND ROUND PICKS - The Colts traded the 26th pick in the first round of the NFL Draft to Washington (CBS4). They will get the Redskins second round pick this year (46th overall) and their second round pick next year. "I kind of had a feeling," said Colts general manager Chris Ballard. "I don't know why. Sometimes you have a feeling that this is going to be the best. We had kind of counted in the first round guys that we thought were worth the first round pick. I had a feeling we were going to have a chance to get out and I thought it was going to be the best thing for us long-term." The Colts will have four picks on day two of the draft. They have the 34th, 46th and 59th overall in the second round and the 89th overall in the third round. "I think there's still a lot of good players, not only at wide out and corner, but I think it's still good at safety," Ballard said. "I still think there's some d-linemen that are good. I still think there are a couple of 'backers that are good. I still think there's good players in the second, third, fourth and fifth rounds that we're going to have a chance to get our hands on."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP HEADS TO SIMMERING NRA - President Trump will address the National Rifle Association's annual convention here Friday, where he is likely to receive a rousing reception despite some dissatisfaction with his gun-control record (Wall Street Journal). The only major action Mr. Trump has taken on gun control since being elected was to ban bump stocks, devices that make semiautomatic rifles fire like machine guns and which were used in the Las Vegas massacre. It was the first time in more than 50 years that the federal government has required a gun or gun accessory to be turned over or destroyed en masse, according to gun historians. Meanwhile, Mr. Trump hasn't signed into law any major pro-gun legislation. Some people associated with other, more strident gun-rights groups have criticized Mr. Trump over the bump-stock ban and some NRA members canceled their booths at this year's convention because the organization didn't fight against it. But with Democrats now in control of the House and many of the party's presidential candidates advocating more gun restrictions, most of the expected 80,000 attendees at the NRA convention will likely be on the president's side, experts said. "There will be a group that will be mad at the bump-stock ban and they may be vocal about it, but overall he will receive a very enthusiastic greeting," said Richard Feldman, a former NRA official and author of "Ricochet: Confessions of a Gun Lobbyist."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP DESCRIBES FAILED 'COUP' - President Donald Trump on Thursday called the FBI probe into his 2016 campaign and subsequent investigations into Russian election meddling "an attempted overthrow" of his administration (Politico). "This was a coup," Trump told host Sean Hannity on Fox News' "Hannity" in his first interview since the Mueller report's release. "This was an attempted overthrow of the United States government." Trump insisted that special counsel Robert Mueller's team investigating Russian interference in the 2016 election had gone "hog wild to find something about the administration which obviously wasn't there."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SIGNS ORDER ON SECURITY CLEARANCES - President Donald Trump signed an executive order late Wednesday officially making the U.S. military responsible for virtually all security background checks for millions of federal workers, the latest step by the administration to tackle a daunting backlog of security clearance cases (ABC News). The order calls for the National Background Investigations Bureau, currently under the civilian Office of Personnel Management, to be absorbed by the Department of Defense under a reorganized, and renamed, Defense Counterintelligence and Security Agency.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP DENIES ORDERING MCGAHN TO FIRE MUELLER - President Trump said in a tweet Thursday that he never asked then-White House counsel Don McGahn to fire special counsel Robert Mueller, directly contradicting a detailed account in Mr. Mueller's report (Wall Street Journal). "As has been incorrectly reported by the Fake News Media, I never told then White House Counsel Don McGahn to fire Robert Mueller, even though I had the legal right to do so," Mr. Trump wrote on Twitter. "If I wanted to fire Mueller, I didn't need McGahn to do it, I could have done it myself."

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE SAYS TRADE PACT ESSENTIAL FOR AUTO INDUSTRY - Vice President Mike Pence said a new North American trade treaty is "absolutely essential" to keep Michigan automotive manufacturers competitive (AutoBody News). Pence visited Michigan April 24 as part of an effort to convince Congress to ratify the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement, which Pence said would "level the playing field" for American workers and manufacturers and bring billions of dollars in new investment. Pence made several stops in Southeast Michigan April 24, fundraising for the president's re-election campaign and addressing auto industry stakeholders at a public event in Taylor. Michigan was Pence's first stop on a nationwide tour to gather support for the USMCA, which would replace the 1994 North American Free Trade Agreement. The vice president said Trump is delivering on his promises to support Michigan workers and asked attendees in Taylor to contact their representatives in Congress. "The truth is, we need to hear from Michigan," Pence said. "We need to hear from the Motor City. We need to hear from the backbone of the American auto industry."

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE TO SPEAK AT EVANSVILLE RIGHT TO LIFE DINNER - Vice President Mike Pence has accepted a verbal invitation to headline Right to Life of Southwest Indiana's 2020 fundraising banquet, according to the Evansville-based anti-abortion group (Evansville Courier & Press). Pence, a former Indiana governor, would be the organization's highest-ranking keynote speaker yet. Past speakers have included 2009's powerhouse tandem of Sarah Palin, then governor of Alaska, and Republican National Committee Chairman Michael Steele. Right to Life of Southwest Indiana describes its spring banquet, which annually attracts some 2,000 people, as "the largest pro-life banquet in the country."

WHITE HOUSE: MULVANEY IMPLORES GOP TO RAISE DEBT CEILING - Top White House officials are imploring key Republicans to move quickly and raise the debt ceiling, four people briefed on the discussions said, concerned that a prolonged impasse could raise the chances of a misstep that damages the economy later this year (Washington Post). The requests have taken on new urgency because other budget discussions with Capitol Hill have broken down, leaving policymakers at a loss for ways to avoid a pileup of dangerous deadlines in September that could affect the stock market, labor market and economic growth. Acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney has played a major role in communicating the desire, and it's shared broadly by many Republicans on Capitol Hill, according to the people briefed on the discussions, who spoke on the condition of anonymity to describe private deliberations.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will leave the White House at 9 a.m. en route to Indianapolis. He will arrive at Lucas Oil Stadium at 11:15 a.m. and deliver remarks at the National Rifle Association's annual meeting. Trump will then return to Washington. At 4:15 p.m., the president will participate in the arrival of Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe. The two will meet and then participate in a bilateral meeting in the Oval Office. At 7:15 p.m., Trump and Melania Trump will have dinner with Abe and his wife Akie Abe. Today is Melania's birthday.

STATE: NORTH KOREA CHARGES $2M FOR WARMBIER CARE - North Korea issued a $2 million bill for the hospital care of comatose American Otto Warmbier, insisting that a U.S. official sign a pledge to pay it before being allowed to fly the University of Virginia student from Pyongyang in 2017 (Washington Post). The presentation of the invoice – not previously disclosed by U.S. or North Korean officials – was extraordinarily brazen even for a regime known for its aggressive tactics. But the main U.S. envoy sent to retrieve Warmbier signed an agreement to pay the medical bill on instructions passed down from President Donald Trump, according to two people familiar with the situation. They spoke on the condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the matter publicly.

PENTAGON: UNFILLED CIVILIAN PETITIONS A PROBLEM - A quarter of the Pentagon's most senior civilian posts remain filled by temporary personnel who are unconfirmed by the Senate – a high number that has slowed decisions, handicapped the department in policy disputes and shifted more power to the White House, according to recently departed Pentagon officials (Politico). Including acting Defense Secretary Pat Shanahan, who has served in a temporary capacity for an unprecedented 115 days, nine of the Pentagon's 45 secretaries, deputy secretaries, undersecretaries, deputy undersecretaries, and assistant secretaries are serving in an acting capacity or fall into a related category of officials who are "performing the duties of" the position, according to a POLITICO review.

AGRICULTURE: U.S./CHINA TALKS TO RESUME NEXT WEEK - The U.S. and China will resume trade talks next week. U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer will travel to China to meet with trade officials along with Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin (Hoosier Ag Today). China is also expected to return to the U.S. for negotiations on May 8th. Next week's discussions will cover intellectual property, forced technology transfer, non-tariff barriers, agriculture, services, purchases, and enforcement, according to a White House statement. Both sides appear hopeful to reach a draft agreement by the end of May. The negotiations, which stem from the tit-for-tat trade war last year, bring hope that tariffs will come to an end for U.S. agriculture.

MICHIGAN: COURT ORDER STATE TO REDISTRICT - A panel of three federal judges ruled on Thursday that 34 congressional and state legislative districts in Michigan are extreme partisan gerrymanders and unconstitutional. The judges ordered state lawmakers to redraw maps in time for elections in 2020 (New York Times). The panel wrote that it was joining "the growing chorus of federal courts" that have held that drawing districts to unfairly favor the party in power is unconstitutional. The judges said the maps violated Democratic voters' constitutional rights. But the impact of the ruling ultimately will turn on an opinion by the Supreme Court, which is weighing decisions in two other partisan gerrymander cases involving congressional districts in North Carolina and Maryland. The justices' decision in those cases, expected by the end of June, could reinforce the Michigan ruling, force alterations to it, or even overrule it entirely.

CITIES: POLICE PROBE ST. JOHN COUNCIL THREATS - State police are investigating threats allegedly made by a frequent town critic against St. John Town Council members (Kirkman, NWI Times). Several reports have been made to police regarding the "reckless and threatening behavior" of a St. John resident toward members of the Town Council, according to a letter addressed to the St. John Republican Committee from Chairman Christian Jorgensen. In the letter, which was posted on the committee's Facebook page, Jorgensen claims Edward Conn, previously known as Edward Moldenhauer, is "a potential threat to the Republican Party" in St. John. Jorgensen, who openly has endorsed Mark Barenie, Libby Popovic and Rose Hejl, referenced a recent Town Council meeting where Conn questioned Hejl's business, Superior Snacks, during public comment. "This is not an isolated incident. I have been informed that several reports have been made against this man with the St. John police department as well as the State Police and FBI, all regarding his behavior during this primary election," Jorgensen wrote. "Reckless and threatening behavior cannot be tolerated and is not part of civilized political discourse."

CITIES: FORT WAYNE CIB GIVES ELECTRIC WORKS MORE TIME - The Allen County Fort Wayne Capital Improvement Board this morning voted to give the developers of Electric Works more time before closing on the final financing for the project (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The date was extended to Nov. 30, a delay needed "in part because of the (federal) government shutdown," Peter Mallers, the developers' attorney, told the board. The 35-day shutdown affected the National Park Service, which is providing a sizable portion of funding through New Market Tax Credits, the board learned. The credits provide a federal tax break to those who invest private money in projects in distressed communities. Several other benchmarks for aspects of Electric Works also were pushed back. But developers expressed confidence that they would be met.

CITIES: 4TH SCOOTER COMPANY COMING TO INDY - A fourth scooter company is setting up shop in Indianapolis (Fox59). Thursday, the City said its Department of Business and Neighborhood Services (BNS) gave final approval for Lyft to join Bird, Lime and Spin. Additionally, a meeting of the BNS Board is scheduled for May 10 to introduce and adopt several regulations regarding mobility operations in Indy. The regulations are expected to include caps on the number of companies allowed to operate in the city, caps on the number of scooters permitted, and restrictions regarding where companies are allowed to set out the scooters.

COUNTIES: NEW TRIAL DATE FOR LANDSKE - A special judge granted a request Thursday from William "Bill" Landske to postpone his trial until August on charges alleging he fatally shot a prominent local attorney who had served his family for decades (Reese, NWI Times). Landske, 84, had been scheduled to stand trial starting May 28 on one count of murder in the Aug. 15 shooting death of T. Edward Page, a local attorney and former magistrate judge. Judge Rex Kepner rescheduled Landske's trial for Aug. 26. A pretrial hearing is set for Aug. 1. Kepner, who has now granted two requests from Landske to postpone trial, warned defense attorney Scott King and Deputy Prosecutor Michael Toth he likely will refuse to grant any further continuances. "This is our last go-round with moving the trial date, so we need to sort that out by Aug. 1, or not sort it out," Kepner said.

COUNTIES: WYMAN SAYS HOWARD IS STRONG - Howard County Commissioner Paul Wyman gave his annual State of the County address Wednesday, painting a picture of a community that has recovered from the depths of the Great Recession and made crucial strides in areas ranging from economic development to rural internet access (Myers, Kokomo Tribune). Wyman, updating a room filled mostly with public and business officials, acknowledged county government handles many services "you just don't want to talk about at your dinner table" but used the platform to highlight contributions to an area that has in recent years revamped its image. To prove his point, Wyman pulled out a copy of Travel Indiana magazine that recommended a four-day "staycation" in Kokomo and Howard County, an idea that a decade ago would have been unimaginable. "My report to you today is, look, we're in excellent condition," said Wyman. "We're never going to be perfect, no community ever is perfect, but when you put it together in its totality, how we're performing as a community, I just couldn't be more proud. "County government, we're debt free, we're in very strong financial position, we lead many ways around the state. We get lots of phone calls from other counties asking how we're doing things."

COUNTIES: ELKHART TO RECOVER MONEY FROM EMPLOYEES - Two more former sheriff's office employees accused of wage theft have pleaded guilty and agreed to repay the county (Elkhart Truth). Susan Graves, 59, and Steven Mock, 65, each admitted Thursday to criminal conversion, a Class A misdemeanor, in an agreement that sets a punishment of one year in jail. The sentence is suspended on good behavior.

INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT

Lessons learned

Will budget's big education bucks trickle down to teachers?

Six education associations stood side-by-side with the Governor and Republican legislative leaders on the penultimate day of the 2019 legislative session to declare victory for public education in the state budget. Teachers weren't invited, a stark reversal from January, when teachers seemed to hold all the cards and Republicans were blaming administrative bloat for why teacher pay had stagnated despite the hundreds of millions of dollars in new state funding allocated to education over the past decade.

After seeing ISTA flex its newfound political clout with Republican leadership as session got underway, "we said need to be at the table, too," explains Indiana School Boards Association Executive Director Terry Spradlin, who convened the six associations. "We got together and talked about goals and objectives. Everyone contributed." All six groups reached an agreement to support a set of common conditions for success. Even the rural and suburban school associations were on the same page regarding the best way to handle the complexity index – no small feat. The groups submitted Version 3.0 of their budget goals to Republican leadership on April 15, and on April 22, the groups received a phone call that all 10 points would be met. "We asked for a four percent per-year increase overall, and they got to 4.5%. So they found the dollars," says Denny Costerison, executive director of the Indiana Association of School Business Officials.

House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) of Indianapolis says the groups that made "reasonable" requests were represented at the April 23 budget reveal on the floor of the House. In addition to IASBO's Costerison and ISBA's Spradlin, the group of six consisted of Chris Lagoni, executive director of the Indiana Small and Rural Schools Association; David Marcotte, executive director of the Indiana Urban Schools Association; Jim Snapp, president of the Coalition of Growing and Suburban Schools (and superintendent of the Brownsburg Community School Corporation); and Robert Taylor of the Indiana Association of Public School Superintendents.

If you think back to when the December revenue forecast was released, fiscal experts were predicting that after meeting obligations to the Department of Child Services and Medicaid, there would be less than $50 million left to spend on everything else. And yet the final budget deal increases K-12 education by $763 million, more money than either of the versions that initially passed the House or Senate, and the most new money for K-12 education in at least a decade. The Governor deserves credit for his response to the December forecast, says Spradlin. The ISBA executive director points out that the Gov submitted a budget with tuition support increases of 2.0% per year, and a week later in the State of the State, unveiled his teacher pension paydown plan that added the equivalent of another one percent.

State budget highlights include:

- $539 million increase in formula funding over the biennium, or 2.5% per year
- $763 million increase in terms of all K-12 funding inside and outside the formula, or about 4.5% per year
- Increase to the foundation amount from $5,352 in FY 2019 to $5,548 (3.7%) in FY 2020 and $5,703 (2.8%) in FY 2021

Dual credit de-valued

Solons pull back on free college program

Per-dual-credit student reimbursement for colleges and universities was cut from $50 to $40.36 in the new biennial state budget that was approved Wednesday night.

With 562,092 dual credit student enrollments eligible for state funding, the nearly $10 per-pupil reduction translates into a loss of $5.4 million.

Looking at the state's three largest dual credit providers, the change results in a cut of:

- $3,229,545 for Ivy Tech Community College
- $644,501 for the Indiana University system
- $508,751 for the Purdue University system

The total dual credit appropriation in the new budget is $22.7 million.

The number of dual credit students receiving state funding will have surged by 92% between the FY 2016-2017 and FY 2020-2021 budgets.

In terms of base dollars, Indiana colleges and universities will see a 1.0% increase in new money in the first year of the biennium and then 2.5% new money during the second year.

- $22.5 million per year for English Language Learners, up from $17.5 million per year
- $19 million per year for the Secured School Grant program, up from $9 million per year
- $37.5 million for the Teacher Achievement Grant, up from $30 million per year
- Move the August 1 kindergarten ADM cut-off date to September 1 for 2019 and October 1 for 2020
- $150 million directed to the Post-1996 Teachers' Retirement Fund, resulting in a combined savings for all school districts of $70 million per year
- More "winners" than either of the versions that initially passed the House and Senate
- Floor to cap the Complexity losses
- A second Complexity tier for districts with the most English Language Learners
- A Summer study committee to look at the Complexity Index

The budget also retains more than $2 billion in reserve. "When the downturn in our economy happens, and it will, Indiana will be prepared for it," said Speaker Bosma. "This is prudent for Hoosier taxpayers, prudent for schools. Schools took a haircut, a small one, but a haircut, in 2008. We're trying to avoid that happening again in the future."

Hoosier teachers did not go on strike - instead, ISTA coordinated local "walk-ins" where teachers wearing "Red for Ed" met 30-45 minutes before the start of the school day, typically at the flagpole, and held a demonstration before walking into the building in unison.

Teachers will now turn their focus to local negotiations.

State lawmakers will also be tracking via House Enrolled Act 1003 how much of the "historic" funding increase ends up in teacher salaries, says Speaker Bosma.

The only guaranteed money for teachers in the state budget is through the Teacher Appreciation Grant, which increases by 25% to $37.5 million per year.

As the elder statesman speaking on behalf of the six education associations during the press conference on the House floor, Costerison noted that the group of six and their respective members are committed to increasing teacher salaries with the new money.

Speaker Bosma confirmed that when he met with the school groups in his office, they told him, "Hey, we get the message. We've got to focus on teacher salaries, and we're going to do that."

House Enrolled Act 1002

House Bill 1404 revising the high school accountability standards to comport with graduation pathways was never called down for a Third Reading vote in the Senate, after opponents of the language allowing the State Board of Education to hold high schools accountable for post-graduation student outcomes succeeded in having the language removed via a Second Reading amendment offered by Sen. Jean Leising (R) of Oldenburg . . . but after some conference committee surgery, House Bill 1002 now provides for the appointment of a 15-person school accountability panel to review and recommend new indicators for high school accountability. The panel "shall consider" metrics of post-graduation success. The panel would be co-chaired by two members of the State Board of Education, and recommendations would be due back by October 30.

For those who believe it's unreasonable to judge high schools based on what happens to students after they graduate, the fight moves to a new arena. The Indiana School Boards Association has written that "higher education institutions, the branches of the U.S. military, and employers should own the further development, training, and advancement of young adults in their respective systems," while the Indiana State Teachers Association sent out an Action Alert opposing the proposal to "grade a school, and hold it accountable, for the life circumstances and choices of its former students, months after they graduate."

House Enrolled Act 1003

House Bill 1003 establishing the goal that school districts transfer no more than 15% of their education fund revenue to the operations fund is on its way to the Governor's desk.

There are no penalties for non-compliance, although observers are wary that teeth may be added in future legislative sessions. Republicans are hopeful that the measure will help nudge districts toward maximizing the amount of money they devote to teacher compensation. Districts that do not meet the target will be required to submit and publish "explanatory documentation" with "a corrective action plan to make progress in meeting the education fund transfer target percentage for the next calendar year." The fiscal and qualitative indicators committee of the Distressed Unit Appeal Board "may issue an official recommendation to the school corporation to perform a review and improve its budgeting procedures in consultation with any state agencies" and the "state agencies specified by the fiscal and qualitative indicators committee shall assist the school corporation before and during its next collective bargaining period with the goal of meeting or making progress toward the education fund transfer target percentage."

Conference committee negotiators considered moving the transfer target to 20% but decided the bill wouldn't accomplish much in that case since 98% of districts already com in under 20 percent. "This (15%) gives them at least a level to try and attain," said Sen. Jeff Raatz (R) of Richmond. The Indiana State Teachers Association had suggested that the target be moved in the other direction to 10 percent. House Education Committee Chair Rep. Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis indicated that, "We picked a benchmark. We didn't know if this is the right place to be, but over time we will find out," he said, pointing out the bill's transparency and reporting provisions.

The Democratic conferees were removed from the bill. Sen. Mark Stoops (D) of Bloomington and Rep. Ed DeLaney (D) of Indianapolis wanted a guarantee that there would not be punitive consequences for districts that do not attain the transfer target and sought a similar framework to monitor how charter schools spend their money.

House Enrolled Act 1004

The annual Indicators of School Crime and Safety report from the National Center for Education Statistics and the Bureau of Justice Statistics is missing Indiana data on student drug and alcohol use, bullying at school and via electronic means, gangs at school, physical fights on school property, students carrying weapons, and students threatened or injured with a weapon on school grounds. Why? Not enough Indiana schools participated in the 2017 administration of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's biannual Youth Risk Behavior assessment.

Drawing on the recommendations of the Governor's 2018 school safety working group, House Bill 1004, the session's comprehensive school safety measure, attempted to address the substandard participation rates in a way that avoided mandating participation by schools or students, but as the bill moved to conference committee, opposition to the survey was heating up from Advance America and the American Family Association of Indiana.

The House version required that parents be given multiple opportunities to opt-out of the youth risk assessment, yet the version that passed the Senate raised the bar by requiring schools to obtain prior written informed parental consent. "Unfortunately, too many kids whose parents are not engaged are not going to get a sign off, and those may be the ones who need services the most," lamented Rep. Kevin Mahan (R) of Hartford City. The CDC survey will help us understand what is going on in our schools, said Rep. Wendy McNamara (R) of Evansville. If your school has a suicide problem, maybe that's because there's a drug problem that you don't know about yet that the anonymous survey would bring to the fore, she said. "What it comes right down to is the mental health of our kids. Our kids today are growing up in such a complex world - nothing like anything we have ever imagined." She explained that she had a student whose anxiety was so bad that he was curled up in a ball in the hallway. If you're having a problem with a kid, the first thing you do is call a parent, she said. She called the parents, but they too busy to come help the child, so she called the sister, but she too was too busy that day. "Imagine having to call 911 to get a parent to respond. That's the reality that too many of our teachers face." She lamented that policymakers and schools "still have along way to go on the mental health piece." The final version of HB 1004 that emerged from conference committee contained zero mention of either the Youth Risk Behavior Survey or mental health funding.

House Republicans tried to open the doors to expanding mental health services in schools, explained Speaker Bosma. "We had a very strong provision I felt in House Bill 1004. Rep. Tony Cook (R) had another bill that also adequately addressed it. I was very comfortable with the language that had been in the budget. But some of the senators were not. So we agreed to take it out," which they accomplished through HB 1629. "We'll keep working on it," assures the Speaker. "Just couldn't solve all the issues here in the closing days."

Language in HB 1004 making it to the finish line reduces Secured School Fund matching grant requirements to benefit small school districts with fewer than 1,000 students. The bill also requires all schools to conduct at least one active shooter drill each year.

House Bill 1253

State funding for firearms training for school employees perished on the last day of session when the bill's author, Rep. Jim Lucas (R) of Seymour, stood his ground in opposition to making the training mandatory ("I think he stuck to his guns," quipped the Speaker of the House).

Putting a school resource officer in one school costs $70,000, but for that same amount of money, we can train 45 teachers and staff, said Rep. Lucas. Against his wishes, the bill had been amended in the Senate on Second Reading to provide that school employees who have been authorized by their local school board to carry a firearm must complete a 40-hour training course and a psychological assessment. Moms Demand Action for Gun Sense in America warned, "There's no evidence to support the idea that arming teachers makes kids and schools safer. In fact, the evidence that we do have is quite to the contrary - it raises the risk."

The bill also would have prohibited school drills that involve shooting a projectile at an employee without the employee's written consent. "We don't set schools on fire to simulate a fire drill," bemoaned Sen. Eddie Melton (D) of Gary. "We don't tear a school apart for a tornado drill. We should not be shooting our teachers with projectiles to simulate a school shooting during training."

Senate Enrolled Act 325

As it left the Senate, Senate Bill 325 created a new grant program to support student-led public service announcements about school safety. But in the House Education Committee, the old language was stripped out and new language was inserted allowing the Indiana Secured School Fund to cover the provision of mental health services through agreements with mental health providers, the provision of social emotional wellness services, and the implementation of mental health and substance use disorder identification and parent support plans.

"We need to enhance the opportunity for mental health providers to come into our schools," says Rep. Tony Cook (R) of Cicero. "School counselors are overloaded and aren't trained in some of the critical mental health aspects," he notes. The amended bill passed unanimously out of committee, although Rep. Jim Lucas (R) of Seymour questioned the fiscal wisdom of asking taxpayers to pay for a trained professional for every child who needs coping skills that aren't taught at home. He also noted that the Parkland shooter had been receiving mental health treatment for eight years and that the shooter at Sandy Hook Elementary had received mental health treatment from Ivy League professionals.

But on Second Reading, all references to mental health were deleted from the bill. On Thirds, the bill unanimously passed the House, and the Senate unanimously consented to the House changes. So after so many permutations, what does Senate Bill 225 in its final form do? The measure allows the Secured School Fund to be used to provide vaguely defined “student and parent support services” that address instances where a “student demonstrates a repeated pattern of aberrant or abnormal behavior.” Seven days after the Senate concurrence, the bill had still not been signed by the Senate President, and no one should be surprised if it never is.

Senate Enrolled Act 390

The Indiana House and Senate passed Senate Bill 390, legislation that the House sponsor, Rep. Chuck Goodrich (R) of Noblesville, described as bringing transparency to the collective bargaining process.

The bill continues to allow contract negotiations to occur in private. However, before the formal bargaining period begins, the parties must hold a public hearing and take public testimony. Once a tentative agreement has been reached, the school district must post the contract on its website and must hold a public meeting to discuss the tentative agreement at least 72 hours before it is ratified. The bill also allows civil penalties for unfair labor practices.

While Democrats protested that the transparency aspects would disrupt the process, Rep. Tony Cook (R) of Cicero rose to support the measure, indicating his belief that the two sides still have enough time to get together for private negotiating sessions, and moreover, he said, the new public sessions bookending the private negotiations will hopefully help the community become better acquainted with the school finance issues that go into teacher compensation.

IN Elementary & Secondary Ed

IN Administration . . .

- Dozens of drinking water fixtures in the School City of Hammond have been taken out of service after environmental testing identified unacceptable levels of lead, but only buildings built before 1986 have been tested to date, and local print and TV coverage indicated that some folks in schools that were constructed more recently remain uneasy.

- The Goshen Community Schools receives school board approval to contract with Villing & Company for a fourth year for marketing, advertising, and brand awareness consulting services. The cost of the campaign extension will be $49,700. Objectives for the marketing plan are to increase enrollment, demonstrate the unique features and benefits of a GCS education, target populations who may be dissatisfied with other schools, and reinforce positive perceptions among existing GCS consumers, reports the Goshen News. The plan also calls for discontinuing television spots, expanding digital and social media advertising, continuing outdoor billboards, maximizing media exposure during Summer months, and highlighting construction and renovation milestones.

- The Marion Community Schools is considering creation of the Marion Community Schools Corporation Police Department. Current officers deployed in each MCS school are typically off-duty Marion Police Department officers.

- The Clark-Pleasant Community School Corporation Board of Trustees votes to create an in-house police department consisting of a police chief, two full-time police officers, and 14 part-time school resource officers. The district expects to spend about $650,000 of referendum proceeds annually on police salaries. CPCSC also approved spending just over $2 million for more than 500 security cameras and secure door locks.

IN Budgets & Finance . . .

- Deficit-reduction measures approved by the Lake Ridge Schools include the closure of Hosford Park Elementary School at the end of the 2019-2020 school year and pink slips for 13 teachers, four administrators, one counselor, three library aides, a nurse, and custodians.

- Seeking to cope with the budget impact from the loss of some 30 students, the Oak Hill United School Corporation is considering a reduction in force as well as decreasing hours for instructional assistants, perhaps limiting the hours for aides to a total combined 70 hours per day across the entire school corporation, and even filling some teaching posts with aides.

- Look for the Gary Community School Corporation to test the bond market waters with a $5 million bond refunding deal to see just how receptive the market might be to the troubled district, under the direction of a state-appointed emergency manager, perhaps leading to a bigger deal to address its current overall debt portfolio.

- Some recent and upcoming bond offerings include: April 25 - Jennings County School Building Corporation First Mortgage Bonds, Series 2019A; $5,000,000 Maturity 2020 - 2032; Baker Tilly Municipal Advisors . . . Jennings County School Building Corporation First Mortgage Bonds, Series 2019B; $5,000,000 Maturity 2020 - 2032; Baker Tilly Municipal Advisors . . . April 30 - Seymour Community Schools General Obligation Bonds of 2019; $5,170,000; Maturity 2020 - 2023; Thurber & Brock . . . May 1 - Hamilton Southeastern Schools General Obligation Bonds of 2019; $17,400,000; Maturity 2020 - 2023; Stifel, Nicolaus & Co., Inc.

IN Compensation . . .

- The Rochester Community School Corporation Board of Trustees adopted a resolution supporting “our educators as they participate in legally permitted activities, including RedforEd” and “engage in legal activities that clearly make their demands known concerning necessary funding for meaningful teacher and support staff raises and increased education funding.”

IN Charter Schools . . .

- Phalen High School on the far east side of Indianapolis launches a Go Fund Me page seeking to raise $3.5 million to construct a gymnasium.

- The application submitted to the Indiana Charter School Board seeking to convert Emmerich Manual and Howe high schools in the Indianapolis Public Schools to charter schools operated by Charter Schools USA was withdrawn. Both schools are currently operating under state intervention.

IN Programs & Curriculum . . .

- During a pitch to the School City of Hammond on starting a virtual academy, Edmentum revealed that it already had 30 prospective students in the queue who participate in Total Package Hockey and needed a virtual program. The student-athletes train in Fishers but travel all over the country to play in tournaments. The addition of the 30 Total Package Hockey students to the virtual academy deal would cost the district $1,500 per student, said the Edmentum representative, who explained that the $45,000 add-on fee would actually go to Total Package Hockey “to manage what they do.”

IN Policy . . .

- The Clark-Pleasant Community School Corporation will again offer families a choice of which elementary school they want their children to attend for the upcoming school year.

- The Franklin Community Schools launches STOPit, an online reporting tool for bullying, cyber abuse, and other inappropriate behaviors. Students received an access code to download the STOPit mobile app on their smartphone or tablet. Not only does the app allow students to report incidents anonymously, but it also comes with a messenger feature allowing students to engage in anonymous two-way communication with school contacts.

- Quickly attracting considerable local – and some national – attention was a controversial Wednesday decision by the Hamilton Southeastern Schools school board to turn down a strong nondiscrimination policy that included a list of protected classes that included sexual orientation and gender identity. The meeting provoked strong emotions from assorted participants and board members.

□ Defeated on a 4-3 vote was this language: “The school corporation does not discriminate in its educational or employment activities on the basis of race, color, national origin, sex (including transgender status, sexual orientation, gender identity and expression), disability, age, religion, military status, ancestry or genetic information, nor on any basis prohibited by applicable federal or state laws.”

□ Approved instead on what amounts to a first reading (also via a 4-3 vote) was this language: “The school corporation will not discriminate in its educational and employment activities on any basis prohibited by applicable federal or state laws, including but not limited to a real or perceived characteristic, trait, belief, practice, association or other attribute described in those laws.”

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- The Clark-Pleasant Community School Corporation authorizes up to $35 million in Bond Anticipation Notes in connection with the construction of a new elementary school. The project is to be financed through a lease rental agreement with the building corporation.

- Garmong Construction of Evansville is the successful bidder for a South Gibson School Corporation Fort Branch Community School office and HVAC project.

- The Huntington County Community School Corporation retains the Hagerman Group as construction manager for a potential project at Huntington North High School.

- The School City of Hammond Board of Trustees tables a vote on a proposal to study the closure of Lafayette, Columbia and Miller elementary schools.

- The Lakeland School Corporation Board of Trustees votes to close Lima-Brighton Elementary School located in Howe and Wolcott Mills Elementary School in Wolcottville at the end of the school year. The board also approved converting Parkside Elementary School into a K-2 building, Lakeland Middle School into a 3-6 building, and Lakeland High School into a junior/senior high.

- The Vincennes Community School Corporation buys back the former Washington Elementary building from First Christian Church in a sale in which VCSC held a right of first refusal. The district sold the building to the church in 2012 to raise cash, and it will buy the facility back for $30,000, the original sale price. The building – which had been rented from the church in the last few years to house students during other facility renovations – is itself expected to undergo repainting and be outfitted with new energy-efficient LED lighting before being used for assorted school programs.

IN Transition . . .

- Wayne Barker, superintendent of the M.S.D. of Bluffton-Harrison Schools, will become the next chief of the School City of Mishawaka under a three-year contract that runs from July 1, 2019 through June 30, 2022. He’s set to earn a first-year annual salary of $170,000 with performance incentive pay of $10,000 based upon his evaluation (45%); the district’s Indiana Department of Education grade (10%) and mutually agreed Board of School Trustees goals and metrics (45%).

- Governor Eric Holcomb (R) appoints his senior education advisor, Dr. Lee Ann Kwiatkowski of Greenwood, to the Education Commission of the States.

- Aleesia Johnson, interim superintendent of the Indianapolis Public Schools, confirms she will apply to superintend the state’s largest school district on a permanent basis.

- Dexter Suggs has been named assistant superintendent of teaching, learning, and academic programming for the School City of Merrillville. He has held administrative positions with the M.S.D. of Wayne Township and the Indianapolis Public Schools.

- With the retirement of Chief Financial Officer Theo Boone, the School City of Hammond enters into a two-days per week consultancy agreement with Matt Ruess, a former CFO for the Crown Point Community School Corporation.

- The Richmond Community Schools promotes chief human resources officer Jennifer O’Brien to assistant superintendent.

- The White River Valley School District taps Eastern Greene High School Principal Doug Lewis as the next principal of White River Valley High School, effective June 1. Current WRV High School Principal LeAnne Kelley is retiring after 33 years in education.

IN Government . . .

- School groups (and mayors) were delighted that House Bill 1034 died on the last day of session, but we wouldn't be surprised to see the bill revisited during the 2020 short session. The bill's sponsor, Senate Tax and Fiscal Policy Chair Sen. Travis Holdman (R) of Markle, said he simply ran out of time this year. In relevant part for education, Sen. Holdman had added language in the Senate Tax and Fiscal Policy Committee during the second half of session to address a problem that he sees of school districts artificially splitting construction projects in order to avoid triggering a referendum.

- House Bill 1628, a measure allowing all Indiana counties to participate in the On My Way Pre-K program is on its way to the Governor. The bill, which does not include any additional money, grandfathered in the current number of grants awarded to four-year-olds within the 20 pilot counties and the Indy Preschool Program, which was 3,638 as of January 2019. The bill also allows up to 20% of pre-K grants to be awarded to four-year-olds from households with annual income of up to 185% of the federal poverty level. Until now, eligibility has been limited to households of up to 127% of the federal poverty line.

□ The National Institute for Early Education Research just released its annual preschool yearbook, and the bad news is that Indiana has been taken off the list of states with a state-funded preschool program. Indiana's pilot program dropped off the list, according to the report, because state lawmakers, beginning with the 2017-2018 school year, added a parent work requirement to the eligibility rules. We're not one of six states without a state-funded pre-K program, according to the NIEER definition.

- Sen. John Ruckelshaus (R) of Indianapolis authored a resolution (SR 64) urging the Legislative Services Agency to conduct a "comprehensive, data-focused study examining factors that have led to school shooting and violence in Indiana and the U.S."

- The House and Senate approved the conference committee report for Senate Bill 560, an omnibus elections bill that popped up on the education radar late in the game when the House Committee on Elections and Apportionment chaired by Rep. Tim Wesco (R) of Osceola snuck in, as part of a 35-page amendment, a small section that restricted when units of government can hold a referendum. Recall during the first half of session that school lobbyists already managed to defeated a similar effort from Sen. Blake Doriot (R) of Syracuse to limit school referenda to the general election. The Doriot bill had advanced in a convoluted manner without public testimony on the provision in committee but was not called down on Third Reading in the Senate after a straw poll conducted in the Senate Republican caucus showed that the votes weren't there.

□ During conference committee deliberations on the elections bill, education lobbyists succeeded in removing the referendum restrictions.

- At a Saturday morning Cracker Barrel session in his district, Sen. Eric Bassler (R) of Washington, chair of the Senate Committee on Appropriations K-12 Funding Subcommittee, delicately broached the topic of consolidation during a question about state support for rural school districts. "It's not popular to talk about these things," he said, "but, at some point, as we see school corporations have fewer and fewer students in rural Indiana, I think, at some point, we need to talk about consolidation of administration," he said, according to the Sullivan Times. "One of the challenges - and we want to leave it up to local schools - is, does it make sense for two school corporations that are adjacent to each other to merge their administration costs," continued Sen. Bassler, who earned a master's degree in economics from Indiana University. "That would be one school corporation but multiple high schools."

- Language allowing the possession of firearms at private schools connected to a house of worship was stricken from Senate Bill 119 during conference committee debate . . . only to reemerge in House Bill 1284. The Indiana chapter of Moms Demand Action for Gun Sense in America is now calling on the Governor to veto HB 1284, which the group says would "open a broad loophole in the state law that currently keeps guns out of elementary, middle, and high schools" . . . but don't be surprised if the Governor signs the bill while the National Rifle Association convention is in town (he's scheduled to speak at the event).

- The Senate concurred to House amendments on the virtual education bill, Senate Bill 567, which defines a virtual education program offered by a traditional school corporation as one in which more than 50% of instruction to participating students occurs virtually; requires a school corporation to establish a separate virtual education school if the lesser of: (1) 100 students; or (2) 30% of students receive at least 50% of instruction through a school corporation's virtual program; requires a student to be withdrawn from a school corporation's virtual program after accumulating enough unexcused absences to be classified as a habitual truant; prohibits a school corporation that operates a virtual education program from enrolling a student who does not reside in Indiana; and authorizes the State Board of Education to promulgate rules to regulate virtual education programs offered by traditional school corporations, including the minimum requirements of mandatory annual onboarding and orientation.

□ As we indicated in our last issue, the bill was amended in the House to tighten up the home-school loophole in the high school graduation calculation. The language aims to narrowly target high schools that have an unusually high incidence of students who exit for homeschooling who are not on track to graduate. The language is based on the conventional wisdom that students are most likely to be home-schooled in their younger years and as they grow older and the curriculum becomes more demanding, they may enter the public school system; it's rare for the reverse to occur where students start out in the public system only to decide at some point during their high school career to become home-schooled. The language is designed to address the suspicion that some school administrators are gaming the system and artificially lowering their dropout rates by directing students would otherwise be classified as dropouts to indicate during the state-mandated exit interview that they are leaving in order to pursue a home-school education.

□ The new law could be assumed to entangle right around 100 high schools, based on the 2017 and 2018 data. The law singles out small high schools that had 10% of their cohort leave for home school and large high schools that had five percent of their cohort leave for home school – with the added condition that these students must not have been on track to graduate at the time they exited. Schools that meet the criteria will be required to submit a request to the State Board of Education requesting that these students not be counted as dropouts. After reviewing the request, the State Board is required to deny the request unless the high school demonstrates justifiable cause.

- The comprehensive school bus safety measure, Senate Bill 2, authored by Sen. Randy Head (R) of Logansport in response to the October 30 tragedy in Fulton County when three siblings from the Tippecanoe Valley School Corporation were struck by a car and killed while crossing the street to board the school bus, heads to the Governor. The bill increases penalties for school bus stop arm violations and provides that, with certain exceptions, when a school bus is operated on a U.S. or state route, a school bus may not load or unload a student at a location that requires the student to cross the roadway unless no other safe alternatives are available. For streets or highways other than a U.S. or state route, a school bus must load and unload a student as close to the right-hand curb or edge of the roadway as practicable. The bill also allows schools to petition county governments to pay for the cost of cameras that are installed on school buses to enforce stop arm laws.

- The Epilepsy Foundation of Indiana achieved part of its goals when the Indiana House and Senate approved House Bill 1089 requiring applicants for school employment to undergo seizure recognition training and ensuring that school nurses are able to respond appropriately to a student experiencing a seizure. The bill was authored by Rep. Jeff Thompson (R) of Lizton.

- On the final day of session, the House and Senate voted to approve the House Bill 1630 conference committee report with another random hodgepodge of education matters. The bill, authored by House Committee on Education Chair Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis, directs the State Board of Education to adopt rules that establish criteria for assigning a school with a new identification number; prohibits the State Board of Education from assigning growth-only letter grades; provides that the formative assessment grant program may only support formative assessments that show alignment, verified by a third party, to Indiana's academic standards; and requires formative assessments approved for the grant program to provide predictive study results on the statewide assessment.

- House Bill 1640 – legislation authored by Rep. Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis, chair of the House Committee on Education to rewrite the school accreditation standards – died on the last day of session, despite having passed out of the House unanimously at the first deadline. When the bill was heard by the Senate Committee on Education and Career Development, Sen. Jean Leising (R) of Oldenburg notched a personal victory by inserting mandatory cursive writing instruction. She then saw the full Senate pass the bill with her cursive language by a vote of 31-18. During conference committee deliberations, the cursive standard was one of the first items removed, but neither the House nor Senate ever voted on a final conference committee report.

- A cornucopia of random education matters were added in conference committee negotiations to House Bill 1629, which was subsequently approved by the House and Senate late Thursday night. The bill, authored by House Committee on Education Chair Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis, includes language allowing schools to charge a public records fee (language which has twice passed the General Assembly only to be vetoed by the Governor); requires the State Board of Education to establish a dispute resolution working group to examine options for reducing the costs to parents and schools of special education complaints and investigations; requires school corporations to annually distribute FAFSA information to all high school seniors beginning with the 2020-2021 school year; requires the Indiana Commission for Higher Education to develop a model FAFSA notice; allows charter school students to participate in career centers on the same basis as traditional public school students; ensures that students who have an IEP can access voice-to-text accommodations on the statewide test and requires the State Board of Education to prepare a report on whether the scores of students who take advantage of the accommodation are valid; gives flexibility to the State Board of Education to develop alternative A-F accountability procedures for schools that focus “primarily” on students with behavioral challenges (existing law limits alternative models to schools that “exclusively” focus on students with behavioral challenges); voids the authority in the just-passed state budget to use money appropriated for Secured School Safety grants for mental health and social emotional wellness services; and expands the EARN Indiana program to high school students beginning with the cohort that graduates in 2022-2023.

- The House and Senate unanimously approved the conference committee report for Senate Bill 607 establishing the “Workforce Diploma Reimbursement Program” to assist adults who are older than 22 years of age with obtaining a high school diploma. “A very new concept that I’m excited about,” says Sen. Jeff Raatz (R) of Centerville, the bill’s author and chair of the senate Committee on Education and Career Development. State funding will only be paid to service providers based on outcomes, including credit completion, attainment of industry-recognized credentials, and completion of a high school diploma, adds Sen. Raatz. The program will be overseen by the Governor’s Workforce Cabinet and funded at $1 million per year. Look for the Graduation Alliance to bring its online curriculum to Indiana as a result.

- The House concurred with Senate amendments to House Bill 1641, which shortens from two years to 90 days the duration that a school corporation must make a closed building available to a charter school for lease or purchase for $1. If no charter school indicates interest in the building, an accredited nonpublic school or postsecondary institution will have the right of first refusal to purchase the property. Section 8 of the bill addresses the disposal by the Indianapolis Public Schools of Broad Ripple High School by providing that in the event of the sale to a developer of a school building with more than 200,000 gross square feet, a school board must ensure that a charter school located within one mile be given the opportunity to lease adequate facilities on the redeveloped site. If a school corporation fails to comply, proceeds from the sale of the building must be remitted to the State Board of Education to distribute via the charter school and innovation grant program. The bill is slated to take effect immediately upon the governor’s signature.

- Senate Bill 566, which authorizes a redevelopment commission to establish a Tax Increment Financing (TIF) district for residential housing, gained an amendment offered by Rep. Ed Clere (R) of New Albany providing that a new TIF may not take effect until the governing body of each school corporation affected by the TIF district passes a resolution in support. The bill is now on its way to the Governor.

- U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) introduces the “Stop for School Buses Act,” legislation directing the U.S. Department of Transportation and the National Transportation Safety Board to conduct a comprehensive review of existing laws on illegal passing of school buses, make recommendations for best practices on preventing illegal passes, evaluate the effectiveness of various stop-arm technologies, and create a nationwide public safety campaign to promote safe driving practices when children are present. “The tragic loss of young Hoosiers in bus-related crashes last year, including in Fulton County, was a reminder that life is precious and that we all need to work together to keep children safe,” Rep. Walorski said. “Every driver has a responsibility to exercise caution when students are present, and that includes never passing a school bus that is stopped with red lights flashing or its stop arm extended. The Stop for School Buses Act will help our states and local communities take the most effective actions to prevent illegal passing of school buses and ensure students are safe when traveling to and from school.” The filing of H.R. 2218 was announced at the Rochester School Corporation, where Rep. Walorski, a champion of state’s rights, said, “There’s a hodge podge of laws, there’s a hodge podge of things that every state has created but let’s once and for all just settle this and come up with a federal standard and all Americans comply.”

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

- Since we were last with you, the locus of the felony bribery case involving former Vigo County School Corporation superintendent Danny Tanoos, State v. Tanoos, No. 49G04-1809-FC-032385, shifts from Marion County Superior Court, Criminal Division 4, to the Indiana Court of Appeals as the trial court judge grants leave for Tanoos’ attorneys to file an interlocutory appeal denying his motion to dismiss.

- On Wednesday in Chicago, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit held oral argument in a related case, U.S. v. Fennell, No. 18-1969. This is the appeal of an April 2018 restitution order. Former Vigo County Schools facilities director Franklin V. Fennell, who was convicted of kickback charges in federal court, had been ordered to pay VCSC restitution in the amount of $110,600.

- Two 14-year-old students at Discovery Middle School in Granger were arrested last week and charged with battery resulting in bodily injury in connection with an April 8 videotaped beating incident in a school bathroom during a passing period that left the victim with a concussion, and possibly facing surgery to recover from his head and facial injuries. The video was posted to social media.

- At a Thursday news conference, St. Joseph County Prosecutor Kenneth P. Cotter (D) announced that both the attacker and the student recording the incident, who allegedly egged on the attacker, would be charged in juvenile court. “It’s not acceptable to encourage another person by videotaping it, by yelling encouragement, or inducements another person to commit a crime,” said Prosecutor Cotter.

- The Richmond Palladium-Item reviewed 911 calls from the December 13 school shooting at Dennis Intermediate School in the Richmond community Schools and reported that Principal Nicole VanDervort “proved invaluable” to responding officers as she “monitored the teen’s movements through the building via security footage in her office and relayed the details to 911 dispatch, which passed the information to the officers at the scene. The teen, who was armed with five or six guns he took from his parent’s gun cabinet, took his own life on the second floor in a stairwell after being cornered by police.”

IN Higher Education

IN General . . .

- Purdue University Fort Wayne has an $8.9 billion total economic impact on Northeast Indiana annually and fuels 82,450 jobs in the region, according to a new assessment of the university’s operations and workforce enhancement effects on business activity by The Perryman Group. The university also has an $11 billion total annual economic impact on the state and drives 101,999 jobs per year.

- One month after President Donald Trump (R) signed an executive order encouraging institutions to avoid creating environments that stifle competing perspectives – a decree widely understood as providing a bulwark against liberal bias in higher education – LGBT+ students at Marian University in Indianapolis held a protest to decry the campus administration’s alleged refusal to no longer allow the gay-straight student alliance to host public events, reported WRTV-TV rtv6 in Indianapolis . . . even as Marian gets slammed from the other side, as ChurchMilitant.com publishes a multi-part series of lengthy blog posts that purport to document the “pro-homosexual and pro-transgender ideologies” of “at least 17 faculty and administrative staff members”; the “pro-homosexual, Marian University-sanctioned activities”; and the role of the campus Multicultural Center in promoting tolerance for the LGBT community.

- Taylor University received pushback from students, alumni, and faculty after tapping Vice President Mike Pence (R) as commencement speaker. A change.org petition has garnered more than 5,000 signatures, and more than half of faculty voted in favor of a “motion to dissent” expressing opposition to the choice of Pence as speaker.

□ The Vice President was announced as the commencement speaker for 2019 barely one year after four members of the Taylor faculty and staff caused an uproar on campus by distributing a newsletter that railed against campus leadership for its alleged “uncritical endorsement of liberal-progressive ideas”; permissive views on human sexuality; tolerance of social justice; and a general abandonment of traditional conservative Christian values as evidenced by the growing number of liberal speakers who had been invited to campus in recent years.

IN Enrollments . . .

- Applications to Ball State University for Fall 2019 rocketed to an all-time high of 26,800, a year-over-year increase of 14 percent. Approximately 31% of applicants opted against submitting college entrance exam scores.

IN Administration . . .

- Ball State University will implement a data analytics system in Fall 2019 to provide student advisors, staff, and faculty with tools to understand a student’s likelihood of completing a course and persisting to the next semester, and facilitate personalized communications designed to help students succeed.

IN Programs & Policy . . .

- Marian University’s Klipsch Educators College receives a $900,000 grant from the Walton Family Foundation to support the establishment of a loan forgiveness program for teacher candidates of color. Students’ loans are completely forgiven after successfully completing their studies and teaching in a high-poverty Indianapolis school for two years post-graduation. Over just two years, the loan forgiveness program has allowed the school of education to increase new student diversity from 7.5% to 25%.

□ Dan Holub, executive director of the Indiana State Teachers Association, said in a statement, “Inadequate college preparation is one of the primary reasons so many early career teachers leave the profession within just a few years. Yet we know from research and experience, that the best way to ensure that every teacher is ‘profession-ready’ from their first day as teacher-of-record is for college preparation programs to incorporate teacher residencies.”

- As we were headed to press with this issue, the University of Notre Dame and the South Bend-Elkhart Regional Partnership were preparing to unveil a major regional economic development initiative.

IN Gifts and Fundraising . . .

- In its sixth year, the social media-based Purdue Day of Giving raised $41.6 million, the fifth consecutive record for a 24-hour higher education fundraising campaign. This has resulted in a cumulative total of $146.9 million in gifts for Purdue University.

□ Gifts ranged in size from $10 to a $7 million anonymous gift made to the West Lafayette campus’s School of Mechanical Engineering, and targeted an array of initiatives and programs, funding scholarships and student enrichment opportunities, cancer research, Indiana 4-H programs, Military Family Research Institute initiatives and more. Approximately 90% of all donations were made online.

- The Purdue University Board of Trustees approved the naming of the Nils K. Nelson Bioscience Innovation Building that’s under construction and set to open on the Hammond campus of Purdue Northwest in Fall 2020. The late Dr. Nelson, a longtime professor of chemistry at Purdue Northwest, left a nearly $8 million estate gift to the institution.

- The second annual Trine Day celebration on April 11 topped the 2018 total and achieved its fundraising goal, bringing in $90,471 from 226 donors.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- The Ball State University Board of Trustees approves a bond issue to finance construction of the Foundational Sciences Building, an $87.5 million, 205,000-square-foot facility to be located in the East Quad for the biology and chemistry departments.

- Improvements are slated for the famous Grotto and the Basilica of The Sacred Heart at Notre Dame this Summer. Expect paths and entryways to undergo renovation after commencement, replete with new stone and brick as well as new memorial benches at the Grotto, a small driveway at the Basilica, and handicapped-accessibility improvements.

IN Government . . .

- The House defeated a Second Reading amendment proposed by Rep. Earl Harris, Jr. (D) of East Chicago during floor debate on Senate Bill 216 that would have locked in tuition rates for students attending a public college or university at the level they pay during their freshman year.

- The House and Senate adopted the conference committee report on Senate Bill 438 on the last day of session. Authored by Sen. Andy Zay (R) of Huntington, the bill sets out requirements for a workplace specialist license and directs the Indiana Commission for Higher Education to restart the dual credit advisory council to review and make recommendations on ensuring that dual credit teachers are properly credentialed.

IN Transition . . .

- John Applegate, Indiana University's executive vice president for academic affairs, is one of four finalists to be president of the University of South Carolina, where some on campus are upset that the finalists are all males, and three of them are white.

- Ivy Tech Community College announces two finalists for the chancellor position at its South Bend-Elkhart campus.

□ Gaby Hawat currently serves as principal with Catalyst Partners in Washington, D.C. and is the former senior vice president for operations and global initiatives at the Florida Institute of Technology.

□ Lori Handy is vice chancellor and campus operating officer at Ivy Tech's Indianapolis campus. She has 17 years of experience in higher education and also previously spent almost a decade working for Cummins as a supervisor and quality engineer.

- The Connecticut Board of Regents for Higher Education names Thomas G. Coley, the outgoing chancellor of the South Bend-Elkhart campus of Ivy Tech Community College, as the next president of the Shoreline-West Region, which encompasses Gateway Community College in New Haven, Housatonic Community College in Bridgeport, and Norwalk Community College.

- Jann L. Joseph, interim chancellor of Indiana University South Bend, has been named president of Georgia Gwinnett College.

- Purdue University Northwest names Lawrence Hamer as dean of the College of Business. Hamer was previously with DePaul University in Chicago, where he joined the faculty in 1996, received tenure in 2003 and was appointed professor of marketing in 2012.

- Ethan Heicher, dean of the School of Arts, Sciences, and Education for Ivy Tech Community College Kokomo, is serving as interim vice chancellor of student success. Heicher replaces Kim King, who was recently passed over in the Kokomo chancellor search.

- IUPUI appoints Rafael Bahamonde as founding dean of the School of Health & Human Sciences. Bahamonde has served as interim dean of the school since it was officially established in July 2018 through the merger of the School of Health and Rehabilitation Sciences and the School of Physical Education and Tourism Management.

- Marsha McGriff joins Ball State University on May 1 as associate vice president for inclusive excellence. A director in the Office of the Vice President for Diversity, Equity, and Multicultural Affairs at Indiana University, she will lead the new President's Advisory Council on Inclusive Excellence.

- A change in family circumstances brings a familiar and well-liked face back to Indiana State University and the State House – for a second time. Greg Goode rejoins the leadership team at ISU on May 1 as executive director of government relations, and add oversight of university communications to his portfolio. Goode, the 2008 CD 08 Republican nominee, had left Terre Haute at the end of 2018 to become president and CEO of The Historic Trust in Vancouver, Washington. He had spent five years in the pacific Northwest in between his previous stints at ISU, returning in 2012, and he and his family will settle back in the Wabash Valley in time for him to start working again at ISU on May 1.

□ ISU alum Dennis Faulkenberg and his APPIAN Advisors had been handling legislative representation for the university during the 2019 session.

- Saint Martin's University in Washington names Kathleen "Kate" Boyle, Ph.D., as its new provost and vice president of academic affairs. Since July 2018, Boyle has served as interim provost and vice president for academic affairs. Previously, she was the dean of the College of Education and Counseling. Dr. Boyle earned her doctorate in higher education administration (educational leadership and policy studies) from Indiana University - Bloomington.

- Baylor University taps Nancy W. Brickhouse, Ph.D., as provost effective next month. Dr. Brickhouse previously served as provost at Saint Louis University in St. Louis. A tenured professor of education, Dr. Brickhouse earned both her master's degree in chemistry and her doctorate in science education from Purdue University.

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

The education budget (and more)

GOP lauds education opportunities; Demos lament lost opportunities

While the session didn't seem to be quite linear in nature, leaders will insist that their pre-session goals of increasing education spending (and thus theoretically allowing for teacher salary increases) within the context of a structurally balanced budget and enacting a bias crimes measure were accomplished.

There are lots of quarrels at the margins (or more) on both counts, but leaders are effectively controlling the narrative, and that's the immediate message that Hoosiers will take away from the 2019 session as business leaders drop their fight for a more detailed bias crimes measure and teachers will have to turn their Red for Ed "walk-in" strategy into local battles for pay raises after trying to work within the state system that provided the cash – but not mandates – for salary increases.

And while he'll not concede the point, the Governor didn't have a great session. He may claim victory for education funding increases (and his pension payoff plan), but he set the bar low in his legislative agenda and still didn't get "the list" he sought in the hate crimes law, backing down quicker than the business community would have preferred (and expected from their pre-session ally), and saw the legislature seize effective control of the Toll Road lease amendment cash cache, moving the revenue into the budget, and while generally signing on to what he had outlined as spending priorities for the $1 billion, lawmakers established a Toll Road Lease Amendment Proceeds Fund for projects in Toll Road counties, and capped the Gov's proposed spending on rural broadband service, trail projects, and direct-flight subsidies. The full funding sought by the Department of Child Services that had sailed through the House was trimmed in the final version of the budget, as was the ability of DCS to dip into the gas tax contingency fund for shortfalls (supplemental funding, if needed, would come via surplus dollars).

While it was separate from the budget, the big-bucks bill providing for Indiana Convention Center expansion, $360 million renovation of the Bankers Life Fieldhouse, and Indianapolis Capital Improvement Board finances – as well as getting the ball rolling on a $150 million Indy Eleven soccer stadium multi-use complex at a location to be announced – passed easily at all levels as part of a coordinated city-county-state push that was negotiated without local public input and which amazingly proved largely noncontroversial despite a lack of assorted financial, policy, and practical details (and, perhaps understanding – ask lawmakers what it means for the convention hotel deal on Pan Am Plaza and you'll get assorted answers or just blanks stares).

Before we get to the big-ticket items, you should know about a few policy items that were in the budget – and that the energy generation facility moratorium sought by former Trump Administration EPA administrator Scott Pruitt was most decidedly not included. The budget commits to retain protections for preexisting conditions for Hoosiers "regardless of the legal status of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act." Under last-minute language, the State and state agencies are authorized to enter into "cooperative agreements with federally recognized Indian tribes," paving the way for a compact with the operator of the Four Winds Casino South Bend, in spite of attempts dating back to the mid-1990s (largely in the Senate) to bar such deals. And there are several provisions barring dollars from the state highway fund from being used to fund any toll road or toll bridge project not already specifically authorized.

Right to Farm Act upheld

Unanimous COA ruling backs its purpose

The Indiana Court of Appeals upholds the constitutionality of Indiana's Right to Farm Act (RTFA) in Himself, et al. v. Himself, et al., No. 18A-PL-645, a Monday ruling which denied a nuisance claim filed by property owners adjacent to an expanding livestock operation.

They had challenged the law on the premise that their residential properties lost market value as a result of the increased agricultural activities, contending that "their use and enjoyment of their homes, as well as their homes' values, were ruined by noxious odors and airborne emissions coming from the CAFO. "The RTFA, however, limits the circumstances under which agricultural operations may be subject to," observed the court, and the substantive law is not required to provide a remedy to their vested right to use and enjoy their properties. A regulatory takings claim similarly failed as the odor was not a "taking" and the properties retained significant economic value. Also, "RTFA's preferential treatment is uniformly and equally available to all agricultural operations and although agricultural operations are treated differently under the RTFA than industrial operations, the two are not similarly situated and the express intent of RTFA is to protect agricultural land."

Moved from another bill is language requiring a “marketplace facilitator” to collect and remit state sales tax as a retail merchant when it facilitates a retail transaction for sellers on the marketplace facilitator’s marketplace – seemingly finally closing a long-litigated online sales and hotel tax collection loophole we’ve followed for you over the last decade or so. The revenue collection now becomes more relevant because the CIB relies on some of the innkeeper’s taxes for its big package deal.

As for specific projects and programs, the South Shore Line is a big ($200 million) winner at the expense of some I-69 and U.S. 31 dollars that will now seemingly be found elsewhere; the Amtrak Hoosier Line is a big loser (no subsidy for the subsidy-dependent services), and funding for the well-received Pence Administration Regional Cities program is excised (it had been funded in the last budget with $85 million in tax amnesty dollars but while the Guv and leaders were on board, Senate Committee on Tax and Fiscal Policy Chair Travis Holdman (R) says there just wasn’t sufficient money available).

The House had backed the child services request for $286 million in each year of the biennium, and the Senate had initially sought to trim things back a bit, citing increased placements and decreased caseload trends, but offering a safety net. In the end, DCS wins an additional $256 million in FY 2020 and $246 million in FY 2021, with the ability to tap into as much as $25 million more if needed, but those bucks would come from the surplus, and not from the Special Transportation Flexibility Fund (seeded with gas tax dollars), as the Senate had proposed.

Query when the last time an agency saw a $500 million biennial budget bump (after getting an interim supplemental infusion) – outside of perhaps a required Medicaid lift Back in th Day, and that might even be high – and some appropriators in both parties still thought the budgeted amount was too low.

Of the new budget funding not diverted to DCS or Medicaid, 72.6% was directed to K-12 education, according to House Committee on Ways and Means Co-Chair Todd Huston (R).

The education funding is clearly the featured aspect of the budget, with the Governor and GOP legislative leaders doing their big budget reveal on the Third Floor with representatives from key education groups joining them on short notice. But illustrating the dichotomy in perception of the education funding provisions was the absence of Democrats, the Indiana State Teachers Association, and Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R) from the lovefest.

House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) says that those entities that made “reasonable” requests were represented at the reveal. Dr. McCormick had fought for raises in a statewide barnstorming tour of sorts, and ISTA had sought specific teacher raises – not just freeing up dollars to allow them and relying upon each district to pass along the savings or largesse.

While we do a Marianas Trench-like deep dive into education funding in our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT, this week, there are a few basic numbers we’ll cover here, sans nuance.

The budget contains $14.8 billion for education across the biennium, an overall $763 million increase for K-12 education, including a 2.5% increase in formula funding in each year of the biennium (a larger total increase than either the initial House or Senate versions).

The figure includes increases in different forms for charter schools and vouchers, but Speaker Bosma refers to the “historic” increases as “a tremendous success for public school education in Indiana.” Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) also points to “an increase in per-student funding.”

House Democratic Leader Phil GiaQuinta (D) says that despite the overall improvements in funding, “it’s clear that our traditional public schools will not receive the resources they need.” The voucher program was funded at a level sought by the House, but initially dissed by the Senate, while charter school grants grow by 50% to $750 per student (below the $1,000 sought by the House).

Back Home in their respective districts, majority caucus members touted the ability to drive more dollars back into the classrooms . . . and additional “categoricals” for school safety.

Included in the package: $539 million more in biennial tuition support; $150 million added to pay down teacher pension liability; and a 25% increase for teacher appreciation grants – the stipends will see a change in qualification for broader eligibility – to $37.5 million annually. There is also new money for the Secured School Safety Grant program. Add it all up, and you get about a 4.5% increase each year.

The budget doesn’t rely upon any money from HB 1015 (formerly SB 552), the omnibus gaming bill which also passed in the final hours of session Wednesday night. That measure would potentially add $25 million in new one-time fees for moving a Gary casino inland off the current footprint and licensing a new casino in Terre Haute and millions more annually from taxes on what are expected to be additional incremental revenues from those two casinos; earlier implementation of live dealers at racino table games; and fees and a 9.5% tax on the adjusted gross revenues of sports wagering operators, whether generated from in-person or mobile bets. Rep. Todd Huston (R), the House sponsor, estimated $20 million to $25 million in net new annual tax revenues after other gaming-related tax restructuring.

And there won’t be any bucks from a vaping liquids tax, one of the few bills to die in the final hours sans agreement – and that just may have been one where there was no middle ground. Speaker Bosma said Thursday, “I’m sure this will not be our last conversation. I personally believe we should have regulated vaping. It has become a near epidemic for young people, and we saw statistics where 50% or 60% of those who are vaping are smoking cigarettes in short order.”

Senate Resident Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) said he learned one big thing from the final night meltdown in 2018, and made it clear to his caucus members and negotiators: “You have to compromise and can’t wait until the last minute to do it.” As for the bills that made it, Speaker Bosma believes the fact that many priorities “coincided” helped, noting that there were “very common goals this session.”

Not included in the conference committee report: four Democratic Senate amendments which had been hailed as a minor display of bipartisanship as the HB 1001 initially passed the Senate.

The budget continues to set aside a hefty reserve. The surplus is projected to be some $2 billion in each year, about 11.6% to 11.8% of overall spending.

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

● The first quarter federal campaign fundraising reports are in, and while there might be some surprises in some bottom-line amounts at both the top and bottom of the ranks, you probably could have pretty fairly forecasted the rank order of January through March fundraising and cash-on-hand back around New Year's Day.

□ House incumbents with campaign debt: U.S. Reps. Jim Banks (R), who carries $29,981.23; Jim Baird (R) is burdened with $180,000 from his loan to his primary effort (although he paid off $40,000 during Q1, which made his real expenditures less than $4,000); and Trey Hollingsworth (R) owes himself $585,628.35. Former Sen. Brent Waltz (R) continues to show a debt of $120,844 that he owes himself from his unsuccessful 2014 primary bid in CD 08 . . . U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) continues to benefit from her House Committee on Ways and Means membership, a great post from which to raise campaign cash. She leads the delegation by about $100,000 in first quarter take . . . U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) posts a seemingly impressive $225,770 in contributions, but spent more than 90% of it during the quarter, a dangerous burn rate (and Rep. Banks is at the opposite end of the burn rate spectrum). His $156,194 in individual contributions is also about triple that of the next closest Hoosier colleague, which we'll attribute to all those email solicitations to his fundraising lists. He is also low on the PAC end of the fundraising totem pole . . . both Hoosier Democrats seemed to have raised little compared to their respective expenditures during the first quarter . . . when you look at how much of a members overall cash on hand was raised during the first quarter, Rep. Hollingsworth leads with 93% of his cash on hand being harvested during the first quarter, followed closely by Rep. Banks with 91%, while Rep. Pence raised only eight percent of his current kitty during Q1, and Reps. Susan Brooks (R) (nine percent) and Larry Bucshon (R) (10%) close behind.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

● Some miscellaneous mayoral campaign finance numbers: Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett (D) finished the pre-primary reporting period (which ended April 12) having raised $769,022, and reports starting April with $3,886,458 in cash-on-hand. Sen. Jim Merritt (R), his Republican challenger, reports a $223,960 cash balance. The Hogsett campaign asserts that the mayor's balance represents a record cash-on-hand figure for any mayoral campaign pre-primary filing in the history of Indianapolis (and thus likely statewide as well). The Hogsett campaign counts 333 individual contributions at amounts less than $200, representing more than 67% of all individual contributions received during the filing period. More than 82% of individual contributors were Indianapolis residents . . . in Anderson, Mayor Tom Broderick (D) far outpaces his primary and general election opponents, raising $53,172 during the reporting period, spending only $11,765, and looking toward the primary with $222,234 in his campaign treasury . . . in South Bend, James Mueller (D) - endorsed by outgoing Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) - leads the primary field with almost $245,000 in contributions from January 1 - April 12, followed by $139,000 for Jason Critchlow (D), and each campaign spent more than $90,000. Mueller is well ahead of the big field with cash-on-hand of some $153,000 to $40,000 for Critchlow. The 2016 CD 02 nominee, Lynn Coleman (D) showed less than $20,000 in receipts, with more than one-half of that amount transfers-in from that congressional campaign. A pair of other Demos barely top $15,000 each in 2019 contributions . . . Carmel mayor Jim Brainard (R), though under siege - most recently over "toxic" work environment claims - raised $167,050 during the reporting period, spent $251,011, and ended the period with cash on hand of $58,803, before lending his own campaign $60,000 on April 19. Allied Solutions matriarch Missy Eldredge of Plano, Texas, contributed $15,000 to the incumbent.

His primary challenger, Fred Glynn (R), raised $94,813, spent $40,7089, and had cash-on-hand of $54,104 after a personal $50,000 loan he made to his campaign. The Todd Rokita Election Committee made a $3,000 contribution to Glynn in January, while the Fund for American Exceptionalism at the same address, added $5,000 more. Sen. Jack Sandlin (R) also kicked in $200 . . . with no real campaign facing him, Fishers Mayor Scott Fadness (R) brings in $87,100 during the period, spent $187,067, and has $356,801 left for November - or 2020 . . . in Noblesville, the gubernatorially-endorsed open seat candidate, Chris Jensen (R) raised $85,587, spent $185,389, and had $74,071 remaining. Julia Church Kozicki (R) raised $31,740, spent $30,895, has less than $2,000 left, and owes herself $10,000. A third candidate raised less than $15,000, spent less than $9,000, and has just under $7,000 left . . . open-seat Valparaiso candidate Matt Murphy (R), a city council member who does not have a primary opponent, raised $23,530 during the period, spent $28,467, and has $65,518 in cash left, far more than any of his potential November opponents . . . the two leading Demo candidates for the open-seat Portage mayoral office each raised just north of $30,000 in the four-candidate primary, far outpacing their other well-known opponents and the sole GOP hopeful . . . Terre Haute Mayor Duke Bennett (R) raises $2,700 and spent less than $1,000 during the period, but has a $141,057 balance, while his likely Fall opponent reports cash on hand of just $4,213 . . . all three GOP mayoral candidates in Lebanon report outstanding loans from themselves to their respective campaigns.

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) was the subject of his second CNN Town Hall (Monday); his first thrust him into the national spotlight . . . the latest Morning Consult Political Intelligence report, based on more than 14,000 interviews with registered voters over the week before Easter finds that Mayor Buttigieg moves up to third place among 2020 Democratic primary voters with nine percent of the vote. Almost two-thirds (64%) of likely Democratic primary voters have now heard of Buttigieg . . . in the University of New Hampshire Granite State poll (04/10-18; 241 likely 2020 Democratic Primary voters; margin of error \pm 6.3%) of likely Democratic voters in NH, they are asked an open-ended question about for whom they will vote in the 2020 primary. While 40% cannot name a candidate, Mayor Pete polls third at 11 percent. When provided a list of major likely Democratic candidates likely to do so, he still runs third, the choice of 15%, up from just one percent in the most recent (late February) survey . . . expect Buttigieg paid campaign staff to jump by some two-thirds by the end of the month to about 50 . . . “Caught off guard by his sudden surge, Pete Buttigieg’s rivals are scrambling to find vulnerabilities and lines of attack that can be used against him,” Democratic rival campaigns and GOP political groups tell Josh Lederman of NBC News (and some stories are starting to be written about the police department wiretapping and personnel issues we told you a few weeks go to expect). Virtually nothing has been written about his Chrysler bailout defense and its economic grounding (remember his 2010 campaign opposition to then-state treasurer Richard Mourdock (R) and his court crusade against Chrysler cash?). The Indiana Republican Party has largely been the oppo research machine, and last week state party Chair Kyle Hupfer called on Mayor Buttigieg to immediately release five hidden tapes at the center of the seven-year court battle over the firing of the city’s first-ever African American police chief, following a new court ruling that the case can now proceed to trial. We’ve been telling you to expect national attention to this matter. “Mayor Buttigieg has wasted millions of taxpayer dollars in a seven-year effort to keep these tapes secret and hidden from the public,” said Hupfer. “This court battle has gone on long enough and cost far too much. Mayor Buttigieg should release the tapes immediately before it costs the city even a penny more.” The Hupfer hit came just as the Washington Post headlined a story, “Pete Buttigieg will need to win over black voters if his bump in polls is to continue” . . . none among the list of 23 bundlers released by Team Pete to the Center for Public Integrity hails from Indiana . . . look for a May 19 (Pole Day and Bump Day!) Chris Wallace-moderated Fox News Buttigieg town hall event from New Hampshire (Wallace, who cut his political teeth covering Chicago’s first Mayor Daley in the early 1970s, has already interviewed Mayor Pete on Fox News Sunday) . . . NiemanLab marvels that “Pete Buttigieg is on every podcast, and 2020’s retail politics is increasingly happening in earbuds,” explaining “you can find Buttigieg up and down the Apple Podcasts charts, mostly in the corners of podcast-land that you’d pretty much expect” as well as “some quirkier venues . . . Buttigieg’s podcast push is so discernible it kicked off a recent piece by Vox’s Matt Yglesias that sought to place the Team Pete “go everywhere” media strategy in the context of 2019.

IN Political News . . .

● Morning Consult discloses its 2019 first quarter approval ratings for senators and governors (based on interviews from January 1 - March 31), and you will note a dip for Indiana’s senior senator and governor over the year. Governor Eric Holcomb (R) now has 22 other governors nationally ranking above him in approval, though he’s more popular than our guys in Washington, D.C.

Incumbent	Favorable	Never Heard of	Unfavorable
Sen. Todd Young (R)	39%	37%	25%
Sen. Mike Braun (R)	40%	33%	27%
Gov. Eric Holcomb (R)	49%	29%	22%

● GOPAC’s 2019 Class of Emerging Leaders, comprised of “promising legislators selected for their potential and ability to impact their state,” includes Sen. Victoria Spartz (R). She’ll participate in a June 10 - 12 “Emerging Leaders Summit” in Charleston, South Carolina, as part of GOPAC’s mission to educate and elect a new generation of Republican leaders.

● The Vectren Corporation Employees Federal PAC makes a $5,000 March contribution to the Indiana Democratic Party.

● A new political action committee registering with the Indiana Election Division: DLCC Indiana, affiliated with the Democratic Legislative Campaign Committee, whose purpose is “To support Democratic Candidates for state legislative office.”

● Axios scoops that former U.S. Sens. Joe Donnelly (D) and Heidi Heitkamp (D-ND), two 2018 election victims, “are launching the One Country Project to help Democrats win back rural voters ahead of the 2020 cycle . . . focusing on Democratic Senate races and the presidential election, but eventually [the effort] wants to work down the ballot. Heitkamp and Donnelly will work with campaigns before the election, giving them messaging, data, polling and a strategy to break through with these voters who ‘didn’t feel that we shared their beliefs’ in past elections, Donnelly told Axios. ‘Culturally, they’re focused on faith and family and country, and Donald Trump tells them all the time that we’re not, even though we are.’”

□ Unspoken: Donnelly is from St. Joseph County, and South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) is trying to emphasize in his presidential bid that Republicans don’t have the monopoly on faith-based voters.

● Remember Andrew U. D. Straw? He’s the attorney who has had some run-ins with the disciplinary authorities and who filed the legal ethics complaint against Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) pending before the Supreme Court. Straw, who has made bids of a sort for state and congressional office, and seems to live in Illinois now, just opened a congressional campaign committee, Andrew U. D. Straw for Vermont, for a run in Vermont’s CD 01.

IN Federal Circles . . .

● U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R) and Mike Braun (R) cosponsor a resolution designating April as Financial Literacy Month. The resolution aims to highlight the importance of learning and maintaining healthy financial habits.

● The American Conservative Union reveals its 2017 and lifetime vote ratings for federal lawmakers, “based upon their commitment to conservative principles as demonstrated by their voting records.” ACU lost its top two 2017-18 supporters when then-U.S. Reps. Todd Rokita (R) and Luke Messer (R) were unsuccessful in their primary bids for U.S. Senate in 2018.

● There are no Hoosiers serving on the two committees that will have the most ongoing involvement in White House-related investigations this year: the Committee on Judiciary and the Committee on Oversight and Reform.

□ By contrast, several Hoosiers were prominent in previous presidential impeachment proceedings and executive branch oversight investigations, including then-U.S. Reps. David Dennis (R), a member of the House Committee on Judiciary during the 1974 Nixon impeachment vote . . . Steve Buyer (R), a member of the House Committee on Judiciary during the 1998-99 Clinton impeachment proceedings, and as a manager (prosecutor) in the Senate trial . . . and Dan Burton (R) as chair of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform overseeing the Vince Foster suicide and Democratic Party 1996 presidential election campaign finance investigations.

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) teams with U.S. Reps. Anthony Brindisi (D-NY) and Mike Bost (R-IL) to introduce the “Support for Suicide Prevention Coordinators Act.” H.R. 2333 is a bipartisan measure that would require the comptroller general of the United States to conduct an assessment of the responsibilities, workload, and vacancy rates of the Department of Veterans Affairs suicide prevention coordinators. These staffers identify high-risk veterans and ensure they receive appropriate care, conduct and outreach, and also promote awareness and suicide prevention best practices within VA, among other responsibilities. Many suicide prevention coordinators report being overworked and unable to keep up with their assorted responsibilities. Says Rep. Banks, “Only about seven percent of Americans have worn our nation’s uniform, yet each day 20 veterans commit suicide. At the forefront of this national epidemic are the caring VA Suicide Prevention Coordinators. I am proud to co-lead this bipartisan legislation that will help those who work tirelessly to save the lives of our beloved warriors. We must do more to prevent veteran suicide and this bill is a great step.”

IN State Circles . . .

● Look for the Gary Community School Corporation to test the bond market waters with a $5 million bond refunding deal to see just how receptive the market might be to the troubled district, under the direction of a state-appointed emergency manager, perhaps leading to a bigger deal to address its current overall debt portfolio.

● On the day after lawmakers approved legislation eliminating the fee for a five-year firearms license, allowing firearms in churches at their discretion, and approving immunity for those who use firearms in defense against a forcible felony, Everytown for Gun Safety Action Fund released new SurveyUSA polling (04/15-17; 970 RVs; margin of error $\pm 4.3\%$) which finds 56% of Hoosiers believe gun laws should be made stronger, vs. eight percent who prefer weaker gun laws; 90% support requiring a background check on every gun sale; and 86% support a federal “Red Flag” law similar to Indiana’s Red Flag law. Look for the Governor to sign the law while the NRA annual meeting crowd is in town.

● During the final weekend of the session, Hallador Energy Company clarified that Scott Pruitt, the former administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, had been retained and registered “on behalf of Rail Point Solutions LLC, a subsidiary of Hallador Energy Company, as a lobbyist to attempt to protect the ratepayers of Indiana from Vectren and NIPSCO rate increases.” As permitted by the law’s 15-day grace period, Pruitt had been quietly working his trade around the Mile Square before he registered. The principal focus, apparently, was on the generation-change moratorium won in committee by Rep. Ed Soliday (R), but jettisoned on the House floor in a bipartisan vote on an amendment offered by Rep. Matt Pierce (D) – perhaps the only controversial utility amendment he has offered which has been successful. While there was talk early in the week that it might find a home in the budget, leadership made sure that would not happen.

□ Hallador issued a statement in the sessions waning days asserting that Vectren and NIPSCO – which say they were seeking to shift from coal to other generation sources to conform with federal changes, market forces, and consumer preferences – “are proposing policies that will increase their customers’ electricity bills.” Hallador explains, “The Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission (IURC) ultimately will decide the outcome of these policies, but Vectren and NIPSCO are arguing that the IURC should close plants based on Obama era rules that Trump and his EPA are in the process of unwinding. Their argument is that no one knows what the new rules will look like so we should hurry and make permanent decisions today. Who better than Scott Pruitt to aid the Indiana legislature on what Trump energy policy will look like?”

□ Without delving into the details about cost overruns at expensive plants, abandoned plans, and facility shutdowns to adjust to reduced consumption, Hallador notes that “In the last 10 years, Indiana coal consumption has declined by 26%, at the same time Indiana electricity rates have increased by 26%. Is there a correlation? At the same time, Indiana has slipped from the 6th most competitive state based on electricity rates to 30th. Will this affect job creation?”

□ The coal provider adds, “Ultimately, Governor Holcomb is not allowed to instruct the IURC on energy policy, it is up to the Indiana legislature to create an energy plan for the IURC to follow. We are asking the legislature to add two sentences to the budget bill that prevent the IURC from making decisions based on rules that the EPA is currently reconsidering, and in some instances has already reversed. We are asking the Indiana legislature to act and prevent rates from increasing unnecessarily. A failure to act will most assuredly lead to higher rates on Indiana consumers and businesses. We are reaching out to our friends in the Indiana Chamber of Commerce and Indiana Manufacturer Association to ask them to help us in this effort.”

□ Reuters reported Monday that “The Chamber’s 50-member energy committee unanimously rejected Pruitt’s campaign. ‘Not one person we’ve talked to or heard from - except for Scott Pruitt and Rail Point - thinks the moratorium will benefit ratepayers,’ said Indiana Chamber President and CEO Kevin Brinegar.”

□ Not only did the Hallador effort fall short, but on Wednesday, the IURC issued a huge ruling rejecting Vectren’s proposal for a new 850 MW gas-fired power plant to be built in Posey County at a cost of some $780 million+ (on the site of its existing A.B. Brown coal-fired plant). The Commission found that Vectren South’s evidence did not convince it that the utility’s proposal would allow it flexibility and “optionality.” We thought this matter was to be decided in late May - but conspiracy theorists think may have been moved up to send a message while lawmakers were still in session (outside observers suggest that the fact that there was no executive session slated for the matter means that commissioners believed it to be a non-controversial matter that was an easy call, so they bumped up the timetable).

□ How big a deal was this? When we called it huge, that may be an understatement. We can’t recall - and practitioners with three decades of IURC experience can’t tell us - of any major plant sought by an investor-owned utility ever being rejected by the Commission. While IURC orders frequently impose assorted significant conditions for construction or operation (and some applications have been withdrawn), rejection of a major facility for a major utility may simply be unprecedented.

□ The Commission recognized the requested preapproval would obligate regulated customers for a 30-year period in a time of rapid change, and that prospective reliance on future market conditions brings risk. The Commission stated in its Order, “A metric biased in favor of portfolios with surplus generation is speculation we decline to embrace.” Further, the Commission’s Order states, “We are hard pressed to see how reliance on one facility for so much of the Vectren South system requirements is consistent with maintaining flexibility to respond to changing market conditions and technological change.”

□ The 38-page Commission Order explained that “Outcomes that reasonably minimize [supply side option or demand side opportunity] potential risk and serve to foster utility and customer flexibility in an environment of rapid technological innovation on both the utility and customer side of the meter are, therefore, a lens through which we will review Vectren South’s request.”

□ Commissioners continued, “Vectren South foreclosed consideration of combinations of smaller resources that might have offered greater resource diversity, flexibility and cost efficiencies than reliance on the acquisition of a single large natural-gas facility,” including purchase of power, like NIPSCO did. “[W]e find nothing in Vectren South’s evidence convinces us that its proposal provides any off ramps that would allow Vectren South to react to changing circumstances and make appropriate changes in resources. To the contrary, Vectren South’s proposal seems to close most off ramps for the foreseeable future We are further concerned that Vectren South appears not to have accounted for material risks associated with its preferred portfolio.”

□ The IURC bottom line: “Vectren South’s risk analysis does not adequately consider the relative risk of other methods for providing reliable, efficient, and economical electric service. The proposed large scale single resource investment for a utility of Vectren South’s size does not present an outcome which reasonably minimizes the potential risk that customers could sometime in the future be saddled with an uneconomic investment or serve to foster utility and customer flexibility in an environment of rapid technological innovation. As a result, we find that Vectren South has not demonstrated through the evidence of record that the public convenience and necessity require the building of an 850 MW CCGT.”

□ Consumer group intervenors contended that not only was the proposed plant overbuilt and far exceeded likely customer power demands, but “the plant would lock consumers into a fossil fuel energy infrastructure for the next 40 years, over the life of the plant, and not allow flexibility to employ conservation and clean energy alternatives.” Earthjustice and Citizens Action Coalition of Indiana, representing a broader coalition, said added in a statement that Vectren “can reliably serve its customers without keeping dirty, expensive, and inefficient coal units running, and without maintaining a reliance on fossil fuels and building massive gas plants to replace their dinosaur coal fleets.” Talk on the street is that with the small electric customer base and the uncertainty of how to move forward with a new smaller plant or alternative energy sources, new Vectren owner CenterPoint Energy may look to divest that side of the business (and Duke Energy would be a logical buyer, given adjacent markets) and hod on to the natural gas customer base.

● In House Committee on Rules discussion on the conference committee report for SB 442, the carbon sequestration bill, Rep. Matt Pierce (D) seized upon a “whereas” clause in the measure as the first time that the General Assembly will have recognized the issues associated with climate change and taken affirmative steps to address it.

□ The House sponsor, Rep. Alan Morrison (R), wasn’t quite as prepared as Rep. Pierce to reach the same conclusion, though the legislature’s first 2016 Trump backer praised the Obama Administration for facilitating the change on which the Trump Administration “doubled down.”

□ Rep. Pierce pointed to this language as proving his point: “because the underground storage of carbon dioxide in subsurface strata or formations of the earth can assist efforts to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and thus materially promotes the well-being of citizens of the state, the underground storage of carbon dioxide is declared to be: (1) in the public interest and for the welfare of Indiana and the people of Indiana; and (2) a public use.” Rep. Pierce also referred to it a few hours later on the House floor as “our first climate change bill in the General Assembly.”

□ The conference committee report was being shaped just as a new statewide survey commissioned as part of the Indiana University “Prepared for Environmental Change” Grand Challenge initiative was released. The IU Grand Challenge project polling revealed that four out of five Indiana residents believe climate change is happening, and three out of four support efforts to address the impact of climate change. Two out of three Hoosiers agree that increased flooding poses a threat to Indiana communities, and almost 60% believe that increased drought poses a threat to Indiana agriculture. The online survey was performed by Atomik Research (04/03-10; 1,002 Indiana residents; margin of error $\pm 3.0\%$).

□ The partisan breakdowns might surprise you a tad. A full two-thirds (66%) of Hoosier Republicans believe that climate change is happening – either “somewhat” or to “a great extent” – compared to 87% of independents and 91% of Democrats. Almost two-thirds (65%) of Hoosier Republicans support – at least to some degree – initiatives designed to prepare for the effects of climate change in Indiana communities. A bare majority (52%) of Democrats surveyed said they support – to a great extent – policies that support general initiatives designed to prepare for the effects of climate change on Indiana communities, compared to 23% of Repubs reached by the poll.

□ Just under one-half (48%) of Democrats surveyed said they support – to a great extent – policies that seek to lessen the impact of flooding in Indiana, compared to 30% of Republicans surveyed. While 58% of Democrats surveyed said they support – to a great extent – policies that seek to lessen damage to agriculture and crops in Indiana, only 38% of Republicans responding felt the same.

● The Region should have no complaints about treatment by lawmakers this session after South Shore assistance (but a state board takeover) and authorization to move a Gary casino off-footprint to I-80-I-94, coupled with “hold harmless” casino revenue aid for Hammond, East Chicago, and Michigan City.

● While HB 1211 was sitting on the Governor’s desk awaiting his signature (it happened Wednesday), on April 18, a U.S. District Court judge in Cincinnati, a Bush 43 appointee, enjoined a similar provision in a new Ohio law that bans the dilation & evacuation (D&E) method of abortion in most cases. Indiana’s D&E law passed even as the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana questioned its constitutionality, and vowed to challenge the measure – which it did on Thursday. Bernard, M.D., et al., v. Indiv. Members of the Indiana Medical Licensing Bd., et al., No. 1:19-cv-1660-SEB-DML. ACLU of Indiana is 6-0 in its recent challenges to Indiana abortion laws (the most recent one in which the law was upheld involved Indiana University suing on behalf of its researchers; IU – which was successful in its lower court challenge to parts of HEA 1337-2016 – has filed a petition for rehearing and a petition for rehearing en banc of the mid-March ruling by a divided U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, which won’t please a big chunk of lawmakers).

□ The Ohio U.S. District Court judge – who had chaired the Hamilton County (Cincinnati) Republican Party from 2001 to 2005 – found that the Ohio D&E law was likely to be declared unconstitutional because it places an undue burden on a “large fraction” of Buckeye State women.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) filed the State’s latest brief last week in Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-1019. This is the State of Indiana’s appeal, from the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, that asks the Court to determine whether a state, consistent with the 14th Amendment, may require an ultrasound as part of informed consent at least 18 hours before an abortion.

□ Amicus briefs have already been filed by the American Association of Pro-Life Obstetricians & Gynecologists, et al.; Institute for Faith and Family; Focus on the Family; Operation Outcry; Women Injured by Abortion; The Justice Foundation, and Melinda Thybault; Pro Life Action League; Prolife Center at the University of St. Thomas; Louisiana, et al.; Trinity Legal Center; and CatholicVote.org Education Fund.

□ “For women considering abortions, ultrasounds are an important part of informed-consent counseling,” General Hill said. “Anyone interested in protecting women’s health, including their mental health, should support giving them as much information as possible to aid their decision-making. Empowering women with knowledge is fully consistent with the U.S. Constitution.”

□ Meanwhile, the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States slated their next conference for Friday, April 26, and one of the two big Indiana cases should return for a 12th time – more than any other case on the conference calendar.

□ Through 12 conferences, the high Court has already postponed a decision on whether to review the State of Indiana’s October petition for a writ of certiorari in Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-483. This is the challenge to provisions of HEA 1337-2016 that would (1) require health-care facilities to dispose of fetal remains in the same manner as other human remains, i.e., by burial or cremation; and (2) prohibit abortions motivated solely by the race, sex, or disability of the fetus and require physicians to inform patients of the prohibition. We’ve recited for you too many times the assorted theories why the Supremes have avoided making a decision – on making a decision. with the State’s filing last week in other HEA 1337-2016 case, the Court may be closer to a cert ruling.

● In a late Wednesday afternoon point of personal privilege, Senate Committee on Tax and Fiscal Policy Chair Travis Holdman (R) apologized to colleagues for not being able to comfortably tweak formulae in HB 1034, legislation closely watched by mayors in particular, that would exclude certain infrastructure from the definition of a “controlled project.” He promised to work with everyone over the interim to arrive at an appropriate set of numbers to plug in for the 2020 session.

● Mark your calendars (in pencil) for Technical Corrections Day on June 4.

● A State Board of Accounts audit of the Indiana Department of Veterans’ Affairs questions spending of $718,260.59 in federal Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) funds under a memorandum of understanding with the Family and Social Services Administration to provide counseling and employment/training assistance to veterans and their families.

● Democrats got in a few gratuitous shots at social conservatives in the final hours of floor debate Wednesday night. Sen. Mark Stoops (D) called out – by name – Advance America and the American Family Association of Indiana for killing mental health funding for schools. He asked his Senate colleagues rhetorically, “Isn’t suicide a sin?” and suggested they will have to explain to Jesus. A few minutes later on the House floor, Rep. Ed DeLaney (D) marveled over an amendment stripping mental health funding from the budget bill that they hadn’t yet passed, labeling it a “craven act by some fanatics.”

● Based on what it describes as “extensive work and discussion during the design and development stages of the project, including input from providers and other stakeholders,” the Family and Social Services Administration has decided to take a phased approach with the implementation of EnCred, the enrollment and credentialing solution for Indiana Health Coverage Program (IHCP) providers. EnCred is intended to streamline IHCP provider enrollment and managed care entity credentialing into a single process – resulting in fewer transactions, less redundancy, and faster turnaround times for providers.

□ FSSA believes that a phased approach will facilitate a smoother transition to the new solution, limiting the possible adverse issues that might arise with each implementation phase, and allowing providers, stakeholders, and IHCP to focus efforts and resources to make certain each phase is successful before proceeding with the next phase.

● In a case we followed for you as it worked its way through the LaPorte County Superior Court, Ctr. for Wildlife Ethics, Inc. v. Clark, No. 18A-PL-2500, a unanimous Court of Appeals panel affirms the dismissal of a complaint filed by the Center for Wildlife Ethics challenging a Department of Natural Resources emergency rule that permitted rifle hunting of deer in certain state parks. As you may recall, DNR promulgated that emergency rule to circumvent a legislative oversight that barred use of rifles to hunt deer on public land. The Center alleged in one of its early filings that “Despite the clear legislative mandate [DNR] used the emergency rule process to circumvent the legislature and defy its mandate to allow [DNR] to permit the use of rifle deer-hunting on public land.” The appellate panel ruled that the trial court did not err in dismissing the complaint because DNR acted within its emergency rulemaking powers.

□ In a news release last week making no reference to the legislative error – which could not be corrected in time for the planned hunts – the Office of the Attorney General frames the dispute this way: “Among other things, the organization claimed in its lawsuit that DNR violated state law by temporarily closing parks to most visitors during the controlled hunts.” Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) is quoted saying that “Indiana law gives DNR the authority to control admission to its state properties and to conduct appropriate management of wildlife resources both within and outside the boundaries of public lands. I am pleased the court has rightly recognized DNR’s prerogatives in this regard.” DNR Director Cameron Clark described the court decision as a victory for DNR’s ability to effectively mitigate the adverse effects of deer overpopulation. “We are pleased the Court of Appeals upheld the trial court ruling and years of rule-making by the DNR,” Director Clark added.

● We told you earlier this year that the Carmel-based Midcontinent Independent System Operator Inc. (MISO) was asking the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) to revise a standard to which it was subject to make it easier for MISO to schedule planned outages, things such as the scheduled removal of a generator from service for inspection, maintenance, or repair. MISO had previously managed generator planned outages through voluntary rescheduling, but was concerned that the transition from a generation portfolio relying principally upon coal and nuclear sources to one in which intermittent and emergency-only resources become more important, decreasing capacity margins and making MISO more vulnerable in extreme weather events and in times of natural gas availability issues. MISO told FERC that this portfolio change was responsible for an increase in emergency situations during such outages, forcing the grid operator to tap some sources at maximum output to manage or alleviate the emergency.

□ FERC signed off on a plan under which MISO was authorized to impose penalties for outages scheduled during low-capacity margin, high-risk periods, and assist generators in scheduling planned outages by improving the transparency and quality of generator outage information through MISO’s internal maintenance margin tools. FERC determined that the proposed changes would appropriately address the concerns, and that the tiered penalty rubric acted as an incentive of sorts for the generators, particularly when planned outages and submitted well in advance were eligible for exemptions from penalties if the outage was scheduled entirely within a projected period of low risk with a sufficient resource margin, while planned outages scheduled at least 120 days in advance will generally not be subject to any fee.

□ MISO submitted its new compliance filing on Wednesday.

● Just as budget negotiators were preparing to digest the revenue collection forecast and work out the final details of the budget, Brown County Magistrate Frank Nardi, sitting as a special judge in Monroe County Circuit Court 6, found that anti-annexation language inserted at the last minute into the budget bill in 2017 ran afoul of both constitutional bars on special legislation and the single-subject matter requirements. He ruled that the City of Bloomington situation was not so unique as to mandate the use of special, targeted legislation, and that the language added to the budget was not germane because it was unrelated to the budget. Recall that the 2017 budget language added at the request of the Governor’s Office to protect the confidentiality of suppliers of lethal injection pharmaceutical companies was also challenged.

□ Lest you think that this might simply be a case of a local judge overstepping his authority and that the ruling may be struck down at the appellate level, while that may be the case, his ruling followed an interlocutory appeal by the Holcomb Administration of Magistrate Nardi’s denial of a State motion to dismiss. The Indiana Court of Appeals rejected the State’s appeal and remanded the case to the trial court.

□ Bloomington Mayor John Hamilton (D), an attorney who once was chief of staff to a Democratic lieutenant governor (and whose brother was a gubernatorial general counsel), issued a statement saying, “the ruling vindicates the constitutional principle prohibiting special legislation at the state level singling out municipalities for unfair treatment.”

□ “It doesn’t surprise me that it was ruled unconstitutional,” Sen. Mark Stoops (D) told the Bedford Times-Mail. “It was a bizarre move by the Legislature to target Bloomington.”

IN the Economy

● Through the first quarter of 2019, Indiana ranks ninth nationally in total employment growth, a .62% growth rate from December 2018 to March 2019. Indiana’s growth rate outpaces those of all of our neighboring states:

IN (9)	IL (31)	KY (19)	MI (28)	OH (24)
0.62%	0.21%	0.42%	0.25%	0.29%

● The March unemployment rate in Indiana rises by one-tenth of a percentage point to 3.6%, the first increase – or change in any direction in 10 months, since the rate began its stretch of stagnation at the 3.5% level in May 2018. That dip extends the longest stretch of no improvement we had endured on record. The Indiana unemployment rate has not improved for 15 months, now dating back to November to December 2017.

□ March sees a higher unemployment rate than the 3.4% unemployment rate in March 2018 (up by 0.2 percentage points, a higher rate of increase nationally than any state other than only Oregon, Hawaii, or Colorado). Indiana is 23rd nationally in lowest unemployment rates (down from a 21st place tie in February). There were 28 states with higher March unemployment rates than Indiana, down from 29 states (including Washington, D.C.) higher than us in January and February.

□ With the exception of one month when it was equal (in October 2014, at a hefty 5.7%), Indiana’s rate has held below the U.S. rate for 5½ years, a remarkable 66 months. We are one of 26 states with a rate lower than the 3.8% March national average. Indiana’s unemployment rate is 7.0 percentage points lower than the 10.6% rate in July 2009, the high point of unemployment experienced in the state during the national financial crisis.

Monthly Unemployment Rates, Indiana vs. Neighbors

	03/19	03/18	02/19	01/19	12/18	11/18	Monthly	Annual
Indiana	3.6%	3.4%	3.5%	3.5%	3.5%	3.5%	0.1%	0.2%
Illinois	4.4%	4.3%	4.3%	4.3%	4.3%	4.2%	0.1%	0.1%
Kentucky	4.0%	4.3%	4.1%	4.2%	4.3%	4.5%	(- 0.1%)	(- 0.3%)
Michigan	4.0%	4.4%	4.0%	4.0%	4.0%	3.9%	0.0%	(- 0.4%)
Ohio	4.4%	4.5%	4.6%	4.7%	4.5%	4.6%	(- 0.2%)	(- 0.1%)
National	3.8%	4.1%	3.8%	4.0%	3.9%	3.7%	0.0%	(- 0.3%)

□ After none of our neighboring states suffered increases in the unemployment rate from January to February, Indiana and Illinois did so in March, even as Kentucky and Ohio saw a decline from February rates. For a fifth consecutive month, Indiana saw growth in the unemployment rate over the year, up by 0.2 percentage points yet again. After two consecutive months as the sole state in the group to experience an over-the-year increase in the unemployment rate, Indiana was joined by Ohio in January and February in this distinction, while Ohio enjoyed another over-the-year decrease in March and Illinois joined us in the rate gain category.

□ While three of our neighboring states have seen their unemployment rates decline since the beginning of 2018, Indiana has seen a growth of 0.3 percentage points. Since the new administrations respectively took office in Indiana and nationally, our unemployment rate is down by 0.3 percentage points, which continues to be a less impressive decrease than that which any of our neighbors recorded . . . and while we can no longer claim that our rate is at the lowest it had been since 3.1% in December 2000, it does remain lower than that of any of our neighbors for a 31st consecutive month. The gap between Indiana’s March unemployment rate and that of our closest neighbor-state slips to 0.4 percentage points.

Rate of Change in Unemployment Rate

	03/19	01/18	01/17	vs. 01/18	vs. 01/17
Indiana	3.6%	3.3%	3.9%	0.3%	(- 0.3%)
Illinois	4.4%	4.4%	5.2%	0.1%	(- 0.8%)
Kentucky	4.0%	4.3%	5.2%	(- 0.3%)	(- 1.2%)
Michigan	4.0%	4.5%	5.0%	(- 0.5%)	(- 1.0%)
Ohio	4.4%	4.5%	5.2%	(- 0.1%)	(- 0.8%)
National	3.8%	4.1%	4.8%	(- 0.3%)	(- 1.0%)

□ Indiana’s total labor force – the number of people who have a job or are actively looking for one – continues to grow (for a 13th successive month), experiencing a net increase of 6,769, lower than the February gain. The Department of Workforce Development attributes the gains to an increase of 2,634 unemployed residents and an increase of 4,135 employed Hoosiers.

□ Indiana’s seasonally adjusted total labor force now stands at 3,414,389, up slightly from February, and also above levels dating back to the beginning of Q4 2018. Indiana’s labor force has now grown for 26 consecutive months, the longest streak in more than a decade. While the state ended 2018 with record employment numbers for the year, the total number of employed Hoosiers in February preliminarily reached 3,291,068, a new record high, topping the previous peak of 3,284,190 for the state set in February. Total private employment reached a new preliminary record apex of 2,750,640, above the December 2018 peak. An estimated 123,21 Hoosiers are currently unemployed and seeking employment, up from February numbers.

□ The state’s 65.3% labor force participation rate has improved slightly each month this year, and remains above the national rate of 63.0% (which fell slightly). Indiana’s labor force participation rate has now outperformed the national average for 58 consecutive months.

□ Private sector employment has grown by 38,100 over the year (down from the February-over-February improvement) and 5,300 over the previous month (greater than the February over January margin). Total private employment reached a preliminary record highpoint of 2,750,400, which is 18,300 above the December 2018 peak.

□ The monthly increase is primarily due to gains in the Professional and Business Services (1,200), the Leisure and Hospitality (1,100), and the Financial Activities (1,000) sectors. Gains were partially offset by a loss in the Other category (-300), which includes Mining and Logging, IT, and Other Services sectors.

□ Private sector employment within the Hoosier State has now expanded for nine consecutive months, and the state set a preliminary record for private sector employment for the sixth consecutive month. While the Department of Workforce Development had taken pride in Indiana's private sector employment growth vis-à-vis the national growth rate since July 2009's low point in recession-era employment, after Indiana's private sector employment growth was overtaken by the national growth rate for several straight months, DWD changed its measure to the Bureau of Labor Statistics Midwest States' growth rate, which Indiana outpaced. As of the March numbers, however, DWD is back to the national standard, and while Indiana's private sector employment growth rate bumps up to 183 for the period over February's 18.2%, we trail the U.S. growth rate of 18.6% for the time range selected.

□ The online "Electronic Shopping and Mail-Order Houses" employment classification suffered the first over-the-month dip we had seen in some time in January, down by 200 jobs, which we speculated might be due to the end of the holiday retail season in December. The number of jobs ticked up by 100 from January to February and again from February to March, regaining the loss from the one-month beginning-of-the-year decline. The 8.99% over-the-year growth rate (adding 800 jobs) was not back into the double-digits, but the rate of improvement was higher than for any other job category statewide during March, just as it was during February.

□ Lake County topped the state in January unemployment rate, at 6.9%, down from the 7.0% rate with which Vermillion County led the state in February. Vermillion was second at 6.7%, with Newton County's 6.0% rate third, and the only other county to post March unemployment of six percent or greater. Only Vermillion and Crawford counties were at six percent or greater unemployment in February. While only four counties were at or above five percent unemployment in December, 13 counties earned that dubious distinction in January and the same number were in that cohort during February before dropping to 11 in March. While only 12 counties topped the four percent unemployment rate threshold in December, 37 did so in February, down from 50 in January (and four more were also at precisely 4.0% in both January and February), and 38 were in that category for March. Only eight counties were above 4.0% in November, 16 counties had done so in October, and only five counties found themselves in such straits back in September, just one-tenth of January levels. Also notable: Sullivan County's unemployment rate improved by 0.5% in March moving it down to 11th place statewide, and interrupting a 17-month streak in which it had placed in the top 10 statewide - dating back to October 2017.

□ Six counties were below 3.0% unemployment during March, with Boone, Dubois, and Hamilton tied for lowest unemployment honors at 2.8% for the month. Recall that no counties were south of 3.0% unemployment in January, and only two hit that 3.0% mark on the dot. Four counties (including Boone, Dubois, and Hamilton counties) were best in state during February with 3.1% unemployment. (Dubois and Gibson had shared January honors). There were 27 counties under the three percent threshold in December after November had seen just 11 counties that fell below. In October, 17 counties did so - but 41 had been south of that mark in September. A majority of counties (52.17%, or 48 counties) trailed 3.0% as recently as April 2018.

● California Custom Fruits and Flavors Inc., a California-based food processing company that develops and manufactures custom value-added fruit and flavor ingredients for the dairy, bakery, beverage, and food service industries, plans to invest more than $11 million to construct, equip, and furnish a 65,000 square-foot, state-of-the-art manufacturing facility in Greenwood as the site of its first Midwest manufacturing operations. The new facility is expected to be fully operational by the first quarter of next year, and the company expects to create up to 24 new full-time positions in Indiana by 2023. "After much research, it became evident that Indiana was the best business and tax environment of any Midwest state within the region we were searching," said the company's CFO. "Additionally, Indiana has the most favorable workers' compensation rates and most highways and byways of any state in the Midwest." HOLCOMB ANNOUNCES TRAIL FUNDING: Gov. Eric J. Holcomb and Indiana Department of Natural Resources Director Cameron Clark today announced 17 communities and non-profit organizations will receive $24.9 million for 42 miles of new trail development as a part of the initial round of the Next Level Trails program (Howey Politics Indiana). "These 17 projects are a tremendous investment in quality of life for Hoosiers as trails create important connections within and between communities across our state," Gov. Holcomb said. "Our growing network of trails is more than a recreational and transportation amenity – it's an important tool for economic development by helping Indiana attract and retain the best workforce in the country." Gov. Holcomb made the announcement at Speedway Indoor Karting, next to the B&O Trail, with Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett, Town of Speedway manager Jacob Blasdel and other leaders. The Speedway Trail Association will receive a grant of nearly $4.9 million to acquire and develop 2.6 miles of new trail. The new trail will connect residential and commercial districts in Speedway and Indianapolis' west side by extending the existing trail 1.7 miles east to Michigan Street and 0.9 miles west toward Girls School Road. Next Level Trails is the largest infusion of trails funding in state history. The $90 million grant program is divided into two components: a $70 million fund for regional projects and a $20 million fund for local projects. A total of $25 million was available for the first round, including $20 million for regional projects and $5 million for local projects.

LaPORTE COMMISSIONERS OPPOSE STATE TAKEOVER OF SOUTH SHORE: The La Porte County Board of Commissioners plan to take on the state over what one member described as a "hostile takeover" of the South Shore Line. The board passed a resolution on Wednesday that opposed the Indiana General Assembly's recent change to the leadership of the Northern Indiana Commuter Transportation District, which gives Gov. Eric Holcomb sole authority to appoint members to the agency's board of directors (Yoakum, Michigan City News-Dispatch). The resolution also authorized the commissioners to retain the services of Indianapolis-based law firm Cohen & Malad to explore any legal remedies the county can take to maintain some local control of the NICTD board. The change – which reduces the size of the board from 11 to five members – came as part of the budget the General Assembly passed last week during the waning days of the legislative session. The bill also appropriated an additional $205 million to the $360 million the legislature had already committed to spending over the next 30 years for two South Shore Line improvement projects – double-tracking between Michigan City and Gary; and a new West Lake Corridor in Lake County. Under the new scheme, the governor will appoint four NICTD board members, one from each of the four Indiana counties the South Shore Line runs through, with an equal number of Democrats and Republicans. The appointees will serve alongside Indiana Department of Transportation Commissioner Joe McGuinness, the chair of the new board. Before the change, the board's membership consisted of three governor appointees and one commissioner and one council member appointed by their respective board presidents in La Porte, Lake, Porter and St. Joseph counties. County-appointed representatives have served on the board for the past 42 years.

'DEVIL' TRAILS MAYOR BUTTIGIEG: As Pete Buttigieg addressed supporters off a back porch in Marshalltown, Iowa, the Devil was whispering his name. "Pete," the Devil hissed into a microphone. "You're sooo smart, Pete" (TIME). Buttigieg ignored the heckler, plowing forward with his stump speech about American decency as his husband Chasten looked on. "Pete," the Devil whispered. "I want the heartland, Pete." The man in the devil costume was Randall Terry, an antiabortion activist. He had traveled to Iowa to torment the 37-year-old mayor of South Bend, Ind., the early breakout star of the 2020 Democratic presidential primary. "There's never been a poster boy for homosexuals" before, Terry says. "There's never been a homosexual that you'd go, 'Wow, I'd be proud of him.' He's the guy. That's why he's such a threat." Four years after the U.S. Supreme Court affirmed his right to marry, Buttigieg has become the first openly gay person to make a serious bid for the presidency. And Terry is hardly the only right-winger worried about the rise of "Mayor Pete." Buttigieg's saying that "God doesn't have a political party" prompted evangelical leader Franklin Graham to tweet that being gay is "something to be repentant of, not something to be flaunted, praised or politicized." Concerned by the campaign's rise, right-wing provocateur Jacob Wohl was recently caught trying to fabricate sexual-assault allegations against Buttigieg to slow him down. But to some Americans, Buttigieg may just be the man to vanquish America's demons. In a field of more than 20 candidates—including six Senators, four Congressmen, two governors and a former Vice President—Buttigieg (pronounced Boot-edge-edge) has vaulted from near total obscurity toward the front of the Democratic pack, running ahead of or even with more established candidates and behind only Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders.

INDIANA ELECTION WEBSITE RATES HIGHLY: According to the United States Census Bureau, 85.3 million Americans have some type of disability. Many of these individuals encounter significant challenges accessing websites. Indiana Secretary of State Connie Lawson has upgraded Indiana's election website, www.IndianaVoters.com, with features to ensure all Hoosiers can access election information (Howey Politics Indiana). Indianavoters.com was recently relaunched with a user-friendly design, additional voter information features, and live election-night reporting. Now, following an accessibility evaluation, the website has been updated to meet Web Content Accessibility Guidelines (WCAG) 2.0 and has achieved AAA compliance, the highest possible rating. "It is our goal to make sure that all Indiana voters have the opportunity to vote in every election, and that includes easy access to the resources on the IndianaVoters website" said Secretary Lawson.

"Receiving marks of AAA compliance is a sign that we are meeting that goal, and we will continue to safeguard the enfranchisement of all Hoosiers."

SUSAN BAYH GETTING STRONGER: Former Indiana first lady Susan Bayh is continuing treatments nearly a year after being diagnosed with the same type of aggressive brain cancer that killed Arizona Sen. John McCain (Davies, AP). She sat between her husband, former Gov. Evan Bayh, and their twin sons Wednesday during a memorial service for his father, former Sen. Birch Bayh, at the Indiana Statehouse. The Bayhs say 59-year-old Susan has undergone multiple surgeries and radiation and immunotherapy treatments in fighting the malignant glioblastoma discovered in May 2018. Evan Bayh said they've been told that 17 percent of patients undergoing such advanced treatments survive for at least three years but they are optimistic about his wife's health and progress. "She's doing great," Bayh said. "I can't tell you how much better she looks, how much stronger she's getting." Susan Bayh previously underwent brain surgery in 2015 to remove a benign tumor. "I think I've gotten probably more prayer letters from Indiana than anywhere," she told reporters Wednesday. "It really doesn't matter what religion it is, just as long as people are praying and keeping me up in somebody's thoughts."

TRUMP FINDS HIS SHIELD IN BARR: For a time, President Trump was reluctant to select William P. Barr as his attorney general. The veteran Justice Department official from the George H.W. Bush administration was not a longtime Trump loyalist, and the president wondered whether one of his own political allies might serve better as a shield, people familiar with the matter said (Washington Post). Trump, who spent a few hours at most with Barr before picking him as attorney general, told people that he was pleased with Barr's pugnacious performance before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Wednesday, though one Trump ally who regularly speaks with the president said his joy was 'shortsighted' because Barr lost credibility with some lawmakers who could be useful later. A White House official said that Barr had 'set the narrative' in a way that was positive for the White House. Trump campaign advisers, who said they had raised more than $1 million after the Mueller report was released, said the attorney general's comments have generally been helpful — especially his earlier assertion that there was 'spying' during the 2016 presidential race.

PELOSI SAYS BARR LIED TO CONGRESS: House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) on Thursday accused Attorney General William P. Barr of the crime of lying to Congress, further escalating a bitter feud between House Democratic leaders and the nation's top law enforcement officer (Washington Post). "He lied to Congress," Pelosi said of Barr during a news conference. "The attorney general of the United States of America was not telling the truth to the Congress of the United States. That's a crime." Pelosi's accusation stemmed from a response from Barr during a congressional hearing last month. At the time, Barr said that he was not aware of any concerns that special counsel Robert S. Mueller III's team might have expressed about a four-page summary he wrote regarding Mueller's findings in his probe of Russian interference in the 2016 campaign. That appeared to contradict a memo that surfaced this week in which Mueller wrote to Barr raising concerns that Barr's summary "did not fully capture the context, nature, and substance" of his investigation. Asked whether Barr should be jailed for lying to Congress, Pelosi replied: "There's a process involved here."

FOOD INSECURITY DOWN IN INDIANA: Food insecurity in Indiana is down slightly according to an annual report from Feeding America, but Hoosiers are still more likely to face hunger than the national average (Sheridan, Indiana Public Media). Statewide, 13.3 percent of Hoosiers are food insecure, for children that number goes up to 17.4 percent in this year's Map the Meal Gap findings. Every county in Indiana faces the problem. Marion County has the highest overall rate of 17.4 percent. Executive Director of Feeding Indiana's Hungry, Emily Weikert Bryant says the number is down a bit. "It still isn't reflective of what you'd expect with the economy and the unemployment numbers that we have," says Weikert Bryant.

TARIFFS MUST GO BEFORE USMCA PASSES: As agriculture lobbies Congress to introduce and pass the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Trade Agreement, there could be a battle brewing over the ending of U.S. trade tariffs. Iowa Republican Senator Chuck Grassley says there is no way Congress will consider the new North American trade deal until President Trump lifts the tariffs that have caused other countries to implement retaliatory tariffs that have hit U.S. farmers hard (Hoosier Ag Today). Grassley told reporters this week that Trump has to end the steel and aluminum tariffs in place on our North American trading partners before Congress will take up the USMCA Agreement. Grassley says tariffs could also make it more difficult to get a trade deal done with China. Grassley was expecting to meet Thursday face-to-face with Trump at the White House to talk trade. The long-time Senator says tariffs are "keeping the president on the cusp of a big win" with Canada and Mexico, especially as he's days or weeks away from potentially establishing a trade agreement with China. An Associated Press report says the President is hesitant to remove the tariffs because he feels they've forced other countries to make deals more favorable to the U.S. Indiana Republican Congressman Jim Banks called on Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) to bring USMCA up for a vote. Rep. Banks said, "Everybody agrees that our leaders should always fight for the best deal possible for American workers, farmers, and families and President Trump has done just that."

FORECLOSURE THREAT LURKS FOR FARMERS: A new, national study shows nearly nine out of ten farmers say the thought of losing their farms impacts their mental health. The study by Morning Consult for the American Farm Bureau also reveals that three in four rural adults say it's important to reduce the stigma about mental health in the agricultural community (Turner, Indiana Public Media). Michele Clark is a spokesperson for Sagamore Springs Behavioral Health, which operates several facilities across the state. She says she hears regularly about the poor availability of mental health resources in Indiana. "More often times than not they're traveling outside of their local community to gain those services and that can be a challenge for many," Clark says. She says there is a shortage of both facilities and beds in Indiana.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Attorney General William Barr is supposed to be the people's attorney and top cop. He's acting like President Trump's personal attorney. Congress has a constitutional duty as a check and balance on the executive branch. This means that administration officials should testify and documents should be provided. President Trump appears to be egging on an impeachment inquiry because it will help him with his 2020 reelection campaign since the Senate will never convict. There is little support among the American public for impeachment and we think it's a terrible idea. The verdict on President Trump must come in the November 2020 election from voters. What Hoosiers should be watching is whether the Indiana congressional delegation will continue to cede its constitutional duties to a president who has made a habit of hacking away at American institutions. History will take note as to how this all plays out. - Brian A. Howey

Campaigns

SMITH LEADS KOKOMO MAYORAL CANDIDATES IN FUNDS: Democratic mayoral candidate Abbie Smith raised more than triple the amount generated by her primary competitor, Kevin Summers, in the early months of 2019, campaign finance records show (Myers, Kokomo Tribune). The discrepancy comes in large part from what Smith's campaign said were more than 250 contributions from more than 200 people, including a mix of small- and big-dollar donations from city residents and out-of-town donors. "I worked really hard and people are ready for something new, a fresh perspective. I knew that I'm running against two longtime politicians, so I knew I was going to have to outwork them and out-raise them to be a viable candidate, and so I did," said Smith, referencing Summers and Republican Tyler Moore. Smith's campaign received $35,763 in contributions from Jan. 1 to April 12, compared to $10,940 for Summers. Smith, meanwhile, spent $24,240 during the same time period, leaving her with more than $11,500 in cash-on-hand for the remaining weeks before Election Day on May 7. Summers, in contrast, spent $5,435, leaving him with just over $5,500. The money raised by Smith, in fact, is more than what was raised by the other three mayoral candidates combined.

MOORE LEADS KOKOMO REPUBLICANS IN FUNDS: Tyler Moore raised $19,589 during the reporting period – his nearly $2,000 in cash-on-hand at the beginning of the year brought his "contributions and receipts" total to $21,536 – while the sitting Howard County commissioner spent $19,166 (Kokomo Tribune). Moore's campaign, however, ended the reporting period in debt, with $2,370 in leftover funds and $5,400 in "debts owed by the committee." That money is owed to Moore himself, who loaned thousands to his political committee, Moore for Kokomo. Moore's primary challenger, Republican Richard Stout, raised no money and spent no money, shows the report Stout submitted to the Howard County Clerk's office.

BANKS ENDORSES McMICHAEL IN NEW HAVEN: New Haven City Councilman Steve McMichael, a Republican candidate for mayor, has been endorsed by Congressman Jim Banks, McMichael announced Thursday (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). "Local government needs leaders with vision," Banks said in a statement. "Steve McMichael has the business experience combined with a proven record of public service to bring people together to lead New Haven to the next level. I enthusiastically endorse Steve's candidacy for mayor." McMichael has also been endorsed by the Allen County Right to Life PAC, REALTORS Political Action Committee, Fraternal Order of Police Wayne Lodge #14 and current New Haven Mayor Terry McDonald. The Republican primary election is May 7. McMichael faces East Allen County Schools Board President Bob Nelson and former New Haven Police Chief Steve Poiry.

SOUTH BEND COUNCIL CANDIDATE WAS FIRED: A candidate for South Bend Common Council was fired from his job leading a nonprofit earlier this year after its board discovered problems with the organization's finances, leading the board to seek an audit, according to records obtained by The Tribune (South Bend Tribune). Community Wellness Partners, also called the St. Joseph County Minority Health Coalition, in January fired its executive director, Karl Nichols, 43, who is challenging incumbent Tim Scott for the council's 1st District seat in Tuesday's Democratic primary.

STATE POLICE PROBE MICHIGAN CITY BALLOT FORMS: At the request of county election officials, the Indiana State Police are investigating a number of potentially fraudulent absentee ballot request forms for next week's Michigan City Primary Election (Michigan City News-Dispatch). At its meeting on April 15, the La Porte County Election Board voted to forward approximately 10 absentee ballot request forms to the Indiana State Police Election Fraud unit. On Wednesday, ISP Master Trooper Glen Fifield confirmed that state police are investigating the ballots, but would not discuss the investigation further. The Voter's Registration office contacted the Election Board after looking over the "suspicious" forms, which requested the county send the absentee ballot forms to the same address in Michigan City, Election Board member Andrew Voeltz said. Voter's Registration employees later contacted the applicants, who, when asked, said they did not know the location of the address on the form, he said, citing Indiana Code, which allows the board to turn over matters of potential "election fraud" to state police.

TRUMP, PENCE TO DEFEND GOV. BEVIN: Kentucky Gov. Matt Bevin is a presidential phone-buddy and White House regular who's become one of President Donald Trump's loudest surrogates (Politico). He's also one of the most unpopular governors in the country, facing a treacherous reelection in November. And the White House, fearing that an embarrassing loss in a deep-red state would stoke doubts about the president's own ability to win another term, is preparing to go all-in to save him. Vice President Mike Pence, who recently flew to Lexington to raise money for the governor, is scheduled to headline a gala dinner hosted by Bevin on Friday evening. On Saturday, Bevin will air his first TV ad during the Kentucky Derby — expected to be a Trump-themed spot packed with footage of the president.

President 2020

SEN. BENNET JUMPS INTO DEMOCRATIC RACE: Sen. Michael Bennet jumped into the 2020 presidential race Thursday morning, becoming the 21st Democratic contender vying for his party's nomination and the second hailing from Colorado (Politico). Bennet, a moderate senator from the Mountain West, made his bid official on Thursday morning, after promising earlier this month that he would "100 percent" run for president if he were declared cancer-free. Bennet underwent a successful surgery in mid-April to treat prostate cancer. "My plan is to run for president," Bennet said on "CBS This Morning" — the same morning news show on which Sen. Bernie Sanders launched his 2020 run earlier this year. "This country faces two enormous challenges, among others: One is a lack of economic mobility and opportunity for most Americans and the other is the need to restore integrity to our government."

SANDERS STATEMENT ON YEMEN: U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders issued the following statement following a Senate vote on whether to override the president's veto of S.J. Res. 7 (Howey Politics Indiana): "The bad news today: we were unable today to override Trump's veto regarding U.S. intervention in this horrific war in Yemen. The good news: for the first time in 45 years, Congress used the War Powers Act to reassert its constitutional responsibility over the use of armed forces. Let me be clear: this is the beginning of a bipartisan process to take back our responsibility over these most important matters. My likeminded colleagues and I, in a bipartisan fashion, will utilize all of the legislative tools at our disposal—including further use of the War Powers Act."

57% BELIEVE TRUMP COMMITTED CRIMES IN QUINNIPIAC POLL - American voters say 57 - 28 percent that Donald Trump committed crimes before he became president, according to a Quinnipiac University National Poll released today (Howey Politics Indiana). This compares to results of a March 5 survey by the independent Quinnipiac University National Poll, before release of the Mueller Report, in which voters said 64 - 24 percent that President Trump committed crimes before he was elected. In today's survey, 46 percent of voters say Trump committed crimes since he became president and 46 percent say he did not commit crimes. But American voters say 66 - 29 percent that Congress should not begin impeachment of President Trump. Democrats support impeachment 56 - 38 percent. Opposition to impeachment is 95 - 4 percent among Republicans and 70 - 27 percent among independent voters. Investigating Trump distracts Congress from other national issues, 53 percent of voters say, while 43 percent say Congress can investigate Trump and work on other national issues at the same time. Special Counsel Robert Mueller conducted a fair investigation, voters say 72 - 18 percent, including 65 - 25 percent among Republicans.

TRUMP SAYS SANDERS SMARTER THAN BIDEN: President Donald Trump on Wednesday waded once again into the 2020 Democratic primary, telling a Boston radio show that former Vice President Joe Biden is "not as smart as" Sen. Bernie Sanders and slamming the campaign of Sen. Elizabeth Warren (Politico). In a phone call to Boston Herald Radio that lasted almost 20 minutes, Trump launched his now-familiar attack on "Sleepy Joe's" intelligence and complained Warren (D-Mass.) should resign after she called for Attorney General William Barr to step down earlier Wednesday. Asked which primary candidate posed the greatest threat to his election, Trump was apparently unconcerned. When probed about the former vice president specifically, Trump called Biden a "sleepy man" and proceeded to bash his endorsement from the International Association of Fire Fighters on Monday. "In many ways, I like him," Trump said of Biden. "He's not as smart as Bernie [Sanders]. And he's not as quick."

TRUMP CAMPAIGN TO STOKE UP SPYING STORY: President Trump's re-election campaign is seizing on a front-page story in today's N.Y. Times: The FBI sent a woman posing as a research assistant to a London bar in 2016, supposedly to discuss foreign policy with Trump campaign adviser George Papadopoulos. The conversation ... took a strange turn when the woman ... asked [him] a direct question: Was the Trump campaign working with Russia?" Trump campaign manager Brad Parscale said: "There is a word for this in the English language: Spying. ... [I]t is high time to investigate the investigators."

GOP COULD FACE GREEN NEW DEAL BACKLASH: The GOP is seizing on the "Green New Deal" to demonize vulnerable Democrats in 2020 — but some Republicans warn it could do long-term damage to the party (Politico). Though Republicans have ignored climate change in past elections, it's now a key part of their 2020 strategy, especially in House races. They're hoping to define the Green New Deal as an expensive socialist gambit dreamed up by liberal superstar Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez that will ban cows and planes. Though mostly inaccurate, it's a portrayal they believe will scare independent voters in key districts. But the move could come at a cost: The near- and long-term loss of millennials and Generation Z voters, a growing slice of the electorate that wants federal climate change action to a greater degree than their elders. A recent Harvard Kennedy School Institute of Politics survey found 74 percent of likely general election voters under 30 disapprove of President Donald Trump's climate change performance and 50 percent call climate change "a crisis" that "demands urgent action." Another 25 percent called it "a problem." The data has Republican pollsters and current and former lawmakers warning that relentless mocking of the Green New Deal — but more critically, President Donald Trump's dismissal of climate change as a hoax — could jeopardize the GOP's ability to capture and cement a congressional majority.

Congress

BROOKS AUTHORS OPIOID WORKFORCE ACT: U.S. Reps. Susan W. Brooks (R-IN), Brad Schneider (D-IL), Elise Stefanik (R-NY) and Annie Kuster (D-NH) introduced bipartisan legislation, the Opioid Workforce Act of 2019, to train more doctors equipped to combat the opioid epidemic (Howey Politics Indiana). "In order to combat the devastating opioid, heroin and fentanyl epidemic that continues to plague communities across our country, a critically important piece of the puzzle is to ensure we have more trained professionals, particularly physicians, who can prevent and treat addiction and substance abuse disorder," said Brooks. "This bipartisan bill will help provide more residency positions to hospitals that have programs focused on addiction medicine, addiction psychiatry or pain management. The opioid crisis will not stop taking innocent lives overnight, but without more trained doctors ready to help people who are struggling because of substance abuse, drug and opioid related overdose deaths will continue to claim more lives in Indiana and beyond."

PENCE INTRODUCES FIRST BILL: U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (IN-06) introduced his first piece of legislation Thursday, leading H.R. 2460 with House Agriculture Committee Chairman, Rep. Collin Peterson (MN-07). The bill aims to reduce the regulatory burden on the hard-working men and women of America's robust transportation and agricultural communities (Howey Politics Indiana). "The current regulatory regime places unnecessary burdens on the hard-working men and women in our agricultural community in Indiana, and across America," Pence said. "I'm proud to introduce legislation that will help ensure our farmers and producers can transport their goods and commodities in a safe, efficient manner." The Modernizing Agricultural Transportation Act of 2019 (H.R. 2460), directs the U.S. Department of Transportation to examine Hours of Service (HOS) regulations and the Electronic Logging Device (ELD) regulations to identify obstacles to the safe, humane, and market-efficient transport of livestock and other perishable agricultural commodities.

BUCHSHON AGAINST CLIMATE TREATY: U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon, M.D. (IN-08) released the following statement after House Democrats circumvented regular order and forced a political vote on H.R. 9 the Climate Action Now Act (Howey Politics Indiana): "Climate change is an issue that needs to be addressed. However, Democrats are using climate change as a political tool to strengthen Washington's control of the economy and consumer choice, without any guarantees of actually reducing emissions, which is why I cannot support this legislation. President Obama hastily entered the United States into the Paris Agreement — which should be a treaty subject to the ratification of the Senate — that would have allowed other nations to force unrealistic regulations on America costing millions of jobs, increasing energy prices for ratepayers, and burdening small businesses with regulations while giving a free pass to the world's largest polluters, such as China, Russia, and India. The right way to tackle climate change policy is by continuing to remove barriers to innovation, incentivizing more clean energy, and putting forth realistic, free-market solutions driven by the American consumer — a proven approach that has already resulted in significant emissions reductions in the United States."

BANKS ACCUSES DEMOCRATS OF 'DERELICTION' ON BUDGET: U.S. Rep. Jim Banks writes for Fox News: "Nearly eight years ago, former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Michael Mullen characterized America's national debt as 'the single, biggest threat to our national security.' Since then, the federal government has borrowed an additional $7 trillion. Yet, despite these headwinds, the U.S. economy is booming, growing at 3.2 percent during just the first quarter of 2019 and providing Congress with a golden opportunity to seriously address our budget woes. Unfortunately, the Democratic Party is unable and unwilling to confront this challenge. They have refused to present a budget resolution because the far-left faction of their party is demanding massive spending increases for programs like the radical Green New Deal and 'Medicare for All.' Democrats have been derelict in their duty to the American people, and this is more than a stunning lack of leadership. It is dangerous."

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB SIGNS DCS, SCHOOL SAFETY BILLS - Governor Eric J. Holcomb offered the following after signing two Next Level Agenda bills designed to protect Hoosier children. HEA 1004 School Safety: "Every student, teacher and staff member deserves a safe school. I convened a group last year to examine school safety, and the recommendations led to this legislation that provides access to more funding for safety equipment, facilitates partnerships with local law enforcement and requires threat assessments in our schools. This new law is key to ensuring our schools are better prepared." HEA 1006 Department of Child Services: "We have a responsibility to each and every child to help them reach their full potential. This legislation both protects children and recognizes the difficult work of those who protect them by reducing caseloads, allowing case managers flexibility in their assessments and extending collaborative care services to age 21." The Governor signed a total of 28 bills today. Visit the 2019 Bill Watch webpage to view these and other bills the Governor has signed into law.

GOVERNOR: NEW OVERSIGHT FOR VIRTUAL SCHOOLS - If online students fail to log into classes as often as required, virtual schools must kick them out, under a new Indiana law signed Wednesday by Gov. Eric Holcomb (Wang, Chalkbeat). Students who want to go to an online school now also have to complete an orientation session with a guardian to better understand the expectations of a virtual learning environment. These new rules, which leave room for the state and charter authorizers to bring stronger oversight of virtual schools, come in response to years of poor student outcomes at Indiana's online schools and a bubbling scandal at two large virtual charter schools on the brink of closure. Recently released data shows that thousands of students churn through virtual charter schools throughout the year, many leaving with no credits. That high turnover amounted to about $10 million in state funding last year going to online schools for students who did not complete work or failed classes. Lawmakers' actions this year, paired with a funding cut, represent the biggest steps the state has taken to regulate virtual charter schools since they launched a decade ago. Some lawmakers say the new rules put into place much-needed guardrails on fast-growing virtual schools, which have largely been in favor of the changes. But others lambasted the legislation as not going far enough, with state Sen. Mark Stoops, D-Bloomington, calling virtual schools "a scam." Added Tim Lanane, the Democrat leader in the state Senate, "I think we need to suspend the operations of virtual schools until we know if the taxpayers are being ripped off."

STATEHOUSE: HILL URGES CONGRESS TO REPLACE OBAMACARE - Attorney General Curtis Hill this week joined 17 other states in a brief urging the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit to declare the Affordable Care Act unconstitutional. Such a decision would uphold a U.S. District Court decision from last year regarding the act, which is also known as Obamacare (Howey Politics Indiana). "The Affordable Care Act had previously been determined constitutional because of the tax penalty accompanying the individual mandate, which fell under the taxing authority of Congress," Attorney General Hill said. "When Congress eliminated the tax penalty, the individual mandate lost the constitutional leg on which it stood." This brief argues that Obamacare, in its current form, imposes rising costs and gives too much power to the federal government while simultaneously stripping power from the states. Attorney General Hill reiterated that leaders at all levels of government must work to craft sensible and effective health care policies.

INDOT: I-65 PROJECT POSTPONED THIS WEEKEND - There won't be headaches on the roads around downtown Indy this weekend after all. Thanks to Mother Nature (WIBC). Mallory Duncan of INDOT says because of all of the rain we have had this week, and will continue to get, they have delayed the second part of their I-65 project. INDOT made the announcement Thursday afternoon. "We just wanted to get (the info) out there as fast as we could, because we know the Indy Mini (Marathon) is going on, and other things going on downtown this weekend," Duncan said. INDOT's four-phase I-65 project is scheduled to go until August, with work only being done on the weekends. However, if they continue to be delayed, that could change. "There are provisions in our contract to work during the week if they need to," Duncan says. "If they do need to add days during the week, they'll do that closer to June or July."

ARMY CORPS: PATOKA LAKE NEAR CAPACITY - Southern Indiana officials are closely monitoring Patoka Lake after recent heavy rains filled the sprawling reservoir to near capacity. Representatives from the cities of Jasper and Huntingburg and Dubois County met Wednesday to discuss rising water levels at the 8,800-acre reservoir, which has climbed to nearly 90 percent of capacity. The Jasper Herald reports local stakeholders voiced support for aggressively releasing water from the lake over the next two weeks. Patoka Lake is managed by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, which approved releasing extra water from its dam in March after local government agencies and area farmers expressed concerns about its rising waters.

EDUCATION: FRANKLIN COLLEGE GETS GEESE GRANT - Students and faculty at Franklin College will soon start to study Canada geese in urban landscapes following a record-breaking research grant (Parker, Inside Indiana Business). The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Federal Aid in Wildlife Restoration Act will fund the investigation to help the researchers from the Indiana Department of Natural Resources, Ball State University and Franklin College. The four-year, $250,000 grant is funding Franklin College's contribution to the study. Each partner will study the management of Canada geese populations in urban settings across central Indiana. Associate professor of biology, Ben O'Neal serves as one of the principal investigators for the study and called Canada geese a "profound example of the complexity of our human interactions with nature."

SPORTS: FREENEY TO BE IN COLTS RING OF HONOR - Former Indianapolis Colts defensive end Dwight Freeney will be inducted into the team's Ring of Honor later this year (AP). A date for the ceremony has not yet been chosen. Team owner Jim Irsay made the announcement during Thursday's town hall with Colts fans. Freeney finished his career in Indy with a franchise-record 107½ sacks — a mark later surpassed by former teammate Robert Mathis. Freeney won a Super Bowl ring with the Colts following the 2006 season and played in two more Super Bowls, one with the Colts and one with Atlanta.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP JOINS STATES TO END OBAMACARE - Taking a harder line on health care, the Trump administration joined a coalition of Republican-led states Wednesday in asking a federal appeals court to entirely overturn former President Barack Obama's signature health care law—a decision that could leave millions uninsured (AP). Congress rendered the Affordable Care Act completely unconstitutional in 2017 by eliminating an unpopular tax penalty for not having insurance, the administration and GOP states told the court. The Obamacare opponents hope to persuade the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans to uphold U.S. District Court Judge Reed O'Connor's ruling late last year striking down the law. If the ruling is allowed to stand, more than 20 million Americans would be at risk of losing their health insurance, re-igniting a winning political issue for Democrats heading into the 2020 elections. President Donald Trump, who never produced a health insurance plan to replace "Obamacare," is now promising one after the elections.

WHITE HOUSE: MOORE WITHDRAWS FED NOMINATION - President Trump said conservative commentator Stephen Moore withdrew from consideration for a position on the Federal Reserve board, the second of his would-be nominees to do so after Republican senators expressed concerns about the pick (Wall Street Journal). Mr. Trump on Thursday tweeted that Mr. Moore "has decided to withdraw from the Fed process." The president didn't say why Mr. Moore changed his mind. The tweet came less than two hours after Mr. Moore told The Wall Street Journal and other news outlets that he would continue to seek the nomination, and after other administration officials and allies had indicated they still backed Mr. Moore.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP STRIPS MENTION OF ARCTIC TREATY - The Trump administration sought to remove references to climate change from an international statement on Arctic policy that Secretary of State Mike Pompeo is expected to endorse next week, leading to sometimes testy negotiations over how much to emphasize an issue considered a crisis for the region (Washington Post). The Arctic Council declaration is an affirmation of goals and principles among the eight Arctic nations, which meet every two years. The Trump administration's position, at least initially, threatened a standoff in which the United States would not sign onto a statement that included climate discussion and other members would not agree to a version that left it out, according to senior diplomats and others familiar with the discussions. The administration objected to language that, while nonbinding, could be read as a collective commitment to address the effects of climate change in the Arctic, diplomats said.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP RELIED ON GOD DURING MUELLER PROBE - President Donald Trump said Thursday he leaned on one thing to get through special counsel Robert Mueller's probe of Russian interference in the 2016 election: his faith (Politico). "People say, 'How do you get through that whole stuff? How do you go through those witch hunts and everything else?'" Trump said at the White House during a National Day of Prayer service. He looked over to Vice President Mike Pence and shrugged. "We just do it, right?" the president continued. "And we think about God."

WHITE HOUSE: SAILORS TOLD TO 'CLAP LIKE YOU'RE AT STRIP CLUB' FOR PENCE - U.S. Navy sailors who were awaiting Vice President Mike Pence's visit Tuesday were told by the ship's command master chief to "clap like we're at a strip club" when the vice president arrived at the USS Harry S. Truman (Fox News). The U.S. Navy confirmed to Fox News Thursday that the statement was made to sailors ahead of Pence's visit to the ship. "We can confirm that this statement was made by USS Harry S. Truman's Command Master Chief to Truman's Sailors, prior to the arrival of the Vice President," Lt. Cmdr. Laura K. Stegherr told Fox News in a statement.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will have lunch with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo at 12:30 p.m. Then at 1:45 p.m., he'll greet Slovak Prime Minister Peter Pellegrini. They'll hold a bilateral meeting in the Oval Office, followed by a larger meeting in the Cabinet Room of the White House. The White House says Trump and Pellegrini will discuss "recent, positive gains in bilateral security cooperation [read: NATO defense spending] as well as our shared concerns on cyber threats and the importance of energy security." The meeting is one of a series the Trump team is holding with Central European leaders as part of its effort to counter the growing influence of China and Russia in the region.

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE TO TOUR BURNED BLACK CHURCHES IN LOUISIANA - Vice President Mike Pence is scheduled to visit with community and faith leaders near Opelousas, Louisiana, where three black churches were destroyed by an arsonist (ABC News). News outlets report the White House says Pence will tour the remains of one of the churches on Friday and meet with Republican U.S. Sen. Bill Cassidy. The Rev. Gerald Toussaint says he and reverends from the other burned churches will also be meeting with the vice president.

NRA: TURMOIL BLAMED ON MEDIA - The National Rifle Association's leadership turmoil and financial deficits were described by some loyal NRA members at the group's national convention last week as the product of an overzealous news media (de la Bastide, Anderson Herald-Bulletin). "I don't believe what they say," said Dave Martin, who owned a gun shop and shooting range in Richmond. "The NRA doesn't need to change; people have to stop paying attention to the media." Martin and his wife, Becky, have been NRA members since 1972. Reports of internal strife over budget issues and a leadership struggle between NRA Chief Executive Officer Wayne LaPierre and the organization's president, retired Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North, played out at the annual convention in Indianapolis. LaPierre supporters on the NRA board prevailed over North's efforts to replace the longtime CEO. Instead, North announced he would not seek re-election as president. Carolyn Meadows was elected by the group's directors to replace him.

CHAMBER: DONAHUE UNDER PRESSURE TO RETIRE - Washington's biggest lobbyist, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, is getting "shut out" by chilly relations with both the White House and congressional Democrats, report The Wall Street Journal's Brody Mullins and Alex Leary: Even with the decline in contributions, the chamber last year spent $95 million on lobbying, more than any other group. In 2014, it spent $124 million. The story saves the best for last ... Chamber President and CEO Tom Donohue, 80, "travels in a chauffeured SUV accompanied by two security guards. On weekends, he uses the chamber's private jet service to reach his Florida vacation home, often with a guest. On overseas trips, his physician sometimes joins him. Personal or guest trips are either reimbursed or claimed as income, the chamber said. Donohue has long avoided talk of retirement, though senior chamber officials and members of the board have pressed him about it. Several times over the past year, chamber officials approached former House Speaker Paul Ryan about the job.

KENTUCKY: OMAHA BEACH SCRATCHED FROM DERBY - Kentucky Derby favorite Omaha Beach will not compete in Saturday's race, Churchill Downs announced on Wednesday (Sports Illustrated). According to trainer Richard Mandella, Omaha Beach was scratched from the race after the colt was diagnosed with an entrapped epiglottis, an obstruction that compromises a horse's ability to breathe during exercise. The condition was discovered after a cough and scope, Mandella told the track. Omaha Beach had also been dealing with a quarter crack in the weeks leading up to the Kentucky Derby. Omaha Beach was the morning-line favorite at 4-1. Bodemeister, at 30-1, will replace Omaha Beach.

MARYLAND: BALTIMORE MAYOR RESIGNS - Baltimore's embattled Mayor Catherine Pugh resigned Thursday amid state and federal investigations into whether she used bulk sales of her self-published children's book "Healthy Holly" to disguise kickbacks (Fox News). The announcement, effective immediately, ends weeks of uncertainty surrounding the first-term Democrat. "Sorry for the harm that I have caused to the image of the city of Baltimore and to the credibility of the office of the mayor," Pugh's attorney Steven Silverman read in a statement from her. "Baltimore deserves a mayor who can move our great city forward."

CITIES: COLLEGE AVENUE TO CLOSE DUE TO RED LINE - Construction crews along the 13-mile stretch will be working on College Avenue to set the station structures through the month of May (Howey Politics Indiana). On Saturday, May 4, crews will set the Red Line station at Broad Ripple Avenue on Saturday, May 4 from 8:00 AM – 11:00 AM. This work is weather dependent. Drivers should expect a temporary closure to the southbound travel lane. Should inclement weather make the work unsafe, work will take place on Monday, May 6 between 9:00 AM – 12:00 PM. For more information about IndyGo projects and the Red Line, visit www.IndyGoRed.com or call 317-635-3344.

CITIES: DELPHI SEEKS TRAIL FUNDS FOR BRIDGE WHERE MURDERS OCCURRED - Part of a nearly $1.3 million state grant will go toward converting an old railroad bridge into pedestrian use along a northern Indiana city's recreational trail where two teenage girls were hiking when they were killed two years ago (AP). The project will include the addition of decking and safety rails for Delphi's Monon High Bridge, which rises more than 60 feet over Deer Creek. It was among $25 million in grants for 17 trail projects across the state announced Thursday by Gov. Eric Holcomb. Most go toward new paved trails, with the largest grant of $4.9 million going to the Marion County town of Speedway.

CITIES: TERRE HAUTE FINANCES IMPROVE - Terre Haute officials continue to project city finances will end 2019 in the black for the first time in many years (Taylor, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Finance Committee Chairman Earl Elliott reported Thursday to the City Council that a combination of 23 operating funds ended 2018 with a $671,000 deficit — a far cry from $9.1 million of red ink when the current council took office at the start of 2016. Elliott, D-2nd, provided fellow council members with several pages of data based in part on year-end figures provided by the city administration in mid-April. "We could go black when we get to the end of '19 ... if we add another $2.5 million to $3 million like we have been," he said.

CITIES: THE ATLANTIC REPORTS ON MUNCIE - National journalists James and Deborah Fallows have posted two online articles about their recent trip to Muncie, where they found "activities worth national notice" (Slabaugh, Muncie Star Press). Authors of a best-selling book, "Our Towns: A 100,000-mile Journey Into the Heart of America," the Fallowses have identified 10½ attributes of successful cities. James Fallows recently posted two installments about Muncie on TheAtlantic.com, the website of The Atlantic magazine.

CITIES: INDY EYES NFL DRAFT - Hosting the NFL Draft has been on the minds of Indianapolis leaders for the past few years, but pushing to bring the event here probably won't happen right away (Shuey, IBJ). The Colts, Visit Indy, the Indiana Sports Corp. and the city—all of which would have direct involvement in a formal bid process—have had informal discussions since at least 2016 about hosting the draft, and have expressed their interest to the NFL. But scheduling conflicts and other major sports events have waylaid an effort to make a push for the draft. The city already has a lot on its plate, including the NCAA men's Final Four, the NBA-All Star Game and the College Football Playoff Championship, all of which are on the calendar in 2021 or 2022. "We've got a lot in the next two, three years that really keeps us from trying to tackle this before 2022," said Ryan Vaughn, president of the Indiana Sports Corp. "We've continued to express interest in the years after [that], though."

COUNTIES: JENNINGS SHERIFF APPEALS TO DRUG DEALERS - Hey, drug dealers, are competitors putting you out of business? The Jennings County Sheriff's Office has an offer for you (WIBC). We Are Here To Help You Eliminate Your Competition!" The form asks drug dealers to list their competitor's name, the drugs their competitor sells, the address of the person, the person's license plate information and the days or times the person does most of their dealing. Reaction was positive. One Facebook commenter even suggested, "You should offer a, 'turn 10 drug dealers, get a get out of jail free card'."

INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT

Feng shui lacking, but bill passes

Majority of both caucuses in both chambers unite for expansion

If you had told us that the House sponsor of the gaming bill would vote against his own measure, the cosponsor would grouse on the floor that “half of this bill does not set well with me,” the chair and vice chair of the House Committee on Public Policy would vote against the bill, and the chair and co-chair of the House Committee on Ways and Means would also be among the nay votes, we would have told you that HB 1015 (originally SB 552) was destined to failure.

Surprisingly, however, even with that line-up voting against it, the measure still prevailed by a comfortable 59-36 vote in the House, and by a 37-12 vote in the Senate in the final hours of the 2019 session on Wednesday, April 24.

The route to passage wasn’t easy, however, and the initial conference committee report wasn’t met with much favor.

The big hang-up, we were told, was over hold harmless money – compensating communities potentially harmed by the loss of casino revenues due to shifts in licensing and location.

House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) of Indianapolis later said that his caucus wanted the bill to pass, but that both Republicans and Democrats were adamant that these “cross-payments” – as he called them – had to be included.

While Republicans ostensibly had no reason to be concerned about hold harmless dollars in Lake County, they were highly protective of cash flowing to Evansville (which had a Democratic mayor and primarily Democratic legislative delegation when riverboats were authorized in 1993, but a GOP local administration and delegation today) and French Lick, another area dominated by the GOP in a shift from Back in the Day.

House Democratic Leader Phil GiaQuinta (D) of Fort Wayne, who had served on the House Committee on Public Policy through much of his legislative tenure, also said after the Wednesday night vote that “The hold harmless language was very important. It was important to the legislators whose areas were affected, and I think it really would have struggled to move forward” without it.

“On the Senate side, the ‘hold harmless’ was crucial that it be included because of the number of other gaming communities that were not directly mentioned, or had something in the bill but felt an effect,” said Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D) of Anderson.

Between both parties, it was clear that hold harmless deals needed to be included, and they ultimately were, although questioning of bill authors and sponsors on the House and Senate floors that final night by lawmakers whose districts were impacted by the hold harmless dollars showed that the negotiations were top-down, and didn’t include folks from those individual districts.

And it was those cross-payments which caused Rep. Todd Huston (R) of Fishers, co-chair of Ways and Means and the bill’s sponsor, to vote against it on final passage after being instrumental in shaping the entire package. That vote surprised even Speaker Bosma and House GOP colleagues.

Bet on it: Combos largely done

Of 16 properties, 12 have sport-bet partners

Passage of sports wagering authorization might be seen as a huge opening and opportunity for sports wagering operators and those who provide “skins” for online sports wagering applications . . . except that nine of the 13 Indiana properties – and the three satellite wagering facilities – already have partners for the marathon dance.

Well before Indiana approved sports wagering for its casinos and OTBs, casino operators were signing on sports wagering partners. The sole significant free agent is now Spectacle Entertainment, LLC with its Gary operation set to expand and its presumptive favorite status for Terre Haute.

French Lick Resort • Casino will also be a sought-after partner, but its business is far from any urban center, lots of families visit the resort, and an operator can only hope to overcome those demographics with convention crowds and the occasional golf tournament.

While FLRC is a one-off gaming property, Rising Star Casino • Resort has two sister Full House Resorts, Inc. properties, but neither is bound to be a key sports wagering site, and Rising Star’s own uncertainties keep it from being among top-tier sports wagering options.

See “IN Sports Wagering” inside for sports wagering partnerships with Indiana properties.

That Huston vote, however, may have been tipped off late in the day before when he held court with reporters about the budget bill he was shepherding through the process, and was asked about the gaming bill – which had seemed to publicly stall after the Monday conference committee draft.

“Hold harmless in general is a sticking point,” Rep. Huston told the media, explaining that “This is a very parochial bill,” and “people want to make sure their local communities are not impacted.” He continued, “I stood on the House floor and made my personal opinion on hold harmless pretty clear. Other people have different opinions, and I respect that.” He took pains, to reiterate that “Hold harmless has been the biggest single challenge right now.”

As with many major pieces of legislation, this was not an organic, cohesive package, but a loosely cobbled-together bill that was designed to generate a majority of votes while still accomplishing the overarching objectives of helping generate economic development in Gary, expanding gaming to Vigo County (and if you parse the final version of HB 1015, you will find the only specific mention of Terre Haute being a pair of references to distribution of revenues to that city; watch to see whether this distinction comes into play along the way), accelerating live table games for the racinos, and – oh, yeah – authorizing sports wagering while also giving the state’s “gaming partners” some tax relief via extended free play deductions and a change in the wagering tax structure.

While many were skeptical at the outset about whether so much had been crammed into the bill that it would collapse of its own weight (and that the sports wagering portion might have to be split off to survive on its own), in the end, keeping everything together produced a bill that was at least marginally beneficial for the state as a whole.

Oddly enough, sports wagering was largely an afterthought that generated virtually no debate at any stage, with the protestations of House Committee on Public Policy Chair Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn against the evils of mobile gaming largely ignored, and no one raising questions about the size (large or small) of the initial $100,000 fee for a sports wagering operator license and a $50,000 annual renewal payment.

The breadth of the package and net tax benefits to the state – along with some significant economic development for certain areas – led only a few lawmakers to vote against it based upon the balkanized interests of their respective districts.

There were also some interesting and overlooked precedents set, such as the $20 million relocation fee.

The bill also contained a formal cap on licenses (six, which would still, for example, allow a potentially combined four-license Caesars Entertainment Corporation and one-license Eldorado Resorts, Inc. to compete for the new Vigo County license).

The fee for the Vigo County license also changed from the original conference report, and the 2.9% daily supplemental tax for the new casino attracted absolutely no attention on the floor . . . but that was simply the tax that will be imposed upon the new casino that is equivalent to the tax on the other properties imposed in 2017 to compensate for the lifting of the $3 per patron admission fee.

A controversial $40 million tax credit proposed in the initial conference report for Spectacle Entertainment, LLC was scrapped in the final version, but as compensation for surrendering its second license upon an inland move, Spectacle was allowed to have its operations continue to be taxed for a four-year period as if it were still two separate casinos. The new Gary inland casino could become the state’s largest casino as well, authorized for 2,764 gaming positions, compared to, for example the 1,500-position cap on the new Vigo County facility.

Spectacle would, however, be slapped with a $20 million fee if it sold the new inland Gary casino to another operator within five years after receiving Indiana Gaming Commission approval to relocate.

While Governor Eric Holcomb (R) played coy about whether he would allow HB 1015 to become law when asked at the budget-signing ceremony on Monday, he is not expected to stand in the way of its approval.

“I want to learn more on the gaming bill,” the Guy told reporters. “This all happened quickly at the end of session, as happens when you’re making sausage in this building and there’s an expire (by) date on it.” He explained, “I want to make sure the State of Indiana is the winner, and for me to be sure of that, I have to read the bill word for word,” Gov. Holcomb said Monday. “And I’m not there yet.” So what is his bottom line? “My first and last thought is the impact it has on taxpayers and our citizens both short term and long term.”

But if you go back to his historical comments about gaming – beginning with what he exclusively told us during the 2016 gubernatorial campaign about the need to modernize the system, protect the communities which have long relied upon their local casinos, and working in partnership with the Hoosier gaming industry, there should be no reason why he would not sign the legislation, which was authored and sponsored by Republican lawmakers, and passed with a majority of both Republican and Democratic votes in both chambers.

And if you sneak a peek back at what Gov. Holcomb, the first non-lawyer to be elected governor since Gov. Bob Orr (R) in 1980, told our flagship sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT, in an exclusive look at his veto philosophy in January 2017, you will see a striking parallel to what he said last week. He told us then, “I will read, obviously, every single word and I will know where the commas are; that can make a difference. And we’ll make sure that it meets constitutional muster – at the least. That’s not to suggest that the members in the House and the Senate haven’t done the very same thing, but we’ll want to make sure that I know for sure that it does, and then I’ll surround myself with experts in that area to weigh in and counsel. So I’ll have the extra benefit of not just making the decision alone, but being informed by the whole process and then by my team of advisors, and then I’ll make the decision,” he said. Since then Gov. Holcomb has vetoed only one bill.

He also told our sister newsletter more than two years ago, “I’ll make sure that it aligns with the taxpayers’ interests for sure, but . . . I would never suggest that I know more about their house than they do, so there will be a lot of respect given. Having said that, we’re all in this together, and we all answer to the taxpayers.”

Sen. Jon Ford (R) of Terre Haute explained to the Terre Haute Tribune-Star that the Governor's comments didn't faze him. "I think it's typical with any major legislation," Sen. Ford said Tuesday. "He's just doing his due diligence." He also said that there was no indication of any particular area of concern. "I've not heard from him or his office. I think we've come out with a very fair process to move the (casino) licenses ... to communities that need economic development. Some of the other things in the bill, like sports wagering or some of the taxes we're lowering, will help modernize gaming to be able to compete with neighboring states."

Sen. Ford also restated his belief that "From my point of view, I don't view it as an expansion of gaming." He went on to say, "This is just trying to bring in those illegal bets into the regulated market and try to get some control of it."

Sen. Ford also told Matthew Kredell of Legal Sports Report just after HB 1015 passed, "He will be good with the bill. He told me, if we get it to him, he will sign it."

Bet on it (at least where such betting is legal).

Here is your detailed look at just how the final events unfolded.

Conference Committee Actions

Initial Version of SB 552

The Conference Committee on SB 552 met on Monday, April 22, and its members had obviously done their work through the weekend, because the version of the bill the Conference Committee considered, as outlined by Senate Majority Floor Leader Mark Messmer (R) of Jasper, the bill's author, was considerably different than the measure that had just passed the House.

"I think we're 99% there," Sen. Messmer optimistically declared, "99% done."

The first significant change was cosmetic: SB 552 was relegated to the junk heap, and HB 1015 was stripped of its original content to serve as the receptacle of the SB 552 conference provisions because revenue-raising bills must technically originate in the House. "We always knew we'd have to move the tax provisions of 552 into a House bill," Sen. Messmer noted. With that facade out of the way, the public (and industry) learned what members would be working with, and the content largely followed what we had suggested would be the case in our last issue, but with a few tweaks and surprises.

The fee for moving a Gary license inland within Gary but off the Buffington Harbor footprint would cost Spectacle Entertainment, LLC $20 million, payable in installments over a five-year period once the new casino opens, an amount down from the $100 million slapped on by the House Committee on Public Policy, and already reduced by 50% to $50 million up front on the House floor.

That new Gary facility would require a minimum $150 million investment (Spectacle had earlier pledged to pump $300 million into the new site), but also be allotted 2,764 total gaming positions, a number that generated lots of attention because it seemed to be far larger than any other casino currently deploys in its live inventory, but also muddled the waters because of the difference between the actual number of electronic gaming devices in use and unused capacity (recall that Rising Star Casino • Resort asserted two years ago that it had enough unused capacity that it could open a Terre Haute satellite casino).

A decision by Spectacle to sell its new land-based Gary casino within five years would trigger a $20 million transfer fee, down by 60% from the $50 million tariff as passed the House.

The Gary casino operator would be required to surrender its second license to maintain the number of licenses at 11 if Vigo County were to be allocated a license (or 13, if you add the two racinos that would soon become full-fledged land-based casinos close to Indianapolis). "That sacrifice of that license in Gary is regardless of who is operating the Terre Haute location," explained Sen. Messmer. "When Terre Haute opens, Spectacle would be required to sacrifice one of their licenses, whether they move at all."

But as part of the deal requiring the license surrender, Spectacle would be granted a $40 million tax credit graduated across five years for losing its privilege - even if it were to be the successful bidder for the Vigo County license. "They're giving up real dollars, and they're getting real dollars," is how Sen. Messmer puts it. "Us just taking a license is new turf," he added. "We're taking it, and that's why we're giving them some tax credit to cover the loss of the license." He also outlined how Spectacle would be on the hook for paying more taxes on its one new inland property than in its current operation of two riverboat casinos, which are each taxed separately - beginning with lower marginal rates - and the tax credit would help compensate them for the different wagering tax structure.

Hold harmless provisions would return, but only for East Chicago, Hammond, and Michigan City, and would only remain in place for four years. The subsidy was structured such that the City of Gary reaps gaming tax revenue beyond its 2019 level - and if there is a decline in gaming tax collections for the other three communities - the revenue growth for the Steel City would be redirected, at least in part, to help restore the cities to their respective 2019 revenue levels . . . roughly comparable in principle to the state holding host communities harmless for reduced admissions taxes after the shift to open boarding in 2002.

Sen. Messmer acknowledged the hold harmless dollars, however, "There's still a lot resistance from House leadership on that."

The provision inserted in the House by Rep. Earl Harris, Jr. (D) of East Chicago that would require Majestic Star Casino to offer a similar position to all existing employees in the inland casino move, and to afford hiring priority to open positions to any workers laid off by Ameristar Casino East Chicago stemming from the move, was retained in the initial conference draft.

The racinos would see live dealers for their table games bumped up from January 2021 at the discretion of the Indiana Gaming Commission to an automatic live date of July 1, 2020, but which Sen. Messmer suggested would be accelerated yet again to January 1, 2020.

The tax rates for all casinos would also be reduced through a change in the graduated wagering tax table while the free play deduction would be boosted and extended – although the tax expenditures would be pushed outside the biennium to reduce the hit to the state before revenue would start flowing from the other changes.

Vigo County would be authorized to hold a county-wide referendum (“Shall inland casino gambling be permitted in Vigo County?”) in the 2019 general election in November or the May 2020 primary election to allow a new casino there, and passage is a condition precedent to a new casino license being granted. The initial conference proposal mandated a $100 million investment in the new facility – which would be capped at 1,500 total gaming positions.

The convoluted local competitive bid process inserted by the House Committee on Ways and Means (based on Pennsylvania) and massaged on the House floor was excised in favor of returning to the kind of process that saw the Indiana Gaming Commission select the operator of the original 10 licenses. The successful licensee would be on the hook for a $2 million license fee.

Largely overlooked was a supplemental wagering tax of 2.9% of the Vigo County casino’s adjusted gross receipts for the day that had been in the engrossed Senate bill and remained in this conference report.

Sen. Messmer also revealed that the draft would maintain the sports wagering authorization framework as passed by the House, with wagering targeted to begin September 1. The initial conference draft would allow mobile sports wagering (all for those aged 21 or older), with the operators of all forms of sports wagering taxed at a flat rate of 9.5% of adjusted gross revenues. Registration for mobile betting could take place at a brick-and-mortar facility or online. Wagering on esports and high school and amateur youth sports would be prohibited. The Indiana Gaming Commission would be empowered to determine the parameters of in-play wagering and confirmatory data sources.

Rep. Terri Austin (D) of Anderson, a House conferee, spoke briefly on the reason why the open meetings requirement inserted in Second Reading on the House floor by Rep. Pat Bauer (D) of South Bend was excised, and she referenced the ban on ex parte communications by license applicants with Commission members imposed on the very first day of IGC action in 1993 that we reminded you about in our last issue . . . a ban that encouraged applicants and their attorneys to meet instead with Commission staff. “The rules as they passed the House were just overly restrictive,” agreed Sen. Messmer.

Rep. Ed DeLaney (D) of Indianapolis spoke to the property rights in a state license, and Sen. Eddie Melton (D) of Gary asked Sen. Messmer a question about the $2 million transfer fee and clarification about the hold harmless triggers and revenue sources. The financial protection dollars would be derived from Gary’s revenues and not the state share. “There was no appetite for anything involving state revenues,” Sen. Messmer told him.

Negotiations Following Initial CCR

While Sen. Messmer had publicly stated at the initial conference committee meeting – which also proved to be the only one – that the package was “99% complete,” there was considerable angst over the hold harmless provisions: who would be included, how much they would be entitled to in what House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) referred to as “cross-payments,” under what conditions, and for how long. The concern and debate was far more rancorous in both House caucuses than in the Senate, and had the potential for killing the entire package.

After the hold harmless language was largely stripped from SB 552 by the House Committee on Public Policy (and stayed out on the House floor, save some tinkering for the Orange County hotels), it was obvious that we had underestimated the rabidity with which communities accustomed to their payments would defend them and battle with their neighbors – almost to the point of Mutually Assured Destruction, with one legislative leader telling us after the final vote that there were several points during the process that the subsidy issue came close to the point where at least two caucuses would not sign off on a conference report and were prepared to defeat the bill on the floor if leaders replaced conferees with those who would sign a CCR devoid of a comprehensive hold harmless structure.

That direction was particularly tough on the House sponsor, Rep. Todd Huston (R) of Fishers, co-chair of the House Committee on Ways and Means, who, like Rep. Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn, chair of the House Committee on Public Policy, took it as core principle that there should be no cross-payments.

But the House Republican Caucus appeared intent on passing the bill, with members from the Evansville area (recall the comments of influential Rep. Holli Sullivan (R) of Evansville during testimony on the recommitted 552 to the House Committee on Ways and Means on the need to protect her community), and the sheer number of House Republicans representing communities in the Springs Valley and which benefit from French Lick tourism pushing for aid . . . and House Democrats under pressure from the large percentage of their own delegation from Northwest Indiana – some of whose own districts were conflicted, but overall would be benefited by a successful bill with revenue sharing.

Democrats were harangued by mayors Tom McDermott, Jr. (D) of Hammond and Anthony Copeland (D) of East Chicago between the final Monday and Wednesday of session, with those two mayors deriding the prospectively directed dollars as decidedly inadequate, and Evansville leaders also jumped in, with Rep. Sullivan and Sen. Vaneta Becker (R) of Evansville, along with other members of their Southwestern Indiana delegation lobbying colleagues to help pocket Pocket City cash.

The gaming bill was decidedly not a partisan issue, but one shaped by geography – and certainly not principle. And while initially, the riverboat gambling bill was a plus for Hoosier Democrats, who largely represented districts with riverboats, as we’ve illustrated for you in the past few election cycles, districts with casino, racinos, or satellite wagering facilities have been turning more red than blue, and that was important in bringing the full faith and credit of the House Republican Caucus to bear on changing the provisions of HB 1015 in the final conference report April 24. As Rep. Huston later explained on the House floor, he was carrying out the will of his caucus in agreeing to insert the hold harmless provisions (and their triggers and four-year duration) into the final measure.

Final CCR Version of HB 1015

Late in the final afternoon of the session on April 24, the final Conference Committee Report on HB 1015 was released, and in addition to the contents of SB 552 as it passed the House on Third Reading the previous week, the CCR:

- Changed the fee for a Gary riverboat to transfer to an off-footprint inland location to $20 million. This action was consonant with the initial CCR.

- Authorized a license to operate an inland casino in Vigo County. As in all previous iterations of the gaming measure, HB 1015 pointedly avoided reference to a casino being sited in the City of Terre Haute . . . and that may prove significant.

- Removed language labeling a relinquished Gary riverboat license as a “terminated” license.

- Stripped the provisions establishing a Vigo County inland casino advisory board and detailing its responsibilities and excised the competitive bid process to operate an inland casino in Vigo County. The CCR eliminated local control over the process, which had been limited only by Indiana Gaming Commission oversight, and struck down a process that some had viewed as unnecessarily cumbersome.

- Empowered the Indiana Gaming Commission to accept applications and evaluate proposals to award a license to operate an inland casino in Vigo County. This change switched the process from one that would be controlled by local individuals lacking perspective on the statewide process and individual casino deals elsewhere to the entity and process that has served effectively to award 11 licenses to date. The responsibility for evaluating and awarding the license would be invested in a more knowledgeable entity. Assorted criteria were specified for consideration by the Gameboys in determining suitability for Vigo County licensing, including an investment of at least $100 million, with 65% of the proposed investment for development of a casino, and 35% for nongaming amenities. Local support and ownership involvement are also among the criteria.

- Imposed a license fee of $5 million to operate an inland casino in Vigo County. This is a new token fee of sorts, and serves in part to replace a $20 million transfer fee of sorts that would have been levied on Spectacle for a move to Vigo County.

- Changed the date for allowing live dealers at racino table games to January 1, 2020. This was another change, hinted at in the conference committee meeting earlier in the week, bumping the date up from July 1, 2020, and it maintains the language that makes the approval automatic.

- Allowed mobile sports wagering. This came over the vehement objection of House Public Policy Chair Smaltz, but didn’t seem to be a big issue to those outside the small remaining cadre of anti-gamers, who would not have voted for the measure even if it only allowed in-person sports wagering. Conferrees heard an earful through the week that eschewing mobile wagering would leave big bucks on the table, frustrate patrons, turn off the younger audience it seeks to attract going forward, and ultimately benefit the illegal off-shore operators. Sports betting is estimated to generate about $11.5 million annually for the State General Fund, according to May 1 Legislative Services Agency projections (Illinois’ governor estimates that sports wagering in his state could bring in up to $136 million annually to state coffers).

- Reduced the wagering tax on gambling games at casinos effective July 1, 2021. This was expected, and was in keeping with the timetable that had earlier been laid out by Rep. Huston to effectively ensure that the tax expenditures did not begin until state coffers began to reap the tax benefits of the revenue-enhancing provisions of 1015. The increase in free play deduction from $7 million to $9 million also kicks in with FY 2022, and will translate into an estimated $6 million hit to the State General Fund, according to LSA.

- Deleted language rendering certain meetings with casino owners or potential casino owners subject to the open door law. As we told you, we expected this to be the first provision dumped from the bill as passed by the House, given that it had made the “political-with-a-small-p” point that lawmakers intended, was largely unworkable in practice, and there were appropriate protections in place.

- Eliminated the Gaming Commission mandate to report on out-of-state casino competition, the movement of casino licenses, and the current state of gaming in Indiana. While this may seem to be a big deal, other provisions were made for an interim study as sought by Rep. Sullivan in the Ways and Means recommittal hearing. The morning after the session ended, Speaker Bosma said that there were a number of interim study committee topics already being bandied about, and “The one that I think probably is most prominent – that was discussed extensively by fiscal folks – were these cross-payments when new gaming facilities happen. I think Rep. Huston will lead a discussion on that.”

- Prohibited a person from having an ownership interest in more than six of any combination of: (A) riverboat licenses, and (B) gambling game (racino) licenses. After some concerns that had been expressed about earlier “undue economic concentration” language, recent rumors about gaming industry consolidation at the national level, and the vagary of the initial statutory language (about whether it applied to the Vigo County license, overall statewide ownership issues, or both), the language was modified to make it clear that the economic concentration concerns applied to licenses statewide, and a policy decision was made that a quantitative cap on the absolute number of licenses would be substituted for a more amorphous qualitative determination by Commission members – who undoubtedly know it when they see it. The cap of six would allow for the acquisition of Caesars Entertainment Corporation (and its two casino and two racino licenses in Indiana) by Eldorado Resorts, Inc. (owner of one casino license in Indiana), and for that newly merged entity to then pursue a sixth license in Vigo County.

- Continued to impose wagering taxes for the Gary inland casino as if two riverboats were in operation for four years. Offered in lieu of the proposed $40 million tax credit for Spectacle prospectively losing its second license is the ability for it to continue to be taxed for (state fiscal years ending before July 1, 2025) as if it owned two casinos.

- Added permission for IGC to approve in-play wagers for sports betting and required the Commission to adopt rules concerning the use of data in sports wagering. The conference panel punted legislative ability to make the call on how to handle in-play betting and requiring the use of official data for any types of sport betting to the administrative entity better-equipped to make those kinds of decisions. Since this will go through a rulemaking process, there will be the opportunity for public input.

- Mandated the operator of a Vigo County casino to make certain payments to the City of Evansville. While the Northwest Indiana cities were included in the initial conference report, the City of Evansville was notably excluded, and lawmakers of both parties in both chambers from the southwestern counties threw the legislative equivalent of a hissy fit until Evansville hold harmless dollars were added back. They were, but only for three years (and not four like the Northwest Indiana communities). The Pocket City would reap a $1.2 million payment in the first year of Vigo County gaming operations; $900,000 in year two; and $600,000 within the third year.

- Entitled East Chicago, Hammond, and Michigan City to receive supplemental payments from wagering tax distributions that would otherwise be paid to Gary if certain conditions are met. While Gary's mayor wasn't all that happy about the trade-off, as expected, Hammond Mayor McDermott also wasn't as pleased as one might have presumed. He wasn't convinced that these bucks would ultimately even be returned to his city, because if his city's Horseshoe Casino Hammond maintains its current level of revenue, the proposed hold harmless trigger would not even come into play, and, as Mayor Tom has been insisting all along, it would be Ameristar Casino East Chicago that would be hardest hit. The three communities are able to collect cash payments, if eligible, for four years.

- Distributed wagering tax revenue from the Orange County casino to the West Baden Springs Historic Hotel Preservation and Maintenance Fund beginning in 2021. French Lick seems to have the legislative equivalent of a NATO Treaty, because any time anyone seems to take aim at its casino revenues, not only lawmakers from the Springs Valley but those from around the state unite to defend the unique community and property itself. No different this time out of the blocks, as the historic hotels fund would receive 33.6% of the State share of tax dollars unless and until the local casino posts AGR of at least $100 million or more, or the fund balance tops $25 million.

Rules Committee Deliberations

The Senate Committee on Rules approved HB 1015 unanimously, but the road was a bit tougher for the measure after conference in the House Committee on Rules, where there was a good bit of substantive questioning and sparring over the report on that side of the Rotunda – albeit for just 10 minutes.

After Rep. Huston detailed the changes from the original conference report, Rep. Ryan Dvorak (D) of South Bend jumped in to ask whether mobile sports wagering had ever had a public hearing, only to be told that mobile wagering was in the bill as it had moved over from the Senate. Rep. Dvorak asked Rep. Huston which parts had not passed a chamber. “Conceptually,” he was told, the French Lick historic hotel fund was in the House bill, and the hold harmless funding for Northwest Indiana came over from the Senate. There was some fee structure for relocation, but the House’s fee structure was modified. The Vigo County license process as inserted by the House had been modified as had been relocation principles.

One new item was the cap of six licenses, with the current cap removed in the Senate, and re-established – at six – in this conference report.

Rep. Sullivan raised questions about the trigger passing the House for a Gary license reverting to the Commission, and there were also questions about the ability of a satellite wagering facility to offer on-premise sports betting.

Rep. Smaltz also noted that the license move fee had been “adjusted” to $20 million and new language would allow that tab to be paid over five years, a circumstance that Rep. Huston described as “conceptually the same.” Rep. Smaltz also confronted Rep. Huston about the wagering taxes for a relocated Gary casino to continue to be imposed for four years as if there were still two riverboats in operation – “I think that’s new,” he added, with Rep. Huston telling his colleague that he was indeed correct. Huston also noted that the cap on the number of positions for a Vigo County casino was also new language.

The House Rules panel voted 7-3 for the report to advance to the full House. Reps. Smaltz, Dvorak, and Dan Leonard (R) of Huntington, were nay votes, with Rep. Smaltz explaining that he was voting against advancing it because of the “magnitude of the bill with the addition of the new language,” while Reps. Sullivan and Greg Steuerwald (R) of Danville voted for it, with both members of House GOP leadership noting that it was simply a procedural vote.

Final Night Floor Action

Final House Floor Consideration

At 7:24 p.m., roughly 40 minutes after the Rules Committee report was adopted, the full House took up the final Conference Committee Report.

Rep. Huston took five minutes to explain that the conference report on HB 1015 contained many of the elements of SB 552, and that the final measure included what he saw as five key components:

- (1) The ability to move a Gary casino inland within Gary off the current footprint with a $20 million fee imposed upon the owner in five payments, the first of which is due when it submits its petition to move, which must be by January 1, 2020. The tax provisions for the Gary casino will continue to tax the owner as if there were two boats until 2025, regardless of the status of the licenses, and 35% of the inland Gary casino project investment must be directed to non-gaming amenities.
- (2) A Vigo County casino referendum is triggered upon the Gary casino owner indicating an interest in moving inland, and any Vigo County casino would be awarded in a Gaming Commission-led process. That license award would require payment of a $5 million fee to the State of Indiana, and the operator would have to make a minimum $100 million local investment, with at least 35% of that consisting of “non-casino infrastructure.”
- (3) Live table games for the two racinos would automatically occur on January 1, 2020.

(4) Sports wagering would be authorized with mobile gaming.

(5) Hold harmless provisions would protect East Chicago, Hammond, and Michigan City based on changes in revenue to those communities, with dollars directed from Gary under specified conditions. French Lick would be entitled to capture more revenue to support the historic hotel fund, and a Vigo County casino operator would be required to provide a string of three annual payments in specified dollar amounts to the City of Evansville.

Rep. Huston also noted that the conference report included a cap of six licenses for any one operator. He said that the one premise conferees were operating under for the new casino prospect was a fair process for determining a Vigo County operator. He explained that overall, HB 1015 created a situation in which the State is allowing sports wagering in a responsible manner and supporting communities and honoring sunken investments.

Rep. DeLaney rose to question him about protection for Evansville, and asked if HB 1015 was cutting tax rates for casino operators. Rep. Huston reminded him that the tax changes were included in the House version of the bill, and while HB 1015 would change the scale of tax rates for operators, the State "will be picking up new revenue from four changes," which he elaborated as a Vigo County casino, an inland Gary casino, sports wagering, and live table games for the two racinos.

Rep. DeLaney then asked rhetorically, so "at least for the casinos we're lowering the rates?" Huston told him that because of the delay in altering the rates, lawmakers and regulators will have a chance to watch things evolve over the coming biennium, including if one aspect is delayed and how things "impact the entire scene." "We meet every year," Rep. Huston reminded his colleague in a time-worn floor debate phrase, and can come back and make any necessary adjustments with no harm.

Rep. DeLaney asked about the hold harmless language for Northwest Indiana, which he understood to only come into play if the Gary operation brings in more than the base year revenue. He was concerned that the big three protected under HB 1015 are at risk of not gaining that cash if the Gary inland model does not prove successful. The premise, Rep. Huston explained, is that there would be a shift from these three communities and if that shift takes place to Gary, then Gary would then share some of those proceeds back. If there was no shift, there would be no need for compensation.

Rep. DeLaney then spoke on the measure, suggesting that under the hold harmless provisions, "We all swim together, or we all sink together." If the Gary inland casino is not successful, the hold harmless protection is "ephemeral, evanescent, disappearing," because we are tying these disparate operations together.

The Indianapolis Democrat told colleagues that he would vote against the conference report "simply as a matter of negotiation. I've never seen anything like what I've seen here." He observed that the bill started (in the House) with $100 million "to the people of Indiana from the gaming industry" for the Gary license, and "Now that we're here, we're going to get $20 million instead of $100" million, and then the State would actually be giving back $40 million in reduced taxes.

"That is more than a 100% shift in the opposite direction," he mused. Rep. DeLaney continued, "I have never been in a negotiation where we've changed who is paying whom. I don't know who was in on this negotiation acting on my behalf." He said if there is a next time, he would "fire whoever it was who represented me and hire whoever it was that represented them. I don't see this is a good deal for the state of Indiana." As for allowing more free play deductions and lowering tax rates for casinos, "I don't see that this is a good deal for the people of the State of Indiana." While he was glad there was some protection for communities, he was "not sure it was adequate."

"I don't see what's in it for our taxpayers," Rep. DeLaney said, offering his advice to vote the measure down and come back in 2020 "and get someone better to negotiate for us."

Rep. Ryan Hatfield (D) of Evansville questioned Rep. Huston on whether the language on studying the economic impact of the changes (as proposed by Rep. Sullivan in Ways and Means) found its way into the final conference version. He said that we need to make a commitment to "next year, the year after, and year after that" to look at how our communities are being impacted by this change. "Sure, absolutely," said Rep. Huston. "I'm happy to look at that" and at the evolution of the landscape. "We should be looking at that," Huston added.

Rep. Tonya Pfaff (D) of Terre Haute rose to remind colleagues that she has lived in Terre Haute almost her entire life, and labeled HB 1015 as "very important to my community." Rep. Pfaff described the measure as "a jobs bill for my area. It will have a lasting impact."

Rep. Austin, a conferee, spoke about her 17 years of work on the House Committee on Public Policy, where she has been able to see "every gaming bill" during that entire period. She detailed how her home town of Anderson has benefited from the racino to the tune of "a thousand jobs in my community; some of them have actually saved families from financial ruin." She observes, "The truth is gaming is an ever-evolving industry, just like entertainment is. Nobody could have ever told me 10 years ago that I could watch my favorite TV shows on my phone To me, this is being progressive and it's recognizing that in a free market, you had better stay on your toes or you're going to be left behind."

She understands "that some folks just don't like gaming - period," but it has brought hundreds of millions of dollars to Indiana. "[T] his bill has a lot of promise for our state. Thank heavens it's not the only economic development strategy that we have, either." Rep. Austin thanked Reps. Huston and Lehman and Sen. Lanane for their thoughts and ideas "to get us to this point today" on SB 552 and HB 1015.

"No piece of legislation is ever perfect," Rep. Austin reminded the chamber, but assured Hoosiers that "the truth is this: The State is not going to lose money on this bill." She continued, "I think it benefits everyone and even the state makes money off of this." Rep. Huston would not sign off on something that would cost the state money, said Austin. She noted that some estimates bandied about for sports wagering income alone are much higher than the official numbers used in shaping the measure by as much as $12 million to $75 million annually in state revenue from sports wagering.

Rep. Austin also noted that the illegal sports betting market in Indiana is estimated at $300 million annually, with minors participating. HB 1015 would halt the illegal operations and regulate it.

Rep. Randy Lyness (R) of West Harrison, whose district is home to Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg, owned by Penn National Gaming, Inc. and sister property to Ameristar Casino East Chicago, took to the podium to say "I'm in awe" of the work by Rep. Huston on this bill. "This is gonna hurt my district a little bit," he continued, referencing the live table games in Shelbyville, and observing that it had moved in "a lot of different directions in the last three or four days."

"I have one vote," he lamented, but as Huston had said in describing the measure, "there's five parts to this. I have to vote," he said, and "I will be voting against it."

Rep. Ragen Hatcher (D) of Gary came to the front of the chamber, and the "lifelong resident" of Gary expressed her appreciation for the fact that the move of the Majestic Star casinos would allow her city to develop Buffington Harbor. "We are in the midst of an interesting time in the city where we are looking for new avenues to create income to pay for basic services like police and fire."

Being able to move the casinos from the harbor to land will allow economic growth as well as future harbor development, Rep. Hatcher explained, adding that the hold harmless clause would kick in after the shift inland "because we don't know" if the Gary casino will make more money on I-80/I-94. After the complex Majestic Star corporate bankruptcy several years ago, the city still got money under the local development agreement, but tax dollars were lower, and the City was just making a "basic amount" that it was hoping to exceed now. "This will mean a lot to Gary, and I ask for everybody's support."

Rep. Smaltz, who saw the bill significantly altered after it left his public policy panel – despite his explicitly stated concerns – told the floor that he had not been planning to speak on the bill, but "I'm really concerned about what we're about to do." While "Todd Huston and I are great friends," he expressed regret over some things that were changing in this bill. "I thought we were okay when it left the House. I voted for it. I thought Public Policy did a fantastic job" with the measure. As approved by the full House, it included a $50 million fee for moving a Gary casino, and now the fee is less than one-half of that, and "they can pay over time."

The member of the Committee on Rules referred to House rules on conference language passing the House, and cautioned colleagues that HB 1015 shows that "we could create a lattice work in the bill," force a bill into conference committee, and change the language. Not only was the fee cut to $20 million – bad policy that didn't pass either chamber, he exclaimed – but it could be paid across five years. Moving up the date for live dealers at the racinos, and adding back hold harmless language and legalizing mobile sports wagering – "I don't even know where to start with that. We talk about minors having access. We've kept everything pretty tied to our properties. This is a monumental policy shift. And this is just the beginning, and I'm not excited about it," Rep Smaltz exclaimed.

"I'm not excited about having sports wagering in my community or anywhere," Rep. Smaltz says, adding, "I'm really not excited about what happens in six years or less, when there's new people here and somebody comes and says, 'Isn't it silly we can bet on a football game, but I can't play blackjack or roulette on my phone?'" He says that it's only common sense that new lawmakers at that point would say "that's dumb" to have done it that way, and ask "Why don't we fix this?" He called for geofencing around college campuses to make it more difficult for the vulnerable college population to place mobile sports wagers. Smaltz also calls the hold harmless deals, "like the 'hokey-pokey,' it's in and then it's out. Some people get it, some don't."

Rep. Smaltz asks, "Why are we even doing this? Because somebody bought a casino that's not profitable? What started this bill? Because the federal government said we could do something? So? is there some other reason why this bill has to happen? Because I sure haven't in all the testimony," and in the large conference committee report, heard why it is necessary to "make this major policy change I think this issue is going to come back and haunt us."

Rep. Peggy Mayfield (R) of Martinsville opted to speak because she had not heard her concern mentioned. She had an amendment drafted but had decided not to offer it on Second Reading dealing with the ownership concentration. She told House members that the cap on owner licenses – two under current law – was initially removed in the pending legislation, and then capped at six under HB 1015.

Mayfield reviewed the current state of ownership in Indiana, where one operator (Caesars Entertainment Corporation) owns two casino licenses and two racino licenses so "de facto four licenses." That means that one organization controls 54% of state gaming tax dollars, and the three largest entities control 85% of the gaming taxes flowing to state coffers. "If we allow one entity to increase to six licenses, we could potentially let them control more than 60% of (one of) our top tax sources in the state," raising the point we made in our last issue when we broke down the combinations and potential that would result from an Eldorado Resorts, inc. buyout of, or merger with, Caesars.

"I want the state to be controlling the policy on gaming," asserted Rep. Mayfield. "I don't want the state enacting what is being dictated to it from a potential largest contributor" to the tax source. "Gaming is not simple," she went on to say, observing that it is highly controlled and tightly regulated, and "takes a while to understand" the complexities from a legislative perspective. "It took four years for me to understand," she said, and referenced the 17 freshmen in the House who had only four months in which to digest all of this before making a generational change in state policy.

"We run around like our hair is on fire," she complained, with everyone on board, "when, two years ago, the slightest tweak 'sent everyone running to a legislator' with a lobbyist on their behalf. She urged the House to take its time, assuring them that "the industry will survive." However, "This bill is throwing a grenade into the middle of Indiana's gaming industry," and "I just want everyone to think long and hard before we alter our gaming industry."

One whose district had the most to gain from the passage of the bill, Rep. Sean Eberhart (R) of Shelbyville, was next to command the floor. This was “a tremendous bill,” he began, “and we had two of the best,” Reps. Huston and Lehman in charge of a process that was “transparent from the beginning to the end, folks. You cannot say that you did not have an opportunity to talk to either Rep. Huston or Rep. Lehman.” Rep. Eberhart contended that the bill had gone through assorted stages at which there was opportunity for public input, committee work, or personal contact, “including the freshmen.” Taking aim at Rep. Mayfield’s comments, he suggested instead that the freshmen class members “know what they’re doing,” and he offered up his “complete confidence they are making a vote based on what they think is good policy.”

Still firing back at Rep. Mayfield, he said “Folks, this isn’t a ‘grenade.’ This is a chance for us to leverage the assets we have in place with our gaming partners Yes they are. They are our partners We need to embrace that.” He continued, “This bill is a great bill for the State of Indiana. I have complete confidence that Rep. Huston would not let this bill move forward if it wasn’t a net positive for the state.”

As for the concessions to the industry that were criticized by some during debate, Rep. Eberhart said, “It is about time, I think, that we give a little back to them with the tax adjustments that we’re making. We continue to take and take from these folks. We have one of the highest taxes anywhere on gaming. If we don’t start treating them more fairly we’re going to kill the golden goose.”

Referring to Rep. DeLaney’s shot at the negotiations, Eberhart said that those talks had involved “me and a lot of folks in this room. A lot of folks had the opportunity to negotiate. Rep. Huston’s probably tired of me. I’ve talked to him probably more on this bill than on any other bill in 13 years” The live table games would be important for Anderson and Shelbyville, bringing “650 jobs that pay an average salary of $50,000” annually. The bottom line, he added, was that this is “a great bill for the state.”

House Republican Caucus Chair Greg Steuerwald (R) rose for the shortest admonition. He urged everyone simply to vote their conscience, and, seeking to deflect criticism from the sponsors, he said “if you ever want to tackle a difficult issue, just try it once.” He offered his thanks to Reps. Huston and Lehman and others who negotiated the bill for “the transparency and the integrity of the process.”

Rep. Randy Frye (R) of Greensburg, whose district includes Rising Star Casino • Resort offered his thanks to Rep. Huston for all the work he had put into the measure, and stated up front that there was “a lot of this bill that needs to pass.” He queried Rep. Huston about the tax breaks to industry in the bill. Rep. Huston told him that there would be a new taxation structure imposed two years down the road. Rep. Frye pressed him on how much money would be at stake. Expect about $45 million to $50 million of new dollars flowing to the state, replied Huston, and the state will net about $20 million to $25 million annually once the tax changes included in the measure take effect.

Rep. Frye began to probe deeper, asking if this was money that would “go back and improve the profits of the gaming industry?”

He asked rhetorically if there were hold harmless provisions benefiting all riverboat communities – and then asked straight-up what communities were in line for new hold harmless cash and where it was added in, and was told it would be East Chicago, Hammond, Michigan City and French Lick, and they were included in the Senate-passed bill. Rep. Frye pushed further: Why not the Southeastern Indiana riverboat communities? “I don’t have good answer for that,” Rep. Huston told him, trying to explain that they were looking at specific pools of money, and “it would become problematic” to restructure them. Huston conceded that it was “not a great way to do it, it is not a great answer for your district.” Frye then asked about whether his region of the state would be entitled to any compensation from the acceleration of live table games at the racinos, and was told it would not.

Rep. Frye then spoke on the bill, opening with his respect for Reps. Huston and Lehman, and noting that if the bill could be broken into different parts, “that would be great.” He then launched into the most passionate speech of the debate. He reminded colleagues that the Conference Committee Report was not the bill, that they could vote the CCR down and the panel could come back tomorrow “with one that fixes this mess.” Rising Sun was in the state’s smallest county, was home to the smallest boat, and they would be taking “a $600,000 hit in this bill. We’re gonna build this on the backs of the poorest people in our state when we’re giving millions and millions in dollars” to riverboats and gaming casino owners? “Are we really going to do that? We need to think this through. A lot of this was thrown together in the last couple of hours. I’m willing to come back tomorrow and get it right ... don’t pay for it on the backs of the poorest people in the state while we give huge tax breaks to the wealthiest people in the state That’s ridiculous.”

“There are not enough votes in southeastern Indiana to matter,” Rep. Frye told Mike Perleberg of WSCH Radio in Lawrenceburg the day after the vote. “They just run over us.”

Majority Floor Leader Lehman was next to speak on the bill, jokingly alluding to his authorship of one of the session’s most contentious issues. “Right now, I’m wishing I had my lending bill back.” He spoke to the State’s reliance on gaming dollars, reminding everyone that “This deal wasn’t made in this bill. This deal was made 20+ years ago. When you take that revenue book, and you begin to see the reliance we have on gaming, I’m sorry folks, using a gaming term, ‘we’re all-in.’ We’re all-in.” He noted that he is not a gaming guy – facetiously suggesting his hometown of Berne gets hinky about cakewalks because “that’s gambling.” “So here’s the deal We better have strong parameters around this industry that we have created and that we’ve allowed to flourish.”

Rep. Lehman mentioned the jobs and economic benefits and then said, “Half of this bill makes me feel really good about Indiana, and half of this bill does not set well with me. I think Rep. Eberhart said, you know, ‘It’s compromise.’ It’s negotiation. We can’t pick and choose what we like in this bill or that bill. We take it as a whole and ask, ‘Is this moving Indiana in a better direction than where we are at now?’ ”

Lehman continued, reprising his line from Third Reading debate. “I don’t care who. I don’t care where. I don’t care when. I care about strong public policy for the State of Indiana. So If we’ve got gaming here and we do, we better have a strong parameter around it.”

Rep. Lehman referred to the $100 million license fee that Rep. DeLaney had suggested was money given up, but reminded the hushed floor that the bill as it came over from the Senate had included no fee. "I can make the argument that we went from zero to $20 million. That's again for the State of Indiana. I think we have done in this bill what is right for Hoosiers right now, and" he added "we do come back every year" and can thus make changes that might be needed.

"This is a shift," Rep. Lehman acknowledged. "This is the part I struggle with a little bit. This is a big shift." In his years on the Committee on Public Policy he recalled that "We really have struggled trying to with finding the right place for these gaming bills." He said he had probably spent more time on this bill than any other bill – and his name was not even on it. "It's not a secret I don't like the hold harmless agreements, I don't. I don't like them at all. I don't know that that's good public policy." He related a colloquy that he had with Rep. Hatfield of Evansville in which he told his younger colleague, when Kentucky gets expanded gambling, "all bets are off," and Terre Haute payments will continue to Evansville even if Evansville were to hemorrhage cash due to Kentucky, which won't be paying it any compensation. "This is just the conversation starting."

Rep. Vanessa Summers (D) of Indianapolis told her colleagues that she had been a member of the public policy committee since the first gaming bill passed through the panel (although the first came before she was elected in 1991, when the committee was chaired by her late father). "We cannot be a little pregnant. We are in this thing. We are here. We're in it. We're doing it. We are gonna be in it."

She reminded everyone that there was a "lot of gaming" going on around us in neighboring states, and "We need to do what we do best." And if this doesn't meet expectations, "We are here every year and we tweak, and we make sure things are better." She said she was voting for HB 1015, but was only doing this "for one representative, and I'm going to help him help his city and help him help his district." She was referring to Rep. Vernon Smith (D) of Gary, who joined the House in 1990, the year before Rep. Summers, and was a passionate advocate for his city. He had been absent during much of the second half of the session.

Rep. Greg Porter (D) of Indianapolis, the top Democrat on the House Committee on Ways and Means, took to the podium for the penultimate speech to thank Reps. Huston, Austin, and Lehman for their efforts in educating members and doing the "heavy lifting." Rep. Porter said that he was among the members of the House in 1993 when riverboats were authorized, and understands the passion for Lawrenceburg. But he also pointed out that the southeastern communities have had longstanding extensive local development agreements in place. "Don't think that all the dollars come to the General Fund," he said, particularly speaking to newer members. "When we first did this," he explained, local communities were "very involved" in the process "20-something years ago." He recognized, however, that "Things change. We were an island when it came to gaming" back then (overlooking casinos in Illinois), and adding that he wanted to help all of the state.

The final floor speech came from freshman Rep. Pat Boy (D) of Michigan City.

While Rep. Boy had not been involved in the Michigan City government when the boat was built on Trail Creek in 1997, she spoke to how she had seen in her 15 years on the Michigan City City Council how the casino revenues that flowed to local government were used for good things, including health insurance and community enrichment, and "tided us through" some rough revenue spots over the years. "Without it, we would be in a really big problem," Rep. Boy said.

Rep. Tim Wesco (R) of Osceola, the anti-gamer who was formerly the vice chair of public policy, called for a vote, ending debate.

Rep. Huston took advantage of his prerogative as the sponsor to close.

He spoke about his relationship with colleagues, and how it is "hard not to take some of these bills personally. The hair on the back of your neck stands up when people say things," but then you settle down. While he had participated in lots of negotiations in both the legislature and outside, "this is very, very unique because it impacts different people in different ways, and it means you have to come to some level of compromise that you never kind of expected to come to." Rep. Huston added, "This bill is unique, because it affects local communities in so many different ways," and the House "is about the individuals it represents."

He reminded colleagues that he personally held one core philosophy on this bill: that there should be no hold harmless provisions. But, like Rep. Lehman had outlined, lawmakers needed to do "what's in the best interest of the state." As others had said of him, he said that would never have signed the Conference Committee Report if the State was not going to receive more money than it gave back. He understood the concerns of each group, "but you just try to get it to the spot where four people can agree, with the support of their caucuses, to sign a report ... This is the will of my caucus." He said that "Where we've gotten to is where a lot of people think is probably the right spot. It was a group and uniform effort to get to this place, and I thank everybody." Huston reiterated, "I can say with confidence, we're not putting the state at any risk."

After just under one hour of debate, the House voted 59-36 in favor of the bill, with 37 Republicans and 22 Democrats voting aye, and 27 Republicans and nine Democrats voting nay.

Two lawmakers recused themselves from the vote. House Speaker Bosma, whose law firm had been retained by the Vigo County Capital Improvement board last year on the recommendation of a board member who was to become a key principal with Spectacle, and Rep. Dave Heine (R) of Fort Wayne, whose district is home to a Harrah's Hoosier Park satellite wagering facility that used to be run by his son-in-law, who now lobbies for Caesars Entertainment Corporation (Rep. Heine has recused himself from relevant gaming votes all along).

A third member almost joined the recusal crowd, but instead simply took a personal financial hit and still got approval for participation from the House Statutory Committee on Ethics.

On April 22, he agreed to be removed as an author of HB 1015, which allowed his bill on indemnity agreements to be stripped and instead serve as the vehicle for SB 552, the gaming bill.

On April 23, the day before the final vote, Rep. Jerry Torr (R) of Carmel told the panel in a letter that his employer, Near North Title Group, “was asked to do title insurance and closing services for Spectacle Entertainment’s purchase of the casinos in Gary.” He did not specify who asked that his company handle that work. Rep. Torr told the ethics panel that at the time, “I was not aware that Spectacle would be asking for legislation to move a license to (sic) Gary, etc.”

However, he wrote, “When I learned a few months after about the proposed legislative changes, I met with my CEO and requested that the Spectacle transaction not be included in my commission calculation in any way. I chose to forgo this rather than disenfranchise 65,000 voters by abstaining.” He further noted that he had “no ownership interest in the company and will not personally benefiting (sic) financially from the transaction.”

“Nevertheless,” Rep. Torr told the ethics panel, “given some of the news stories over the past couple of days, I thought it would be in the best interest of the institution for me to request a formal opinion from the Ethics Committee.”

In a written response that same day signed by all six members of the ethics panel, three Democrats and three Republicans, “the Committee finds no conflict of interest exists in violation of House Rule 169 and House Rule 1 based on the facts you have presented, a review of the legislation in question, and the House Rules. House Rule 168 discusses the appearance of impropriety and should be considered when you vote.”

Final Senate Floor Consideration

Senate floor deliberations on the HB 1015 Conference Committee Report began shortly after the House debate on the CCR was underway, and also ended before the House concluded its action on the report. The Senate proceedings consumed only 30 minutes, and it would be a stretch to call what transpired “debate”; much of the colloquy consisted of simple factual (and not leading or rhetorical) questions of the author, and there were a few statements.

Senate Majority Floor Leader Mark Messmer (R) of Jasper introduced the measure by describing its revenue generation potential.

Sen. Messmer elaborated on the individual changes made in the conference report: “Under the Gary transfer section, from earlier conference reports we removed the $8 million tax credit for the operators of the Gary facility. We added back the hold harmless provisions we had during the first half of the session for East Chicago, Michigan City, and Hammond. We kept in the amendment from the House floor from Earl Harris on hiring requirements for people from the relocated boat or people that potentially would potentially lose jobs in East Chicago. We require $150 million minimum investment for the Gary facility, with 65% being for the casino and 35% for the amenities. And a cap position of 2,764, which is the combined cap of the two current licenses. We require them to pay a $20 million transfer fee, payable over five years, with the first payment due upon their application for their transfer, and when they apply for the transfer, they lose their license.

Of their two licenses, they lose one. We let them keep the tax provisions for those two licenses temporarily. We have a $20 million transfer fee if they sell the facility within five years. And then for the Terre Haute location, we require them to pay a $5 million fee for the successful bidder. The Gaming Commission will issue all RFPs and analyze all proposals and make the best choice of those proposals. The county commissioners in Vigo County will get to submit their recommendation to the Gaming Commission as part of that review process on their preferred vendor. We do require Vigo County to have a referendum approval before the process can start, and that could happen either this Fall or next Spring, and then if it fails during the first attempt, they have to wait two years to bring it back. We have a $100 million minimum investment required for the Terre Haute facility with the same 65%/35% split, and a 1,500 cap limit on positions in Terre Haute or Vigo County, and then we added back in for the Evansville hold harmless provisions for the successful Vigo County operator.”

Messmer then covered the other half of the bill that has attracted surprisingly little attention all session. “The sports betting, we put back in the mobile app provisions of the sports betting that we had in here in the first half of session. We did not require league data; but we leave that decision up to the Gaming Commission on whether league data would be appropriate for specific bets, and we taxed the sports betting at a 9.5% rate with about three percent of that going to an addicted gambler fund.”

Then Sen. Messmer shifted back to the casino provisions. “In general, we have a six-license limit for the combination between racinos and casinos of any one operator. Currently, one of the casino operators has four, and I guess with 13 licenses, we felt it was appropriate that nobody had more than six combined. We have a tax rate reduction for all the casinos that comes in effect in 2021. We allow free play to be raised from $7 million to $9 million per casino. For the smallest-performing casinos, under $75 million, we’ve lowered their tax rates in each of those brackets, also taking effect in 2021.”

Sen. Messmer then focused on what the conference reported offered for the Springs Valley. “For French Lick we allow them, starting also in 2021, to divert one-third of their AGR payment that would normally come to the state to go back into the historic building preservation fund until that fund hits the $25 million level. We had that in effect when they opened the casino, and when it hit $20 million in 2015 we had stopped that. That fund is now down to $15 million from a lot of expensive repairs they’ve had to do on those 100-year-old+ buildings. All of those casinos keep their current cap positions in place.”

The final major component was also addressed by Messmer: “The racinos will get their live dealers moved up January 1, 2020, and we’ve specified that they’re allowed to take sports betting at the track portion of their facility, or on the casino floor.”

Sen. Vaneta Becker (R) of Evansville was the first to question Sen. Messmer, saying “I just can’t find the language” for the Evansville hold harmless payments in the Conference Committee report. Sen. Messmer pointed her to the specific provisions, and she said “Thank you, I looked and looked, but we got it so late I didn’t have an opportunity to find it.” Rep. Messmer responded, “I had to find it, too, after all the iterations of this bill.”

Sen. Chip Perfect (R) of Lawrenceburg commended Sen. Messmer and Rep. Huston "for all the hard work on this bill." He reminded colleagues that "There are a lot of stakeholders. This is an important issue to a lot of people in our state, And also significantly, there are varied interests. Everybody's not on the same page. Everybody has their local element. I think they for the most part, did a good job in balancing those interests. However, I find the irony in this - I don't know if all of you remember, but when we started this, this was deemed 'riverboat gaming,' because this started out on the Ohio River. And I just have to say, the stakeholders on the Ohio River, the original operators of riverboats, are the losers in this deal."

"But," Sen. Perfect continued, "it isn't over. The important thing that I would like to give Sen. Messmer credit for is the fact that many of these things go into effect in 2021. That gives us ample to make some changes that need to be addressed so that there isn't quite the disparity in winners and losers in this bill. We need to make sure that we stick to the - at least that we look to - the roots, and we try to be consistent with what was established initially. There are some other significant things that we did in the budget last time that happened to coincide with the 2021 date, and so I look forward to continuing and evening a few things out, because again, there's quite a range in this bill on winners and losers and I hate to see the irony of the fact that the actual original riverboats that were the foundation of this industry that's turned into something completely different than it started really don't get their just due in this bill. And we have to fix that"

Sen. Lonnie Randolph (D) of East Chicago also expressed his appreciation to Sen. Messmer for his work on the bill, and asked about where East Chicago and Hammond hold harmless language was placed in the report. Sen. Messmer showed him where they were included, and explained how it was intended to work in practice: "What they'll do is they'll take a snapshot - and right now we have at the end of this current fiscal year - they'll take a snapshot of the local receipts for East Chicago, Hammond, Michigan City, and Gary, they'll look at that and then they'll look as time goes on as the new casino opens and look at the ratios of if Gary's has gone up and the other communities' have gone down they'll proportionately make adjustments - and the City of Gary's willing to do it - give up some of their gain to offset the losses to the other communities."

Sen. Randolph didn't quite catch what Messmer said about Gary contributing, and asked, "So it's discretionary with the City of Gary?" "It's not discretionary; they 'shall'," responded Messmer. Asked Randolph, "But it goes back and it started it goes back one year, two years, three years?" Messmer clarified for him, "It's four-year payment, a four-year-process. They'll look at the gaming receipts now for those communities, basically at the end of this fiscal year, and then when the new casino opens they'll analyze if Gary's has gone up, if East Chicago's has gone down. They'll make adjustments each year based upon the amount of decrease to those communities and how much Gary's has gone up. Gary won't be liable for more than their gain. But it's a process set up to help make that analysis each year."

Sen. Randolph then asked the author, "Let's say, two years from now they start, now when they start to analyze with they go back one year to see what the sales have been with respect to those two years, or what?"

Messmer told him, "One year back, and then they will make those adjustments for four years." "Okay, so one year back, they'll do that, and then each four years they will make adjustments for the previous year, and that's how they'll come up with the amount for hold harmless?," was how Randolph left it before asking a quick question about the section inserted by Rep. Harris in the House for jobs at the new Gary inland casino for those who have lost them at Ameristar Casino East Chicago.

Sen. Randolph also asked if there had been any discussions on convening a study committee to examine the effects of the HB 1015 changes, noting that the House version had included such a panel, and Sen. Messmer told him, "I think that the House had a study committee but the Gaming Commission - I didn't feel that it was really necessary - the Gaming Commission said the dates they had (included in SB 552) were probably not reachable anyway. I think we've studied this issue to the end and back over the last few years there's not a study commission in this." As for the effects of the changes on the other properties across the next several years, Sen. Messmer explained, "I think these hold harmless provisions are going to give each of those communities that answer on the impact."

Sen. Randolph observed that there would be an impact beyond merely the profit that the respective Northwest Indiana host cities receive, and "it's going to have an impact on the boats themselves." Sen. Messmer reminded him that a study commissioned by the Casino Association of Indiana showed a net projected growth amounting to tens of millions of dollars in revenue and job creation from the reconfiguration. There could be a drop in East Chicago dollars, he conceded, but HB 1015 was trying to make provisions for that. The overall benefits "[g]reatly outweigh" and "dwarf" other potential negative impacts for removing the boats from the Buff.

Sen. Randolph noted that there were particular local projects in East Chicago and Hammond that had been made possible by the revenue from the boats in those two communities.

Sen. Rick Niemeyer (R) of Lowell then came forward to thank Sen. Messmer. He told the Senate chamber that "the hold harmless thing was the big issue for me going in for the last few days, but that got put back in to protect East Chicago and Hammond," and the South Lake senator said he was thus more comfortable. "Sen. Perfect made a great point up here when he talked," Sen. Niemeyer continued, and that was that "we have next year to look at this," adding that this is "going to be huge for me next year giving a pretty big advantage here to this area and Terre Haute [I] think we just need to be following this down the line."

Sen. Mike Bohacek (R) of Michiana Shores took to the podium to say that he had spoken with Sen. Messmer about LaPorte County hold harmless funding. He explained that his county's situation was a bit different than that of the two Lake County cities being helped through hold harmless dollars. "LaPorte County relies on a percentage of Adjusted Gross Revenues for admissions," Sen. Bohacek noted, "and a couple of years back that was changed from a flat dollar amount to a percentage of AGR, so my concerns were that my admissions tax was going to go down because the 'AG' was going to go down and we were trying to get a hold harmless in."

Sen. Bohacek continued, "There were unfortunately some problems with some of the enabling legislation, and so Sen. Messmer has agreed to work with me with that next year. And we know that this project is not going to come to fruition in the next 50 days; this is a couple-year project. We're going to have some time, and some run-rate. I support his action; I support this."

Sen. Eddie Melton (D) of Gary acme forward and spoke soberly of his appreciation for the "hard work" of Messmer in balancing interests and concerns of those involved and their respective communities. While the bill was "very multi-faceted," he chose to speak about the "Gary portion." HB 1015 was "not just a simple gaming bill for me," but rather a broader measure that created opportunities as a far-reaching "economic development catalyst" flowing from the Buffington Harbor casino move. His predecessor, former Sen. Earline Rogers (D) of Gary, had worked on trying to get this change enacted for 20 years, so "it's moving," he said, to be part of this process. He highlighted the anticipated "halo effect from growth" of new commercial development in the new casino footprint. The changes would give Gary the ability to "grow our tax base and improve public safety and schools" and address infrastructure issues. Gary's financial problems, job losses, and population decline is "no secret" and hasn't been a secret for 50 years. Gary was "not asking for a handout, not asking for money, but asking for policy changes that can help us shift and pivot to put us in the best position to maximize our opportunities." "Gaming is just one component of this — a very key and essential component," Sen. Melton explained. "But, I think, when we look from a longevity standpoint and for the future, the intermodal opportunity that is there is going to be vast." He reiterated that the intermodal portion of the effort that would be developed in the soon-to-be-former casino footprint at Buffington Harbor will be "transformational."

"I know this has been a struggle" for lawmakers with casinos in their districts that could potentially be negatively impacted by a Gary casino move, he acknowledged. He thanked the House and Sens. Randolph and Tallian for not holding the measure up over hold harmless dollar considerations. "I respect the debate that you might have to have in your mind," he said before closing by declaring that a new era for Gary would not be "pie in the sky" as critics have contended "if we work together."

Sen. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem, whose district includes the French Lick Resort • Casino, thanked Sens. Messmer and Mishler because they "supported maintaining some protections for French Lick" and listened to her advocate for her district. She also thanked the Orange County community for coming together and helping her advocate on their behalf. HB 1015 "does what it intends to," and did not hurt her community, she added.

Senate Committee on Appropriations Chair Ryan Mishler (R) of Bremen said that his panel had worked hard on the redevelopment of Buffington Harbor, and pledged "we'll get it done."

Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D) of Anderson said that while he had bemoaned what he thought was the last show of bipartisanship when Senate Democrats saw their Second Reading budget amendments excised in conference, "this is an example of bipartisanship."

Leader Lanane offered his thanks to Sen. Messmer who "worked with me and all of the members," and was genuinely concerned about the impact of the measure on communities represented by Democrats. "I look upon this, as Sen. Melton indicated as economic development; I look upon it as a jobs bill" that will bring hundreds of "decent jobs" to Anderson. He ended his comments by observing, "Gaming bills are hard," he said, drawing out the vowel in the last word. "I always compare them to a Swiss clock; you move one thing and everything else has a tendency to start to move, too."

Senate Committee on Public Policy Chair Ron Alting (R) of Lafayette congratulated Sen. Messmer "on a fantastic job" shepherding SB 552/HB 1015 through the process, jokingly suggesting that his own white hair was earned "from 21 years of carrying gaming bills" himself, including the dockside bill, the measure to end mandatory maritime crews, allowing slots at the track and a casino in French Lick (when "the people in red" (sic) from the community "came out in busloads to support that and we got it done"). He pointed out that Indiana had never experienced a "scandal in the area of gaming," and, he contended, "As much as we may think it's all about Gary, Indiana, and some others, it's about all of us. It's about the General Fund. It's about income coming in that we can (use to) continue to fund public education strong, and health care, and take care of the needy and the poor, and do great things like we just did in this budget. So I commend you for thinking out of the box like we did 21 years ago, and have continued to do in the State of Indiana in gaming." And I support this bill and ask my colleagues to support it.

Sen. Jean Leising (R) took to the microphone to proclaim, "My constituents in Shelbyville are going to be delighted tonight." She said that she would "one-up Sen. Alting," pointing out that she had worked on some of the "very initial gaming stuff" with Sen. Rogers in the early 1990s. "I will tell you that at that time our leadership, our money guys, they said, 'Oh you're never going to be able to count on any real revenue from this gaming stuff. You know it's going to be up and down like this,'" as she waved her arms, "so you can't build it into the budget." And "I wonder now when they hear and see the impact on this state," she mused, "they have got to be saying, 'Wow, this isn't the way we thought it would be,' but it's been all positive." She added her thanks to Sen. Messmer for his efforts.

Sen. Messmer then closed the discussion. "Hats off to Earline Rogers 25 years ago. It was her continued push to get the start of what we know as 'riverboats' when it all started, and we wouldn't be here today without her and her efforts — her continued efforts. When I looked at this process, knowing that Gary was wanting to move their boats off the water, knowing Terre Haute had been petitioning for the opportunity to get a casino somehow; never could really find the right vehicle. With the Supreme Court decision in May clearing the field to allow sports betting, I said 'It's time to do a once in a generation reset.' Riverboats 25 years ago were the model across the country. It's just not today. We've just ebbed and flowed from riverboats to French Lick to racinos to onto the footprint. We've been just slowly inching our way along, and this type of opportunity won't come again in our lifetime, I don't think."

HB 1015 passed 37-12, with 28 Republicans and nine Democrats voting for it, and 12 Republicans and no Democrats opposing the bill.

Note that two of the nay votes came from senators who represent districts that are home to two of the state's three satellite wagering facilities. Sen. Perfect represents a district with the casinos in Rising Sun and Lawrenceburg, but the owner of the Lawrenceburg Casino also owns Ameristar Casino East Chicago.

IN General

● Confused yet? If you're not, you haven't been paying attention. We've yet to run into a legislator, operator, regulator, or patron who doesn't have a list of questions about assorted aspects of HB 1015. Assuming past conduct holds true (and the bill becomes law), you should expect the Indiana Gaming Commission to devote a chunk of its next quarterly meeting (May 30) to a town hall session of sorts, with officials offering an overview of sorts on how they interpret the assorted provisions, their plans for implementation, and their expectations for and from operators . . . and there should be plenty of opportunity for questions.

● WalletHub evaluates the 50 states to determine in which states "excessive" gambling is most prevalent. Wallet Hub considers 20 metrics, ranging from presence of illegal gambling operations, to lottery sales per capita and share of adults with gambling disorders. Indiana ranks 32nd among the most gambling-addicted states, far better than Illinois' ninth place.

● Indiana's direct gaming employment fell by 100 jobs from February, the first shortfall of 2019. Preliminary March gaming employment numbers of 11,400 are also down by 700 jobs (- 5.79%) from the benchmarked March 2018 total of 12,100 such jobs. Since February 2018 marked the first full month in which the Four Winds Casino South Bend was open for the full month, the monthly and annual look-backs are now using same-unit comparisons. March has seen eight over-the-year gains in direct gaming employment since March 2009, the initial March in which the racinos were first open.

□ If we had not factored in the ~ 1,200 Four Winds jobs, March gaming employment would actually be effectively back at its 2017 levels, in spite of the number of new jobs created by property additions, renovations, and partial land-side moves at the commercial casinos. March becomes the 67th consecutive month - more than 5½ straight years - in which the state has seen the gaming employment level linger below 13,000 direct gaming industry jobs, a figure surpassed in each month of the first decade of the 21st century, even through the impact of the 9/11 attacks and the 2008-09 fiscal crisis.

Direct Gaming Employment - Past 16 Months

□ After 2018 became the first time in which Indiana's March direct gaming employment demonstrated over-the-year growth since 2011 (thanks to the new Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians casino), it dropped again in March 2019. Compared to March just five years back, Hoosier gaming industry direct employment is down by 800 jobs (- 6.56%) from 2014. Dating back 10 years, the number of jobs are off by 2,900 (- 20.23%) from 14,000 in March 2009, as the national fiscal crisis was wreaking havoc in Indiana (particularly across the northern tier). Indiana is also down by 4,700 gaming jobs - off by 29.19% - from the peak of March direct gaming employment, a robust 16,100 jobs in 2001 (even through all riverboats were still forced by law to cruise; there was one fewer commercial casino; we were bereft of a Native American casino; and both racinos were not yet open).

Direct Gaming Employment - Prior Months of March

● The biennial budget contains appropriations of $5,000 in each year of the biennium to fund Indiana's dues for the National Council of Legislators from Gaming States, for which Sen. Jon Ford (R) of Terre Haute is one of five officers.

● As the gaming bill moved into conference, Mental Health America of Indiana (MHAI) launched a major effort to retain the language that would direct funding from sports wagering to gambling addiction treatment, part of MHAI's overarching efforts to provide enhanced mental health and addiction services for Hoosiers in need. MHAI told lawmakers that additional funding for gambling addiction treatment was a critical priority because Indiana ranks 27th out of 50 states for "most gambling addicted states." The association served up national data showing that 2-3% of adults in Indiana, or more than 70,000 adults, are problem gamblers, informing lawmakers that in Fiscal Year 2018, 366 Hoosiers called the Indiana problem gambling Help Line and 165 (45% of callers), were referred for treatment services.

□ According to MHAI data, current year-to-date numbers indicate that there have been 126 calls to the Help Line with 55 people (33%) being referred for services based on Indiana Council on Problem Gambling analyses.

□ MHAI tells its constituency that problem gambling is particularly critical among our youth, with the 2018 Indiana Youth Survey finding that almost 18% of Indiana seventh graders and almost 19% of eighth graders have gambled on sports with the highest percentage being from 8th graders at nearly 19% (and 16% of 10th, 11th, and 12th graders reporting annual gambling on sports). The 2017 Indiana College Substance Use Survey indicates that 45% of males and 33% of females ages 18-24 engaged in gambling, with 18% of males involved in sports wagering, which they performed most frequently over the internet. Almost 13% of males who gambled reported negative consequences because of their actions.

□ MHAI told lawmakers that approximately $1.8 million per year is allocated to the Division of Mental Health and Addiction. This includes funding for the Indiana Problem Gambling Awareness Program; the Indiana Gaming Commission's Voluntary Exclusion Program; a contract with the Indiana Council on Problem Gambling; the Help Line; and staffing and gambling treatment service funds for providers. The average per capita allocation of public funds for problem gambling in the 40 states with services was 37 cents, which is used for education and awareness, prevention, treatment, helpline assistance, and research. Indiana's per capita allocation is 17 cents.

□ In a post-session wrap-up report to its members MHAI reports that it was also actively involved in HEA 1015, formerly SB 552. "MHAI was able to work with [Rep. Todd Huston (R) of Fishers] to insert language directing proceeds from sports wagering to DMHA for prevention, education, treatment and provider credentialing."

□ With the active assistance of Reps. Huston and Terri Austin (D) of Anderson, a provision in the budget bill also establishes the Problem Gambling Program Fund. Funding will come from the $250,000 problem gambling fee that each racino annually pays to the Indiana Gaming Commission for the Commission's own efforts at preventing and treating compulsive gambling. That part of the problem gambling fee will now be deposited into the Problem Gambling Fund to be "used only for the purpose of the commission's own efforts at preventing and treating compulsive gambling." Money in the Fund is continuously appropriated and does not revert to the General Fund. Unclear under the budget language: whether any current dollars the Commission still has in hand must be sent to the new Fund as well.

IN Sports Wagering

● Assuming that the Governor signs HB 1015, look for the full concentration of the Indiana Gaming Commission to be on developing a regulatory and administrative framework to get sports wagering up and running by September 1 – a tall order. Commission staff will first devote their time and attention to this heavy lift before addressing the Gary and Vigo County casino provisions, and they will be learning from other states that have already implemented sports wagering programs on regulation and licensing issues; working closely with the Indiana Department of Revenue to automate the necessary tax components; and hiring the necessary employees to oversee things. A four-month timeline will mean doing a lot of things on the fly.

● As promised on our front page, here are the sports wagering partnerships that have been entered into to date with Indiana casinos and satellite wagering facilities:

Casino Owner	Sports Wagering Partner	Number of Indiana Properties
Caesars	FanDuel	7 (2 casino, 2 racino, 3 OTB)
Boyd	DraftKings	2 casinos
Penn National	William Hill	2 casinos
Eldorado	William Hill	1 casino
Spectacle	—	2 casinos
Cook Group	—	1 casino
Full House	—	1 casino

□ We're not sure how important this listing is, however, based on the way that we read the new law at a glance. As we interpret it, only a casino can actually conduct sports wagering, and it can do it on their own, or with contracts with up to three different operators. You're going to hear a lot of talk about "skins" and apps and whether skin and apps can overlap between casinos and operators, and you should prepare to be confused – as is typically the case when a new venture of sorts like this hits town.

● As Illinois lawmakers considering legalization of sports wagering debate a $10 million one-time licensing fee for their operators, some solons there are pointing to Indiana's newly enacted $100,000 license fee as an example of just how unrealistic the big-buck ask may be.

□ From WBEZ 91.5-FM in Chicago late Thursday: "At a House committee hearing Thursday, a lobbyist for the mayor's office testified that the city would support [Governor J.D.] Pritzker's call for legalized sports gambling as part of a bill that would allow for a Chicago-run casino."

● Boyd Gaming Corporation President and CEO Keith Smith says on the company's first quarter earnings conference call that "Pending final approval by the governors of the states, we look forward to the opportunity to introduce sports betting at our four properties in Iowa and Indiana later this year."

IN Native American Gaming

● Proceeds from the 2019 Four Winds Invitational hosted by the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians and their Four Winds Casinos will underwrite the purchase of pediatric eye imaging equipment for Beacon Children's Hospital in South Bend.

□ This year's Four Winds Invitational will run from Friday, June 7 through Sunday, June 9 at Blackthorn Golf Club in South Bend, and is part of the Symetra Tour – Road to the LPGA.

● As of May 1, all straws at all four Four Winds Casino properties have been replaced with biodegradable straws. Over the next few months, expect the four Four Winds properties to also convert to exclusive use of biodegradable cups (and reusable cups in the employee dining rooms).

● Authorization for the State (or a state agency) to enter into "cooperative agreements" with the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians was included in the final conference committee version of the budget bill, showing up in the measure only the afternoon before the final up-or-down vote on the budget, absent any public or formal legislative input.

□ The Pokagons, of course, operate the Four Winds Casino South Bend, which can currently only conduct limited slot-like gaming and live poker, with some of the slot proceeds paid to the City of South Bend in lieu of property taxes. They also have a new tribal territory through land in trust in St. Joseph County and provide housing and health care to their residents (our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT, reported last August about their interest in eventually chartering schools).

□ In years past, some senators have sought to bar the State from entering into formal compacts, but with the Native American casino seemingly not siphoning as much business from other northern tier casinos as had been anticipated before its January 2018 debut, and the State of Indiana expanding gambling (sports wagering), there is an opportunity to negotiate a “cooperative agreement” from what would now be a position of strength . . . but we’ve been gently discouraged by legislative leaders from viewing this through a gaming prism.

□ The provisions themselves authorize the State and state agencies to enter into cooperative agreements with federally recognized Indian tribes, but the term “cooperative agreement” is not defined. “It is not a compact,” insisted Rep. Todd Huston (R) of Fishers to reporters the afternoon the language was released. Rep. Huston, co-chair of the House Committee on Ways & Means, and the lead House Republican budget conferee, elaborates: “Very clearly, the General Assembly owns the responsibility to approve a ‘compact.’ And that is very important to us. Me personally, I think it’s the right public policy. This language just allows the Administration to enter into – just procedural conversations with agencies. Right now, we didn’t have a process for them to deal with a sovereign nation. We now do. This should not be taken as approval toward a compact, because that is not the point.”

□ Rep. Huston continued, “There are other issues besides gaming that impact a sovereign nation, and we need to give the Administration and agencies the ability to deal with them.” We believe that some of these items – in part identified by the Michigan-based law firm on contract to the Governor’s Office to advise the state on Native American issues – include public safety, worker’s compensation, taxes, education, controlled substances, and local infrastructure . . . but nothing for the gaming community to get excited about.

□ As for the details . . . any cooperative agreement must be in writing and state the duration, purpose, and administration of the agreement; the manner of carrying out the joint undertaking; and how the agreement may be partially or completely terminates, and must be limited to the powers and duties of the relevant state officer or agency. A cooperative agreement must be filed with the State Board of Accounts for audit purposes within 60 days of its effective date. A cooperative agreement may provide for an effective waiver of sovereign immunity from the tribe, as well as a waiver of sovereign immunity by the State (if approved in advance by the attorney general). The State may waive its immunity from suit in federal court under the Eleventh Amendment only under limited specified conditions.

□ If you’re a conspiracy theorist, you may have noticed that there was just one Democratic vote in the Senate for the budget, and that came from Sen. David Niezgodski (D) of South Bend, whose district includes the casino (and the other trust land). That vote for the budget not only caught observers off-guard, but also surprised his Democratic Senate colleagues and leaders. So was his budget vote due to the “cooperative agreement” provision and something that he knows that we don’t? Not likely, we were told when we poked around with those who took a special interest in his vote. From what we learned, it’s more likely that he received some special assurances from Republican appropriators that some district issues close to him will be taken care of going forward.

Northern Market News . . .

● Boyd Gaming Corporation President and CEO Keith Smith says on the company’s first quarter earnings conference call that “On a property basis, our Blue Chip property in Indiana continued to perform well delivering solid revenue and EBITDAR growth. This property continues to outperform a competitive market, attributable to its first class amenities and its strong operating team.”

Southern Market News . . .

● We’ve been telling you about the strong battle being waged for the hearts and minds of Louisville-market gamblers (seems like that’s the first time we’ve used that characterization), and as Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana continues to build out its land-based facility, the Churchill Downs Inc. Derby City Gaming continues to prosper. That $62 million Louisville facility will add 100 more historical horse racing machines (by mid-May) to the satellite wagering facility that has surprised everyone with its popularity since opening in September.

□ CDI management revealed that it will be boosting the current 900-machine capacity at the OTB by 11% during the company’s first quarter conference call. Churchill CEO Bill Carstanjen told analysts that the new facility posted a “best in class” profit margin of 41% during the first quarter, the facility’s first time open during the Winter months. “We are . . . very pleased with the ramp up, growth and customer database and key operational metrics,” and “We believe the property is a long way from maturity,” Carstanjen added ominously. Derby City Gaming was responsible for more than 10% CDI’s $75 million in Adjusted EBITDA, accounting for $7.6 million of Adjusted EBITDA growth on $18.7 million in net revenue.

□ While the widespread belief – as we’ve suggested, and has been documented by Grace Schneider in the Louisville Courier-Journal and Chris Otts of WDRB-TV in Louisville – has been that the new Louisville facility has been in large part cannibalizing and not simply just growing the local market, Carstanjen believes Derby City Gaming is growing the market, and not simply draining them from HCSI. “There’s a lot to the idea that we are expanding the market and not just trying to take share from what we have across the river,” he contends.

● A few minutes after the gaming bill passed – replete with additional funding for the West Baden Springs Historic Hotel Preservation and Maintenance Fund – Sen. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem, whose district includes the casino property, invited her colleagues to a “weekend event” in French Lick that would include “a wine cruise on Patoka Lake.” She told fellow senators – many of whom came away from a Summer 2018 visit to Gary convinced of the need to move the casino from Buffington Harbor – “You’re always welcome in French Lick.”

● Tropicana Evansville rebrand its Tap House Restaurant and Bar as Brew Brothers Tap House, a nod to the four Carano family brothers, owners of the parent Eldorado Resorts, Inc., and an eponymous set of microbreweries.

IN Other Casino News . . .

- Assuming the Governor signs HB 1015, the figurative floodgates will open. We expect that you will see an early indication by Spectacle Entertainment, LLC that it plans to bid on a Vigo County casino with its strong local investor group (query whether some of that clout may have lost a tiny edge when the final version of HB 1015 shifted the heavy lifting on evaluation to the Gameboys from the originally contemplated “Pennsylvania Model” local process). But more importantly, keep an eye on who may be making a foray into Indiana . . . it’s not often these days that a decent “franchise” opens up in a well-regulated state in a border market where licenses are limited, and where the cost of entry is not expected to be overwhelming. We’re expecting both major and regional operators will be interested, and long-time readers may remember that the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma had at one time entertained serious interest in locating a casino in West Terre Haute.

- There also may be interest by other current Indiana operators, and that could get a bit tricky, because we’re still not clear on how all this applies to them. The trigger for opening the application process is Spectacle applying for the Vigo County license, and not any other operator, Indiana or otherwise. Once the process is opened by the Spectacle request, however, it appears open to all, and we’re assuming that an Indiana operator other than Spectacle would be able to win the Vigo County license and still retain its other Indiana license . . . and that the second-license relinquishment discussion would have no bearing on an outside operator. Stay tuned.

- Keep an eye on an Illinois gaming bill, SB 516, that seemed to have largely flown under the radar, but which sailed through the Senate (44-5) there as Indiana was putting touches in conference on its own gaming overhaul. That Illinois measure specifies conditions and procedures under which a riverboat casino could relocate . . . and removes statutory restrictions on the geographical locations at which certain riverboats were to be docked. The bill started as a means to allow Penn National Gaming, Inc. to move its Hollywood Casino Aurora inland, but quickly expanded to include other boats.

- We told you last month that with the advent of Spring, the Four Winds Casino South Bend had ramped up its Indianapolis market television advertising . . . and it turns out now that they are not alone. Blue Chip Casino has started to run a pair of TV spots in Indianapolis, one touting the gambling opportunities, and one focused on the spa and related amenities. Ironically, one flight of those ads ran during the same half-hour segment on an Indianapolis news broadcast with a spot featuring Harrah’s Hoosier Park Racing & Casino, which has seemingly been relegated to a lesser paid media broadcast campaign than its sister property, Indiana Grand Racing & Casino.

- Vigo County currently receives about $640,000 annually from the $33 million in annual revenue sharing distribution to all non-riverboat counties. If Vigo County becomes home to a riverboat it will no longer be entitled to share from the fund, and those dollars will instead be distributed to the remaining 83 non-riverboat counties in the same proportion in which they currently receive the revenue sharing distributions under current law.

- On the morning of the final vote on HB 1015, Rep. Alan Morrison (R) of Brazil joined Good Morning Grant County’s Tim George and Ed Breen live from the State House on WBAT 1400-AM in Marion to talk about the casino bill. He explained the provisions of the bill as it stood at that point, and its implications for Terre Haute and Gary. As for Vigo County, “It’s economic development, for sure. We’re talking about 1,000 jobs depending upon the numbers that you look at, upwards of $80 million+ back in revenue to the state in tax dollars, but the impact to the local economy and communities it’s huge, that these facilities have It’s all part of that economic engine that drives our state This would be a huge plus for us.” He also explained the benefit for Gary, where “There’s not been a lot of money put back into those facilities in the last handful of years.” The casino moves would free up Buffington Harbor for economic development options. “It’s a win-win, and then it’s a win for the state, too.”

- Also appearing on Good Morning Grant County within a few minutes of Rep. Morrison was Senate Committee on Tax and Fiscal Policy Chair Travis Holdman (R) of Markle, a regular guest on the show (his district includes part of Grant County). He explained what would factor into his vote later in the day: “I have never voted for a gaming bill since my 11 years here in the legislature, but having been invited to come up to Gary this past Summer by the mayor of Gary – there were four of us from the leadership team in the Senate that went up and did a bus tour of Gary [that] showed us what was going on – and the situation with those two casinos on the lake, it is an unbelievably deplorable situation in the City of Gary. I could vote to move one of those boats off the Lake and that would allow one them also to be moved out on the Borman Expressway. So I see it as an economic development issue. The problem that we have is that if I vote for the one to support Gary, I cannot not for the Terre Haute one, because they are dependent upon each other, they have to work in concert.”

- Sen. Holdman labeled it “a personal dilemma, somewhat of a moral, an ethical dilemma, because I’ve always stood by my word that I would not support a gaming an expansion of gaming. And, technically, this would not be an expansion because we in fact would be maintaining the same number of stations, the same number of licenses in the state, it’s just a rearrangement of those licenses.”

March State Summary

Indiana’s 13 gaming properties generated March revenues of $217.40 million, a year-over-year shortfall of 1.66% (- $3.66 million) on a calendar that substituted an extra Sunday for a Thursday, which should have generated another one to two percent win over March 2018 numbers (the weather during March was not abnormal). This was the top real dollar and percentage showing to date in 2019, and represents the second-best performance in any month over the past six years, exceeded only by March 2018 (and is the second-best performance the state has turned in since March 2013). Nine properties saw year-over-year declines in win, including all five properties located on the Ohio River. This was Indiana’s first March-to-March skid since 2015 (March 2014 was marked by record inclement weather, so that was a low bar to surmount). March was the most lucrative month of the year on a statewide basis in 2016, 2017, and 2018.

Win jumped from February levels by a hefty 26.28% ($45.24 million), the second-highest single-month increase this century, surpassed only by the size of the one-month upswing that occurred between February and March 2018. All 13 properties saw March win improve by a double-digit percentage over the prior month.

Through the always-crucial first quarter of the calendar year, statewide revenues stand at $548.42 million, down compared to the first three months of 2018 by 2.03% (- $11.35 million). Nine properties have collected less revenue during the three-month period than they did during the same stretch one year ago. The largest percentage and dollar decline on a year-to-date basis occurred at the state's top property for the past decade, Horseshoe Casino Hammond, where year-to-date win of $97.43 million is off by 6.87% (- $7.18 million). At the other end of the spectrum, the largest year-to-date growth in terms of both percentage and dollars has been seen at the property that ranked second overall in win in each of the past four years, Indiana Grand Racing & Casino, which posted YTD growth of 5.52% ($3.90 million) and total January-March revenues of $74.57 million. Three properties suffered a year-over-year decline in each of the first three months of 2019: Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg, Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino, and Horseshoe Casino Hammond.

Since we managed to get some numbers out of place on our year-to-date chart in our last issue, we believed it would be appropriate to reprise a corrected version of that first quarter comparison here:

WIN, year-to-date, January - March

CASINO	2019	2018	DIFFERENCE	%
Horseshoe HD	$ 97,433,450	$ 104,616,643	($ 7,183,193)	- 6.87%
Indiana Grand	$ 74,567,440	$ 70,667,266	$ 3,900,174	5.52%
Ameristar	$ 56,218,710	$ 58,744,465	($ 2,525,755)	- 4.30%
Hoosier Park	$ 52,368,904	$ 53,185,037	($ 816,133)	- 1.53%
Horseshoe SI	$ 50,708,065	$ 53,852,253	($ 3,144,188)	- 5.84%
Hollywood	$ 42,531,904	$ 43,580,922	($ 1,049,018)	- 2.41%
Tropicana	$ 38,574,503	$ 40,130,375	($ 1,555,872)	- 3.88%
Blue Chip	$ 37,545,583	$ 36,736,372	$ 809,211	2.20%
Belterra	$ 24,969,275	$ 25,546,558	($ 577,283)	- 2.26%
French Lick	$ 23,831,199	$ 22,703,983	$ 1,127,216	4.96%
Majestic Star I	$ 22,441,343	$ 22,904,398	($ 463,055)	- 2.02%
Majestic Star II	$ 15,775,549	$ 15,088,448	$ 687,101	4.55%
Rising Star	$ 11,457,001	$ 12,011,766	($ 554,765)	- 4.62%
STATEWIDE	$ 548,422,926	$ 559,768,486	($ 11,345,560)	- 2.03%

Nine of the 13 properties boasted win of $10 million or more during March, the first time more than eight had done so since last August. This was also the third consecutive March in which we had seen this phenomenon after going from March 2014 - 2016 with only eight. Blue Chip Casino enjoyed its strongest performance in any month since March 2013. Indiana Grand celebrated its best month in property history. Ameristar Casino East Chicago reveled in its best showing in any month since March 2011. Under new management, Majestic Star Casino II topped $6 million in monthly win for the first time in 35 months. Horseshoe Casino Hammond, however, posted its lowest March take since 2005. Hoosier Park enjoyed its fourth-strongest month on record. Belterra Casino Resort recorded its third-best month over the past 60 months. Tropicana Evansville saw revenues climb to its second-best month on record. French Lick Resort • Casino secured its third-best month over the past decade.

The five Lake Michigan riverboats combined for March win of $91.41 million, highest since March 2018 but eroding from those prior-year numbers by 1.94% (- $1.80 million). The Illinois side of the Chicagoland market was up marginally (by about 0.1%) rendering the overall Chicagoland market down by 1.0% for March. Three of the five boats were up, and two were down as the comparison of volume to win shows a lot of winners at both the slots and tables during the month north of U.S. 30. For the first quarter of 2019, the northern tier casinos posted revenue of more than $229.4 million, down by 3.6% from Q1 2018.

The six Southern Indiana casinos combined for $75.58 million in win, dwindling from March 2018 by 4.64% (- $3.68 million), as each of the six casinos lost traction compared to the prior year, which we believe is the first time all six had been down in any one month since February 2015. Win for the southern region has fallen in six out of the past seven months, the worst stretch since the first quarter of 2015.

The two Central Indiana racinos crossed a new milestone by reaching the $50 million mark for the first time ever under their first March of new ownership. Combined March racino win of $50.41 million grew from last year by 3.75% ($1.82 million). Racino win has grown on a year-over-year basis in nine out of the past 12 months.

Indiana's March slot win dipped to $186.58 million, down marginally by 0.89% (- $1.67 million) compared to last year. Players parted with $1.930 billion worth of coin-in, off from March 2018 by 3.43% (- $68.49 million). Although this marks the lowest level of March slot play in three years, it's still more than $100 million higher than March 2016 coin-in. In addition, this was the weightiest slot handle seen in any month since March 2018.

Horseshoe Casino Hammond enjoyed its most robust slot pay in any month since March 2014 (and the state's highest since Indiana Grand's $324.94 million in coin-in during March 2018). There's reason for optimism at Rising Star Casino • Resort, where slot play soared to the highest level since August 2007, back before the two racinos had opened. And even Rising Star, with the state's lowest handle for the month, posted a higher last-place handle than the state has seen since April 2018. Indiana Grand led the state in March slot play for the fourth year in a row.

The statewide slot payback percentage average of 90.33% serves as a new record low for the month of March. The most generous slots were found at French Lick Resort • Casino, the first time the property has led the state in this category since November. French Lick's 91.80% was the highest the state has seen since it led that state north of 92% in August 2018. Slots accounted for 85.82% of overall statewide win, a 19-month apex.

The statewide average win per slot per day was $332 - the highest in any month since April 2008 - one month separated from the opening of the racinos. Three properties posted win per slot per day above $400, the first month in which the state has seen three with an average north of $400 since February 2009. There were 18,133 slot machines in play across the state at the end of March, the fewest available in any March since 2008.

Indiana table win of $30.82 million, slipped by 6.08% (-$1.99 million) over the year. Table win has declined on a year-over-year basis now for five consecutive months, the longest streak since 2016. Table win jumped from February by 25%, the largest single-month surge since 2007. Players risked $151.94 million in table drop, down compared to prior year by 2.64% (- $4.12 million). Nonetheless, this is just the second time in the past six years that monthly table drop has exceeded the $150 million plateau. The table hold percentage of 20.28% constitutes the lowest for March since 20.27% in March 2014; after reaching 22.29% in October; the table hold rate has progressively declined in all five months since then. The statewide average win per table per day was $1,486, a four-year March trough. There were 669 tables games available across the state as of the end of March, the fewest in any March since there were 667 in 2008 (the first March in which the state faced competition from the Four Winds Casino in New Buffalo, Michigan), and the least overall since October 2018.

Illinois captured $126 million from its armada of 10 riverboats, down from $128 million in March 2018, and the weakest in any March since 2011. Illinois, however, counted $158.72 million from its 31,481 Video Gaming Terminals at 6,920 outlets – the most lucrative single month in state history. The combination means that the Land of Lincoln outearned Indiana by $67.5 million, the largest spread ever, surpassing the previous record gap of $64 million in October 2018.

Ohio gathered $184 million in gaming revenue – $81 million from the four casinos and a new state record $103 million from the seven racinos. Revenues at the casinos were down marginally (- 0.8%) over the year, while racino revenues rose by 6.9% from March 2018, for an overall statewide gain of 3.4% from March 2018 totals. The top casino in the Cincinnati market, JACK Cincinnati Casino, grew its revenues by $478,824 (2.5%) from the prior year to $19,941,769. Ohio gaming properties earned only $33 million less than Indiana, a smaller margin than the $43 million spread in March 2018, and almost double the spread in our favor compared to February, reversing a three-month spiral that had favored the Buckeyes.

Caesars Entertainment Corporation assembled $109 million from its four Hoosier properties, accounting for 50.11% of the Indiana gaming market, and topping the 50% mark for the second time in the first three months of 2019. Penn National counted $39 million from its two Hoosier riverboats, worth a 17.89% share of the state market. Boyd Gaming Corporation counted $26 million from its pair of Hoosier riverboats, which represents 11.98% of overall revenues. Spectacle Entertainment, LLC was responsible for a shade under $15 million from its new sister Gary casino acquisition, which equates to a state market share of 6.77%; in March 2018, the two Gary boats combined for just north of $15 million in win, but this was their highest combined win since then.

Hoosier Lottery

- The State Lottery Commission of Indiana is in the field with a solicitation for the 2019 Hoosier Lottery Security Audit. Responses are due June 7, and work must be completed by December 20, 2019. The Commission is required to have an independent Security Audit conducted every two years, and this was last completed in 2017. In the aggregate, the Lottery spends ≈ $50,000 - $80,000 on one-time security audit services.

- The overall objective of this audit is to provide the Lottery with an assessment of the adequacy of security controls in place that support the security, integrity, confidentiality, and availability of Lottery products, operations, and gaming services. Suggestions for improving the controls are to be provided in the final audit report. The Lottery expects the successful bidder to spend time on-site reviewing controls, interviewing employees, and performing other actions such as possible penetration testing of the Lottery network. The audit hopefuls are asked to address both physical controls as well as information security controls.

- The Lottery says that a comprehensive audit of its security controls must include these areas: security department management, duties, and procedures; physical security; information systems security (including the internal control system provided by Elsym Consulting, firewalls, etc.); security surrounding draw game drawings; business continuity planning (as it relates to Hoosier Lottery, only – not specific to IGT Indiana); and a best-practices assessment of Lottery practices investigating potential fraud. The Lottery also seeks identification of specific current and potential security risks, and related control improvements. The audit product is to include development of plans for improving the Lottery's overall security.

- The security audit must, to the extent possible, be performed on Lottery premises in the Indianapolis area. This would primarily involve the Lottery's North Meridian Street headquarters, but may likely also include locations such as the Fox59 television studio on the Northwest side of Indianapolis, site of Lottery drawings, as well as the Central Region and Distribution Center located on the Southwest side of Indianapolis. The Lottery also maintains regional offices in Mishawaka and Evansville, although it is not a requirement that site visits be made to these locations.

- The Hoosier Lotto jackpot for Saturday, May 4, climbed to $36.3 million, a $500,000 jump over the previous jackpot. Intriguingly, the previous jackpot boost of $200,000 for <May 1 had been the lowest incremental growth for the jackpot since the April 10 draw. The improvement from May 1 to May 4 was the largest in a month. The draw on Wednesday, March 6 had marked the first time in more than seven years (since February 18, 2012) in which the Hoosier Lotto jackpot topped $30 million, a key psychological number for casual players, but this jackpot is approaching record territory.

- The Hoosier Lotto jackpot is the largest up for grabs since the matrix was revised in May 2014, topping the $25.5 million jackpot of October 14, 2017 by almost one-half. This jackpot is the largest available in Indiana in almost 12 years (having topped the $34.50 million jackpot hit on February 18, 2012 and a similar-sized jackpot that was won on October 30, 2010), but still significantly lags the record $54.5 million collected on November 7, 2007. Second place is growing closer: $42.0 million (won on June 5, 1999).

- The current jackpot has been growing since February 10, 2018, so it has now gone unclaimed for almost 15 months.

- With the jackpot topping $35 million, internet users saw a ramping up of web ads promoting the new bottom line.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot reigned as the nation's fourth-largest domestic jackpot from the $24.2 million December 19 draw until January 2, trailing the two multistate draw games and California's SuperLotto Plus . . . but after the California jackpot was hit, the Hoosier Lotto jackpot was third domestically, and the top non-multistate game from January 24 until the draw dated April 10. That's when the Golden State game posted a $34 million jackpot compared to Indiana's $33.7 million stake - illustrating the power of $1 million increments in each draw, sometimes five times as much as Indiana was offering each time out. For the May 4 draw, the California jackpot hit $41.0 million to Indiana's $36.3 million.

IN Horse Racing & Racinos

● Rep. Sean Eberhart (R) of Shelbyville appeared with Johnny McCrory on Giant 96.5-FM's The Morning Show the morning after the session concluded to detail the community's win in HB 1015 and what Shelby County can expect to see and when as a result.

□ Despite the fact that the omnibus casino measure "came real close" to imploding at the end of the session, it ultimately prevailed, and it will be "something that will transform our community. It's a great thing for the state as a whole, but even better for us here. It not only includes live table games - an issue that I've been working on for 6+ years - it not only includes that, but it also includes sports wagering. It also includes adjustments on taxation rates, for not only our casino here in Shelbyville, but for every other casino. It also includes the movement of a couple of boats. I think we finally are coming to the realization that we need to leverage the assets that we have in place with our gaming partners. And we need to start treating them as that. We've all heard the 'Golden Goose' story, and we treat these folks just like that. One of these days we're going to kill the golden goose. And so this bill allowed us to finally do something to help the casinos, with the taxation rates, and with the free play provision that we have in there. With the additional tool that they now have with sports wagering. With the movement of our date. This is a once in a lifetime bill that we passed last night."

□ As for the direct impact and tangible effects that his home community can expect, Rep. Eberhart told McCrory, "I think folks will see that in the next couple of years when they see what happens to our casino. You know, we're going to have close to 400 new jobs - and that doesn't count the potential jobs that we may have with the hotel and with the other retail and convention space that I see happening out there. But this is bringing 400 jobs, paying an average salary of $50,000, (and) untold tax revenue from the build-out that they will have to do to accommodate those new games." There will also be "The additional money that will come to the community with the revenue-sharing that's in place with the casino that we all enjoy here in our community. I'm so excited that this happened and I think folks will be very, very pleased."

□ Eberhart said of Caesars Entertainment Corporation, the owner of the two racinos, "They're the largest gaming company in the world, and so they're not going to be afraid to make that investment. They have the number one player's program in the world. They are viewing Shelbyville as a destination now, where they can bring in folks from all over the world to come here to Shelbyville. Some think, 'Well, why is it they (would) want to come to Shelbyville?' We've got one of the greatest cities in the world with Indianapolis. We've got the Colts, we've got the Pacers, we've got the most famous race track in the world. They will bring folks in around those types of events, and you will see folks out at our casino that you currently don't see now. And that's their plan. That's their plan - to make it a destination, to make it a convention-type place out there with a hotel. We're blessed. I mean, we had, honestly, we had probably the greatest ownership group that we could ever ask for when Rod Ratcliff and Centaur owned us. But we're also blessed to have Caesars as well, and I look forward to working with their folks, and with our local officials to work with their folks and to make some special things happen there."

□ As for the timetable, Eberhart is convinced that it will be highly accelerated. "You're going to see that happen very, very quickly. I wouldn't be surprised if they've got a shovel in the ground next week. The plans are a 40,000 square-foot addition to the casino to accommodate the live table games January First. Once that ball drops on New Year's Eve, you're gonna have live dealers waiting for the ball to drop, and then you're gonna have cards in the air and dice down the table. You're gonna see this place change. Eventually you're going to see a hotel pop up; you're going to see all this other development this is a big deal for Shelbyville."

● HB 1196 was approved by the House April 23 after a brief explanation by Rep. Bob Cherry (R) of Greenfield and no debate. He explained that the underlying bill was "introduced by the Indiana Horse Racing Commission, and the Senate made some changes on testing and tended to some clean-up matters including proof of financial responsibility and track veterinarian." He said that Rep. Todd Huston (R) of Fishers, had requested that the language on horsemen from SB 552 be amended into HB 1196, and that the change in distribution of funds to Indiana bred and sired horses would be triggered by the date for live table games at the racinos. The House approved the conference committee report 94-0 after Rep. Bruce Borders (R) of Jasonville finally switched his anticipated nay vote to an aye.

□ The HB 1196 conference committee report: (1) removes language allowing the IHRC to establish certain accounts within the gaming integrity fund; (2) adds language making changes to the appointment of members on breed development advisory committees; (3) provides that each horsemen's association, certain licensees, and any association for backside benevolence must submit to an audit by an independent public accountant and transmit the report to the IHRC; and (4) provides that certain funds of the breed development fund for thoroughbreds be distributed to the Indiana-sired horses program.

□ The Senate also approved the conference report on 1196 after a minute-long narrative by the Senate sponsor, Senate Committee on Public Policy Chair Ron Alting (R) of Lafayette - and no discussion. Sen. Alting told the chamber that three "moderate changes" had been made in the bill that were "supported by everyone" - breed development committee appointment qualifications; the percentage of revenue that would flow once the live table games come on line; and a requirement that each horsemen's group must undergo an annual independent audit by a private firm, and not the State Board of Accounts.

□ HB 1196 was approved on a 46-3 vote, with the negative votes cast by Sens. Karen Tallian (D) of Ogden Dunes, and Sens. J.D. Ford (D) and Mike Young (R) of Indianapolis.

● As we told you, the fiscal provisions from HB 1196 were to be stripped and moved into the budget bill, and that's what happened. The budget bill removes the restriction on the Indiana Horse Racing Commission using money distributed under a distribution agreement for administrative purposes, and it also requires that 0.45% of the adjusted gross receipts from each racino-turned casino be deposited in IHRC's operating fund.

● Writing in Harness Racing Update, James Platz, a long-time racing writer and a former Hoosier Park communications manager, reviews the outflow of dollars from HB 1015 and what it will mean for the tracks and age-equine industry. Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino Vice President and General Manager of Racing Rick Moore tells Platz that "The industry always looked at live dealers and table games as where the next bump in purse money would come from. Who knows what that will be, but I do believe it will be significant We all benefit from having live table games."

□ As Platz breaks it down, "Revenue distribution for live table games follows the same model as outlined for slots revenue, with 12 percent of adjusted gross receipts (AGR) earmarked for the industry and split between the breeds. If live table games are a boon at Hoosier Park and Indiana Grand, the Indiana Standardbred Association will receive additional revenue for promotion and benevolence, and the industry will see a boost in purses and funds devoted to breed development. Last season, nearly $12 million in slots revenue poured into the breed development program which funds Indiana's fair circuit, Indiana-sired late closers and mini-series, breeders' awards and Indiana Sires Stakes."

□ Indiana Standardbred Association President Joe Putnam, an owner and trainer, tells Platz "some preliminary estimates showed live table games could contribute another $4-5 million in revenue that could be directed to purses and breed development ... 'it turned out about as good as it could be for us,' he said. 'The legislation helps everyone involved. I think it will be a big help for us. Going forward, we're pretty excited.'"

□ Indiana Horse Racing Commission statistics find AGR for the racinos "combined to total nearly $351 million in the first nine months. Indiana's racing industry has received a little over $42 million, with just over $8.5 million going toward standardbred purses and nearly $8.9 [million] set aside for standardbred breed development."

□ "Though the first 17 days of racing," as Platz reports, "Hoosier Park is averaging 8.39 starters per race, an increase of half a starter compared to 2018, with a five per cent increase in export handle. The track has partnered with the USTA and ISA on a $10,000 Hoosier High 5 wager on the last race of the program each night. It has produced $334,000 in handle, resulting in a nightly increase of $20,000. 'I couldn't be more pleased with the start of the meet,' Moore said."

● Caesars Entertainment Corporation reported its first quarter 2019 earnings Wednesday, and the company noted Q1 numbers included a $30 million contribution by the two Indiana racinos to income from operations and that revenues increased by ~ $96 million in 2019 compared with 2018 "primarily due to the acquisition of Centaur Holdings, LLC." Caesars net revenues for the quarter rose by 7.3% over the year, but by only 0.9% excluding the Centaur properties. Adjusted EBITDAR was up by 8.5% from Q1 2018, but by only 0.4% excluding the Indiana acquisition.

□ JP Morgan analyst Daniel Politzer looks at live table games the two Centaur properties approved under HB 1015, as well as the tax rate reduction to 30% on gaming revenue over $200 million - and the bonus of sports betting - and he estimates that these changes could boost Caesars cash flow from the Anderson and Shelbyville properties from some $200 million annually to the $250 million range.

● After passage of HB 1015 effectively turns Indiana Grand Racing & Casino into a full-fledged destination casino, are folks in Lawrence and Noblesville, where local officials respectively turned down an aging drive-in movie theater site and a parcel next to what was then the Deer Creek Music Center (now the Runoff Home Mortgage Music Center) as the location for Indiana's second pari-mutuel horse racing track in the mid-1990s, now wondering – and wishing – what could have been for their respective communities?

● Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino will host a return of the $6 million Breeders Crown, harness racing's richest and most prestigious year-end divisional championship series, in October 2020. Harrah's Hoosier Park was formally awarded all 12 year-end championship races by the Hambletonian Society, which oversees the 35-year-old Breeders Crown Series, marking the second time that HHP will serve as the event's host site. Hoosier Park hosted Indiana's debut of the Breeders Crown in October 2017, creating a week-long Festival that culminated in two nights of Breeders Crown finals. More than $4 million was bet on the events, with a track lifetime record of $2.1 million wagered in one single night. Local representatives also took home three of the 12 crystal Crown trophies.

□ The Breeders Crown Series will be hosted at Woodbine Mohawk Park in Canada (Milton, Ontario) in 2019 before heading Back Home to Harrah's Hoosier Park in 2020.

IN Bingo and Charitable Gaming

● After the Senate dissented on April 18 from House amendments to SB 393, the charity gaming annual casino night license bill authored by Sen. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem, Sen. Houchin and Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D) of Anderson were appointed as conferees, and Senate Committee on Public Policy Chair Ron Alting (R) of Lafayette and Sens. Mike Bohacek (R) of Michiana Shores and Greg Taylor (D) of Indianapolis were tapped as advisors. The same day, Reps. Ed Clere (R) of New Albany and Justin Moed (D) of Indianapolis were selected as House conferees, and House Committee on Public Policy Chair Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn and Reps. Ethan Manning (R) of Denver and Vanessa Summers (D) of Indianapolis were chosen as advisors. Five days later, the session's penultimate day, Sen. Lanane was removed as a conferee and Sen. Alting was moved up from his advisor role to that of conferee.

□ In the brief April 22 conference committee meeting (devoid of public testimony), Sen. Houchin explained that the conference report would include "technical corrections" requested by the Indiana Gaming Commission to comport to HB 1517, the omnibus charity gaming overhaul measure which had already been approved by the General Assembly. Those changes would "make this bill consistent with that measure." She explained that "The underlying bill stays the same. We're just making a few technical changes to make it consistent with the overhaul of the charity gaming statute." Sen. Houchin also highlighted the decision to delete a provision requiring an operator to be an Indiana resident. "I think that striking those provisions are important in areas like Rep. Clere and I represent near the Kentucky-Indiana border. There may be some folks that could be operators that may not necessarily be Indiana residents." "I would echo that," chimed in Rep. Clere.

□ Rep. Clere didn't believe that there had been an intent in HB 1517 to require that an operator had to be Indiana resident. Rather, this was "an inadvertent error we are correcting using 393 as a vehicle." "That is correct," said the author of HB 1517, Rep. Smaltz.

□ The conference committee report was filed in both chambers on April 23, and agreed to in both bodies on the final day of the session.

□ In the House, Rep. Clere, the House sponsor, reiterated the need to bring SB 393 into conformance with HB 1517. "There would be unintended consequences with 1517 if we didn't make these changes" and clean-ups, he said. The House approved the panel's report on an 89-4 vote. Voting against the CCR were Reps. Pat Bauer (D) of South Bend; Bruce Borders (R) of Jasonville, Jim Prescott (R) of Rolling Prairie; and Tim Wesco (R) of Osceola. Note that three of the four were from the South Bend area, a hot bed for big-buck charitable gaming activity.

□ In the Senate, Sen. Houchin took less than a minute to describe the Conference Committee Report. She said that it made some provisions for technical corrections needed because of the passage of HB 1517, which had nothing to do with underlying bill. She also explained that Rep. Clere came to her late in the process with a request to use 393 to correct a provision in HB 1517 requiring Indiana residency for operators that would have an "inadvertent effect" on those living in districts close to a border. The conference report includes "trailer language for 1517 to correct that," assuring that charity gaming operations in border areas "can continue" to rely on nonresidents.

□ The report was agreed to on a 45-4 vote, with the only nay votes coming from Sens. John Crane (R) of Avon; Mike Gaskill (R) of Pendleton; Dennis Kruse of Auburn; and Mike Young (R) of Indianapolis.

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

www.hannah-in.com

Summer homework for Hoosiers

A quick peek at the issues and items are likely to dominate the landscape

The 2019 legislative session is in the rear-view mirror, the mayoral primary races will similarly be behind us in a few days, June's Technical Corrections Day shouldn't be of any interest, the Pacers are out of the NBA playoffs and the Colts won't be playing their first game until September 8.

So what will occupy your time after the 500-filled festivities of The Month of May (and has anyone yet trademarked the phrase "May Madness"?):

2019 Mayoral Elections. In the off-election cycle following every other long session, the mayoral races tend to fill up a bit of space, but there won't be many significant general election contests around the state, with the exception, perhaps, of Fort Wayne and Indianapolis, where Democratic incumbents are being seriously challenged (and in neither city will any candidate generate much interest outside the community). While most of the more-spirited races will have been decided in the primaries this week, there will still be a few hotly contested general elections, but unless you're living in those smaller communities (like those across from Louisville, which always seem to be heated) or you're a road contractor, you won't really be watching or even care about the outcome. There may only be one or two races featuring a potential rising star, so few will find anything to capture their attention.

2020 State and Federal Elections. Similarly, there's not a whole lot of interest in the 2020 races at a time when names start to percolate for various offices. Starting at the top, there continues to be the curiosity factor following South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) in his race for president, but Indiana still seems not to have adopted him as a native son, despite his longstanding roots and current office. No one remembers him from his 2010 state treasurer race (not even the 37.5% who voted for him as incumbent Richard Mourdock (R) racked up more than a million votes against the 20-something). We'll all have fun watching Mayor Pete's race from afar, but even if he were to win the nomination, it is hard to see him performing as well in Indiana atop the Democratic ticket as the Obama/Biden team in 2008 . . . and he'd still have to face the Trump juggernaut which fails to lose any steam Back Home - and there's also the Pence hometown factor. Any presidential race focus this year is fun, but not particularly distracting or fulfilling.

Neither is any real speculation about the 2020 state elections. After two cycles with high-profile U.S. Senate elections, we get a breather until 2022, and Governor Eric Holcomb (R) continues to post strong approval ratings. Republican social conservatives aren't finding any traction (nor will they), and Democrats have no apparent viable candidates to knock him off (and the most buzzworthy seem to be looking at other offices which may prove equally quixotic).

For all of the talk about Democrats recruiting strong contenders for Congress, the decimation of recent "strong" challengers (in CDs 02 and 09 in particular) have shown what an uphill climb they have - even in an off-year election - and Republican incumbents are building up strong war chests even as Demos dally. A real CD 05 challenge to U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) has been pushed by Democrats nationally, but still appears to be a pipe dream (and the stuff to put in those pipes is not yet legal here). The best shot for Ds - and it is a long shot - would be a sneaky grassroots challenge against an incumbent like U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R), who may not be as engaged Back Home as his colleagues.

Accolades pour in for late Sen. Lugar

Some might suggest that Indiana's political 20th century came to an end in March and April with the passing of former U.S. Sens. Birch Bayh (D) and Richard Lugar (R), and it would be futile to argue otherwise.

Sen. Lugar's death early last week at age 87 generated an outpouring of national reaction from presidents and leaders of both parties traditionally reserved for a world leader - which he was - after he paved the way for what Indianapolis has become today. As mayor and senator, Lugar mentored so many - including our most recent past president - and two generations (so far) of Indiana political, business, and civic leaders traceable back to the Lugar staff family tree. His work involving students and women in state government will pay dividends for decades to come.

He was always accommodating - and more - to your favorite newsletter, and any words we could offer to describe him and his impact would pale in comparison to tributes by others. In addition to the headline quote from Governor Eric Holcomb (R), probably the best synopsis of what the senator was all about came from Purdue University President Mitch Daniels.

One interesting change between 2016 and 2020 is that there will be no election for superintendent of public instruction, now that the office has been moved from the elective realm to appointed territory. With no superintendent or U.S. Senate race on the ballot, that leaves just governor/LG and attorney general as the statewide offices to be decided, and AG will certainly be a focus, as we have told you.

We don't know how or when the legal problems involving Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) will be resolved. There is a disciplinary inquiry pending that could potentially result in his removal from office if his law license is jeopardized, and there are also civil proceedings pending. Most of the top Republican officials in the state have called for him to step down, but he has turned aside those pleas. He continues to raise money in big chunks, ostensibly, for re-election and appears to be set on running again in convention with the strong support of social conservatives – delegates who get elected and turn out who will be focused on this convention race because they can have no impact on any other.

There will be lots of unfavorable newspaper headlines over the assorted Hill investigations in the next several months, and Hoosiers will be watching with great interest – even following the already high-profile Supreme Court Disciplinary Commission probe that just saw its status upgraded a notch or two with the appointment of former Supreme Court justice Myra Selby to oversee matters.

There has been no talk of a specific Republican establishment candidate to emerge yet, but lots of eyes are still on Sen. Randy Head (R), an unsuccessful 2016 convention AG hopeful, to make the run again. If he were to be the nominee, he would, however, have to relinquish his Senate re-election bid, and during the session, at least, he seemed to be shying away from any 2020 AG chatter.

If he were to enter, Sen. Head would immediately capture the approval of state GOP leaders from the top down (particularly State Treasurer Kelly Mitchell (R), a fellow Cass countian, and Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R), who has worked closely with him on criminal code matters this past session), and his wife, Cass County Prosecutor Lisa Swaim (R), a member of the board of directors of the Indiana Prosecuting Attorneys Council, can help him undermine the strong level of political support General Hill has earned from county prosecutors as a long-time former prosecutor himself.

Meanwhile, Democrats have yet to coalesce around a likely candidate, and they struggle to find someone who can step in and regain an office they have not won since 1996. There will be some recruiting quietly taking place this Summer to start the campaign to take back that office, which will likely be the top Democratic electoral focus statewide next year . . . particularly if conflicted Republicans find themselves with the incumbent as their nominee again.

Education Issues. Look for education issues to continue to dominate the news over the next few months as Republicans on one side, and Democrats and teachers on the other, battle over the meaning and extent of the education spending increases in the budget. Teachers are extremely dissatisfied with the lack of more specific earmarks for salary increases, and the #Red for Ed teacher “walk-ins” have attracted some attention, even as teachers can't now cut classes and show up at the State House while lawmakers are in session to demand better base pay.

They will have to find some new statewide tactics that will lead to more public attention, understanding, and support, and at the same time will have to work with superintendents and school boards in their respective districts to ensure that they get a chunk of those new dollars, even as administrators look to patch other long-standing budget holes and fill other needs, including new ones related to school security.

Some of those have been backstopped by referenda dollars, and after the fate of those on the May 7 ballot are decided, you can also expect some statewide dialogue over the role of referenda going forward and the equity issues posed by allowing wealthier districts (like those in Carmel and Noblesville) to go back to the well for supplemental dollars that voters there can afford and approve, while other districts (such as Lake Ridge and Gary Community schools) are home to lower-income residents who can't afford to impose further taxes upon themselves.

Overlaying all of this is the ongoing debate over the direction of school funding from traditional public (or “government”) schools to private voucher and charter schools.

Unshackled from any concern about seeking renomination by her party, Dr. Jennifer McCormick (R) seems to now be emphasizing the word “public” in her formal job title – state superintendent of public instruction – and this could make things uncomfortable this Summer for advocates of nontraditional education.

One of her first post-session acts was to retweet a final session day tweet of Rep. Terry Goodin (D), in which she pointed out that the former House Democratic leader was also a local school superintendent. The Goodin tweet was of a graphic under the headline, “Is this really all Indiana public schools are worth?” The sub-head read, “Hoosier students, schools and teachers deserve better,” and the content compared the Fiscal Year 2020 and 2021 funding increases for public schools vs. charter, voucher, and virtual schools (each broken out separately), that showed percentage increases for the charter, voucher, and virtual schools far outpacing the public schools. She was pointedly not invited to the final week budget reveal by Republican legislative leaders and the Governor, and has been prominent at recent teacher rallies.

Watch for Dr. McCormick, free of any political pressure or concerns, to more freely and publicly associate herself with public school forces and advocates for teacher pay hikes this Summer . . . and perhaps also find public support as well from two of her predecessors in a bipartisan push that could make some GOP leaders uncomfortable.

Gaming Issues and Gary Economic Development. Assuming that the Governor signs HB 1015, the omnibus gaming bill – and, as we explain to readers of our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, there is no reason to fear a veto – there will be an immediate grinding of rusted gears as Spectacle Entertainment, LLC quickly works to complete a land deal in Gary off its current footprint and process the administrative work necessary to move one of its Majestic Star Casino licenses from Buffington Harbor to the new inland site. Spectacle will also apply for the new Vigo County license under a rubric to be quickly devised by the Indiana Gaming Commission, whose members will become relevant basically for the first time in 15 years, since they approved a new operating agent contract for the French Lick casino to replace Trump Casino.

The IGC regulations will be important because this is an open process, and other casino operators will be eligible to bid, and the prospect exists for a real competition, much as we saw in the original round of applications, where there was no certainty going in to any of the licensing decisions as to the operator, with the exception of the East Chicago boat.

So lots of eyes will be on the Gameboys as they work through their regulations and facilitate the inland move of a Gary boat; the Vigo County licensing process; rules for the live table games that will make the racinos in Anderson and Shelbyville full-fledged casinos when the holographic Dick Clark tells us the ball has fallen in Times Square on New Year's Eve; and regulations to implement sports wagering (and make the call on the ball punted to them by lawmakers about whether and what "official" league or sanctioning body data must be used for "in-play" bets) and license vendors and providers.

When it officially becomes clear that the casino vessels and attendant pavilion and hotel will no longer be used by the Spectacle team, it will be time for Gary to show that the comments by city and civic leaders about serious interest in the site for use as a transformational transmodal facility and port tied to the Gary/Chicago International Airport that were accompanied by winks of sorts in legislative show-and-tells and committee testimony can now be put into practice. Once the Gary Democratic mayoral primary is out of the way, it's effectively "put up or shut up" time for the Steel City, and Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D), who saw something she has been pushing to clear the decks for since she was first elected eight years ago, must immediately show tangible evidence of a viable private sector partnership for the State of Indiana to show her some love. If she is unsuccessful in her renomination bid, this would give the city yet another excuse for delay, but if it is truly a city- (and region-) wide priority that has united all of Gary, there is no reason why her successor should not be able to step into her shoes and work with her from the day after the primary in seamlessly moving this effort forward - unless we find out through a change in administrations that this project was actually just "pie in the sky" - something vehemently denied on the Senate floor in the last night of the session by the principal project proponent in the legislature, Sen. Eddie Melton (D) of Gary, who will now likely try to round up support for the 2020 revival of his SB 66 that was to help pave the way for the Buffington Harbor jewel.

While much of the action is likely to be kept from the public eye, authorization for the state agencies to negotiate "cooperative agreements" with the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians was included in the final conference committee version of the budget bill (with no public or formal legislative input), and Hoosiers will be watching what comes from that endeavor this Summer. The Pokagons operate the Four Winds Casino South Bend, which can currently only conduct limited slot-like gaming and live poker, with some of the slot proceeds paid to the City of South Bend in lieu of property taxes.

They also have a new tribal territory in St. Joseph County and provide housing and health care to their residents (our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT, reported last Summer about their interest in eventually chartering schools).

In years past, some senators have sought to bar the State from entering into formal compacts - and those behind the budget language insist that it is not a compact - but with the Native American casino seemingly not siphoning as much business from other northern tier casinos as had been anticipated before its January 2018 debut, and the State of Indiana expanding gambling (sports wagering), there is an opportunity to negotiate from what would now be a position of strength . . . even as some of the issues may be unrelated to gaming, including public safety, taxes, worker's compensation, infrastructure, controlled substances, and education.

Firearms, Tobacco, and Marijuana. What's a Summer without some sin - or at least talk of it? With some major changes to laws governing firearms in Indiana, watch for both sides to point to any incident which may serve to prove their respective points over the next few months, and you can bet that firearms in schools (and attendant issues about teacher-carry and training) will be a hot topic in respective districts, particularly as discussion continues about that in the context of school safety grants, physically hardening schools, and talk (if not dialogue) of addressing student mental health issues. When the National Rifle Association and solons left town at the end of April, that just moved the forum for these concerns back into individual communities.

An increase in the tobacco tax has been on the agenda in the past few sessions, and it has been popular with the public at large, even as fiscal leaders have preferred to keep the prospect in their (wallet) pocket if needed to help compensate for increased Medicaid costs. As word spreads over the next few months about the bipartisan "Tobacco to 21 Act" introduced last week by U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) and already embraced by Hoosier health and business leaders, talk is likely to morph to (or, more likely, include) taxation of tobacco products . . . and to vaping; the bill also bumps up the age to 21 for e-cigarettes and e-liquids.

The tobacco tax hike push over the interim from both health care and medical professionals is also likely to be coupled with the revival of the vaping tax that House Committee on Ways and Means Chair Tim Brown (R) just couldn't get over the hump on the final day in negotiations with the Senate, even at reduced rates and limited to the consumer product only.

Passage of the hemp-growing bill (it is now a legal crop in Indiana) received the same kind of overwhelmingly popular reaction from the agriculture industry as the CBD products bills did from entrepreneurs and those with medical needs did in the past two years. Farmers are excited about the ability to generate a new cash crop that will grow well in Indiana, and this will help the ag economy almost immediately as farmers prepare to shift some production capacity to a new crop.

In the broader scheme, the legalization of some CBD products and growth of hemp (taken together with the strict regulatory framework for vaping products and continued loosening of some of our Prohibition-era alcohol laws) simply paves the way for legalization and strong regulation of medical marijuana as early as the 2020 session (but more likely in 2021, so that lawmakers can have a “conversation” with voters on the topic, which will likely be merged and confused with recreational marijuana legalization). Legal marijuana of some sort, as House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) has conceded, is a matter of “when” and not “if,” and as: (1) Physicians along the border tap into the availability of medical marijuana in Illinois and Ohio for their patients; (2) Recreational users travel in even greater numbers north of the border to Michigan to partake of recreational marijuana; (3) Reputable public polling in the state continues to trend toward legalization; and (4) Younger and more laissez-faire lawmakers dominate the Third Floor, the Hoosier State’s 52nd governor will lead a state which views marijuana much the same as alcohol just a few decades ago: legal, optional, socially acceptable, and tightly regulated.

Have fun keeping up with all this as the temperatures climb!

State Office Races . . .

- Brian J. Smith of Bristol, Co-CEO of Heritage Financial Group in Elkhart, makes a $10,000 April 29 contribution to the campaign of Attorney General Curtis Hill (R).

- The 2016 Gregg for Indiana gubernatorial campaign is the latest defunct Democratic statewide campaign to receive first quarter 2019 refunds for 2016 or 2018 campaign media placements from SKD Knickerbocker (in this case, $74,119).

IN Legislative Races . . .

- Could the vote by Sen. J.D. Ford (D) against the budget bill resonate against him in a 2022 campaign – in a new district – if Senate Republicans choose to make an issue out of his opposition (via that vote) against protection of those with pre-existing conditions in the health care marketplace? While Sen. Ford pushed hard for the provision in the substantive House Bill authored by Rep. Martin Carbaugh (R), that caveat wasn’t included in the final version of HB 1631, and so Ford’s one big chance to back it was in the provision which Rep. Ed DeLaney (D) managed to get inserted into the budget bill.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

- Fishers Mayor Scott Fadness (R) is using a pair of spots on Indianapolis television to tout a positive record of development and low taxes in his city, the same theme espoused by Carmel Mayor Jim Brainard (R) in a spate of mailers that seek to negate negative comments about city spending by his opponent, frugal Hamilton County Councilmember Fred Glynn (R). At least one wise – and cynical – local elected official whispers to us that Mayor Fadness’ spots may be playing a dual purpose, neither of which bears much relationship to his primary campaign: (1) trolling for developers who will look instead to Fishers, Noblesville, and Westfield for large-scale projects should Carmel Mayor Brainard lose; and (2) boosting his name ID for a potential 2024 statewide campaign.

- South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) “will not accept any money from lobbyists and we are returning all donations from registered lobbyists who have contributed to date – that’s $30,250 from 39 individuals,” reports his Hoosier campaign manager, Mike Schmuhl. “Mayor Pete will not be influenced by special-interest money, and we understand that making this promise is an important part of that commitment.” Schmuhl commits that the campaign will not accept money directly from individuals who are registered as federal lobbyists; not allow registered lobbyists to serve as bundlers for the campaign; add new language to contribution forms about the campaign’s standards around lobbying and donating; and implement internal procedures and audits “to ensure we are living by these commitments.” The campaign will also not accept money from corporate PACs nor “from the fossil fuel industry” . . . a new SSRS poll for CNN shows South Bend’s mayor in fourth place at seven percent (and an even newer one from CNN/SSRS released Thursday shows Buttigieg among a group of top Demo hopefuls who are ahead of the President in a hypothetical head-to-head match-up, leading 47% to 44%) . . . Mayor Pete is in fourth place in the latest Quinnipiac poll, but in double-digits . . . the latest Morning Consult tracking numbers show that Mayor “Buttigieg’s ascension stalls: This is the first time in five weeks Pete Buttigieg has not seen an uptick in his support. And so much for Mayor Pete being the youngest candidate in the race: that age thing still seems to be turned upside-down. “Candidate support varies dramatically by age: Younger voters are much more likely to support Sanders, older voters are much more likely to support Biden and Buttigieg” . . . @PeteButtigieg attracts 1 million Twitter followers . . . from the release of 10 years of Buttigieg tax returns, we learn that he earned $33,824 in 2010, the year he ran for state treasurer, less than one-half of the treasurer’s pay at the time . . . watch how TIME’s cover boy fares in Round One of The Oprah Primary.

IN Political News . . .

- One reason why the number of female Hoosier legislators perpetually lags most other states may have been revealed in new research by University of Notre Dame political scientist Jeffrey J. Harden. Drawing on data from U.S. state legislative elections from 1978 to 2012, in an article published this month in the American Journal of Political Science, he finds that the presence of a “prominent” female officeholder has a positive effect on the number of women running for lower offices in her state. A state with a female governor or U.S. senator will see an increase in the proportion of women seeking state legislative office by about two to three percentage points, Harden and two co-authors write. For a typical election year, that amounts to about seven more female candidates in each state. “Beyond their policy impact, they amplify women’s voices by bringing more women directly into politics,” Dr. Harden concludes.

- David “Hap” Chandler, Ripley County Democratic Party chair for the past seven years, passed away April 27.

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) issued a statement after Hoosier Todd Leininger was released from Venezuela following his imprisonment there since 2014: “After five years, I am relieved that Todd has finally been allowed to return to the United States, and I look forward to welcoming him home to Indiana. It is shameful that it took the Venezuelan authorities almost a year to recognize the rule of law and release Todd as ordered by a Venezuelan court. My prayers are with Todd and his mother Barbara as they are reunited. My office will continue to provide any assistance needed as they work to move past this difficult period” . . . Sen. Young joined U.S. Sens. Maggie Hassan (D-NH), Tim Kaine (D-VA), and Bill Cassidy (R-LA) to introduce the “Innovation Zone (IZ) Act,” a measure which would reform the under-utilized and inefficient experimental sites initiative within the Higher Education Act. The IZ Act would rename experimental sites as “innovation zones” to better reflect the program’s mission of encouraging higher education institutions to experiment with strategies to increase student success. While the experimental sites initiative was first introduced in the mid-1980s, the bill authors are concerned that a lack of evaluation and transparent data collection has prevented Congress from using information from the experimental sites to make real policy changes. They call these experiments vital to understanding how to improve student success and reduce regulation within the framework of higher education. The IZ Act would require the secretary of the U.S. Department of Education to establish a methodology for capturing data before an experiment begins, provide colleges with a clear direction for reporting data, and provide the higher education community an opportunity to submit suggestions for future experiments. “These experiments have the ability to promote innovation and access within our higher education system, but first we must have a way to measure what works and what does not. Our bill will improve data collection and accountability, and ultimately better serve our students,” said Sen. Young. You may recall that we told you last year about similar legislation Sens. Young, Hassan, and Kaine introduced last year with then-U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT) . . . Sen. Young, Senate Democratic Whip Dick Durbin (D-IL), and U.S. Sens. Brian Schatz (D-HI) and Mitt Romney (R-UT) introduced the “Tobacco to 21 Act,” bipartisan legislation that would prohibit the sale of tobacco products, including e-cigarettes, to anyone under the age of 21. “The nationwide epidemic of tobacco and electronic cigarette use among high school and middle school students can no longer be ignored,” asserts Sen. Young. “Roughly 95% of adult smokers began smoking before the age of 21, and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimate that smoking-related illness in the United States costs more than $300 billion a year. More must be done at the federal level to prevent future smokers from starting, and experts consistently recommend raising the tobacco age as a top priority to protect our kids and reduce health care costs,” he added. Companion legislation was introduced in the House by U.S. Reps. Diana DeGette (D-CO) and Chris Stewart (R-UT) . . . Sens. Young and Marco Rubio (R-FL) introduced the “Housing Accountability Act of 2019,” legislation that they say would hold property owners of low-income housing accountable for poor living conditions. Specifically, the legislation would require residents of private properties that have Section 8 Housing Assistance Payment contracts to be surveyed twice each year to determine the existence of persistent problems with a property’s physical condition or management. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development would have the ability to refer properties for remediation or fine owners of neglected Section 8 properties based on the surveys and performance-based contract administrator observation. Revenues generated from the fines could only be used to improve the conditions at the property or finance tenant relocation. “Fixing the current housing crisis is a main priority in my Fair Shot Agenda. It is very important that tenants have the opportunity to report issues with their rental property without fear of retaliation from the owner or landlord,” said Sen. Young. “The Housing Accountability Act will empower tenants to report issues such as lead poisoning or structural deficiencies directly to HUD for closer review. This will ensure bad actors are held accountable and help maintain a suitable living environment for all Americans” . . . Sen. Young was one of just seven Senate Republicans who voted Thursday to override the President’s veto of S.J. Res. 7 regarding U.S. intervention in the war in Yemen. The vote received a majority, but could not muster the two-thirds necessary to override. Sen. Young had been among a small cadre of Republicans who originally voted for the measure, under which for the first time in 45 years, Congress used the War Powers Act to reassert its constitutional responsibility over the use of armed forces.

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) issued a statement praising Attorney General William Barr and his Wednesday testimony before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. “Attorney General Barr kept his word to provide as much transparency on Special Counsel Robert Mueller’s report as he could provide. Today, he clearly explained why the Department of Justice concluded there was insufficient evidence to bring obstruction of justice charges after the special counsel did not reach a conclusion and delegated this decision to DOJ, and fairly responded to questions on his concern about spying on the Trump campaign and the troubling origins of the FBI’s probe. Our country is fortunate to have Bill Barr, a man of integrity who has served two U.S. Presidents, as our Attorney General. After two years of partisan attacks filled with inaccurate rumors and speculation, it’s time for the country to move forward and focus on real issues like lowering the cost of prescription drugs.”

● U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (D) uses his regular email missive to constituents to tell them “the House held a hearing on the Medicare for All Act of 2019. This legislation would create a single-payer health care system and cost taxpayers at least $32 trillion over ten years.” He then asks his “Question of the Week: Which aspect of Medicare for All concerns you the most?” The possible answers:

- It would cost American taxpayers $32 trillion.
- Government, not patients, would be making decisions on care.
- Private health insurance would no longer exist (which 150 million people are currently covered by).
- Americans would no longer receive employer-based coverage.
- Our current medicare system which seniors rely on would no longer exist.
- It would use taxpayer dollars to cover abortion services.
- I support Medicare for All.
- I don't know.

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) joins U.S. Reps. Brad Schneider (D-IL), Brian Fitzpatrick (R-PA), and Jennifer Wexton (D-VA) to introduce bipartisan legislation that would extend clear and consistent non-discrimination protections for LGBTQ people in housing. H.R. 2402, the “Fair and Equal Housing Act of 2019,” would include “sexual orientation” and “gender identity” as protected characteristics under the Fair Housing Act, which currently mandates non-discrimination for housing on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, familial status, or disability. “Housing discrimination and prejudice of any kind, towards anyone, is wrong,” said Rep. Brooks. “It is a fundamental American value enshrined in our Constitution to ensure equal protection under the law for all people in our country, including when purchasing or renting property. I am proud to lead this common-sense, bipartisan bill, the Fair and Equal Housing Act of 2019, so that anyone, regardless of their race, religion, sexual orientation, gender identity, handicap, familial status and national origin is treated fairly and equally under the law as they buy or rent a place to call home.” U.S. Sens. Susan Collins (R-ME) and Tim Kaine (D-VA) introduced the Brooks legislation Senate companion . . . asked by WBAT 1400-AM’s Ed Breen on Marion’s Good Morning Grant County last week about what senators she saw as being most likely to pick up and run with the bipartisan Lugar legacy, Rep. Brooks replied with three names: U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R), Shelley Moore Capito (R-WV), and Cory Gardner (R-CO) . . . Rep. Brooks teams up with Rep. Schneider again, as well as U.S. Reps. Elise Stefanik (R-NY) and Annie Kuster (D-NH) to introduce the “Opioid Workforce Act of 2019,” bipartisan legislation designed to train more doctors equipped to combat the opioid epidemic. “In order to combat the devastating opioid, heroin and fentanyl epidemic that continues to plague communities across our country, a critically important piece of the puzzle is to ensure we have more trained professionals, particularly physicians, who can prevent and treat addiction and substance abuse disorder,” said Rep. Brooks. “This bipartisan bill will help provide more residency positions to hospitals that have programs focused on addiction medicine, addiction psychiatry or pain management. The opioid crisis will not stop taking innocent lives overnight, but without more trained doctors ready to help people who are struggling because of substance abuse, drug and opioid related overdose deaths will continue to claim more lives in Indiana and beyond.” H.R. 2439 would create 1,000 new residency posts over five years for hospitals with addiction medicine, addiction psychiatry, or pain management programs to alleviate the worsening physician shortage, particularly acute in the field of addiction medicine and substance use disorder treatment.

● U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) tells The Paper of Wabash County that she plans to vote in favor of USMCA, the free trade agreement between the United States, Mexico, and Canada that supplants NAFTA. “However, she warned, ‘I will not vote for it if tariffs are on it. The tariffs have to come off.’ She said she and other members are Congress are working to make sure the tariffs come off. ‘I’m doing that because those tariffs cost the State of Indiana,’ she said. They cost every manufacturing company. They ultimately either cost jobs or they cost the consumer on the other end. My job – and I take it very seriously because I understand the ramifications – my job is to make sure to protect jobs and to make sure to protect the interests of Hoosiers in this district’ . . . Rep. Walorski renews her concerns over what she sees as a lack of fairness in the tariff exclusion process, penning her second letter in as many months to U.S. Secretary of Commerce Wilbur Ross in which she outlines her growing concerns that U.S. manufacturers and small businesses seeking relief from steel and aluminum tariffs are being treated unfairly. Rep. Walorski had not yet received a response to her initial March 11 letter to Secretary Ross that raised questions about the product exclusion process. “Since the process was established 13 months ago, it has been a master class in government inefficiency and plagued by maddening inconsistency,” she wrote. “There are ways to fix the process and, as has always been the case, I am raising these myriad issues in hopes of working with you to improve its fairness, transparency, and efficiency for all participants.” Rep. Walorski, a member of the House Committee on Ways and Means, has pressed the Commerce secretary to fix problems faced by businesses requesting relief from Section 232 steel and aluminum tariffs. American businesses can request a product be excluded from tariffs if it is not available domestically in sufficient quantity or quality. In response to concerns raised by Walorski last year, Commerce adopted several changes, including the creation of a rebuttal and surrebuttal process. On February 26, the Department began releasing decisions for steel exclusion requests that went through that process. The first such decisions for aluminum requests were released in late April. But Rep. Walorski points to low rates of approval in assorted determinations (around 10% each), and raises a passel of specific questions in the letter to Secretary Ross about the process that she hopes will help determine whether the problem is with the process itself.

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) released this statement Thursday after his office says “House Democrats circumvented regular order and forced a political vote on H.R. 9 the Climate Action Now Act”: “Climate change is an issue that needs to be addressed. However, Democrats are using climate change as a political tool to strengthen Washington’s control of the economy and consumer choice, without any guarantees of actually reducing emissions, which is why I cannot support this legislation. President Obama hastily entered the United States into the Paris Agreement – which should be a treaty subject to the ratification of the Senate – that would have allowed other nations to force unrealistic regulations on America costing millions of jobs, increasing energy prices for ratepayers, and burdening small businesses with regulations while giving a free pass to the world’s largest polluters, such as China, Russia, and India. The right way to tackle climate change policy is by continuing to remove barriers to innovation, incentivizing more clean energy, and putting forth realistic, free-market solutions driven by the American consumer – a proven approach that has already resulted in significant emissions reductions in the United States.”

- U.S. Rep. André Carson (D), who serves on the House Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure Subcommittee on Railroads, Pipelines, and Hazardous Materials, was part of a two-day T&I “Northeast Corridor Infrastructure Trip” May 2-3 that included a field roundtable on the Gateway Program, as well as tours of the 108-year-old North River Tunnel, Northeast Corridor Infrastructure, the Penn Station Control Center, and Second Avenue Subway in New York City.

- U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) gets a shout-out from the President on national television Tuesday during a White House ceremony honoring the 2018 NASCAR cup champion. “Every time I see the President something surreal happens,” he tells WOWO 1100-AM in Fort Wayne, and about being invited in for a tour of the Lincoln Bedroom by the President with Roger Penske . . . Rep. Banks, chair of the House Republican Study Committee Spending and Budget Task Force, released the framework of a new budget proposal last week, and plans to introduce it as a formal measure in coming weeks. He says the package would balance the budget in less than a decade (by 2025) and calls for a $10 trillion cut in “unnecessary spending” to help reduce the national debt, and stabilize programs like Social Security and Medicare. Rep. Banks tells WOWO’s Fort Wayne’s Morning News that the disparate wings of the Democratic Party can’t agree upon a budget proposal. “While Democrats have embraced policies like the Green New Deal and ‘Medicare for All,’ which would exponentially grow our debt levels, the RSC budget is the only serious effort in Congress to balance our budget,” he said in a later statement . . . Rep. Banks on Thursday called upon House Democratic leaders to bring the United States Mexico Canada Agreement (USMCA) to the floor for a vote. He said, “Everybody agrees that our leaders should always fight for the best deal possible for American workers, farmers, and families and President Trump has done just that. After months of hard work by the President and his administration, a better deal than the current North American Free Trade Agreement has been negotiated. So why in the world would we hold it up when new investments, jobs, and prosperity are at risk? Speaker Pelosi, for the betterment of the American people, I ask you to put aside petty politics and bring the USMCA up for a vote.”

IN State Circles . . .

- The Office of the Attorney General revealed last week that Indiana this year has received more than $136 million from tobacco product manufacturers under the 1998 Master Settlement Agreement (MSA). Since the MSA’s inception, Indiana has received almost $2.7 billion in funding from the largest civil settlement in U.S. history, and will continue to receive payments in perpetuity.

- We’ve told you that the Indiana Department of Transportation was looking for input on how best to develop and implement an unmanned aerial systems (UAS) program, and now we can tell you to expect an INDOT Request for Proposal seeking a qualified firm to develop and implement an INDOT drone program within just a few days after Independence Day.

□ Separately, the Indiana Department of Homeland Security issues a solicitation for Unmanned Aerial Systems/Drones, seeking a specified package that includes 20 drones, cameras, and accessories.

- Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) is one of six Republican state attorneys general urging the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit in Atlanta, sitting en banc, to throw out a challenge to an Alabama statute that would bar its municipalities from enacting local ordinances setting local minimum wage provisions. Lewis, et al., v. Gov. of Alabama, et al., No. 17-11009-U.

□ The law enacted by the majority-white legislature was challenged as discriminating against African Americans in Birmingham, the majority-black city whose ordinance was being targeted. An 11th Circuit panel last Summer reversed a trial court judge’s earlier ruling dismissing the lawsuit, finding that the preemption violated the 14th Amendment’s Equal Protection Clause, and labeling the legislative action as “rushed, reactionary, and racially polarized.” The State of Alabama successfully sought an en banc rehearing before the entire appellate court in January, vacating the earlier appellate ruling, and prompting the attorneys general of Arkansas, Georgia, Indiana, Louisiana, Missouri, and Texas to intervene during the final week of April in the case in favor of Alabama. The State of Indiana is officially signed on as an amicus party. Expect the rehearing in June.

□ According to the April 24 amicus brief, Indiana and its sister states “have a substantial interest in ensuring that courts quickly dispose of meritless challenges to state laws, particularly challenges that rest on charges of intentional racial discrimination. The charge of intentional racial discrimination is among the most serious that can be leveled against a state legislature, not only for the gravity of the wrong alleged, but also for the consequences of a false accusation. Racial discrimination by a legislative body violates the fundamental right of every citizen to be treated equally by their government. But unfounded claims of discrimination can have damaging effects on the legislative process. The amici States are subject to such claims and their attendant effects on a regular basis.” The states also contend that “Natural solicitude for the victims of alleged racial discrimination, together with an indeterminate standard of proof, makes intentional-discrimination claims unusually powerful and unusually susceptible to abuse. In ordinary circumstances, the steady flow of unfounded claims works against the claimants.”

- On May 16, the Office of Medicaid Policy and Planning will hold a public hearing on amending rules to extend (through June 30, 2021) the 3.0% rate reduction for covered outpatient and inpatient hospital services, and for covered nursing facilities.

- Less than a week after the General Assembly overwhelmingly passed the budget bill with its affirmation of the right for pre-existing coverage in health insurance policies, Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) joined the State of Indiana with 17 other Republican state attorneys general or governor in a brief urging the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to declare the Affordable Care Act unconstitutional. State of Texas, et al., v. United States, et al., No. 19-10011. Such a decision would uphold a U.S. District Court decision from last year regarding Obamacare. “The Affordable Care Act had previously been determined constitutional because of the tax penalty accompanying the individual mandate, which fell under the taxing authority of Congress,” General Hill said. “When Congress eliminated the tax penalty, the individual mandate lost the constitutional leg on which it stood.” This brief argues that ACA, in its current form, imposes rising costs and affords too much power to the federal government while simultaneously stripping power from the states.

□ General Hill added in a statement that “All Americans – not just the 85 to 90 percent covered by their employers and/or Medicare/Medicaid – should have access to quality health care that they can afford. Congress and the individual states must develop sound constitutional policies that safeguard the health care needs of all individuals, including those with pre-existing conditions.”

- The Family and Social Services Administration selects Cooperative Managed Care Services (CMCS) from four bidders to provide Prior Authorization and Utilization Management Services for FSSA. The estimated value of the four-year contract exceeds $15.33 million. Other bidders included Qsource; Telligen; and DBMS Health.

- Last October we were first to tell you about an Attorney General Official Opinion that had been issued to Accelerate Indiana Municipalities over Fort Wayne’s so-called “Pay to Play” ordinance – enacted over a mayoral veto – that prohibited businesses and individuals that conduct business with the City of Fort Wayne from making political contributions to candidates for local office, both in the City and throughout Allen County, and also excluded from public contracts any business entity that has made any contribution of money, or pledge of a contribution, in excess of the dollar limits specified in Indiana statute. The AG’s conclusion: “The Ordinance at issue here imposes additional requirements for the City that exceed the Council’s authority under the Indiana Home Rule Act. Accordingly, these additional requirements are invalid. In addition, the Ordinance imposes restrictions on political speech that likely violate the First Amendment by limiting the contributions on the part of those desiring to do business with public entities.”

□ The day after the General Assembly adjourned sine die, family members who are part of Witwer Construction Company filed suit in Allen County Superior Court 3, with Mark GiaQuinta as their attorney, challenging the legality of the ordinance, seeking a declaratory judgment, and both a preliminary and permanent injunction against its enforcement. Witwer, et al., v. City of Ft. Wayne, No. 02D03-1904-MI-000318.

□ The 2017 ordinance was co-authored by City Councilor John Crawford (R), now a Republican mayoral candidate.

□ GiaQuinta, himself a former Democratic member of the Fort Wayne City Council, explains that “The Ordinance forces the business entities to make a choice between adhering to the contribution limits in the Ordinance or be disqualified from entering into contracts for professional services with the City of Fort Wayne or even participating in the City’s bid process as it relates to professional services. Witwers seek to protect their right to express their political voices by contributing to the candidates of their choice for local offices and school boards without risk of the penalties.”

□ The 31-page complaint claims that the ordinance violates the Home Rule Act (which, they contend, denies the power to regulate criminal conduct); is both preempted by and conflicts with various Indiana statutes governing: (a) the awarding of contracts by political subdivisions, (b) the specific statute governing political donations to local officials and school boards, (c) the statute “enacted to prevent and punish ‘pay to play’ under its less trite description, Bribery,” and (d) the statute enacted to prevent and punish Ghost Employment.

□ The plaintiffs also allege that while “The Ordinance purports to avoid impacting the right of an individual to express ‘their First Amendment right to contribute to the campaign of any individual’ [it] conveniently ignores the strict penalties included in the Ordinance which force the business entity to choose between its protected First Amendment right to participate in a political campaign in a manner equal to other citizens and their right to participate in the selection of those eligible for professional service contracts with the City.” The lawsuit also alleges that others, including spouses and children of contributors and minority members of firms may also be “denied equal treatment under law as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and Article 1 § 23 of the Indiana Constitution.”

□ Another question is raised by the plaintiff-wife of the contractor who “demands constitutional protections for her right to free speech and the right to equal treatment under law with the spouses of individuals who do not bid City contracts and with ‘significant others’ living with owners of business entities who enter into such professional contracts.”

□ GiaQuinta asserts that the ordinance provisions do not withstand the strict scrutiny standard required when restricting a fundamental right of free speech nor does the city establish a compelling state interest to overcome this standard. He attempts to prove this via affidavits and a legislative history of the ordinance.

- The Division of Mental Health and Addiction (DMHA) is looking to provide grants to qualified community/governance partnerships focused on affecting addiction outcomes to implement a multi-faceted, integrated approach to treating opioid use disorders in different regions through a very flexible innovative team approach involving a mobile response team comprised of at least one licensed clinician with an addiction credential, peer recovery coach, prescriber, and law enforcement official that would respond to opioid overdoses, and then provide comprehensive follow-up for those mobile opioid SWAT units (and not in the punitive enforcement context being employed in Scott County by new Sheriff Jerry Goodin (D)).

□ The peer recovery coach will meet the patient in a location of need (Emergency Department of a local hospital, jail release, homeless shelter, community area, etc.); an Emergency Department prescriber will be available to prescribe Buprenorphine; local community mental health centers and other certified healthcare entities will be on call to refer patients and their families; and a service provider will be part of the process to organize and offer wraparound services to patients and their families based on screening and assessments completed during intake process.

□ Not only is the mobile concept unique, but so is the process which would be designed to allow a “warm handoff” to pass the baton to the next appropriate intervention and step towards recovery. The geographical scope of this project requires each applicant to include at least three counties for each applicant. However, Marion County is able to submit an application as a single county. Townships or designated areas within Marion County may be included in an application with a minimum of two contiguous counties. DMHA is eager to move on this concept, and is encouraged by the expressions of interest – the agency has been answering lots of questions from prospective grantees, and indicates a strong willingness to let applicants propose project designs they believe are appropriate for their respective proposed service areas and communities.

- The Indiana Bond Bank introduces the first-ever public finance design summit where participants from all walks of life will compete to devise novel solutions to some of the most pressing local government problems. Competitors will select a challenge from a list of 19 issues drawn from real-world problems facing the City of Gary, Town of McCordsville, and the Eastern Indiana Regional Planning Commission, including attracting developers to build affordable single-family homes, evaluating opportunities to embrace smart and alternative modes of transportation, enhancing the capacity and quality of area daycare providers, and increasing broadband and high-speed internet access.

- The event has been dubbed “Flipping Finance” to show that not every problem can or should be solved by issuing a bond, says Bond Bank Executive Director Mark Wuellner. The event will take place May 10-11 at Launch Indy, site of assorted civic hackathons. After an 18-hour design sprint, participants will present their solutions to a panel of judges, who will award more than $4,000 in cash prizes.

- The Indiana State Personnel Department is in the market for group life insurance for all eligible employees and their dependents. The State (and its employees, under supplemental coverage) currently spends approximately $11,200,000 annually for group life insurance services.

- While you shouldn’t be surprised by now, we still do feel compelled to report that the Supreme Court of the United States failed to act at its April 26 conference on the high-profile Indiana abortion case that has languished on the SCOTUS agenda since the State of Indiana filed its October petition for a writ of certiorari in Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-483. Through 12 conferences, the high Court has already postponed a decision on whether to review the challenge to provisions of HEA 1337-2016 that would: (1) require health-care facilities to dispose of fetal remains in the same manner as other human remains, i.e., by burial or cremation; and (2) prohibit abortions motivated solely by the race, sex, or disability of the fetus and require physicians to inform patients of the prohibition. We’ve recited for you too many times the assorted theories why the Supremes have avoided making a decision – on making a decision.

- With the State’s filing last month in another HEA 1337-2016 case, the Court may be closer to a cert ruling when it considers the initial Box petition for the 13th time (lucky, right?) at its conference on Thursday, May 9. Orders from that conference should be released on Monday, May 13

- The Carmel-based Midcontinent Independent System Operator Inc. (MISO) submitted its annual report Monday to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission detailing that 724,249,902.000 MWh of transmission service was provided in calendar year 2018.

IN the Economy

- Map the Meal Gap 2019, the latest report by Feeding America on food insecurity and the cost of food at both the county and congressional district level, reveals that food insecurity exists in every Indiana county. The report finds that children are more likely to be food insecure, with the child food insecurity rate at 17.4% (273,380 Hoosier children) compared to 13.3% (887,070 Hoosiers) for the overall population for Indiana.

- Child food insecurity rates range from a low of 11.9% (approximately 10,420 children) in Hamilton County up to 21.0% (approximately 2,950 children) in Grant County.

- Indiana’s food insecurity rates are higher than the national averages of 12.5% for the overall population and 17.0% for child food insecurity.

- Governor Eric Holcomb (R) announced at the National Rifle Association annual meeting in Indianapolis that Camp Atterbury will be the site of the NRA’s new National Marksmanship Competition Center. The Governor says “This new center will provide great economic benefits for central Indiana with the safety, training and competition opportunities for thousands of citizens, law enforcement and military personnel.” The NRA’s competitive shooting division, which has been holding marksmanship competitions since 1876, will bring national and regional competitions as well as firearms training and safety courses to Camp Atterbury. Smallbore Rifle Championships and Precision Pistol Championships will begin in 2020 and the High Power Rifle Championships, which have been held at Camp Atterbury since 2017, will continue. The NRA expects to add collegiate marksmanship events and other related competitive shooting events at the center over the course of the 10-year agreement. The NRA will also work in conjunction with Camp Atterbury Museum to develop the NRA Military Heritage Museum.

- As a part of the deal, the NRA will lease space at Camp Atterbury, and the State will upgrade several shooting ranges. The improvements are expected to draw other military, law enforcement, and civilian training and competitions as well.

- The Office of Community and Rural Affairs changes the Stellar Communities Designation Program for 2019 and beyond, allowing only one region to be selected as a designee for the program. The change is based on feedback from the pilot, and the program’s professed goal to inspire the greatest transformational impact. While only selecting one designee, the other finalist regions (Constellation of Starke – Hamlet, Knox, North Judson and Starke County; Jay! Region – Dunkirk, Portland, Pennville, Redkey, and Jay County; Marshall County Crossroads – Argos, Bourbon, Bremen, Culver, Plymouth, and Marshall County; and Safe and Welcome – Knightstown, New Castle and Henry County) are eligible for a portion of $1 million to advance their respective regional development plans.

- Hamilton County gets good news in the form of a $60 million investment by Beck’s Hybrids in an expansion of its Atlanta headquarters and operations to include a new soybean processing facility. A 221' x 300' facility that will feature a seven-story, standalone processing tower, five new warehouses for seed and equipment storage, as well as office space should mean 60 new jobs . . . Greenwood’s Poynter Sheet Metal, Indiana’s largest full-service sheet metal and custom metal crafter, plans an investment of $4.2 million in an expansion that will add a new manufacturing unit and result in 40 new jobs with an average annual wage of $50,000.

Gov. Daniels, who worked directly for Lugar for 14 years, first during his mayoralty and then as senator, more than a decade of that as his chief of staff (and as campaign manager), offered these words:

“Dick Lugar was not just the finest public servant I will ever know, he was the finest person. He embodied all we can hope for in our leaders: brilliance of mind, purity of motive, stainless in character, tireless in the pursuit of duty. Incomparably knowledgeable about the world, he was first and always a patriot, utterly dedicated to the security and wellbeing of his fellow Americans. His voice is now silent, but he is still with us. Indianapolis is a thriving and vibrant city because of him. The world is safer from nuclear danger because of him. And so many of us, while falling far short of the standards he set, are vastly better people because of him,” concludes Gov. Daniels.

- Rep. Holli Sullivan (R) is selected to serve as vice chair of the Council of State Governments’ Bowhay Institute for Legislative Leadership Development (BILLD). BILLD is a leadership training program helping newer Midwestern legislators gain skills to become effective leaders, informed decision-makers, and perceptive policy analysts. Rep. Sullivan, a BILLD alum, has served on the board since 2016.

- Sen. Eric Koch (R) is elected to the 12-member Executive Committee of the National Council on Electricity Policy (NCEP) in Washington, D.C. NCEP is a platform for all state-level electricity decisionmakers to share and learn from diverse perspectives on the evolving electricity sector. The NCEP community includes more than 200 representatives from public utility commissions, air, and environmental regulatory agencies, governors’ staffs and state energy offices, legislatures and consumer advocates. It is an affiliate of the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners Center (NARUC) for Partnerships and Innovation. NCEP serves as a forum for collaboration around grid-related topics at state, regional and national levels, offering a unique opportunity for state electricity decisionmakers throughout the country to examine the ways new technologies, policies, regulations, and markets impact state resources and the bulk power system.

- While the LaPorte County Commissioners pass a resolution expressing their disapproval of the change in composition of the Northern Indiana Commuter Transportation District board through a late addition to the budget bill without the opportunity for public input (and hint about a lawsuit), the Board separately writes to the Governor proposing that he appoint Commissioner Sheila Matias Brillson (D) to the panel. She is a former Michigan City mayor and city council member well-versed in regional planning efforts in Indiana and other states in which she has lived.

- The new NICTD board will consist of only five members, all appointed by the governor, down from 11 members, eight of whom were designated by the four counties served by the South Shore Railroad, and the other three appointed by the governor.

- Democratic lawmakers north of U.S. 30 still seemed a bit blindsided by the change in membership, both in the budget bill itself, and by the immediate shake-up after it was signed into law last week.

IN the Lobby

- Jim Zieba takes a leave of absence from his position as the executive director of the Indiana Optometric Association until April 2020. Zieba, a colonel in the Indiana Army National Guard, will deploy with this unit to the Middle East in June.

- Marilyn Carter will serve the association’s acting executive director during Zieba’s absence.

- Ice Miller Strategies LLC files a federal lobby registration to lobby Congress on behalf of Raleigh, North Carolina-based technology services provider Oak Grove Technologies seeking “Support for Oak Grove programs and services.”

- Faegre Baker Daniels Consulting files a federal lobby termination for its representation of the American Academy of Addiction Psychiatry.

- Eli Lilly and Company lures Shawn O’Neil away from his post as director of federal government affairs for Novartis to serve Lilly as vice president for government affairs, a post in which he will lead both federal and state lobbying efforts. O’Neil has also lobbied for the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

IN Court

- The Indiana Supreme Court goes its own way in ensuring no favoritism in the disciplinary case pending against Attorney General Curtis Hill (R). The Court rejects both Hill’s motion to decline appointment of a hearing officer and a Supreme Court Disciplinary Commission motion to appoint a three-member hearing officer panel. Instead, the justices on Monday appointed former Supreme Court justice Myra C. Selby of Ice Miller LLP – Indiana’s first female and African American justice – to serve as hearing officer.

- Selby, who served as a health policy advisor on the Bayh Administration gubernatorial staff prior to her court appointment, retired from the Court in 1999 after serving on a panel in which tougher lawyer disciplinary standards were advanced by then-chief justice Randall Shepard and future CJ Brent Dickson.

- On Wednesday, General Hill added top Indianapolis criminal defense attorneys Jim Voyles and Jennifer Lukemeyer to his appellate legal defense team, complementing his principal counsel, legal ethics expert Donald Lundberg.

BUTTIGIEG 3RD IN INDIANA POLL: Hoosier Democrats aren't at home yet with native born South Bend, Ind., Mayor Pete Buttigieg, choosing former Vice President Joe Biden and liberal Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders as their first and second picks in the state's 2020 presidential primary (Washington Examiner). A new survey from We Ask America said that Biden is backed by 33%, Sanders 23% and Buttigieg 20%. The results, coming after weeks of media hype and favorable Time and Vanity Fair features about the mayor, are a disappointing showing for the candidate considered a favorite son, said the survey analysis. "Despite being the home-state candidate, Mayor Pete Buttigieg has a long way to go if he hopes to win Indiana in the Democratic primary next year as former Vice President Joe Biden has a 10-point lead over second place U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders," said Andrew Weissert of We Ask America. "Despite very loud noise from the far left of the Democratic Party and Buttigieg's popularity in the South Bend region, it seems that, for now, rank-and-file Indiana Democrats prefer a traditional party leader," he added. In a New Hampshire Monmouth Poll, Buttigieg is third with 9%, trailing Biden at 36%, Sanders at 18%, but leading Sen. Elizabeth Warren at 8% and Sen. Kamala Harris at 6%.

FEDS CHARGE 2 FROM CHINA IN ANTHEM HACK: A federal grand jury in Indianapolis has indicted a Chinese national in connection with the massive computer hacking of health insurer Anthem Inc. in 2015 that compromised the private information of 78.8 million customers and former customers (Russell, IBJ). The U.S. Justice Department said Thursday afternoon that Chinese resident Fujie Wang, 32, and other members of a hacking group broke into the computer networks of Anthem and three other U.S. businesses and installed malware to thwart the systems and steal private information. The other hacked companies were not identified. Wang and another defendant, identified only as John Doe, were charged with one count of conspiracy to commit fraud and related activity in relation to computers and identify theft, one count of conspiracy to commit wire fraud, and two substantive counts of intentional damage to a protected computer. The FBI has issued a "wanted" poster for Wang, who is believed to live in Shenzhen, China. It isn't clear whether prosecutors would be able to bring him to the United States for trial if he is apprehended. The U.S. Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Indiana declined to comment. Prosecutors say the defendants used "extremely sophisticated techniques" to hack into Anthem's computers and steal confidential business information and patient records. That included sending specially tailored "spearfishing" emails with embedded hyperlinks to employees. After a user accessed the hyperlink, a file was downloaded that, when executed, deployed malware that compromised the user's computer system by installing a tool known as a back door that gave the defendants remote access to the system.

TARIFFS UP AS PRESSURE RATCHETS: The U.S. increased tariffs on $200 billion of Chinese goods to 25% Friday as President Trump ratcheted up pressure on Beijing and threatened to impose additional levies on virtually everything China exports to the U.S. The tariff hike went into force hours after U.S. and Chinese negotiators met Thursday in hopes of getting the troubled trade talks back on track. Discussions are set to resume Friday, but the White House said it had no plans to suspend the scheduled tariff increase, which will raise levies from the current 10% (Wall Street Journal). Beijing has said it would retaliate against the U.S. actions. As soon as the tariff increase took effect, the Chinese Commerce Ministry expressed regret and reiterated that Beijing "cannot but take necessary countermeasures." It didn't specify how or when Beijing would retaliate. U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin met with Chinese Vice Premier Liu He for a working dinner Thursday night. Afterward, Messrs. Lighthizer and Mnuchin briefed Mr. Trump on the talks, the White House said. Earlier Thursday, Mr. Trump told reporters the U.S. was also taking steps to impose fresh 25% tariffs on $325 billion in Chinese goods that aren't currently taxed. If that happens, virtually all Chinese exports to the U.S. would face 25% tariffs. "I'm different than a lot of people," Mr. Trump said at the White House. "I happen to think the tariffs for our country are very powerful." The White House said talks would resume again on Friday but it remains uncertain whether the two sides can bridge the differences that have arisen over the past week (New York Times).

TRUMP SAYS 'I HAVE NO IDEA WHAT'S GOING TO HAPPEN': In remarks at the White House, the president said he had received a "beautiful letter" from President Xi Jinping of China and would probably speak to him by phone, but Mr. Trump said he was more than happy to keep hitting Beijing with tariffs. "I have no idea what's going to happen," he said (New York Times). "They'll see what they can do, but our alternative is, is an excellent one," Mr. Trump added, noting that American tariffs on $250 billion worth of Chinese products were bringing "billions" in to the United States government. "We were getting very close to a deal then they started to renegotiate the deal," Mr. Trump said. "We can't have that."

TRUMP RECEIVES 'BEAUTIFUL LETTER' FROM XI: President Trump said on Thursday he had received "a beautiful letter" from Chinese President Xi Jinping and may speak to him by phone, though Trump did not say whether that would occur before a scheduled increase in tariffs on $200 billion in Chinese goods takes effect at 12:01 a.m. Friday (Washington Post). The president said Xi's message was: "Let's work together. Let's see if we can get something done." Robert E. Lighthizer, the chief U.S. trade negotiator, is scheduled to meet at 5 p.m. Thursday with Chinese Vice Premier Liu He to continue negotiations aimed at a comprehensive deal. Those talks had been proceeding smoothly, with U.S. officials predicting a final accord could be agreed to as soon as this week. But China last weekend angered the president by trying to water down its commitments, according to Lighthizer. Chinese officials balked at specifying in the agreement which laws would be amended to address U.S. concerns over forced technology transfer and intellectual property protection, U.S. officials said. "The vice premier is coming here today. We were getting very close to a deal, and then they started to renegotiate the deal. We can't have that," the president said, following a White House event on preventing surprise medical bills. "It was their idea to come back."

INDIANA'S 'MR. SOYBEAN' BILL SILVER DIES: Hoosier farmer William "Bill" Silver of Boswell, IN, a pioneer in launching the soybean checkoff in Indiana, died Tuesday, May 7 (Hoosier Ag Today). Silver served as an advocate for all Indiana farmers, and he also supported the creation of the state's soybean checkoff program. Jane Ade Stevens, CEO of the Indiana Soybean Alliance, said Silver took pride in the growth and work the checkoff provided for farmers. "Those of us who have worked to support Hoosier farmers were saddened to learn that Mr. Indiana Soybean, Bill Silver, has passed away," Stevens said. "Bill was the soybean farmer who led the effort for many years to get a soybean checkoff passed. He has always been an advocate for farmers and took great pride in seeing how the Indiana Soybean Alliance has developed. We lost a great advocate this week. May he rest in peace."

INDIANA HOSPITALS CHARGE 311% OF MEDICARE COSTS: Indiana hospitals charge privately insured patients more than three times what Medicare pays for similar procedures, making it one of the most expensive states in the nation for hospital care, according to a new Rand Corp. study (Russell, IBJ). The study examined nearly 1,600 hospitals in 25 states, looking at prices paid by private health plans for a wide range of procedures in 2017 compared with what Medicare would have paid. It found that Indiana hospitals charged 311% of what Medicare would have paid, making it the most expensive state in the study. Rand said it examined only states where it was able to obtain data, and hopes to include all 50 states for a report that will be released in early 2020. On average, the hospitals across the study charged 241% of what Medicare would have paid. But there was a wide variation among states. Michigan hospitals had the lowest relative prices, charging privately insured patients an average of 153% of what Medicare would pay. Other states on the low end were Pennsylvania (169%), New York (178%) and Kentucky (186%). At the high end—in addition to Indiana—were Wyoming (302%), Maine (283%), Wisconsin (279%) and Montana (277%).

BRAUN ANNOUNCES DRUG PRICE TRANSPARENCY BILL: U.S. Sens. Tammy Baldwin (D-WI) and Mike Braun (R-IN) and U.S. Representatives Jan Schakowsky (D-IL) and Francis Rooney (R-FL) today introduced the FAIR Drug Pricing Act. The bipartisan, bicameral legislation takes the first step in addressing skyrocketing prescription drug prices by requiring transparency for pharmaceutical corporations that plan to increase drug prices (Howey Politics Indiana). Sens. Lisa Murkowski (R-AK) and Tina Smith (D-MN) have also signed on as cosponsors of the FAIR Drug Pricing Act. "It's time for pharmaceutical companies to clean up their act, otherwise they will be stuck with one customer: the federal government," said Braun. "This legislation will help push them into the right direction by requiring transparency and justification before drug companies can increase the cost of certain drugs by more than 10 percent over one year or 25 percent over three years." "For too long, I've heard story after story from Wisconsinites who are struggling to afford the life-saving medications they need," said Senator Baldwin. "Drug corporations are making prescription drugs more and more expensive with no systematic transparency to taxpayers. My bipartisan reform will change that and demand answers from drug companies who are jacking up the prices on the medications that Americans need. It is time for Congress to take action and take on the rising costs of medicine people depend on."

U.S./NORTH KOREA POW/MIA TALKS BREAK DOWN: Talks between the United States and North Korea regarding the remains of thousands of U.S. soldiers have broken down following President Donald Trump's unsuccessful summit with Kim Jong Un in Vietnam at the end of February (Newsweek). Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) "officials have not communicated with DPAA since the Hanoi summit," Chuck Prichard, a spokesman for the Defense POW/MIA Accounting Agency, said Wednesday, CNN reported. "As a result, our efforts to communicate with the Korean People's Army regarding the possible resumption of joint recovery operations for 2019 has been suspended." During Trump and Kim's first summit, in Singapore last June, which marked the first time a sitting U.S. president had met with a North Korean leader, the two signed an agreement that said the remains would be returned. "The United States and the DPRK commit to recovering POW/MIA remains, including the immediate repatriation of those already identified," the joint statement from Trump and Kim said.

TRUMP TAUNTS DEMS BY GOADING IMPEACHMENT: As the White House and Congress escalate their constitutional showdown, President Trump and his team are essentially trying to call what they see as the Democrats' bluff. The message: Put up or shut up. Impeach or move on (New York Times). Confident that there are not enough votes to remove him from office through an impeachment trial in the Senate, Mr. Trump and his advisers have chosen the path of maximum resistance, calculating that they can put the Democrats on the defensive in a fight that is politically useful for the president. The decision to assert executive privilege and defy subpoenas across the board suits Mr. Trump's natural combative instincts and fits the grievance narrative he has adopted by arguing that the establishment is out to get him. The president seems eager to force the hand of Democrats who are investigating him as if they are conducting an impeachment inquiry without actually calling it that and risking any of the political problems that might come with it. "If it's an impeachment proceeding, then somebody should call it that," said Rudolph W. Giuliani, one of the president's personal lawyers. "If you don't call their bluff now, they'll just keep slithering around for four, five, six months."

JUDGE FAST-TRACKS CASE ON TRUMP FINANCIAL RECORDS: Congress and Donald Trump's fight over his financial records is now on the fast track (CNN). Judge Amit Mehta plans next week to weigh the major legal issues raised in President Donald Trump's challenge of a congressional subpoena for his accounting firm's records, according to an order issued Thursday -- putting the case on an even faster track than it previously looked to be. Congress has subpoenaed Trump and his business' accounting records from the firm Mazars USA, and Trump's personal legal team sued to stop the records from being turned over. A hearing is now scheduled for May 14.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: I'm not surprised Mayor Pete comes in third in an Indiana poll. Beyond his unsuccessful 2010 state treasurer race, Pete Buttigieg did little to build an Indiana political base beyond the South Bend media market. He was active in AIM circles, but skipped a key step in going national by neglecting to build a base in his home state. He might win an Indiana presidential primary if no one locks up the nomination a year from now, but Mayor Pete will have to work his home state. - Brian A. Howey

MERRITT PRESSER ON 10 POINT COMMENTS: Republican Indianapolis mayoral nominee Jim Merritt will be addressing the recent insensitive and offensive remarks made against the Indianapolis Ten Point Coalition by two key members of the Hogsett administration -- and the inadequate response to the situation by Mayor Joe Hogsett and his staff (Howey Politics Indiana). He will appear at West 29th St and MLK St. at 11:45 a.m. today.

ROBERSON PROMISES 'PIVOT' IN ELKHART: After winning the Democratic nomination in the Tuesday primary for Elkhart mayor, Rod Roberson is moving his focus to defeating Republican Dave Miller in the Nov. 5 election (Elkhart Truth). "Now I pivot," Roberson said Wednesday. "And when I say I pivot, I just make sure that I'm speaking to a broader audience about the same things."

LIBERTARIAN FILES AGAINST MAYOR WINNECKE: Bart Gadau has filed to run in the Nov. 5 election for mayor as a Libertarian Party candidate (Martin, Evansville Courier & Press). Gadau so far is the only general election challenger to two-term Republican Mayor Lloyd Winnecke, who on Tuesday claimed 88 percent of the vote in a primary victory over Connie Whitman. Gadau, 43, ran as a Libertarian for U.S. Congress in 2012 and for the 1st Ward City Council seat in 2015, receiving vote percentages in the single digits. "I've lived in Evansville my entire life, and my whole adult life we've kind of done the same thing," Gadau said. "We've pushed for Downtown Evansville, and it takes all our tax money. They build big shiny buildings there to try to bring in more people, and it hurts the everyday taxpayer. "Middle- and lower-income families are hurting, and they can't pay their water and sewer bills," he said. " ... I think we need someone who represents the everyday person rather than large businesses."

NEW ERA IN HAMMOND POLITICS AFTER 2 COUNCIL UPSETS: The defeat of two longtime Hammond Common Council members in the Democratic primary points to a new era in city politics, with the council poised to become more representative of the electorate and even friendlier to the mayor's office (Racke, NWI Times). In a pair of stunning victories Tuesday, first-time council candidates Barry Tyler Jr., 34, and Katrina Alexander, 35, unseated the council's two longest tenured incumbents. Tyler made perhaps the biggest splash of primary night, easily defeating District 3 Councilman Anthony Higgs, who has held that seat since 2003. Alexander finished third in the race for Hammond's three at-large seats, knocking eight-term Councilman Bob Markovich out of the running for the general election. Some influential Lake County Democrats say the election results in Hammond mark a tipping point in favor of younger, less experienced candidates. It was no surprise that Markovich and Higgs -- with nearly a half century on the council between them -- were the incumbents unseated by 30-something challengers, said District 5 Councilman and Hammond Democratic Party Chair Dave Woerpel. "I think it's a sign of things to come," he told The Times on Wednesday. "Cities and towns (in the Region) are moving toward younger candidates."

DEMOCRATS SAY HOLCOMB IS 'TIMID': Indiana's tragic infant mortality rate often find its way into first-term Gov. Eric Holcomb's talking points, according to the Indiana Democratic Party (Howey Politics Indiana). Yesterday, like in 2018, he signed a bill to address it and has committed to achieving the lowest rate in the Midwest by 2024 (Indiana currently possesses the Midwest's highest). Great talking points, but for a governor who places high value on the 'sanctity of life' and who enjoys commanding legislative majorities, it's not an approach that screams urgency. It's a pattern for Holcomb, who refuses to burn capital or take a stand on just about anything. It's not as if big, bold action on infant mortality isn't possible. Georgia dropped its rate of infant mortality per 1,000 births from 7.7 to 6.6 between 2011 and 2013 with an at-any-cost approach. And the cost of dragging feet is high. In 2017, the Midwest's lowest infant mortality rate belonged to Minnesota at 4.8/1,000 births compared to Indiana's rate of 7.3. Apply Minnesota's rate to Indiana's 82,251 births in 2017 and 200 fewer children die before celebrating their first birthday. Extend that projection to 2024, and more than 1,400 children would be saved. Don't forget, Indiana Republicans also cut a modest funding request for doulas - a tool in the fight against infant mortality - in the waning hours of the 2019 legislative session. What's behind Holcomb's timid tactics? Indiana Democratic Party Chairman John Zody believed Holcomb is allergic to bold action. "Three years on, and it's pretty clear Governor Holcomb lacks the bold vision and political courage to take a stand on just about anything," said Zody. "Holcomb's decision to play it safe on infant mortality means as many as 200 more children won't celebrate their first birthdays. We should expect more from Holcomb with so much at stake."

Presidential 2020

DEMOCRAT DEBATES SET FOR JUNE 26-27: The first Democratic primary debate - being aired by NBC, MSNBC and Telemundo - will be at the Adrienne Arsht Center for the Performing Arts of Miami-Dade County on Wednesday, June 26, and Thursday, June 27. It will air between 9 and 11 p.m. (Politico Playbook).

MAYOR PETE DRAWS BIG CROWD IN HOLLYWOOD: South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg drew a sold-out crowd Thursday to a fundraiser at an iconic West Hollywood gay bar, providing an intimate moment with the first Democratic White House contender who is a member of the LGBT community (AP). Attendees at The Abbey each paid about $25 to attend the "grassroots" event. Buttigieg was introduced by his husband, Chasten. It's just one of a crush of fundraisers he has in the coming days, with actress Gwyneth Paltrow holding a high-dollar fundraiser later Thursday. Buttigieg told the audience to ignore skeptics who say change is impossible: "Tell them you saw ... a top tier presidential candidate on his way to the White House moments after his husband introduced him." Earlier Thursday, Buttigieg joined Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti and various union leaders at a morning rally in support of a parcel tax on the June 4 state ballot to increasing funding for the Los Angeles Unified School District, KCAL9-TV reported.

TRUMP POKES AT MAYOR PETE: President Donald Trump mocked congressional Democrats at a campaign rally in Florida on Wednesday and called on them to end their investigations into his business and personal activities (AP). Trump referred to potential Democratic rivals for the presidency, saying, "We've got some real beauties" and "Let's just pick somebody, please, and let's start this thing." The president added South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg — a 2020 Democratic presidential candidate — to the mix of potential rivals that have his attention. He said mockingly that he would like to see Buttigieg representing the U.S. against President Xi Jinping of China in trade talks. He said, "Representing us against Xi in China. That will be great."

BUTTIGIEG CAMPAIGN NOT PROVIDING HEALTH COVERAGE: On the campaign trail, Pete Buttigieg likes to say that "health care is freedom" and that if "leaving your job means you're going to lose your health care, that means you're not free" (NBC News). But as he staffs up a national campaign, the upstart Democratic presidential candidate isn't providing health care coverage to any of his own campaign workers, an NBC News review of his campaign spending disclosures shows. Instead, Buttigieg is providing a monthly stipend to workers to buy insurance on their own through the Obamacare exchanges, his campaign said, with plans to offer health care in the future. The practice stands in contrast to the other leading presidential candidates this year, as Democrats have made a point of aligning their internal practices with the policies and values they are emphasizing on the campaign trail. Federal Election Commission records show Sen. Elizabeth Warren's campaign made an $87,000 payment to United Healthcare in March. Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand's and former Rep. Beto O'Rourke's campaigns have made payments to Blue Cross Blue Shield, and Sen. Cory Booker's staff has coverage through Aetna. Buttigieg's campaign currently has 49 workers, but has been staffing up rapidly, and plans to hit the 50 mark imminently. "Crossing this threshold will put us in a position to get a good multi-state group plan, which we are currently negotiating," said Buttigieg press secretary Chris Meagher.

HUPFER CALLS BUTTIGIEG A 'HYPOCRITE': Indiana Republican Chairman Kyle Hupfer called South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg "a hypocrite" over the NBC News report. "If there wasn't already any doubt, today it is clear: Mayor Buttigieg is a hypocrite," said Hupfer (Howey Politics Indiana). "He's telling taxpayers they should shoulder the costs for everyone's health care, but he's not willing to foot the costs of covering his own employees." Instead of providing health insurance coverage, Buttigieg's campaign is providing its campaign workers a stipend of just $400 a month for health care, which the report highlights is in contrast to other campaigns. "Buttigieg's stipend is the equivalent of someone giving you a few bucks and saying 'don't spend it all in one place.' Americans deserve real health care solutions -- including more competition to help drive down costs," said Hupfer. "But all we're getting from Buttigieg is hypocrisy and proposals that will irrevocably harm the world's greatest health care system."

BUTTIGIEG CAMPAIGNS WITH GARCETTI: Pete Buttigieg campaigned with Los Angeles Mayor Gil Garcetti on Thursday (Howey Politics Indiana). "Pete Buttigieg is one of America's great mayors," Garcetti said. "At the end of the day if you care about homelessness, you better care about public education. Because if you don't educate a kid they may end up on the street when they grow up. If you're sick and tired of paying so much to incarcerate so many Americans, how about investing in education so somebody never goes to jail. If you care about unemployment, how about giving people the skills in a school so that we don't have to worry about paying unemployment to somebody who wants to work but never had the education. Pete Buttigieg understands that because Pete Buttigieg is one of America's great mayors."

BIDEN HAS BIG LEAD IN NH; PETE 4TH: Former Vice President Joe Biden is the clear front-runner for New Hampshire's first-in-the-nation Democratic primary, according to the first Monmouth University Poll of Granite State primary voters in the 2020 cycle (Howey Politics Indiana). One-third of voters say that finding a candidate who will carry on former President Barack Obama's legacy is very important to them and there is little difference in levels of candidate support by the importance voters place on Obama's legacy. On the other hand, two-thirds of primary voters point to finding a nominee who can beat President Donald Trump as more important to them than agreement on the issues. In a field of 24 announced and potential candidates, Biden holds a clear lead with 36% support of registered Democrats and unaffiliated voters who are likely to participate in the February 2020 primary. He is followed by Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders at 18%. Other contenders include South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (9%), Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren (8%), and California Sen. Kamala Harris (6%).

Congress

PELOSI SAYS WE'RE IN A 'CONSTITUTIONAL CRISIS': Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) on Thursday said she agreed with House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler's (D-N.Y.) assertion that the U.S. is currently facing a "constitutional crisis" after the panel voted to hold Attorney General William Barr in contempt of Congress (The Hill). "Yes, I do agree with Chairman Nadler," Pelosi said during a press conference in the Capitol, "because the administration has decided that they're not going to honor their oath of office." Yet Pelosi said even a constitutional crisis is not grounds to launch impeachment hearings against the president before Nadler and the heads of the other investigative committees are able to gather more evidence — and convince more voters — that such a step is necessary. "This is very methodical, it's very Constitution-based, it's very law-based, it's very factually based," she said. "It's not about pressure, it's about patriotism."

TRUMP JR. WON'T SHOW UP: A single senator criticizing a fellow senator of the same party, especially a committee chair, is rare enough (Axios). But six Republican senators (Cornyn, Cruz, Daines, Graham, Paul, Tillis) criticized the decision by Senate Intelligence Chairman Richard Burr (R-N.C.) to subpoena Don Jr. about the Russia investigation. A Trump ally said: "We're drawing battle lines: If you touch Don, we'll come after you. ... And our base will come after you." And Don Jr.'s camp knows the media will always cover a Republican civil war. What's next: We're told Don Jr. won't show up. Options include daring the committee to hold him in contempt, taking the Fifth in writing, or (most likely) a compromise like answering written questions.

YOUNG ANNOUNCES AIRPORT GRANTS TO FORT WAYNE, EVANSVILLE: U.S. Senator Todd Young (R-Ind.) today announced that Evansville Regional Airport and Fort Wayne International Airport will each receive Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) Airport Improvement Program (AIP) supplemental grants totaling $18.1 million (Howey Politics Indiana). Young urged Department of Transportation Secretary Elaine L. Chao to support funding for these important Hoosier airports. "As the Crossroads of America, it is critical that Indiana's airports like Evansville Regional and Fort Wayne International continue to make important infrastructure investments," said Senator Young. "These two Airport Improvement Program grants will help ensure these Hoosier assets remain vibrant and continue to drive economic development in their respective regions." Fort Wayne is in the midst of a vital apron improvement project to support safe and efficient aviation operations. The $9.2 million AIP grant will support the expedited conclusion of this project while enhancing operational flexibility and improving safety at the facility. Evansville's current general aviation ramp infrastructure and the airfield drainage system will be upgraded to support airport operations. The $8.9 million AIP grant will support a reconstruction project, which will prevent flooding and sinkhole development, preserve overall airport infrastructure, and ensure unimpeded commercial operations.

YOUNG INTRODUCES EARLY PELL GRANT PROGRAM: U.S. Senators Todd Young (R-Ind.), Debbie Stabenow (D-Mich.), and Doug Jones (D-Ala.) yesterday introduced bipartisan legislation to make sure that more students have access to higher education (Howey Politics Indiana). Under current law, students only find out how much financial aid they will receive right before attending college. The Early Pell Promise Act provides more financial certainty for families by pre-qualifying certain students for full Pell Grant support starting as early as the eighth grade. It also ensures that families and students who pre-qualify for aid receive additional information about the cost of college attendance and student financial aid. "My Fair Shot Agenda is focused on ensuring that all Hoosiers have an opportunity to succeed regardless of financial barriers," said Senator Young. "The Early Pell Promise Act aligns with this mission by ensuring our youth is set up for success through pre-qualification for Pell grants. By locking in financing for college as early as the eighth grade, more students will be able to afford higher education and plan for a prosperous future."

YOUNG INTRODUCES OPPORTUNITY ZONE BILL: U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R-Ind.), Cory Booker (D-N.J.), Tim Scott (R-S.C.), and Maggie Hassan (D-N.H.) introduced a bipartisan bill to restore and strengthen reporting requirements for Opportunity Zones, the tax incentive for individuals who reinvest unrealized capital gains into high-impact projects in underserved communities. These critical safeguards, which were included in the original Investing in Opportunity Act, were removed from the final measure that passed Congress in December 2017 (Howey Politics Indiana). "When we passed tax reform, I was proud to support the creation of Opportunity Zones to incentivize new investment in distressed communities across the country," said Young. "Our bill will help strengthen Opportunity Zones by increasing transparency within the program and creating metrics to measure and improve on its success."

YOUNG PRESSES TRUMP TO 'DRAIN THE SWAMP': A Hoosier senator is asking President Donald Trump to follow through on his oft-repeated pledge to "drain the swamp" by relocating federal agencies from Washington, D.C., to other parts of the country, especially Indiana (Carden, NWI Times). In a letter sent May 3, U.S. Sen. Todd Young, R-Ind., urges Trump to have his administration begin working on comprehensive feasibility studies for evaluating the economic, technological, workforce and logistical factors associated with moving all federal agencies, apart from those connected to national security, away from the national capital. "Completing these studies would be a sensible first step towards verifying the practicality of moving any single agency to a new home elsewhere in the country," Young said.

WALORSKI BILL WOULD HELP V.A. NEWBORNS: U.S. Reps. Jackie Walorski (R-Ind.), Susie Lee (D-Nev.), Doug Collins (R-Ga.), and Chrissy Houlahan (D-Pa.) today introduced bipartisan legislation to improve health care coverage for newborn children of veterans. The Newborn Care Improvement Act would allow the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to provide care for newborns for 14 days, doubling the current limit of seven days (Howey Politics Indiana). "Women who served our country with strength and courage deserve the best health care possible from the VA," Congresswoman Walorski said. "By improving care for newborns, this bipartisan bill will ensure women veterans get the support and care they need to raise healthy families."

BANKS AUTHORS MILITARY SPOUSE BILL: U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R-Indiana) introduced the House companion bill for the Portable Certification of Spouses Act, led by Senators Tom Cotton (R-Arkansas), Jeanne Shaheen (D-New Hampshire), and Martha McSally (R-Arizona) in the Senate (Howey Politics Indiana). This legislation seeks to improve the portability of occupational licenses from state to state. The bill will also help alleviate the burden military spouses bear when having to re-register a small business in a new state each time a service member gets reassigned to a new military installation.

BANKS BACKS HYDE AMENDMENT: U.S. Sen. Jim Banks (R-Indiana) wrote a letter to House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-California) and Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-California) urging them to defend the Hyde Amendment, a piece of legislation that was first passed over forty years ago and protects all taxpayer money from being used to pay for abortions or insurance plans covering abortions (Howey Politics Indiana). 103 House colleagues of Rep. Banks joined him in his effort to reaffirm broad support for the Hyde Amendment and the sanctity of life. Said Rep. Banks, "The sanctity of life is under assault by the radical left. For over forty years, it has been widely believed that while Roe v. Wade may be the law of the land, that no taxpayer money should ever go to providing abortions. Now, the radical-left of the Democrat Party wants to dismantle the Hyde Amendment, which has codified this long-held recognition of decency."

FEIGHENBAUM CALLS GAMING LAW 'GAME CHANGER': The editor of Indiana Gaming Insight says the gaming bill signed into law yesterday by Governor Eric Holcomb will be a huge boon for the Indiana economy (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). The bill allows, among other things, sports wagering both through mobile devices and at Hoosier casinos and also authorizes new casinos in Vigo County and downtown Gary. Ed Feigenbaum says the legislation does more for gaming revenue in Indiana than has been seen in many years, especially with the proposed new casinos. In an interview with Inside Indiana Business, Feigenbaum said the bill does more for the Indiana economy than just revenue. "We're also talking jobs. We're talking perhaps 800 to 1,000 jobs in Vigo County. We're talking about a net increase of some 800 jobs (in Gary)," said Feigenbaum. "We're also looking at the ability to clear the land at Buffington Harbor, which the city of Gary has been wanting to do to build a transmodal port to capitalize on the synergy of the deep water port that they've got there where they'll be able to construct or improve."

FARMERS BENEFIT FROM SEA565: When you get a surprise in your accountant's office, it's almost never a good or happy surprise. Shelby Swain Myers, Associate Policy Advisor for Indiana Farm Bureau, told Hoosier Ag Today that those surprises for farmers led to action being taken during this year's Indiana General Assembly (Hoosier Ag Today). "Late in the fall last year, farmers were beginning to meet with their accountants. We were hearing different stories about farmers having a significant increase in their state income taxes. These were unanticipated large increases that no one really planned for and no one could really figure out what was happening." Myers said that as they dug deeper, they realized that changes made as a result of the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act passed at the federal level in 2017 were the reason why. "The process for a like-kind exchange, when farmers would trade-in equipment for a new piece, got altered at the federal level. While we were held harmless there, when it trickled down to the state level, we received some issues that now the process was being treated like a sale and a purchase and farmers were being charged income tax on that sale." She said that passing Senate Enrolled Act 565, which was signed into law by Governor Holcomb earlier this week, was a big win for Indiana farmers to reverse that tax consequence. "What we hope is that now farmers can meet again with their accountant, get an amended tax return for the 2018 year, and be held harmless going forward whenever they do a like-kind exchange at the state level."

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB HANDS OFF ANOTHER TRAILS CHECK - Gov. Eric Holcomb presented a ceremonial check Thursday to celebrate the funding of a connection between two trails in northern Indiana. It's part of the first round of grants awarded by the state's Next Level Trails initiative (Hicks, Indiana Public Media). The governor presented a check of almost $870,000 to the 933 Corridor Improvement Association in South Bend. The group will use the funding to build a mile of trail that will connect existing pedestrian trails all the way from Mishawaka, Indiana to Niles, Michigan. Holcomb called the Next Level trails program a game changer for the state. "It's also a lifestyle changer in the sense that it's promoting healthy living, it's promoting safety, and then it promotes all of our pleasing natural beauty and assets," he says.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB ADDRESSES RV POWER BREAKFAST - Leaders in the RV industry gathered in Elkhart County for the seventh annual RV Power Breakfast Thursday. Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb was one of the keynote speakers, touching on state initiatives to train more workers for the RV industry while also attracting more RV workers to Indiana with financial incentives (WNDU-TV). "Regardless of what your educational level is now, there are pathways for you to skill up," the governor said. "There are pathways for you to double or triple your salary in many cases. But the missing ingredient is the education and training. And so, what we're doing is we are aligning ourselves with the needs of a community or region as a state. And that's what's really made a big difference in the thousands of people that are now going back. And if you put the time in, the state will actually put the money in. And then, ultimately, your life's transformed." This was Holcomb's second time speaking at the RV Power Breakfast.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB SCHEDULE - Gov. Holcomb Public Schedule for Saturday, May 11: Anderson University Commencement, the governor will give the commencement address, 3 p.m., Anderson University, Kardatzke Wellness Center, 1100 E. 5th St., Anderson, IN.

GOVERNOR: CROUCH SCHEDULES OCRA CONFERENCES - Lt. Gov. Suzanne Crouch and the Indiana Office of Community and Rural Affairs kicked off a series of six regional conferences in Madison, Ind. (Howey Politics Indiana). "By encouraging communities to join their neighboring regions, we are furthering the message that working collaboratively is the best practice to enhance the entire state," Crouch said. "By visiting Madison, Huntingburg, Fair Oaks, Knightstown, Angola and Greencastle, we are ensuring we hit every corner of the state. I look forward to meeting with individuals in these areas and discussing how we can work together to bring Indiana to the Next Level." The agenda includes presentations on various ways communities can utilize OCRA and other state agencies like the Indiana Department of Homeland Security and the Indiana Department of Natural Resources. These departments, as well as the director of broadband opportunities, will share how cities and towns in Indiana can increase the quality of life in their communities with state assistance. "These conferences are opportunities to network with the stakeholders and communities we serve," said Jodi Golden, Executive Director of OCRA. "Sharing best practices and new resources is vital to creating a vibrant, rural Indiana."

STATEHOUSE: HILL WINS LEGAL SHOWDOWN - A U.S. appeals court this week sided with Attorney General Curtis Hill in his efforts to defend Indiana statutes requiring local police cooperation with federal immigration detainer requests (Howey Politics Indiana). The victory for Attorney General Hill is the latest twist in a case that began when Marion County officials colluded with the American Civil Liberties Union to avoid following state law. In November of 2017, a U.S. district judge approved a consent decree between the Marion County Sheriff's Department and Antonio Lopez-Aguilar, who was represented by the ACLU. In the agreement, the Sheriff's Department pledged not to cooperate with U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) detention requests. No one, however, informed the Office of the Attorney General of the consent decree until it was already entered by the federal court. Immediately upon learning of the collusive decree, Attorney General Hill moved to intervene in the case to argue the agreement violated state law. The district judge refused the request. In its May 9 ruling, however, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit not only declared that Attorney General Hill had the right to intervene on behalf of the State, but it also held that the district court never had jurisdiction to approve the consent decree between the ACLU and the Marion County Sheriff's Department in the first place. "This appellate ruling is a win for common sense, state sovereignty and public safety," Attorney General Hill said. "When federal authorities ask an Indiana police agency to detain a person in the agency's custody, Indiana law requires the agency to cooperate. To establish any contrary policy at the local level not only violates Indiana law but jeopardizes the safety and security of Hoosiers."

STATEHOUSE: HILL'S STAFF GETS BIG RAISES - Several senior members of Attorney General Curtis Hill's staff recently received significant raises – ranging from 4% to 14%. But Hill isn't apologizing for the pay hikes. "It's about being competitive" he said – not loyalty for sticking with Hill during a tenuous time (Kelly, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Chief Deputy Attorney General Aaron Negangard saw his pay jump almost 10% – from $152,400 to more than $167,700. Solicitor General Thomas Fisher's salary rose 6.6% from $135,300 to $144,400. Others saw similar increases.

IDOR: AGENCY HOSTING MEETINGS WITH TAX PREPARERS - The Indiana Department of Revenue (DOR) announces meeting details for local tax practitioners to join Commissioner Adam Krupp in open discussion surrounding tax season (Howey Politics Indiana). Commissioner Krupp will kick off each meeting by sharing DOR program updates and new initiatives, with ample time for questions and feedback from attendees. Tax practitioners are encouraged to participate with questions and feedback regarding previous and current tax years, in an effort to help DOR make improvements. For June and July meeting schedules, click here.

EDUCATION: IU CONSIDERS GREEK REFORMS - An Indiana University task force charged with overseeing conduct at campus fraternities and sororities is considering hiring third-party, licensed bartenders to serve alcohol at Greek events (Atkinson, Indiana Public Media). IU Bloomington Provost Lauren Robel formed the 12-member advisory body, dubbed the "Greek Task Force," in October 2018 to help ensure the success and safety of the Greek community at IU. The committee's goal is to educate Greek students and enforce sanctions on hazing, sexual violence and alcohol and drug abuse. Associate Vice Provost for Student Affairs Kathy Adams Riester says the bartender measure is just one of several controversial new standards the task force is discussing. "Well, I think some of the measures that the committee is discussing are things that are not easy to change within the community," she says. The committee is also considering whether to restrict chapter sizes and encourage upperclassmen leadership within the chapters.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP HAS 'SCORCHED EARTH' STRATEGY - House Democrats' heightened hunger for impeachment is being fueled by President Trump's scorched-earth strategy of rebuffing every congressional demand for information related to the special counsel's Russia probe (Allen, Axios). An outside adviser to the West Wing tells me: "Trump's statement that they will not comply with the subpoenas and document requests was not posturing or an opening negotiating position. It is administration policy." Why it matters: Multiple fights between the two branches of government will wind through the courts, with some likely to end up at the Supreme Court.

The bottom line: Damned if he does: If Trump allows Democrats to rummage through notes and witnesses, he risks new material surfacing that piles on top of the Mueller report, triggering impeachment. Damned if he doesn't: If Trump refuses all cooperation with Congress, Democrats increasingly see the opportunity to try to impeach him. Be smart: Some Trump advisers would love nothing more than Dems trying to impeach him before 2020. It's win-win in their minds

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP WANTS SHANAHAN AT DOD - President Donald Trump will nominate acting Defense Secretary Pat Shanahan as the Pentagon's permanent leader, White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said Thursday (Politico). Shanahan has led the Pentagon since former Secretary Jim Mattis resigned in December. A Defense Department probe recently cleared Shanahan of charges of favoritism toward his former longtime employer, Boeing, widely seen as the final hurdle to his nomination.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP 'TEMPERS' BOLTON - President Donald Trump said Thursday he is satisfied with advice he's been receiving from John Bolton on international affairs, repudiating recent reports that he's losing faith in his national security adviser (Politico). "He has strong views on things but that's okay. I actually temper John, which is pretty amazing," Trump said Thursday during an Oval Office press conference. "I'm the one that tempers him. That's okay. I have different sides. I have John Bolton and other people that are a little more dovish than him. I like John."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP 'VERY SURPRISED' BY DON JR. SUBPOENA - President Donald Trump said Thursday he was "very surprised" to learn his eldest son had been subpoenaed by the Senate Intelligence Committee to testify as part of the panel's investigation into Russian election interference (Politico). The president expressed frustration a day after it was revealed that Donald Trump Jr. received a subpoena from the Republican-led panel demanding a follow-up to his prior testimony before the committee.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMPS SAYS KERRY 'SHOULD BE PROSECUTED' - President Donald Trump said on Thursday that John Kerry "should be prosecuted" for allegedly violating the Logan Act through his conversations with Iran, escalating a feud between his administration and the former secretary of State (Politico). "John Kerry violated the Logan Act," Trump said during a White House press availability. "He's talking to Iran and has has many meetings and many phone calls and he's telling them what to do. That is total violation of the Logan Act." In response, Kerry spokesman Matt Summers told POLITICO that "everything President Trump said today is simply wrong, end of story." "[Trump's] wrong about the facts, wrong about the law, and sadly he's been wrong about how to use diplomacy to keep America safe," the Kerry spokesman said.

WHITE HOUSE: KIM REQUESTED 'FAMOUS BASKETBALL PLAYERS' AT SUMMIT - Ahead of the second summit in Hanoi, North Korean dictator Kim Jong Un requested as part of the agreement between the countries moving forward that the U.S. send "famous basketball players" to normalize relations between the two countries, according to two U.S. officials (ABC News). The request was made in writing, officials said, as part of the cultural exchange between the two countries, and at one point the North Koreans insisted that it be included in the joint statement on denuclearization. The North Koreans also made a request for the exchange of orchestras between the two countries. "While we did not reach an agreement with the DPRK [North Korea] at Hanoi, we exchanged detailed positions and narrowed the gap on a number of issues," a State Department official told ABC News in a statement and declined to comment on ongoing conversations.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump and first lady Melania Trump will participate in a celebration of military mothers at 4:15 p.m. in the East Room.

PENTAGON: U.S. SEIZES NORTH KOREA SHIP - U.S. authorities seized a North Korean ship it alleges Pyongyang used to illicitly transport coal in violation of U.S. and international sanctions, the Justice Department said (Wall Street Journal). Officials said the seizure, which was disclosed on Thursday, was the first such U.S. action for sanctions violations. The 17,000-ton ship known as Wise Honest, which Indonesian maritime authorities detained off the island-nation's coast in April 2018, is on its way to American Samoa, officials said, after months of negotiations with international authorities. A U.S. federal judge in New York issued a sealed warrant for the ship's seizure last July, and the U.S. attorney's office in Manhattan filed a civil complaint on Thursday seeking the formal forfeiture of the ship.

CLIMATE: MISSISSIPPI/MISSOURI FLOODING MORE FREQUENT - Floods are worsening and coming more often along the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers—the nation's great river system that helps drain some 32 states and generates hundreds of billions of dollars in economic activity on everything from grain shipments to fishing trips (Wall Street Journal). In Plattsmouth, Neb., where the Platte River spills into the Missouri River, four of the top 10 floods have come in the last nine years, including the one in March that broke the previous record from just eight years ago. In 2011, when it "was a 500-year flood, I was pretty sure I wouldn't see anything like that again in my lifetime," said R. Paul Lambert, mayor of Plattsmouth, whose sewer and water plants will take months to get back online. "This flood in March was 4 feet higher."

CITIES: MUNCIE APARTMENTS TARGETED IN FED LAWSUIT - A Muncie apartment facility was one of 82 complexes sued Thursday by the U.S. Department of Justice over allegations of disability-based discrimination (Muncie Star Press). The Mill Pond complex in the 5300 block of West Keller Road was one of four Indiana facilities among the 82 defendants in 13 states named in the suit, filed by the U.S. Attorney's Office in the southern district of Ohio. The target of the suit is Ohio-based Miller-Valentine Operations and affiliated companies that built 82 multi-family housing complexes in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Missouri, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas and West Virginia. The suit alleges the defendants failed to design and construct housing units to make them accessible to persons with disabilities in compliance with the Fair Housing Act and the Americans with Disabilities Act. It says the 82 facilities have "significant accessibility barriers," and seeks an order requiring the defendants to bring the properties into compliance with the FHA and ADA.

CITIES: FRANKLIN RESIDENTS SAY EPA LET THEM DOWN 0 Franklin homeowners say they were left in the dark by the EPA and other government agencies set up to protect them (WTHR-TV). Dozens took up an offer to meet with a team from the Office of the Inspector General to talk about the lack of warnings over toxins in their neighborhood. "No one told us. I'm frustrated. I'm angry. I'm hurt," explained Kathy Carlson, a 40-year resident of Franklin. "No one told me that my kids were being exposed. No one told my neighbors we were being exposed," said a tearful Kari Rhinehart, co founder of the grassroots group "If It Was Your Child." "I think they've done a very poor job informing," added Steve Records. One by one, Franklin homeowners shared personal stories of living near the contaminated Amphenol site not knowing their families could be at risk. Most say they never heard of the cancer-causing chemical TCE until 2015. That's when Stacie Davidson and Keri Rhinehart turned to 13 Investigates to try to find out why so many children in Johnson County were getting sick. Our reports revealed half of the children diagnosed with cancer lived or had close ties to Franklin.

CITIES: INDY SEEKS CASTLETON REVITALIZATION INPUT - The Department of Metropolitan Development recently launched a study aimed at the strategic revitalization of the Castleton area. This project represents a critical moment for surrounding neighborhoods and businesses to think forward and help shape the vision, brand, and future investment in the area (Howey Politics Indiana). A team of diverse consultants has been hired by the City to look at and analyze retail and market conditions, traffic patterns, adjacent planning efforts, recreational opportunities, infrastructure needs, and public opinions. This activity will help inform and prioritize both public and private investments, redevelopment initiatives, and coordinated community efforts. "We're thrilled to start conversations about long term solutions with walkability, traffic flow, and new uses in the age of e-commerce," said Emily Mack, the director of the Department of Metropolitan Development. "The state of retail is evolving and it's important that we start planning with neighbors and community stakeholders for how this area can be adapted."

COUNTIES: 2 TEMPORARY JUDGES APPOINTED IN CLARK - As Clark County judges Brad Jacobs and Drew Adams recover from being shot more than a week ago, two temporary judges have been appointed to fill in (News & Tribune). Senior Judge Steven M. Fleece will serve as Judge Pro Tempore for Clark County Circuit Court No. 1, Adams' court. Senior Judge Kenneth L. Lopp will preside over Circuit Court No. 2, Jacobs' court. Lopp will start Monday and Fleece will begin Tuesday, according to orders issued by the Indiana Supreme Court. Both temporary judges will serve until Adams and Jacobs notify the court that they are able to return. Lopp and Fleece will be compensated by the state at the same rate as the regular judges. According to Indiana's roll of attorneys, Lopp is based in Corydon and was formerly a judge in Crawford County. Fleece served as the Clark County Circuit Court No. 3 judge from 1985 to 2008 and is based out of Charlestown.

Community programs encourage culture of care as Indiana's drug overdose deaths decline

INDIANAPOLIS — The Indiana Commission to Combat Drug Abuse met Thursday to discuss how to combat drug abuse harming the state's workforce, infants and public security.

Jim McClelland, the state's executive director for drug prevention, treatment and enforcement, opened the commission meeting, which heard from representatives from a public and private groups implementing programs to treat and end rampant substance abuse in Indiana.

Healthcare providers, community stakeholders and lawmakers sit on the commission under McClelland, whose position was created in 2017 by Gov. Eric Holcomb on his first day in office to address the encroaching opioid epidemic.

In the years since, Holcomb and the Indiana General Assembly have integrated drug enforcement and rehabilitation initiatives.

The number of drug deaths in the state is decreasing, according to data provided by the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). The agency's preliminary findings showed Indiana's drug overdose deaths declined since a peak in November 2017. Data provided by the CDC, for example, show an 18 to 20 percent reduction in drug overdose deaths between January and June of 2018, when compared to rates collected in the same period in 2017.

The rate at which healthcare providers are prescribing opioids is also lower, though the 2017 rate (approximately 75 prescriptions per 100 patients) was still higher than the national average at the time (an estimated 60 prescriptions per 100 patients).

But addiction persists across the nation, and Indiana is no exception.

Members of the Community Health Network outlines results of their program to combat Neonatal Abstinence Syndrome (NAS) which occurs when a pregnant women abuses drugs or alcohol.

"The important message here, I think, is that we're on a good path. We're building some momentum," McClelland said. "But at the same time, there's a lot of meth use out there."

Devon McDonald, executive director of the Indiana Criminal Justice Institute (ICJI), confirmed McClelland's concern with findings collected by his organization last year. Among other developments, the ICJI found that alcohol remains the substance most commonly abused by Hoosiers, followed by prescription medications and methamphetamines.

"I know we've discussed this in the past, but we definitely need to stay focused on the other forms of substance abuse that are happening in the state," McDonald said.

While opioid abuse remains a focus for state spending, program leaders are not blind to other forms of addiction in need of attention, explained Rebecca Buhner, the deputy director of adult mental health and addiction at the Family and Social Services Administration's (FSSA) Division of Mental Health and Addiction.

Part of that process, Buhner said, involves equipping individuals struggling with addictions of all kinds with universal resources like health insurance and transportation to treatment services.

Through the DMHA program Recovery Works, an entity that provides grants to certified services to mitigate substance abuse, Buhner said the state should look more closely at Indiana's uninsured populations. She added that 65 percent of people calling the state's 211 hotline, which can refer individuals to treatment services, do not have health insurance. This acts as a barrier to immediate aid.

Recovery Works also launched a partnership with Lyft, a ride-sharing service powered by a smartphone app, in March 2019 to provide transportation receiving aid from the program. Buhner said data reveal the majority of individuals benefiting from this partnership needed transportation to their specific treatment services, with another large percentage using the ride service to attend drug court and avoid additional punishments.

That's an important development, Buhner said, because time in jail, even for a relatively short period, can derail a patient's path to recovery.

"A lot of folks are just serving one day," Buhner said. "That does impact their work, their environment, their family life, and everything else they are trying to build to gain stability."

Data show that a third of Recovery Works clients were previously incarcerated and that 40 percent return to jail at some point in their recovery process, with more than half of that same group serving less than a week in prison.

A fear of the system and legal punishment also shadows other programs designed to combat drug abuse with medication assisted therapy and psychotherapy, as expressed by Anthony Sanders, an obstetrician and gynecologist (OBGYN) with Community East Hospital in Indianapolis.

Sanders, alongside a team of physicians, first responders and social workers, helped start a program at the hospital designed to target and assist pregnant women addicted to substances and to reduce neonatal abstinence syndrome (NAS), a disorder that can pose life-threatening results to infants.

A baby diagnosed with NAS, which occurs after a mother has exposed it to drug or alcohol abuse in the womb, can exhibit "a constellation of symptoms," as explained by Community East Hospital OBGYN Indy Lane.

Sanders said the unpredictability of the disorder makes it even more important to treat early. But, he added, women facing addiction often delay or abstain from prenatal care and addiction services completely to avoid losing custody of their children.

"Our goal is not to get your kids taken away. Our goal is to help you recover," Sanders said. "Not just for the 40 weeks you'll be pregnant, but for a lifetime."

The next step, Sanders and commission stakeholders agreed, is to continue to reverse the state's culture of stigma to help the addicted receive treatment earlier.

"There are a lot of good pieces out there, all over the place," McClelland said. "This is what we have to do, and this is how we're going to get lasting impact."

INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT

Passing marks in primary school

Insightful takeaway from Elkhart found on page two applies statewide

Ten school property tax referenda seeking additional funds for student safety, mental health services, teacher compensation, transportation, and other essential services were at stake in the primary elections held Tuesday, May 7.

Six succeeded, and four foundered.

If you combine the results from the November 2018 and May 2019 election cycles, 14 out of 22 referenda passed, a 63.6% success rate. That's down sharply from November 2017 and May 2018 when a combined 17 out of 18 referenda were successful, for a sterling 94% pass rate.

The Winners

The largest school referendum in state history prevailed in the River Forest Community School Corporation. The $1.19 property tax rate earned 56.6% of the vote – the first win ever for a school referenda larger than 80¢. RFCSC is now two-for-two on referenda (in May 2015, 68.9% of voters approved a 42¢ referendum rate). The new dollars will compensate for the steep Lake County property tax cap losses that will hit hard beginning next year.

The Frontier School Corporation sees 89.0% of voters agree to a 21¢ referendum tax rate that will largely support employee compensation. Located in the Town of Chalmers in White County, Frontier is among the smallest school districts in the state. This is the largest margin of victory in any referendum since November 2017 when the M.S.D. of New Durham took 92.1% of the vote. Frontier and M.S.D. of New Durham (in the Town of Westville in LaPorte County) enroll fewer than 1,000 students, showing that Hoosiers feel a strong allegiance to their small school districts . . . and are willing to pay more to preserve them.

The Franklin Community School Corporation will have an additional $3.5 million per year to spend on employee compensation, school safety initiatives, and student mental health services after the 23¢ referendum passed 63%-37% in that Johnson County community.

The Duneland School Corporation in Porter County won handily in its campaign to extend the 22¢ referendum tax rate approved in May 2012 for eight more years. The referendum passed by a mere 150 votes last time, but earned a solid 73.2% of the vote on Tuesday.

Home owners in the M.S.D. of Decatur Township will save one penny per $100 of assessed value after 65% of voters agreed to reduce and extend the referendum tax rate approved in May 2014. The new tax rate of $0.2890 will run through 2025, coinciding with the sunset date of an Indianapolis airport TIF. The district plans to devote $500,000 of referendum revenue to physical safety measures and wrap-around services, $2.8 million to transportation, $575,000 to building maintenance, and $1.4 million to the electricity bill.

Voters in the M.S.D. of Wayne Township said yes to a 35¢ referendum tax rate that will generate $10 million per year for the next eight years for the state's sixth-largest school district. The referendum is in addition to – concurrent with – a 35¢ referendum approved by voters in May 2015. The constitutionally enshrined property tax caps have eroded a staggering 69% of the non-debt service tax levies in the M.S.D. of Wayne. About 63% of votes cast Tuesday favored the tax increase. The median homeowner in the Indianapolis district will pay an extra $10.00 or so per month.

Affordable caps (and gowns)?

ICHE calls for minimal tuition increase

Every two years the Indiana Commission for Higher Education is required by law to set non-binding tuition and mandatory fee targets.

For the 2019-20 and 2020-21 academic years, the state agency recommends that the public colleges and universities cap tuition and fee increases for undergraduate resident students to no more than 1.65% per year. The targets were 1.4% for 2017-19 and 1.65% for 2015-17. Every year the caps are routinely disregarded by a handful of schools.

Trustees of each school must hold a public tuition and fee hearing by June 5 and formally approve rates no later than June 28.

Over the past 10 years, in-state tuition and fees at four-year public colleges in Indiana increased by an average of 1.4% per year, the fourth-lowest rate in the nation, according to data from the College Board and ICHE. The college wage premium has also increased.

In constant dollars, Indiana's state support for higher education per full-time equivalent in 2017 ($6,601) trailed the level of support from 2000 ($7,690), according to the State Higher Education Executive Officers.

Indiana is the only state among its neighbors where a year of undergraduate education at a public four-year institution consumes less than 50% of the disposable personal income of the average state resident, according to National Center for Education Statistics.

The Crestfallen

The 19¢ referendum tax rate proposed by the Plymouth Community School Corporation was resoundingly rebuffed, with 64.1% voting no.

The 28-point loss is the largest margin of defeat this election cycle, and the largest margin of defeat since 2010 for any referendum of less than 20¢.

In the Elkhart Community Schools, 62.6% spurned the 58¢ referendum tax rate that would have replaced the expiring 13¢ referendum approved by 60.2% of voters in May 2014. The question had been tarred by opponents as a “341% tax hike.”

In an interview with the Elkhart Truth, Superintendent Steve Thalheimer, who joined ECS less than six months ago, talked about the communications challenge presented by the new Education and Operations funds. “The way the system had worked previously and then with the changes that took place in January, it’s a lot of nuance to the school funding formula and school funding question that in an age of social media, people don’t necessarily pay the attention they need to understand all of it,” said Dr. T. “So it’s difficult to combat soundbites and other information that isn’t necessarily presenting the true picture of what’s going on in our district.”

“There are rational reasons to oppose this referendum,” wrote area resident Terry T. Mark on Facebook, “but instead I’ve mostly heard anger at previous school administrations, distrust of current administrators, and a poorly informed perspective on the reality of education funding throughout Indiana. Many opponents of the referendum seem to feel that a no vote will punish the administrators. The only losers in a no vote are students. Administrators will come and go, as will teachers; the ones who have no choice are the kids, especially the ones from families who have few, if any, alternatives.”

Despite the omnipresence of red “Vote Yes” signs staked in front yards throughout Steuben and DeKalb counties, 58.3% voted no on the construction project proposed by the DeKalb County Central United School District.

School officials had emphasized that the project would be “tax-neutral” given the expiration of existing debt obligations. The 34¢ tax rate would have paid for $37.6 million in improvements, including a new cafeteria and kitchen at James R. Watson Elementary; lighting, flooring, and aesthetic finishes to DeKalb Middle School (a building which hasn’t been touched in 15 years); new boilers at DeKalb High School; and a long list of athletic improvements including synthetic turf for the softball field and baseball field, new tennis courts, synthetic turf for the football field, additional track lanes, new press boxes, new concession buildings, new home bleachers, and a 45,000 square-foot field house.

The Hanover Community School Corporation lost a tight race, with just 68 votes making the difference – the slimmest margin of defeat since the tiny Cannelton City Schools came up three votes short in May 2017 (when enrollment was only ≈ 260) on a referendum for general classroom expenses.

Hanover’s loss on Tuesday was the closest vote ever for a construction referendum. The Lake County district in the town of Cedar Lake proposed a 56¢ tax rate for a $44.09 million project to construct a new 30-classroom school building for grades 3-5; a new community building at the high school with locker rooms, public restrooms, and concessions; new high school practice fields so student athletes wouldn’t have to travel to the middle school to practice; a new roof for Lincoln Elementary School; school safety efforts; and a new Resource Center with service bays for school buses and offices for the transportation, food service, operations, and IT departments.

The Lake County district’s one previous referendum attempt (a 29¢ tax increase to support general education and operational expenses) passed in May 2015 by a seven-point margin.

IN Elementary & Secondary Ed

IN General . . .

- The Cass County Community Foundation funds the countywide adoption of Raptor school security systems at all 14 public school buildings.

- Raptor includes a visitor management component that scans ID cards to screen for unwanted guests. The system also comes with emergency management features including an app for instant notification of first responders.

- A state procurement on behalf of the Indiana Department of Education for an Early Childhood Assessment recommends contracting with The Johns Hopkins University for the Ready for Kindergarten assessment system. The KReady assessment system was seeded by Obama-era Race to the Top Early Learning Challenge Grants awarded to Maryland and Ohio.

- GreatSchools recognizes 78 public high schools in Indiana with the 2019 College Success Award for excellence in preparing students to succeed after high school.

- The Indiana Department of Education announces that 18 public schools earned the rigorous STEM Certification for 2019, bringing the total number of Indiana STEM Certified schools to 78.

IN Administration . . .

- In LaGrange County, law enforcement officers will ride school buses on random days to watch for stop arm violations.

IN Budgets & Finance . . .

- Amid confusion from executive branch officials, school districts, and the media about the legislative changes to the enrollment of kindergarten students, Indiana School Boards Association General Counsel Lisa Tanselle issues guidance confirming that whether a student who turns five after August 1 can enroll in kindergarten is still a determination made locally. The compulsory attendance law has not changed. The legislature did not change who is allowed to enroll in kindergarten.

□ Section 223 of the new biennial state budget provides that the state will pay for students enrolled in kindergarten if they turn five years old by September 1, 2019 and October 1, 2020. Prior to this budget, the state only paid for kindergarten students if they turned five by August 1.

● The state budget appropriates $3 million annually to the Indiana Department of Education for “STEM Program Alignment,” a new initiative to provide grants to schools to underwrite rigorous STEM curriculum and professional development. IDOE and its STEM Advisory Council developed a six-year strategic plan to provide every Hoosier in grades K-12 with an evidence-based, effective STEM education by 2025.

□ IDOE and the STEM council had requested $10 million per year to implement the strategic plan.

IN Charter Schools . . .

● The Signature School in Evansville ranks 10th nationally in the annual Best High School rankings published by U.S. News & World Report.

□ The school also ranked third in charter schools across the nation.

● The state budget signed into law by the Governor authorizes 5,975 adult charter high school seats per year, up by 250 seats from Fiscal Year 2019. Per-student funding for adult charter high school students was flatlined at $6,750. Thus, Indiana will spend $40.33 million on adult charter highs in FY 2020 and FY 2021.

● GEO Academies submits an application to the Indiana Charter School Board seeking approval to open an Early College High School in Indianapolis in partnership with Ivy Tech Community College and the Indiana Black Expo. GEO Next Generation Academy-Indianapolis would locate on the far eastside of the city on the site of the former Crossroads Bible College, a property owned by Indiana Black Expo (and located within the M.S.D. of Warren Township).

□ The proposed GEO school would give students the opportunity to simultaneously earn a high school diploma and two years of college credit, or even an associate’s degree. Core high school courses are taken on the high school campus, but students will pursue their chosen college/career pathway primarily on the campus of Ivy Tech in downtown

Indianapolis. The predominant instructional focus in grades 11 and 12 will be students taking on-campus credit bearing courses taught by Ivy Tech professors and adjunct professors. At GEO’s 21st Century Charter School in Gary, students are required (beginning with the Class of 2022) to earn at least 24 college/career credits and/or a career certification prior to graduation. This demanding policy will be replicated at the Next Generation Academy-Indianapolis.

□ GEO has been working with Ivy Tech on plans to expand the Early College model beyond the Steel City to communities where Ivy Tech has a strong presence and where a demonstrated need exists, starting with Indianapolis. The Next Generation Academy-Indianapolis would launch in August 2020 with up to 150 ninth graders, adding one grade level per year until reaching full 9-12 enrollment of up to 700 students. In partnership with Ivy Tech and Indiana Black Expo, GEO envisions opening additional Next Generation Academies in Marion and Anderson in August 2022 and a school in Michigan City in August 2023. In August 2019, the 21st Century Charter School in Gary will expand significantly, growing from 900 to 1,550 students, and will relocate to the former Ivy Tech campus building (the K-12 charter school had a wait list of 400 students as of the end of April). GEO has served and supported charter schools since 2002.

□ The founding board of the newly formed non-profit entity that will oversee the emerging network of GEO schools includes William A. Smith, former chief of staff for Mike Pence (R) in the Governor’s Office and during Pence’s congressional career, and now president and CEO of Sextons Creek, a government relations, business services, and media production firm. Smith and Kevin Teasley, the founder and CEO of the Greater Education Opportunities (GEO) Foundation, worked together in the early 1980s on the staff of then-U.S. Rep. Dan Burton (R).

□ GEO recently hired Emily Burke away from the Center of Excellence in Leadership of Learning (CELL) at the University of Indianapolis. She has been fine-tuning GEO’s early college model in collaboration with leadership at Ivy Tech (in particular, Caleb Westberg, director of K-12 initiatives for Ivy Tech in the Northwest region). GEO has also brought in attorney Jeffrey Lozer as chief operations officer. He’s a former senior director of the Independent Network of Indiana Schools (INISchools), the Education Service Provider (ESP) established in 2013 by Goodwill Education Initiatives that was acquired in 2017 by the Klipsch Educators College at Marian University and subsequently rebranded as the Center for School and Community Success.

IN Programs & Curriculum . . .

● MGT and the Gary Community School Corporation receive approval from the Distressed Unit Appeal Board to shift the elementary students at Bailly Preparatory Academy to Glen Park Academy for Excellence and Learning, which will free up Bailey to become Bailly Middle School. Bailly Middle will be the middle school for STEM, while Gary Middle School will become the middle school for all arts programming. In addition to easing the severe overcrowding at Gary Middle School, the changes will save the district between $1.3 million and almost $1.9 million.

● Indy Achieves, tasked by Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett (D) to increase enrollment in the 21st Century Scholars program, brought in KSM Consulting to help diagnose the gaps in enrollment patterns that exist between schools.

□ The KSMC team found that in schools with the highest percentages of eligible students enrolled in the program, counselors "relied primarily on handing out and collecting paper applications, thus eliminating the online barrier for families who didn't have easy access to the internet."

□ Indy Achieves tasked KSMC to analyze census data to drive a marketing and communications outreach strategy targeting households with children who meet the income eligibility qualification for the 21st Century Scholarship program. In addition, Indy Achieves and KSMC intend to design a longitudinal data system to track the outcomes of 21st Century Scholars from middle school all the way to employment. Indy Achieve's goal is to increase student enrollment in the 21st Century Scholars program to 60% - 70% of the eligible population for 2019-20 . . . and to achieve 100% enrollment in 2020-21.

● The Indianapolis Public School's Board of Commissioners passed on the majority of the applications submitted by charter schools seeking to join the district's Innovation Network in the 2019 school year, prompting chatter about whether the inaction is indicative of a policy change.

IN Policy . . .

● The M.S.D. of Washington Township invites parents to an event on the evening of May 15 to learn about the dangers of e-cigarettes and vaping. The Indiana State Department of Health will present research exploring why and how young people start using tobacco products, teenage perceptions of vaping and flavored tobacco, and the advertising strategies that manufacturers use to appeal to youth. The evening will also include a panel discussion with students and district administrators.

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) planned a press conference at his alma mater, Carmel High School, on Friday, May 10, with students, the Indiana Hospital Association, and the Indiana Chamber of Commerce to call for raising the federal minimum age to buy tobacco products, including e-cigarettes, to 21. Sen. Young recently introduced the bipartisan Tobacco to 21 Act with U.S. Sens. Brian Schatz (D-HI), Dick Durbin (D-IL) and Mitt Romney (R-UT).

● At a crowded meeting, the Hamilton Southeastern Schools Board of Trustees on May 8 voted 5-2 to revise its nondiscrimination and equal opportunity policy to include gender identity and sexual orientation as protected classes. "Hamilton Southeastern School Corporation will not discriminate or tolerate any form of discrimination in its educational or employment activities for any reason or on any basis prohibited by applicable federal and state law, including race, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, gender identities, national origin, age or disability," the new policy reads.

□ As we told you in our last issue, during a board meeting last month, a motion to add "transgender status, sexual orientation, and gender identity and expression" to the policy was defeated in a 3-4 vote. Board President Mike Bottorff said board members who opposed the LGBT language last month received death threats as the matter assumed an extremely high profile not only in the community (where Fishers Mayor Scott Fadness (R) urged the more inclusive policy during the late stages of his primary campaign), but also throughout Central Indiana.

□ With several board members up for re-election next year, HSE Equal organizers say that votes they have taken will be remembered at election time.

IN Referenda . . .

● The Zionsville Community Schools Board of Trustees plans to seek a pair of referenda in November. One would extend the 2015 operating referendum for eight years, and the other would ask for $89 million for the construction of a sixth elementary school, expansion at the high school, and reconfiguration of Boone Meadow Elementary School.

● The $191 million referendum proposed by the M.S.D. of Lawrence Township includes the construction of three-story additions containing approximately 150,000 square feet at both Lawrence Central High School and Lawrence North High School. Students would be housed in the additions while renovations to the main buildings take place. Based on an estimated maximum average interest rate of 5.0%, the project could cost a shade over $300 million.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

● The Carmel Clay Schools board of trustees moves forward with a project to create a more secure entrance near the swimming pool, reports Current in Carmel. "The renovations will include a ticketing counter in the vestibule and space for a school resource officer to help provide security. 'This way the school can have a way to pass out tickets and sell tickets without the patrons having to enter the building,' CCS Associate Supt. Roger McMichael said."

● Replacements for Carmel and Orchard Park elementary schools will look completely different, reports Current in Carmel. "Instead of long corridors with rooms on either side," classrooms will be clustered in "grade level neighborhoods." Construction is expected to start in December.

● To inform long-range planning, the Duneland School Corporation asks Tria Architecture to assess the condition of district facilities and prepare a report within 90 days.

- The M.S.D. of Lawrence Township will be issuing $39 million in lease rental bonds this year for renovations to Amy Beverland Elementary School ($12 million) and Sunnyside Elementary School ($13 million); construction of a transportation/maintenance center ($15 million); and a districtwide technology refresh.

- The Hamilton Southeastern Schools issued $17,400,000 in bonds on May 1 to finance renovations and improvements to facilities across the district, including solar arrays. Stifel served as financial advisor. Construction will commence this Summer. HSE contracted with Ameresco to install ground mount solar modules from Jinco Solar at three sites. Annual electrical savings are estimated at approximately $311,000.

- The Vigo County School Corporation Board of Trustees expects to select an architectural/engineering firm by the end of the month to develop a facility plan that includes the three high schools. The board has scheduled three public work sessions to interview Fanning Howey, Unesco, and Schmidt Associates/J. Lake Architecture.

- The North Spencer County School Corporation board approves a bid from Midwest Roofing - Sheet Metal of Evansville for installation of a new roof at Heritage Hills High School (HHHS). The $700,400 cost is some $200,000 below the board's conservative estimate.

- A bid for construction of a new HHHS locker room, this one from Jasper Lumber Company for $93,454 also came in substantially south of NSCSC board estimates.

- The Northwestern Consolidated School District of Shelby County will ask the school board to vote in June to authorize a public hearing in July on expanding the fieldhouse at Triton Central High School, renovating locker rooms at Triton Central Middle School, and addressing the traffic flow in the middle school parking lot. The fieldhouse work includes "a concession and lobby area and building a second floor that would include the wrestling room and an observation deck. The deck would have glass walls that allow visitors to see the games being played on the three basketball courts," reports the Shelbyville News.

- The Goshen Community Schools issued $25,300,000 in bonds on May 1 for capital projects that include construction of a new facility and safety, security, and efficiency improvements. Stifel served as underwriter.

- The Tippecanoe School Corporation is advertising bids to build a new road behind the Harrison High School football stadium in an effort to improve traffic flow around the school. The board hopes to be able to award a contract in time to begin construction early this Summer.

IN Transition . . .

- Dr. Steve Yager has not been reappointed to the State Board of Education. He was originally appointed in 2015 by then-Senate President Pro Tem David Long (R) of Fort Wayne, who has since retired. Dr. Yager's term is set to expire June 30, 2019. The former superintendent of the Northwest Allen County Schools and M.S.D. of Southwest Allen County Schools will be out of town on June 5 for what would have been his last board meeting.

- Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) of Martinsville has yet to announce the new pick.

- The Board of Trustees of the Lebanon Community Schools hires Jon Milleman as superintendent. Dr. Milleman has been assistant superintendent in the M.S.D. of Washington Township since 2011 and is a former principal of Hamilton Southeastern High School and Franklin Community High School. He'll receive a base salary of $145,000.

- After four years, Julie Moorman leaves her post as executive director of Communities in Schools of Clark County, a non-profit agency that provides academic support, mental health resources, and basic needs to at-risk students there to join the Harrison County Community Foundation as chief executive officer.

- Manchester Community Schools will hold a public hearing this week to consider a proposed three-year superintendent contract.

- The Indiana State Teachers Association elects Keith Gambill as president and Jennifer Smith-Margraf as vice president.

- Gambill had been serving his second three-year term as vice president. He has taught in the Evansville public schools for 26 years. He served as the Evansville Teachers Association president before his election to the ISTA vice presidency.

IN Government . . .

- The Indiana State Board of Education approves a transformation zone plan initiated by the South Bend Community School Corporation for one middle school and four elementary schools, all of which are struggling with performance issues.

- The five schools placed in the zone will operate under dramatically different governance conditions. Propelled by the idea of school-based management, the zone school principals and teacher leaders will have operational autonomy from the central office over budgeting, hiring, staffing, calendar, schedule, professional development, and curriculum. School-based autonomies are a hallmark of the charter school sector. The South Bend Empowerment Zone (SBEZ) will be independently governed and directly accountable to a newly formed seven-member non-profit board. The zone board will enter into a performance contract with the South Bend Community School Corporation. Each of the schools is expected to extend the length of the school day by at least one hour, reports the South Bend Tribune.

- SBCSC has partnered with Empower Schools, a Massachusetts-based non-profit, to assist with design and implementation of the transformation zone plan. Empower Schools has helped launch innovative Empowerment Zones in Massachusetts, Denver, and Texas. South Bend officials have traveled to Springfield, Massachusetts, to tour the Empowerment Zone there. In addition, Education Resource Strategies (ERS) has been hired to help zone school leaders take advantage of the enabling conditions as they develop school operational plans.

- The Indiana Department of Education plans a series of regional training events on integrating Employability Skills Standards into classroom instruction, after the State Board of Education voted in May to approve the standards as required by SEA 297-2018. An abridged version of the standards: Mindset, Work Ethic, Learning Strategies, and Social/Emotional Skills.

□ The “soft skills” standards must be implemented by schools beginning with the 2019-2020 school year. They were developed by IDOE based on a combination of the National Employability Skill Standards from the Office of Career, Technical, and Adult Education (OCTAE); the Indiana Department of Workforce Development’s Employability Skills Benchmarks; the Governor’s Work Ethic Certificate; and IDOE’s Social-Emotional Learning Competencies.

- U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) introduces legislation (H.R. 2538) to create Child Safety Accounts (CSAs) – education savings accounts that parents can use to pay for tuition, fees, and other education-related expenses at public schools, private schools, and even homeschools.

□ “Unfortunately, too many students are trapped in unsafe schools,” says Rep. Banks. CSAs would allow parents the financial means to immediately transfer their child to a safer school. If approved, the tax-free accounts would only apply to the Washington, D.C. school system, but Rep. Banks says “it is my hope that the success of the program inspires more states to adopt similar policies and help children feel safe and free to learn at school.”

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

- The Johnson County Sheriff’s Office is investigating a former employee of the Center Grove Community School Corporation for a financial crime. No other details have been released at this time.

IN Higher Education

IN General . . .

- Many “small, private, remotely located colleges and universities” are struggling, but not Trine University, reports The Atlantic magazine’s national correspondent James Fallows.

□ Trine benefits from an “identity as mainly an engineering school that can equip graduates with marketplace skills” but also from the steady leadership of President Earl Books, who came to what was then Tri-State University in 2000. Trine is “the single largest employer in Angola” and “attracts students from around the United States and about 20 other countries (mainly India, China, Japan, and Saudi Arabia)—and in so doing gives these outsiders a reason to consider this corner of Indiana in their long-term plans. ... Trine has opened satellite campuses around the region. It refurbished a historic Angola church and turned it into a performing arts center. ... Trine has opened an ice-hockey arena, which has also become a home for community teams. It’s working in partnership with the city on a new innovation zone and has already fostered a number of start-up tech and manufacturing companies in the region.”

- Since he took office two years ago after running Northern Kentucky University, Ball State University President Geoffrey Mearns has embraced a credo of “civic stewardship” that runs counter to the traditional town-gown divide, reports The Atlantic magazine’s national correspondent James Fallows. “Mearns grew up mainly in Ohio, studied English at Yale (where he was a track and cross-country star, eventually running a 2:16 marathon and qualifying for the 1984 Olympic trials), and practiced law for more than 15 years, including nine years as a federal prosecutor.”

- Undergraduate students at Franklin College are conducting archival research through the papers of Indiana’s 42nd governor, Roger Branigan (D), to unearth materials for use in Indiana’s K-12 classrooms, as part of the Humanities Research for the Public Good initiative of the Council of Independent Colleges. Branigan, a 1923 Franklin alumnus, is the only Hoosier governor whose papers are not housed at the Indiana Archives and Records Administration.

- Indiana State University will digitize approximately 1,500 pages of letters and journals written by Saint Mother Theodore Guerin. English translations of her works, which were written primarily in French, will also be made available when the archive goes live through Indiana Memory and the Digital Public Library of America.

- Purdue University Northwest receives the National Center for Academic Excellence for Cyber Defense Education designation for the second time from the U.S. Department of Homeland Security and the National Security Agency. As a Center of Academic Excellence, PNW students and faculty members will be eligible to compete for National Science Foundation (NSF) and U.S. Department of Defense scholarships and grants. In the previous designation period (2014-2019), PNW received more than $5 million in grant awards from NSF and NSA, which funded activities such as GenCyber Summer Camps, cybersecurity awareness and career training for high school students and teachers, and student research projects. The new designation runs through 2024.

- Look out for IUPUI Chancellor Nasser H. Paydar in the IPL 500 Festival Parade. He’ll be behind the wheel of a ceremonial Long Beach Red Metallic 2019 Corvette Grand Sport, escorting a yet-to-be named driver. The parade will also include a 45-foot-long IUPUI Jaguar balloon handled by 20 or more student volunteers.

IN Administration . . .

- In a decision issued Thursday in Mikhail v. Manchester Univ., Inc., No. 1:17-cv-00269-HAB, Judge Holly Brady of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana rules in favor of Manchester University on a summary judgment motion in an Americans with Disabilities Act claim by a former student in the Doctor of Pharmacy program. The student had Attention Deficit Disorder and severe social anxiety, and had been placed on academic probation four times after several course failures, despite assorted accommodations that included extended time to complete quizzes and exams; exams administered in a distraction-reduced environment, and “professors were only permitted to ask the Plaintiff questions during class if she had raised her hand to ask or answer a question.” After other issues arose, more academic problems resulted and the student was ultimately dismissed from the program.

□ “The Court finds that no reasonable juror would be able to conclude from the evidence that the Defendant dismissed the Plaintiff from the Pharmacy Program in retaliation for making requests for accommodations,” concludes Judge Brady.

IN Programs & Policy . . .

● Indiana Wesleyan University launches an associate degree in Occupational Therapy Assistant at its Greenwood Adult Education Center. Classes start this Fall.

● Indiana Wesleyan University introduces a Theatre Education major beginning this Fall that will prepare future educators of elementary, middle school, and high school theatre and dramatic arts programs.

● Grace College invites middle school students to its inaugural engineering camp this Summer. Created and led by the Grace College Engineering Department Chair Fred Wentorf, the first-of-its-kind camp will introduce students to engineering through hands-on application. Students will design their own CO₂ dragsters using computer-aided design and test them through wind tunnels and racing to learn the basics of mechanical engineering.

□ The day camp is open to students entering sixth through eighth grade, and will convene on from campus 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. from July 15 - 19. The cost per student is $350, which includes lunch and engineering supplies. Need-based scholarships are available, and the camp is partially underwritten by Zimmer Biomet and other local partners.

● Indiana University home football games will be easier to stomach with the sale of beer and wine beginning this Fall. Ten percent of net sales from the adult beverages will fund campus alcohol safety programming.

□ IU’s decision follows similar popular policy changes at Purdue University and Butler University.

● Indiana University will erect a statue of the late George Taliaferro in the North End Zone plaza of Memorial Stadium. The long-time IU administrator was a three-time All-American and leading rusher on IU’s undefeated 1945 Big Ten Championship team was the first African American ever selected in the NFL draft.

IN Gifts and Fundraising . . .

● Grace College & Seminary raised $38.5 million through its two-year ASPIRE campaign, exceeding the original $37 million goal. The campaign launched in March 2017.

□ Grace recently launched new programs in agribusiness, mechanical engineering, digital marketing, and worship arts, and made investments in its first-ever track and field complex, a new competition-level soccer stadium, and a rebuilt softball diamond.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

● The next state budget authorizes 12 higher education capital projects at a cost of $389 million. Institutions had requested $643 million for 21 projects.

□ The dollar value of the higher education construction projects in the FY 2018-19 budget totaled $452 million.

□ Seven projects received bonding authorization:

- Indiana University Bicentennial Repair and Rehabilitation
- Purdue University Engineering and Polytechnic Gateway
- Purdue College of Veterinary Medicine Teaching Hospital
- Ball State University STEM and Health Professions Facilities Phase III
- Indiana State University Dreiser Hall
- University of Southern Indiana Health Prof’ns Classrooms
- Ivy Tech Community College Columbus Campus Main Building Replacement

□ Five projects were funded with cash appropriations:

- IU regional campus deferred maintenance ($8.1 million)
- Purdue regional campus deferred maintenance ($3.5 million)
- Vincennes University Electrical Substation ($12 million)
- Vincennes University Mechanical Upgrades ($10.3 million)
- Vincennes University Advanced Manufacturing and Product Design Lab Renovation ($4 million)

● The Ball State University Board of Trustees approves a $15 million indoor practice facility for football, softball, baseball, and soccer. About 90% of the cost of the privately financed building has already been committed. Pending state approval, BSU will select an architect and construction manager. The design and construction process is expected to take about 24 months, culminating with a grand opening in Summer 2021.

IN Research & Technology . . .

● Purdue University (with the Indiana Economic Development Corporation and the State of Indiana) is one of three finalists for the relocation of two U.S. Department of Agriculture research offices currently based in Washington, D.C.: the Economic Research Service (ERS) and the National Institute of Food and Agriculture (NIFA). We reported last month that the Indiana bid survived the first cut when the initial 136 expressions of interest were narrowed to 67.

□ The other two finalists are “Greater Kansas City Region” package offered by the Kansas City Area Development Council, and the Kansas City Animal Health Corridor . . . and the “Research Triangle Region,” a bid advanced by the North Carolina Research Triangle, Wake County, Durham County, and Research Triangle Park.

● The University of Notre Dame receives a $42.4 million grant from Lilly Endowment Inc. to form the Labs for Industry Futures and Transformation (LIFT) Network. The five-year grant brings together Notre Dame, the South Bend-Elkhart Regional Partnership (SBERP), and other key regional stakeholders to advance the region as an economic leader in next-generation manufacturing, entrepreneurship, applied analytics, and technology. The LIFT Network is the sixth Indiana regional community and economic development initiative Lilly Endowment has supported since 2007. According to a 2019 Brookings report, digital automation and artificial intelligence will be most disruptive to jobs in the Midwest, with the South Bend-Elkhart region being identified as the third most vulnerable workforce in the nation. A critical component of LIFT will be focused on mitigating the risk through forward-looking workforce development and training programs designed to develop existing and future talent with advanced industry skills and knowledge while fostering a culture for lifelong learning in the region. The vision for the LIFT Network emerged from a report prepared in 2018 by TEConomy Partners LLC.

- Saab will spend $37 million to construct and equip a manufacturing facility in Purdue University's Discovery Park District to support production of a new Air Force pilot training jet. The site will open next year with about 300 workers. In addition, Saab will collaborate with Purdue on research and development within possible areas such as sensor systems, artificial intelligence, and autonomous systems.

IN Government . . .

- U.S. Sen. Todd Young joins U.S. Sens. Maggie Hassan (D-NH), Tim Kaine (D-VA), and Bill Cassidy (R-LA) to introduce the "Innovation Zone (IZ) Act," a measure which would reform the under-utilized and inefficient experimental sites initiative within the Higher Education Act. The IZ Act would rename experimental sites as "innovation zones" to better reflect the program's mission of encouraging higher education institutions to experiment with strategies to increase student success. While the experimental sites initiative was first introduced in the mid-1980s, the bill authors are concerned that a lack of evaluation and transparent data collection has prevented Congress from using information from the experimental sites to make real policy changes. They call these experiments vital to understanding how to improve student success and reduce regulation within the framework of higher education. The IZ Act would require the U.S. Secretary of Education to establish a methodology for capturing data before an experiment begins, provide colleges with a clear direction for reporting data, and provide the higher education community an opportunity to submit suggestions for future experiments. "These experiments have the ability to promote innovation and access within our higher education system, but first we must have a way to measure what works and what does not. Our bill will improve data collection and accountability, and ultimately better serve our students," said Sen. Young.

- U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) introduces bipartisan legislation with U.S. Sens. Debbie Stabenow (D-MI), and Doug Jones (D-AL) Wednesday that would ensure more students have access to higher education. Under current law, students only find out how much financial aid they will receive right before attending college. The "Early Pell Promise Act" would provide more financial certainty for families by pre-qualifying certain students for full Pell Grant support starting as early as the eighth grade. The measure would also provide families and students who pre-qualify for aid with additional information about the cost of college attendance and student financial aid. "My Fair Shot Agenda is focused on ensuring that all Hoosiers have an opportunity to succeed regardless of financial barriers," said Sen. Young. "The Early Pell Promise Act aligns with this mission by ensuring our youth is set up for success through pre-qualification for Pell grants. By locking in financing for college as early as the eighth grade, more students will be able to afford higher education and plan for a prosperous future."

- The General Assembly boosts higher education operating spend by $13.6 million (1.0%) in Fiscal Year 2020 and $34.00 million (2.5%) in Fiscal Year 2021. That compares to increases of 1.7% in FY 2016, 3.5% in FY 2017, 1.25% in FY 2018, and 2.5% in FY 2019.

□ The state also exacted an across-the-board base funding reduction of 6.07% in Fiscal Year 2020 and 4.68% in Fiscal Year 2021.

□ The new funding and the existing funds that are generated from the institutional base reductions are combined into a pot of money that then gets parceled out through a performance funding formula that rewards schools for making progress toward the state's higher education goals.

□ Almost half (47.80%) of the money in the performance funding pool will be allocated to institutions based on their improvement in on-time graduation rates. About one-fifth (19.03%) of performance funding is awarded for incremental gains in degrees completed, and another 15.20% of the performance monies flow based on degree completion and on-time graduation by low-income (Pell-eligible) students. Institutions also earn funds for increasing the number of STEM degrees conferred (13.80% of the formula). The fifth and final metric rewards institutions for improving student persistence rates (4.16% of the formula).

□ In the FY 2018-2019 biennium, six metrics went into the performance funding formula, and the six were weighed as follows: Overall degree completion (40%); On-time graduation (30%); At-risk degree completion (20%); STEM degree completion (8.0%); Remediation success (1.0%); and Student Persistence (1.0%). The remediation incentive has been eliminated from the formula beginning in FY20.

□ The two metrics of overall degree completion and on-time graduation have been in place since 2007 - but their respective weights change dramatically in the upcoming biennium. The relative importance of overall degree completion will be halved from 40% of the formula currently to 20% in FY 2020-21. On-time grad rate will be elevated to the top priority, surging from 30% of the formula in the current budget to nearly 50 percent. The formula added the Pell degree metric in 2009 and the student persistence and STEM degree metrics in 2013. The STEM incentive is currently limited to research institutions; however, the metric will be open to all schools for the first time beginning in FY 2020. Another change for the new biennium: the at-risk and persistence calculations have been tweaked to control for enrollment fluctuations. "Instead of raw amounts, we are now measuring percentage increases," says Alecia Nafziger, chief financial officer of the Indiana Commission for Higher Education. An idea whose time has not yet come: adding graduate wages/earnings data to the performance formula.

□ A record 7.00% of Indiana's higher education operating appropriations will be allocated on the basis of performance in each year of the upcoming biennium. The percentage of appropriations linked to performance has increased incrementally almost every biennium, growing from 1.0% to 3.0%, then to 5.0% in FY 2014 and FY 2015; 4.0% in FY 2016; 6.5% in FY 2017; 5.25% in FY 2018; and 6.5% in FY 2019. By paying for what it values, Indiana drives better results for student success and completion, or so the theory goes. The performance funding pool grows from $80 million in FY 2019 to $86 million in FY 2020 and $87 million in FY 2021.

□ Three schools absorb a reduction in the first year of the biennium: Indiana University Bloomington, Purdue University West Lafayette, and Ivy Tech Community College. Six see state funding bumps of at least 4.0% in both years of the biennium: IU East, IU Kokomo, IU Northwest, Purdue Northwest, and Vincennes University.

	FY 2020	vs. FY 19	FY 2021	vs. FY 19
ITCC	$ 226.53	- 0.61%	$ 229.89	0.86%
PUWL	$ 219.50	- 1.08%	$ 222.76	0.39%
IUB	$ 199.01	- 0.94%	$ 201.96	0.53%
BSU	$ 132.44	0.06%	$ 134.41	1.42%
IUPUI	$ 109.48	3.41%	$ 111.10	4.94%
ISU	$ 71.01	4.54%	$ 72.06	6.10%
USI	$ 47.50	2.10%	$ 48.21	3.61%
PNW	$ 46.05	5.48%	$ 46.73	7.05%
VU	$ 42.92	4.39%	$ 43.56	5.94%
PUFW	$ 42.82	0.48%	$ 43.46	1.97%
IUSB	$ 24.51	2.20%	$ 24.87	3.72%
IUSE	$ 20.58	2.16%	$ 20.89	3.68%
IUNW	$ 18.59	5.44%	$ 18.87	7.00%
IUK	$ 15.82	12.92%	$ 16.06	14.60%
IUE	$ 13.84	18.33%	$ 14.05	20.09%

□ The state budget funds 52 higher education line items in FY 2020 and 51 in FY 2021, at a cost of $469 million in the first year and $483 million in the second year. Institutions went into the 2019 legislative session seeking 11 new line-items at a cost of more than $35 million per year, but lawmakers declined to approve any new line items (after approving five new line items in the current state budget).

□ Money for the 12 different tuition and fee remission programs that benefit family members of military and public service officers increases by $5 million over the biennium. More than 5,000 Hoosiers participate in these programs annually. Outside of the state budget, legislation was passed in 2019 at the request of the Indiana Commission for Higher Education to unify the eligibility rules for the 12 tuition and fee remission programs. Moving forward, all participants will be required to maintain a minimum grade point average to maintain eligibility. About 500 recipients had a GPA of less than 2.0 in FY 2017, according to the Indiana Commission for Higher Education.

□ The budget increased funding for the state's main financial aid programs - 21st Century Scholars and Frank O'Bannon Scholarships - by almost $75 million over the biennium. Indiana spent $342 million on these three programs in Fiscal Year 2018. Students who enrolled at private colleges and universities accounted for 26% of state financial aid dollars in Fiscal Year 2018, according to the Indiana Commission for Higher Education. The three private institutions that were the largest beneficiaries of state financial aid programs were Indiana Wesleyan University ($16.94 million received by 2,925 students), University of Indianapolis ($10.81 million for 1,578 students), and Indiana Tech ($9.58 million for 1,537 students).

IN Transition . . .

● Danny Lopez will leave his post as chair of the Governor's Workforce Cabinet to join Strada Education Network on May 20 as chief of staff and senior vice president. Lopez also spent the last two years serving as deputy chief of staff to Governor Eric Holcomb (R). Indianapolis-based Strata is a nonprofit organization focused on enhancing student success in postsecondary education and careers, an entity that grew out of the former USA Funds, one of whose leaders is former Indiana education and workforce development official Carol D'Amico, a former top Ivy Tech Community College administrator.

□ P.J. McGrew, policy director for the Workforce Cabinet, will become the new executive director. McGrew is a former teacher, former chief of staff for the State Board of Education, and former education policy director for Gov. Holcomb. He began his career as a teacher.

□ Commissioner of Higher Education Teresa Lubbers will serve as interim chair of the Workforce Cabinet while continuing with her current responsibilities.

● Willie L. Banks Jr., vice president for student affairs at Indiana State University, is named vice chancellor of student affairs at the University of California, Irvine. ISU Dean of Students Andy Morgan serve as interim VP of student affairs through June 30, 2020, while a national search is conducted.

● Jeff Papa, chief of staff and general counsel to the Indiana State Senate, has been named as the newest Alumni Representative to the Board of Trustees of the Rose-Hulman Institute of Technology.

● As it preps for the "largest and most ambitious" fundraising campaign in school history, Ball State University appoints Jake Logan as president of the Ball State University Foundation and vice president for university advancement, effective June 3.

□ Logan is currently the assistant vice chancellor for the University of Missouri, and previously served as the executive director of development at the University of Oregon School of Law and in advancement positions for his alma mater, the University of Florida.

● Bill Blizzard steps down on May 31 from his position as executive director of the Indiana University Innovation and Commercialization Office.

● Purdue University identifies four finalists for the position of executive vice president for research and partnerships: Tomás Díaz de la Rubia, vice president for Purdue's Discovery Park; Theresa Stellwag Mayer, vice president for research and innovation at Virginia Tech; Suvranu De, head of the Department of Mechanical, Aerospace and Nuclear Engineering at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute; and Timothy J. Bunning, chief scientist at the Air Force Research Laboratory's Materials and Manufacturing Directorate.

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

Pie in the eye means pie in the sky?

KFW loss, Illinois 3rd airport revival talk shades Buff transmodal effort

Lots of 2019 legislative discussion time – at least peripherally – was driven by the purported imperative to move the two Gary casino vessels and attendant physical facilities from their home since 1996 in Buffington Harbor to allow for a “transformational” transmodal project.

That effort was proposed to build on the potential synergy of a deep-water port there, the largely untapped potential of the nearby Gary-Chicago International Airport, freight railroad line traversing the property, and the ability to host truck terminals and warehouses on abundant brownfield property close to interstate highways.

Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) brought key lawmakers to the site during the Summer of 2018, and top Senate leaders – particularly on the fiscal front – left impressed with the vision and committed to give Gary a hand up, as opposed to the proverbial handout. Sen. Eddie Melton (R) of Gary authored SB 66 as a companion to the gaming expansion bill to detail a working framework for the cleanup, transfer, and adaptive reuse of the property once the casinos floated away, and the overall project governance.

When Senate Republican leaders amended the bill to ensure more state control of the local project, it seemed to be an official indication that the project would come to fruition, and the bill looked like a lock as a trailer bill to the omnibus gaming legislation.

Sen. Melton fought detractors who said that the proposal was too ambitious to take root – and those who questioned whether it was a simply an excuse to move the casino vessels and start the dominoes – by insisting that this was not “pie in the sky,” and he and Gary city officials claimed that major unnamed developers were lined up to move dirt as soon as Buffington Harbor (or “Benton Harbor,” as one key senator referred to it on the Senate floor and subsequent interviews) was officially freed up.

Yet after it passed 43-6 in the Senate, when it then moved across the Rotunda to the House (sponsored by no less than House Committee on Ways and Means Co-chair Todd Huston (R) and the ranking Democrat on Ways and Means, Rep. Greg Porter(D)), SB 66 didn’t even manage to earn a committee hearing.

So with gubernatorial approval of the major gaming bill, the Majestic Star Casino vessels are expected to begin the process of vacating the Buffington Harbor property. Spectacle Entertainment, LLC should soon declare its formal intent to move one casino inland off the footprint within Gary and relinquishing the second license as it pursues the new Vigo County casino license. And that would seem to open up the underutilized Buffington Harbor property for offers, if not place it up for grabs.

But two major intervening events have occurred since Hoosier lawmakers returned home April 25, casting doubt on both the short-term prospects for and long-term viability of the Buffington Harbor project.

One of them took place in Illinois, and the other in Gary itself. Either can be devastating to the fledgling plans. Taken together, both could well prove dispositive.

Workforce developments

Lopez leaves; Lubbers leads; McGrew aids

A sea change occurs in the Governor’s Workforce Cabinet, as its chairman, Danny Lopez, will leave that post to join the Indianapolis-based Strada Education Network as senior vice president and chief of staff.

Commissioner of Higher Education Teresa Lubbers will serve as the interim chair of the Workforce Cabinet, and will continue her current responsibilities at ICHE, and P.J. McGrew, the cabinet’s director of policy, will become the executive director.

Lopez led the cabinet’s effort to realign and better coordinate the multiple state agencies that play a role in developing Indiana’s workforce. He leaves for Strata, a nonprofit organization focused on enhancing student success in postsecondary education and careers, an entity that grew out of the former USA Funds, one of whose leaders is former Indiana education and workforce development official Carol D’Amico.

McGrew, a former teacher, was the Holcomb Administration’s education policy director, and also served as the associate policy director for the Indiana Education Roundtable, director of special projects for the Department of Workforce Development and State Board of Education chief of staff.

The first big blow came from across the border.

Less than 48 hours after the gaming bill passed and the General Assembly adjourned sine die, three Illinois Democratic members of Congress, Illinois House Speaker Mike Madigan (D), and 52 south suburban officials – including two-dozen mayors, several state lawmakers and some Chicago aldermen – sent a three-page letter to new Illinois Gov. JB Pritzker (D) requesting his support for the long-simmering South Suburban Airport (SSA) proposal and surrounding infrastructure. The state reportedly currently controls some 90% of the land needed for a single-runway airport at the preferred site, and has secured funds for the remainder.

The SSA concept has been floating around since the late 1960s, heating up at times in the mid-1980s (as the Federal Aviation Administration first urged Chicago to build a third airport in 1985) and the 2000s, and ultimately cooling down as the underused Gary Regional Airport morphed into the Gary/Chicago International Airport under the administration of then-Chicago mayor Richard M. Daley (D) and local, state, and federal officials seemed to be more interested in an expansion of the O'Hare International Airport (whose lengthy runways extend literally as many feet close to Rivers Casino in Des Plaines, Illinois as Majestic Star Casino is to the Gary airport runways).

Outgoing Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel (D-IL) this month pushed back against the SSA revival, noting that “The significant modernization programs underway at O'Hare and Midway will keep passengers connected and fuel new economic opportunities for the region for years to come. In fact, when the O'Hare expansion is complete, it will be the equivalent of adding a third airport to the area. O'Hare is already number one and our modernization will secure it and the Chicago area's aviation future.”

Hizzoner continued, “If the state has an extra $150 million to spend, schools, mass transit, libraries and parks could wisely use those resources.”

Note that Mayor Emanuel said nothing about the Gary airport, which his predecessor had pushed so hard.

The Gary facility has since undertaken key (and expensive) railroad relocations, environmental remediation, and runway expansions in the expectation that it would be accommodating regular scheduled passenger service and cargo flights.

Yet as the airport failed to meet expectations (more scheduled airline routes have started and failed in recent years than Gary has had mayors since SSA was initially proposed), provide dividends for the Windy City, SSA interest resurfaced and was advanced (in the form of a site in Peotone, Illinois) by then-U.S. Rep. Jesse Jackson, jr. (D) before he headed to federal prison.

The cause has now been taken up by Jackson's successor, U.S. Rep. Robin Kelly (D), whose district extends from Lake Michigan south along the Indiana border to the middle of Newton County. “The time has come to finally build the South Suburban Airport. We know it will create thousands of good-paying jobs, boost our economy and allow Illinois to reclaim its aviation pre-eminence,” said Rep. Kelly as she released the letter she led to Illinois' governor.

The officials wrote: “Just as Midway and O'Hare spearheaded Illinois' growth for the past century, SSA will be a cornerstone for prosperity in the 21st Century As proposed, it will create an economic engine south of Chicago that would generate tens of thousands of jobs, hundreds of millions in annual tax revenues, and billions in new economic activity for Illinois.”

Totally ignoring Gary and the Gary airport's agreement with the City of Chicago, the letter continued, “Chicago is the largest US market without three airports.” Acknowledging that airports take decades to plan – and rarely happen – the officials reminded Gov. Pritzker that “Thanks to the bipartisan efforts by five governors over decades, Illinois has secured the key components – land assemblage, legislative authority, and broad business, labor and political support.”

And while Chicago's outgoing mayor is an SSA skeptic, the incoming mayor focuses upon the impact on Chicago's other airport . . . and also fails to mention Gary. “Midway is an incredible economic force for the Chicago's Southwest Side. Its growth has been a major driver for development of the area and the city's tourism industry. I am committed to supporting economic development that transforms neighborhoods, but we must also protect the existing institutions which have been spearheading so much current investment and growth,” Mayor-elect Lori Lightfoot (D) said in a statement. She continued, “If and when the time comes, I will be actively engaged in the conversation about an additional airport while ensuring that our investments in Midway continue to provide economic development.”

The imperative for the letter from Rep. Kelly and crew was ostensibly not to preempt Indiana's decision to better capitalize on the Gary/Chicago Regional Airport, but rather to convince Gov. Pritzker to “apportion $150 million in the 2020 capital bill for initial off-site improvements – a new interchange on I-57, local road upgrades, and connectivity to utilities.”

The airport itself, near Monee, would actually be financed with private dollars.

Crain's Chicago Business reports that Rep. “Kelly wants that road funding in the capital bill and wants the Illinois Department of Transportation to formally seek a private firm to build and operate the field. And it appears she's willing to turn over control of the field to officials in Will County. That could be a key concession, because Jackson and Will officials had feuded over whether a Jackson-controlled commission or the county should be in charge.”

Crain's also seems to suggest that a new Peotone facility would be competing for the same business and bucks as Gary: “Industry insiders say with new runways and gates at O'Hare, there likely is no room for a passenger airport at Peotone, but much potential for one aimed at handling cargo from the numerous warehouse and distribution facilities that have opened in the area in the past two decades along the nearby I-57, I-80 and I-55 corridors. ‘The connection between the south suburbs and the logistics industry grows every day,’ said Joe Schwieterman, an aviation expert who heads DePaul University's Chaddick Institute. ‘International investors are looking for the chance to get involved in a cargo airport. This one has possibilities.’ O'Hare's cargo business is more express cargo and perishables, Schwieterman added. ‘Peotone would be driven more by manufacturing.’”

So while Indiana's move to beat Illinois to the punch with a casino along the border between Lake Michigan and the Ohio River (Illinois had been considering a casino for Danville, Illinois, on I-74 at the Indiana border, but that should be off the table with the Vigo County authorization) seems to have paid off, the mega-modal mission simply seems to have awakened the giant again, and Indiana might have made a mistake by not immediately following the gaming expansion bill with Sen. Melton's SB 66 framework as amended by Senate Committee on Appropriations Chair Ryan Mishler (R).

A considerable number of political, regulatory, environmental, legal, and financial hurdles need to be overcome for SSA to be moved much further forward, but the same can be said about the Gary project, and both seem to be on equal footing now (recall that it will take a minimum of 18-24 months for Spectacle to receive all the approvals it needs to move and then ultimately build a new $300 million casino complex on I-80/I-94, with additional demolition work required to clear the Buffington Harbor "pavilion," docks, and former Trump hotel).

BUT WAIT! In the vernacular of those late night television ads for overpriced products you don't need, the Illinois third airport action isn't the only potential category killer.

As we noted on the front page in describing the port package, this was the pet project of Mayor Freeman-Wilson . . . but she was handily defeated in a seven-way mayoral primary Tuesday, as were several Gary City Council members, meaning that she's a lame duck and Gary will have a new mayor and new priorities come January. Folks in Indianapolis have never warmed to the state's former attorney general, and without her being able to back up any rhetoric with a reminder that state government is stuck with her for another four years, she loses any clout she might have once carried – and that had been minimal.

If you think the casino deal was swung as a favor to her, or that assorted checks and balances and bells and whistles were ignored on her behalf, you're flat wrong. The number of lawmakers who voted for the bill just to help the City of Gary would certainly not even comprise the difference in votes between passage and failure.

So this was a Mayor Karen deal, and was perceived as such in the State House, and there was virtually no discussion of the proposed project in the Gary mayoral race, so we don't know quite where Lake County Assessor Jerome Prince (D), the new Democratic mayoral nominee for perhaps the toughest job in Indiana politics, stands on this, and how willing he is to go to the mat for the "not invented here" deal even before he would find himself elected.

If he does throw his full faith and credit behind the effort, he would likely be a better salesman – inside the city and in the State House – than Mayor Karen.

A former Marine who commands authority – "When Jerome Prince speaks, people listen," says Lake County Democratic Party Chair James Wieser of the Gary Democratic Party chair. He's a guy who tells people "This is what I want to accomplish," and then proceeds to tell them how he intends to accomplish it.

And Prince understands the city – he's a Lew Wallace High School alum who served on the Gary City Council – and the country, having also spent time on the Lake County Council. He has political chops that Mayor Karen lacked. As county assessor, he is intimately prepared for the impact of property tax caps to hit soon when Lake County circuit breaker relief runs out, and he is well aware of the taxable base in the city and that only about 40% of property taxes get paid.

The bottom line: This is a guy who not only can hit the ground running if he believes in the transmodal project, but probably do so a few steps ahead of where Mayor Freeman-Wilson leaves off.

But will he be committed? And, if so, would he be willing to sacrifice what is no doubt necessary to win approval from state authorities (and we'll make no bones about it, like many things these days, this will be directed via the Indiana Finance Authority and Office of Management and Budget, and not through the Indiana Economic Development Corporation)?

When we talk about sacrifice, we mean whether as mayor, Prince would be willing to relinquish control (recall how just a few months ago, Senate Committee on Appropriations Chair Ryan Mishler (R), one of the Republicans who truly believes in the value of this project amended the SB 66 governance concept to have it controlled from 206). But we're also talking about what we see as a grand deal that could make it worthwhile for Prince and the people of Gary and Northwest Indiana.

If this can be pulled off (and we're back to that pesky Illinois-based third Chicago-area airport sticking its nose in under the tent again) the tradeoff that you will eventually learn about would likely entail Gary and its mayor giving up control of the Gary/Chicago International Airport and oversight of the new transmodal concept in exchange for state help in paving the way for the lakefront development and distressed tax relief for the city and its schools (the form is to be determined, with a combination of bonding and betting on the come likely to comprise the bulk of the financing).

One other item that could be negotiated going forward: Whether the State (and the quasi-state agencies like IFA and the Indiana Port Commission) can agree with Prince and Lake County leaders on appointing a Robert Moses-like figure to oversee the overall efforts, adding a key element of accountability.

There are a few former legislators from the area that could fill this role (Bill Fine, Hal Slager, or Tim Fesko, for example); or even a former mayor (such as outgoing Valparaiso Mayor Jon Costas (R)); or former attorney general Steve Carter (R), a Lake County native, even before business and industry or local association leaders come into play . . . but a single white Republican may not be the most “politic” appointment, so the board concept with an executive director is likely to carry the day.

The takeaway is that this transmodal project still could happen if the change in administrations were the only stumbling block, but there would still be a lot of negotiating and concessions ahead.

Unfortunately, there is still that Illinois thing, and we’ll leave you with a parting thought on that.

Illinois politicians frame their discussion of a new Chicago-area airport in the context of what their respective constituencies stand to gain from it, and not whether it makes sense from an aviation perspective – and without considering the already existing Gary/Chicago Regional Airport option – that stands to be enhanced by the transmodal port which could also relieve some pressure from related Illinois facilities (without necessarily interfering with money flowing to Illinois from intermodal logistics).

Regardless, it appears that once again Gary is being dissed – this time by its Chicago and Illinois airport authority partners . . . and perhaps by Hoosier lawmakers as well, who missed an opportunity to jumpstart Gary’s biggest economic development effort in generations, an oversight that could cost Gary a huge slice of the regional economic development pie that it sought . . . and render those plans the “pie in the sky” that Sen. Melton sought to counter.

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

- Don Bates, Jr. (R) finally files termination report for his congressional campaigns . . . but leaves it a mystery as to how (or if) he’s paid off more than $50,000 in loans he made to his own effort.

State Office Races . . .

- We Ask America was in the field in Indiana (04/29-05/05; 800 RVs, margin of error $\pm 3.46\%$), and one question asked was “[D]o you believe that Eric Holcomb has done enough to deserve re-election?” A hefty 54% seems to believe that he merits reelection at this point, and only 20% (about one-half of the core Democratic vote) feels otherwise.

Yes	Probably	No	Unsure
26%	28%	20%	26%

IN Mayoral Races . . .

- The primary elections are over, and it appears that there are no Kentucky Derby-like challenges or disqualifications, and there are a few generalizations we can make. Perceived mayoral arrogance – in the form of eschewing public participation or input (or even that of other governmental officials or bodies) may well attract challengers, but is typically insufficient to overcome large campaign war chests (see, e.g., Carmel), but where the mayor is seen as out-of-touch by voters and not “like them” as part of the larger community, even typical conditions favoring the incumbent can’t carry them across the finish line (see, e.g., Gary, where the National League of Cities presidency and other national gigs don’t play quite as well as international climate change leadership does in Carmel). And where a mayor may have avoided a challenge but has still proven to be a lightning rod, voters may take out some of their frustrations on other related – city council – candidates on the ballot (see, e.g., Westfield, Lake Station, and Hammond).

- On the positive side of the mayoral primary ledger, a thoughtful, comprehensive, participatory, and well-communicated economic development plan (or at least one with most of those elements, and which didn’t depend upon offering unprecedented upfront economic incentives to lure a Keto distributor, Huawei, or Foxconn to town) can benefit mayors and candidates who have been part of such schemes (see, e.g., Greenwood, Fishers, Noblesville, Hobart) – as can related big picture quality of life initiatives (like parks and trails and festivals). And the only mayor promoting an aggressive economic development plan who lost a primary (Gary) was largely seen as selling snake oil, rather than a place through which snake oil could be profitably imported, warehoused, distributed, and transported.

- This may have been the most boring round of mayoral primaries in recent Hoosier history, with just a handful offering any reason for interest beyond municipal boundaries. The only truly competitive ones that some were watching from afar with broader implications were the Republican races in Carmel and Fort Wayne and the Democratic races in Gary, East Chicago, and South Bend. The Mitchell and Anderson races may have been interesting because of the history on the table, and Kokomo and Muncie saw open seat races with competitive races on both tickets, but broadly speaking, incumbents were not seriously opposed (one where the incumbent was pressed which we did not reference above was in Frankfort) and few races generated any sparks that fell outside the respective cities (Warsaw falls into that category).

- Here are some of the race results we thought you should know about: Mayor Pete’s endorsed successor, James Mueller (D), led the crowded field by about 12 percentage points over the second place candidate, former St. Joseph County Democratic chair Jason Critchlow (D) . . . Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett (D) and Senate Majority Caucus Chair Jim Merritt (D) will face off this Fall after each handily won his respective primary, bleeding only one in five votes. Mayor Joe wants this race decided on Indianapolis’ conversion to a high tech workforce, road reconstruction, a larger and reenergized public safety force, and attention to neighborhood issues, while Republicans will seek to focus on the murder rate, potholes, and downtown homelessness (watch to see who uses mass transit and how as the controversial Red Line opens around Labor Day). Indianapolis Democrats assert that turnout shows increased Democratic voter enthusiasm and Republican struggles, with overall turnout up by almost eight percent, Democratic turnout growing by 20%, and GOP turnout down by nine percent from 2015 numbers . . . emerging from big fields with big names on both sides to battle for the open Princeton mayor’s office will be Princeton Common Councilmember Greg Wright (R) and Gibson County Councilmember Dan Beard (D). Wright defeats Mayor Brad Schmitt (R), who finished third in a field of four, with Wright taking 37%, Gibson County Councilmember Michael Stilwell taking 32%, and Mayor Schmitt just 24% (and a fourth candidate with seven percent) in a GOP primary marked by high turnout. Beard takes home only 40% of the vote in winning his three-way race . . . Lebanon Mayor Matt Gentry (R) was renominated with an edge of some 17 percentage points over the second-place finisher, a county official and Republican county chair. He finished with less than a majority, but is currently unopposed in November . . . United Way President Abbie Smith (D) takes almost 60% in her Kokomo primary win, while Howard County Commissioner Tyler Moore (R) takes home 90% to set up a good general election contest in the City of Firsts . . . Carmel Mayor Jim Brainard (R) wins some 55% in a contentious contest over Hamilton County Councilmember Fred Glynn (R) that involved allegations of bribery and sexual harassment against the incumbent and saw Brainard on TV and in direct mail slamming Glynn alleging unpaid taxes, tax liens, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct, and even a lawsuit from his own homeowner's association (and Glynn responding with a hastily prepared mailer). Expect a Demo to file . . . we told you to expect the rank order as it ultimately turned out in Noblesville, with pro-development City Councilor Chris Jensen (R) earning just over 46% of the vote in a four-way contest for an open office, trailed by about 350 votes by old-city candidate Mike Corbett (R) with some 31%, and local school board member Julia Church Kozicki (R), an attorney from a prominent local family third with just under 20% of the tally. No Democrat has yet emerged, but the outgoing incumbent won his first term as an independent 16 years ago . . . there will be no umpteenth rematch in Anderson as Madison County Auditor Rick Gardner (R) defeats former mayor Kevin Smith (R) 46% to 41% to challenge Mayor Tom Broderick (D) in November. Mayor Broderick seeks to become the first Anderson mayor to be re-elected to consecutive terms this century (Mark Lawler (D) last pulled off that feat in 1999) . . . Warsaw's prickly Republican primary sees Mayor Joe Thallemer (R) prevail with more than 63% over Ron Shoemaker (R) in a campaign marked by social media incivility . . . founding Fishers Mayor Scott Fadness (R) scores an easy renomination win . . . East Chicago Mayor Anthony Copeland (D) wins renomination with about 3,100 votes (and 70%) over former Rep. John Aguilera (D), a former Lake County official who was the Democratic nominee for state treasurer in 2018. The actual election day turnout was extremely low, and even adding in the early votes (about 50% of the total, with the incumbent winning by more than 2.5:1 among these voters), the total number of votes cast was about the same as in the Town of Highland . . . Frankfort Mayor Chris McBarnes (R), who reversed his earlier decision not to seek a third term - even after an incumbent city council member jumped in - overwhelmingly won renomination, racking up 73% of the vote, and Mayor McBarnes, Indiana's youngest mayor when he was first elected at age 23 in 2011, currently faces no Fall opposition . . . in the Mitchell mayoral race, Mayor John "JD" England (R) won 56% of the vote over former mayor Dan Terrell (R) in his renomination bid (intriguingly, breaking down the votes, Terrell led in both the absentee and in-person precinct voting, but that lead disappeared when ballots from the five vote centers were counted). You may recall that this was a re-run of sorts of the 2015 general election (ultimately litigated for almost two years by David Brooks and Rep. Ed DeLaney (D)) when England - who ran then as an independent - eked out a four-vote win over then-incumbent Terrell on election night, a result that was contested all the way to the Indiana Supreme Court. Mayor England now takes on Eugene "Pud" Terrell (D) in November . . . Michigan City Mayor Ron Meer (D) wins a tight race over Virginia Martin (D) and will now face Duane Parry (R) this Fall in his bid to win a third term . . . Hobart Mayor Brian Snedecor (D) easily wins renomination for a fourth term . . . in Elkhart, where the mayor's office is open, former city council member Rod Roberson (D) accrues 57% of the vote against opponent Ashley Boling-Molyneaux (D), and will run against former mayor Dave Miller (R), who ran unopposed, in a race that will likely feature lots of discussion about police and public safety . . . Matthew Nicholson (R) tops a field of five and Rexanne Ude (D) wins a three-way race for the open Seymour mayor's office . . . Bob McCoy (R) wins almost 65% of the vote and Bill Richmond (D) takes home about 67% to face each other for the open Winchester mayoral office . . . political newcomer Bill Carroll (D) tops veteran at-large Lake Station City Councilmember Esther Rocha-Baldazo (D) in the open seat mayoral race. Carroll will be on the general election ballot against Cynthia Robbins (R) . . . the contested Union City Republican race was won by Chad Spence (R) with more than three-quarters of the vote . . . Tuesday's open-seat Muncie mayoral primaries resulted in only 17% turnout (which might have equaled the number of candidates on the respective ballots). City Community Development Director Terry Whitt Bailey (D) won 43.7% of the vote in a five-way race, and she becomes the first African American to be nominated by a major party for Muncie mayor (Muncie has already had a female mayor). She topped the almost 38% share won by J. Andrew Dale (D), who held the same community development post under two other Muncie mayors. Muncie City Councilmember Dan Ridenour (R) led a field of three with 43.6% of the vote, almost identical to Bailey's share. Look for both nominees to emphasize transparency in a city beset by FBI investigations . . . veteran Tipton City Councilmember Brett Curnutt (R) comes out ahead of Tipton County Assessor Jason Henderson (R) in the primary for the open GOP office . . . Portage City Council President Sue Lynch (D) will face Mayor John Cannon (R), who took over the office in a caucus selection process a few months ago after the federal corruption conviction of his predecessor. Lynch won 44% of the vote in a field of four hopefuls . . . MedPro insurance executive Tim Smith (R) jumped in the race early and with lots of money and emerged with an easy 56% to 44% win over Dr. John Crawford (R), a veteran local government official in a surprisingly negative Fort Wayne campaign, for the right to take on Mayor Tom Henry (R) as hizzoner seeks a fourth term. Divisive GOP primaries have set back Republicans in their initial races against Mayor Henry . . . the open Valparaiso mayor's office will be contested between businessman Bill Durnell (D), a ValpoNext board member, and City Councilmember Matthew Murphy (R). Durnell defeated an at-large City Council member, Deb Porter (D), a teacher. This will be the first time that outgoing Mayor Jon Costas (R) will not be on the mayoral ballot since his first (unsuccessful) bid in 1999; that was also the last year in which Valpo elected a Democrat to the top office . . . Miles Hewitt (R), who has served on the Peru Police Department for almost 40 years, wins a three-way primary race with almost 60% of the vote and less than 14% turnout. He seeks to knock out Mayor Gabe Greer (D) . . . former Lawrence County sheriff Sam Craig (R) outdistances a wide field for the mayoral office being vacated by Mayor Shawna Girgis (I), winning almost 43% in a six-candidate race. He will face retired foreign service officer Rowena Cross-Najafi (D), president of the Lawrence County Historical and Genealogical Society, in November . . . New Haven Common Council President Steve McMichael (R) is selected by a majority in his three-way race for the open seat office (he is endorsed by the outgoing mayor), with the president of the East Allen County Schools board, Bob Nelson (R), finishing second, with only 25% of the vote . . . Chuck King (D) wins about two-thirds of the vote over Doug Sundling (D) in the race to succeed long-time outgoing Bluffton Mayor Ted Ellis (D). Common Councilmember John Whicker (R) earns the GOP nod . . . Greenwood Mayor Mark Myers (R) handily defeats Dale Marmaduke (R) in his bid for a third term (and first contested race), and no Democrats have yet filed there . . . the fourth try is the charm for Huntington County Commissioner Larry Buzzard (R), as he finally captures the Republican nomination for mayor of Huntington rolling up a 223-vote difference over two-term Mayor Brooks Fetters (R), a 54% to 45% margin in a race dominated by concern over city spending. Three of Buzzard's four runs have come against Fetters . . . with 64% of the votes cast, Logoootee Mayor Noel Harty (D) was an easy winner for renomination in his bid for a third term, outdistancing City Council President Roger Downey (D) . . . in Aurora, where its four-term GOP mayor is not seeking re-election, City Councilmember Mark Drury (R) topped fellow City Councilmember Patrick Schwing (R) backed by 61% of the vote, and will meet Mel Kremer, Jr. (D) in the Fall after Kremer won by a 53% to 47% margin over Dan Valas (D) . . . Angola Common Councilmember Joe Hysong (R), a downtown business leader, will be up against Mayor Dick Hickman (D) this Fall, who seeks a fifth term. Hysong won nomination by a margin of more than 3:1 . . . Diana Colbert Snyder (R) is a big winner in the race for the Washington Republican mayoral nomination, topping city building inspector Don Williams (R) 964 to 302, while City Councilmember Jerry Sidebottom (R) placed third with only 182 votes. With the office open, Snyder, the first female nominee for mayor in the Daviess County community, will be up against city fire chief Dave Rhoads (D), who was unopposed in his run . . . in the race for an open seat in Butler, political newcomer Mike Hartman (R) defeats a pair of city council members, earning almost double the number of votes of the second-place finisher. No others have yet indicated an interest in the general election . . . Richmond Mayor Dave Snow (D) was slow to announce a bid for a second term, but voters still renominated him by about a 2:1 margin over one of his former department heads, Jack Cruse (D). Jamie Lopeman (R) becomes the GOP nominee . . . Auburn construction company owner Mike Ley (R), a former city and county building inspector, won 80% support in his victory in his Republican primary race for the open office, which Democrats had not contested in 20 years, but Sarah Payne (D) jumped in last week (and Patrick O'Brien has indicated he will run as an independent) . . . Linton Mayor John Wilkes (D) wins 92% of the vote in his run against Jerry May (D) . . . Columbus Mayor Jim Lienhoop (R), who was unopposed in the 2015 general election, currently faces the same scenario after defeating his Republican primary challenger, Glenn Petri (R), with more than 70% of the vote . . . law student Josh Marsh (R) wins the right to be the Republican mayoral standardbearer in Greensburg by just 29 votes over Kenny Hooten (R) out of almost 1,275 votes cast. He will take on Mayor Don Manus (D) . . . Lawrenceburg Mayor Kelly Mollaun (R) takes 51% of the vote in a three-way GOP primary in an odd race of sorts. He will face City Councilmember Aaron Cook (D) this Fall, after Cook bested former mayor Dennis Carr (D) with 62% of the vote . . . Tell City Mayor Jim Adams (R) will see a Fall challenge from City Councilmember Chris Cail (D), who won the right by beating Steve Goodson (D) 655 - 629 . . . Marion Mayor Jess Alumbaugh (D) outpaces a three-candidate field to seek a second term, this time against City Councilmember Dave Homer (R), who won his primary against fellow City Councilmember Steve Henderson (R) with just short of 56% of the vote . . . Larry Watters, Sr. (R) takes home almost three-quarters of the Jasonville vote over Tony Towell (R) to win the GOP nomination and run against Mayor Roy Terrell, Sr. (D) . . . as Evansville Mayor Lloyd Winnecke (R) earns 88% in his quest for a third term, Bart Gadau (I) jumps in, but Demos have yet to designate a candidate . . . in the open Salem race, three-term City Councilmember Justin Green (R) outpolls Salem School Board member Ron Haendiges (R) by 48 votes with 46% to run against Bill Ackerman (D), who received 121 votes and more than 71% in his race against Richard "Bobby" Longworth (D) . . . Lawrence Mayor Steve Collier (R) outlasted Bob Jones (R) in his primary race, and will be up against Jamar Cobb-Dennard (D) in the November top feature . . . New Albany Mayor Jeff Gahan (D) survives a primary challenge by David White (D) with 56% of the vote. Looking to unseat Mayor Gahan this Fall will be Mark Seabrook (R) and Dan Coffey (I) . . . Rushville Mayor Mike Pavey (R) won the right to seek a third term with a 53% edge over Brian Conner (R) . . . former Rep. Tom Dermody (R) won more than 80% of votes in his primary, and will face Matt Wilhelm (D) in an open seat race . . . Jefferson County Republican Party Chair Bob Courtney (R) wins more than 60% of the vote in his primary and will face former Jefferson County commissioner Julie Berry (D), who collected almost 90% in her race, for the open Madison mayor's office . . . Rochester Mayor Ted Denton (R) is renominated over former two-term mayor Mark Smiley (R). Smiley lost the 2015 primary to Denton by 66 votes, but this year's margin was 326 votes as Mayor Denton fell slightly short of two-thirds of the votes.

- Gary experienced the only real upset statewide. Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) bookends two terms as mayor (winning in 2011 and 2015) with primary losses (in 2003, 2007, and 2019). She loses to Lake County Assessor Jerome Prince (D). Mayor Karen earned lots of criticism for trying to stay above it all as her administration experienced a number of small scandals and incidents of financial mismanagement. Her work on the blocking and tackling of local government (improving fire stations, upgrading police cars, razing abandoned buildings, and attracting new economic development) was overshadowed by some of the eco devo work seemingly falling short and her efforts to redevelop Buffington Harbor - which finally saw some movement just late last month when lawmakers approved a casino move - still appeared to lack key details (like who was interested, who would pay, and how it would be facilitated). Her national efforts on behalf of the National League of Cities and assorted issues were not understood nor well-received locally, and she was not saved by the usual Lake County Democratic mayor political life preserver: A big field of challengers from every racial and ethnic group. This was one of the few races in which the early voting numbers were not necessarily indicative of the final numbers, suggesting a lot of minds were made up late or that there was a big election-day turnout push by anti-incumbent forces (we pick the latter, as Prince is the Gary city Democratic Party chair). She lost by about 11 points to Assessor Prince, who fell just slightly under a majority of the votes cast. An articulate candidate who managed to peel away some of the campaign funding that would ordinarily side with the incumbent, Prince handily won the 1st District (the upscale Miller area); we don't believe that anyone has been nominated or elected in recent history without winning that district.

□ No Republican has been elected mayor of Gary in 80 years – since 1939. Assuming his election (which is effectively assured as of today; although Gary has had an independent mayor this century, that mayor, Scott King, left the Democratic Party after re-election) Prince will be faced with governing in an era when the tax caps finally hit Gary hard – and while only 40% of property taxes in the city are actually collected. Expect him to be more effective at reaching out beyond the borders of Gary (with a focus on Indianapolis, and not nationally, as Freeman-Wilson), and his experience as assessor will prove important on the property tax issue. A Marine Corps veteran with prior service not only on the Lake County Council but the Gary Common Council the Lew Wallace High School alum comes with local street cred and an innate knowledge and understanding of his city. He'll also have a largely new city council, with three incumbents defeated in renomination bids Tuesday, sending a message.

□ Prince will build some bridges to state government that have been lacking for Steel City mayors in the past generation (former attorney general Freeman-Wilson was surprisingly lacking in this) and will likely focus immediately on school and public safety funding before addressing the Buffington Harbor development package about which lawmakers were skeptical, not willing to give Sen. Eddie Melton (D) the benefit of the doubt if Mayor Karen and crew were in charge.

□ What will be interesting going forward for Lake County is the matter of replacing Prince as assessor. There aren't a lot of politically savvy (or acceptable) Level III-certified assessors floating around the county . . . but there is some time between now and January for someone to be tapped for the role and to become certified.

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) slips in the latest Morning Consult poll as former vice president Joe Biden (D) picks up additional support since his declared entry into the race, assuming 40% of the overall vote share and 44% in the early primary and caucus states. The Biden gain (particularly among older voters) and attendant Buttigieg decline might give rise to the "Now and Next" ticket we were first to speculate about in these pages last year: a Biden/Buttigieg combination in which the former VPOTUS would pledge to serve just one term, giving Mayor Pete a full term of OJT (some saw the Trump/Pence 2016 combo as the same thing, albeit with a two-term timeframe) . . . Team Pete brings aboard four top-level staffers in Iowa and three more in New Hampshire. New Iowa state director Brendan McPhillips was most recently the campaign manager for former Tallahassee mayor Andrew Gillum (D-FL) in his upset Democratic primary win for Florida governor, while his new state director in New Hampshire is Michael Ceraso, who was deputy New Hampshire state director for the campaign of U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders (D-VT) in the 2016 presidential primary . . . five Friday fundraisers across the Silicon Valley lucratively ended last week for hizzoner . . . CNN's Chris Cillizza writes that Mayor "Buttigieg's honeymoon won't last forever. And this may be the beginning of its end." He is referring to Mayor Pete's discussion of religion in politics and "the part about God not being a Republican – that's problematic for Buttigieg. Because he's trying to have it both ways. Either God is off-limits from politics or he's not. You can't claim that Republicans have been playing politics with religion for years and need to stop and then immediately follow that up by doing the exact same thing." The Washington Post's "The Fix" also suggests that "Buttigieg might be turning off supporters by so fiercely questioning Christians' allegiance to Republicans" . . .

● Indiana University alum Marie Harf leaves her Fox News commentary post to join the presidential campaign of U.S. Rep. Seth Moulton (D-MA) as deputy campaign manager for policy and communications. Harf had been senior advisor for strategic communications to then-U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry at the U.S. Department of State.

Since late 2016, "the Party has retooled its approach to direct new energy into action," it says, with active recruiting and training generating "a nearly 10 percent increase in municipal candidates on the ballot from 2015 to 2019" as the party seeks to build its bench.

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) on May 4 called on the leaders of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to hold hearings in the coming days with key Trump Administration officials regarding use of military force in Venezuela. Sen. Young, who has long been outspoken on the need for updated Authorizations for Use of Military Force (AUMF) and Congressional approval of military activity, released this statement: “The brutal Maduro Regime has caused unspeakable suffering amongst the citizens in Venezuela and I commend the brave Venezuelans who are standing up for their freedom and for their basic human rights. However, I am concerned by reports of possible U.S. military intervention in Venezuela. “Given recent developments, I am calling on the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to hold immediate hearings with key members of the administration next week (the week of May 6) to discuss their plans for Venezuela and to explain any plans to deploy U.S. forces to the country” . . . in an op-ed for CNN Opinion, Sen. Young and U.S. Sen. Brian Schatz (D-HI) advance the case for their legislation that would raise the federal minimum age to buy tobacco products, including e-cigarettes, to 21. They observe that “Nearly all smokers – an astounding 95% – start before the age 21. And, sadly, if the current rates of smoking continue, the CDC projects 5.6 million of today’s youth will eventually die from preventable, smoking-related illnesses – that’s ‘about one out of every 13 living Americans ages 17 or younger.’ There is also a strong financial case for passing our bill. Taxpayers continue to foot the bill for smokers’ health care in the form of higher Medicare, Medicaid and other health care costs . . . Bottom line: Raising the tobacco legal age of sale is smart policy to protect kids, improve public health and reduce health care costs” . . . Sen. Young and U.S. Sen. Gary Peters (D-MI) – along with U.S. Reps. Dan Kildee (D-MI), Bill Huizenga (R-MI), Debbie Dingell (D-MI), and David Joyce (R-OH) – reintroduced bipartisan, bicameral legislation to update the Environmental Sensitivity Index (ESI) maps in the Great Lakes. The legislation would direct the Great Lakes Region ESI maps to be updated for the first time in more than 20 years, joining maps for the East Coast, West Coast, and Gulf Coast that have been updated more recently. ESI maps, which are coordinated through the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), document the potential ecological impacts to natural and human-use resources from possible oil spills, natural disasters, and resource damage assessments. This information is used in planning to create cleanup strategies before an accident occurs so that authorities are better prepared to take action if needed. These new maps will provide accurate assessments of coastal resources that are at risk of severe damage or a natural disaster, including endangered and threatened species, sensitive shoreline habitats, and widely used community resources such as beaches, parks and boat ramps. Sens. Young and Peters coauthored similar legislation that passed the Senate last September and Rep. Kildee led similar legislation in 2017. “The Great Lakes are one of America’s greatest natural resources,” said Sen. Young. “Hoosier families treasure our coastline along Lake Michigan and our close proximity to all the Great Lakes. It is in all of our interests to robustly protect them. Updating the ESI maps will allow us to better protect our natural resources and effectively respond in the event of a natural disaster” . . . bipartisan legislation is introduced by Sen. Young and U.S. Sens. Cory Booker (D-NJ), Tim Scott (R-SC), and Maggie Hassan (D-NH) to restore and strengthen reporting requirements for Opportunity Zones, the tax incentive for individuals who reinvest unrealized capital gains into high-impact projects in underserved communities. These critical safeguards, which were included in the original Investing in Opportunity Act, were removed from the final measure by the Senate parliamentarian during the Tax Cut and Jobs Act process in December 2017. “When we passed tax reform, I was proud to support the creation of Opportunity Zones to incentivize new investment in distressed communities across the country,” said Sen. Young. “Our bill will help strengthen Opportunity Zones by increasing transparency within the program and creating metrics to measure and improve on its success.” Specifically, the bill would require the U.S. Department of Treasury to track the effectiveness of these efforts by collecting data on the number of opportunity funds created and the impact the funds are having on underserved communities. The data would have to be reported on an annual basis to Congress . . . Sen. Young introduces bipartisan legislation with U.S. Sens. Debbie Stabenow (D-MI), and Doug Jones (D-AL) Wednesday that would ensure more students have access to higher education. Under current law, students only find out how much financial aid they will receive right before attending college. The “Early Pell Promise Act” would provide more financial certainty for families by pre-qualifying certain students for full Pell Grant support starting as early as the eighth grade. The measure would also provide families and students who pre-qualify for aid with additional information about the cost of college attendance and student financial aid. “My Fair Shot Agenda is focused on ensuring that all Hoosiers have an opportunity to succeed regardless of financial barriers,” said Sen. Young. “The Early Pell Promise Act aligns with this mission by ensuring our youth is set up for success through pre-qualification for Pell grants. By locking in financing for college as early as the eighth grade, more students will be able to afford higher education and plan for a prosperous future.”

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) signs on as an original cosponsor of the “Transporting Livestock Across America Safely Act,” legislation that aims to provide livestock haulers more flexibility under Hours of Service regulations that the bill’s backers contend threaten the safety and welfare of animals in transit. The measure would double the air-mile radius from the source for what is effectively “exempt time,” and extend the drive-time allowed from 11 to up to 18 hours.

● U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R) and Mike Braun (R), along with 10 of their Republican Senate colleagues, introduced a resolution Wednesday to mark the anniversary of the United States’ withdrawal from the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) with Iran. The resolution highlights what they see as the shortcomings of the Iran nuclear agreement, reaffirms Congressional opposition to Iran ever acquiring a nuclear weapons capability, and rejects the reapplication of JCPOA sanctions relief.

□ “This resolution serves as a critical reminder of the deep flaws present in President Obama’s nuclear deal with Iran,” said Sen. Young. “From the beginning, this deal enabled the world’s leading state sponsor of terrorism to have relief from sanctions without dismantling their nuclear program. On this one year anniversary of our decision to withdraw from the deal, Iran has once again reminded the world of their true intentions by threatening to enrich its stockpile of uranium. Additionally, and despite Iran’s collapsing economy, the Iranian regime has also decided it would rather pursue nuclear weapons instead of selling their excess uranium and heavy water to help its own economy. We must stand firm on our maximum pressure campaign and never permit the Iranian regime to develop a nuclear weapon.”

□ “President Trump made a courageous decision to withdraw from the Iran nuclear deal, which builds off his success of rooting out ISIS and keeping our country safe from the threat of global terrorism,” adds Sen. Braun.

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) crosses the aisle to work with U.S. Sen. Bob Casey (D-PA) in introducing a bipartisan bill to simplify complex Medicare enrollment rules. The “Beneficiary Enrollment Notification and Eligibility Simplification (BENES) Act” would eliminate what the authors characterize as “needless” gaps in health care coverage, and help prevent lifetime, late-enrollment penalties paid by almost 760,000 Americans today, increasing their Medicare Part B premiums by an average of almost 30 percent. U.S. Reps. Jackie Walorski (R) and Raul Ruiz (D-CA) have introduced a bipartisan companion bill in the House. “Seniors who miss the sign-up deadline for Medicare Part B face onerous penalties that persist for the rest of their lives. The BENES Act will make the sign-up process more efficient and friendly to our seniors so they have the financial backstop needed to access quality medical care,” said Sen. Young. “As more and more Americans reach Medicare age, we need to simplify the Part B enrollment process and improve education and outreach to seniors,” said Rep. Walorski. “These bipartisan reforms will protect seniors from unnecessary late enrollment penalties, gaps in coverage, and unexpected health care bills.”

● No member of the Indiana congressional delegation has signed on to the bipartisan “Honest Ads Act” introduced to combat foreign interference in U.S. elections. U.S. Sens. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN), Lindsey Graham (R-SC), and Mark Warner (D-VA) introduced the Senate bill; U.S. Reps. Elise Stefanik (R-NY) and Derek Kilmer (D-WA) led the House version, cosponsored by 24 additional Republican and Democratic lawmakers. The bill is aimed at foreign disinformation campaigns in our elections and would implement a disclosure system for paid, online political advertising closely modeled on longstanding Federal Communications Commission rules covering paid broadcast political ads, and better enable voters to transparently know who is trying to influence their decisions.

□ Former U.S. Rep. Tim Roemer (D), co-chair of the Issue One’s ReFormers Caucus – a coalition of former members of Congress, governors, and Cabinet officials representing all 50 states and both major political parties – is one of three members of the 9/11 Commission who sign on as supporters of the measure, and ask congressional leaders to hold hearings on the proposal.

● U.S. Rep. Jim Baird (R) is among a bipartisan group of 35 lawmakers – largely from the Midwest – signing a letter urging U.S. Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Andrew Wheeler to stop granting small refinery exemptions for large or unqualified refineries and uphold the Renewable Fuel Standard (RFS), the 2018 federal biofuel blending mandates. They label the exemption practice and “unprecedented rate of granting waivers” as “a betrayal of our rural communities” that has contributed to a loss of more than 2.6 billion gallons in lost biofuels blending, and threatens the agricultural sector.

● U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky (D), chair of the House Committee on Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense, should wield control over a proposed Fiscal Year 2020 base budget spending level of some $622 billion (and $733 billion overall when other funding pots are added in) . . .

● U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) poses to constituents his “Question of the Week: Do you support updating our federal regulations to ensure they allow for start-ups and small businesses to access the capital they need to grow?”

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) saw the full House on Wednesday pass the bipartisan “ACCESS BROADBAND Act” which she coauthored with U.S. Rep. Paul Tonko (D-NY). H.R. 1328, which would help expand broadband access in underserved areas and create a simpler process for small businesses and local economic developers to access federal broadband resources, was approved by a unanimous voice vote. Before the vote, Rep. Brooks took to the House floor to tell colleagues, “Reliable broadband internet access is an integral part of our American economy and modern way of life. Whether for students doing homework, job seekers training for a new career, doctors reading a medical scan or entrepreneurs starting a small business, we need to make sure nobody is being left behind. Sadly, despite the vital importance of internet access today, federal resources supporting broadband expansion are poorly tracked with little coordination across agencies or departments. As a result, those resources are left out of reach for many of our local businesses and community leaders who need them. The House took an important step forward today by advancing this common-sense bill. The Senate must act urgently to pass this critical legislation and move America closer to faster, more reliable broadband access for our communities and every American.”

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) introduces legislation that would establish a Child Safety Account (CSA) program for students facing safety issues at school. These accounts could be used for alternative education options to help ensure that no student would be forced to attend school in an unsafe environment. While the federal government only has jurisdiction over the Washington, D.C. school system, he says that this legislation will serve as a model for states and localities seeking alternative solutions in ensuring that every child has access to safe schools. Rep. Banks says “School safety and the wellbeing of children is every parent’s number one concern. In today’s complex world, school safety problems have become more prevalent. Unfortunately, too many students are trapped in unsafe schools. This Child Safety Account program will give families choices to pursue educational opportunities that keep their children safe and secure. While the scope of this bill is currently restricted to one city, it is my hope that the success of the program inspires more states to adopt similar policies and help children feel safe and free to learn at school” . . . Rep. Banks marked Wednesday’s one-year anniversary of United States withdrawal from the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA.) by noting that “One year ago today, President Trump boldly withdrew the U.S. from a sham nuclear arms agreement with the world’s largest state-sponsor of terrorism, the Islamic Republic of Iran. The dishonest brokers in Tehran conned the U.S. out of hundreds of millions of dollars in cash in exchange for weak rules and delays to their nuclear program. This cash was funneled to their terror network, killing Americans and our allies. Today, tough sanctions have again been imposed on Iran, to stifle their terrorism-funding economy and their military operations in the region. We will not curb Iran’s deadly and destabilizing behavior through appeasement and sheepish diplomacy. I am thankful that President Trump and Secretary Pompeo are returning to Reagan-era resilience and applaud their bold leadership one year ago today” . . . Rep. Banks leads a letter to House leaders – joined by 103 of his colleagues – urging them to defend the Hyde Amendment, the law that bars tax funds from being used to pay for abortions or insurance plans covering abortions. Said Rep. Banks, “The sanctity of life is under assault by the radical left. For over forty years, it has been widely believed that while Roe v. Wade may be the law of the land, that no taxpayer money should ever go to providing abortions. Now, the radical-left of the Democrat Party wants to dismantle the Hyde Amendment, which has codified this long-held recognition of decency. I wrote this letter to remind Speaker Pelosi and House leadership that should any legislation move forward that uses taxpayer money to fund abortions in any way, it will be met with the utmost resistance from me and over 100 of my colleagues” . . . with U.S. Rep. Susan Davis (D-CA), Rep. Banks introduces the House companion bill for the bipartisan “Portable Certification of Spouses Act,” led by U.S. Senators Tom Cotton (R-AR), Jeanne Shaheen (D-NH), and Martha McSally (R-AZ) in the Senate. This legislation seeks to improve the portability of occupational licenses from state to state. The bill would also help reduce the burden military spouses bear when having to re-register a small business in a new state each time a service member gets reassigned to a new military installation. This proposed legislation would allow the U.S. Department of Defense to use defense dollars to help states develop universal standards for such licenses. Rep. Banks says resolving the issue of military spouse licensing is a national security concern, helping alleviate the choice for service members between their career and the career of their spouses. “Military spouses are the keystone in any service member’s family, providing love, stability, and support to our military families,” says Rep. Banks. “They make enormous sacrifices, enduring long periods away from their loved ones and often are required to move from state to state, leaving behind jobs and friends. Currently, military spouses with careers requiring occupational licenses often face the burdensome task of professionally recertifying each time they must move out of state. This process severely impedes their ability to sustain their careers and increases the stress of frequent reassignments.”

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) released this statement after voting Thursday against H.R. 986, what his office describes as “Democrats’ latest attempt to confuse the American people with misleading legislation as they move closer to their ultimate goal of a one-size-fits-all government takeover of health care.” Said Dr. Bucshon: “As a physician, I am focused on bringing down the cost of health care for Hoosiers which is why I cannot support this misleading legislation that fails to address the real problem – Obamacare is not working for the majority of Americans. This bill is an attempt to eliminate state’s abilities to provide more health care choices that best fit the needs of their citizens. In 2018, President Trump issued updated guidance to the Section 1332 state innovation waiver that allows states to implement their own health insurance coverage as long as it meets the ACA’s terms. Seven states used these waivers to provide more health care choices for consumers resulting in premiums dropping on average of 19.9%. In their blind anger for President Trump, Democrats are focused on rolling back good policies rather than helping the American people.”

IN State Circles . . .

● Our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT, performs its usual deep dive into referenda results (and we’d encourage you to review that detailed and insightful coverage), but we’ll just scratch the surface here with some topline:

□ Ten school property tax referenda seeking funds for student safety, mental health services, teacher compensation, transportation, and other essential services were at stake in the primary elections held Tuesday, May 7. Six succeeded, while four foundered, the lowest passage rate in some eight years.

□ Lump together results from the November 2018 and May 2019 election cycles, and you’ll find that 14 out of 22 referenda passed, a 63.6% success rate. That’s down sharply from November 2017 and May 2018 when a combined 17 out of 18 referenda were successful, for an impressive 94% pass rate.

● Senate Majority Floor Leader Mark Messmer (R) runs the end-of-session tally and finds that of 1,344 bills filed, roughly one in five (22%) were enacted into law, with 130 (15%) originating in the Senate and 163 (24%) in the House. That also, of course, does not account for legislation that was combined or bills that were abandoned in one chamber because they were similar to a measure that was successful from the other chamber.

□ Of the bills passed by the Senate, almost two-thirds (62%) passed with unanimous votes, and, overall, 94% enjoyed bipartisan support on the Senate floor (and among them, he notes, frequently there was only a lone vote against, making them effectively unanimous).

□ For a second successive year, the Governor has also signed into law every bill that lawmakers sent to his desk.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) filed suit Monday against Equifax in Marion Superior Court, Civil Division 11, seeking civil penalties, consumer restitution, costs and injunctive relief following the finance company’s well-documented 2017 data breach that compromised the sensitive personal information of 147.9 million Americans, including 3.9 million Hoosiers. State v. Equifax Info. Servs. LLC, et al., No. 49D11-1905-PL-018398. “Data breaches such as this one cause real harm to real people,” General Hill said, noting that the data breach at Equifax, one of the world’s largest credit reporting bureaus, had been branded as “entirely preventable” by federal officials.

□ The 74-page Indiana complaint details how Equifax had pursued aggressive cost-cutting measures that included the outsourcing of some of the company’s mission-critical systems, and either ignored patching and vulnerability remediation, or treated those responsibilities as relatively unimportant. “At every logical opportunity to improve security measures,” the Office of the Attorney General contends, “Equifax’s leaders instead chose increasing revenue over protecting the safety of consumers’ sensitive personal information.”

● As the number of spoofed calls and consumer financial losses linked to these scams have increased by almost 50% in recent years, Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) last week joined a coalition of 42 state and territorial attorneys general calling on the Federal Communications Commission to take further action to stop the growing proliferation of illegal robocalls and caller ID spoofing. The AGs urged the Commission to adopt its proposed rules on enforcement against caller ID spoofing of calls to the United States originating from overseas, as well as addressing spoofing in text messaging and alternative voice services. “Hoosiers should be able to enjoy peace and privacy without the disturbance of unwanted calls and texts,” General Hill said. “Further, some of these calls are coming from scammers intent on stealing people’s identities or taking their money. We need stronger measures and better technologies aimed at stopping illegal robocalling.”

● While measles is getting the ink as Indianapolis welcomed visitors for the Mini-Marathon and now the two IndyCar races and related events during the Month of May (the Chicago area tops a new University of Texas study list of American cities likely to experience measles outbreaks), the Indiana State Department of Health is running radio public service announcements in Central Indiana to raise awareness of Hepatitis A causes, symptoms, and prevention . . . and our first glance at the latest outbreak numbers in a few months suggest why: Indianapolis has leapfrogged Wayne County for the lead in Hep A cases statewide, increasing by almost 85% since Valentine's Day, with the actual number of reported infections at 170, more than 15 times the 11 cases reported back in late September, when Wayne County led with more than 70 incidents. While the number of reported cases in Wayne County had more than doubled over the same period, infections appear to have been largely stalled over the past 2½ months – and Clark County has seemed to see infections plateau after it was in second place statewide in late September (a lack of growth similar to its next-door neighbor, Clark County). Grant County has seen a huge spike since September, and Monroe County shows a disturbing growth rate. The number of cases overall since January 1, 2018 has hit 1,325, up by 833 from 492 in late September, and by almost 30% statewide between Valentine's Day and Derby Day.

□ Outbreak deaths now number four, and about 54% (709) of the cases have resulted in hospitalizations (709, with 200+ of those taking place since Valentine's Day). Both public and private doses of vaccines administered total 145,876.

● The Indiana Finance Authority will be headed to market on Wednesday with $81,520,000 in State Revolving Fund Program Bonds, Series 2019C (Green Bonds) and $18,480,000 in State Revolving Fund Program Bonds, Series 2019D (AMT) (Green Bonds), which have been given top ratings by both Moody's and Fitch Ratings.

● The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) reveals that Indiana is one of three finalists for the relocation of two of its agencies: Economic Research Service (ERS) and the National Institute of Food and Agriculture (NIFA). The bid is a joint effort involving Purdue University, the Indiana Economic Development Corporation, and the State of Indiana, and while the State is being tight-lipped about the location for the possible relocation, USDA says that the Indiana proposal offers multiple potential sites for the moves that will involve almost 700 jobs.

□ Indiana is competing with two other bids to become the new home of ERS and NIFA: a bi-state "Greater Kansas City Region" package offered by the Kansas City Area Development Council, and the Kansas City Animal Health Corridor . . . and the "Research Triangle Region," a bid advanced by the North Carolina Research Triangle, Wake County, Durham County, and Research Triangle Park. Note that neither of the other two proposals have an official state imprimatur, although the Kansas City Area Development Council claims that the KC regional bid "has had broad unified support from federal and state officials in Kansas and Missouri." The Kansas City area is already home to more than 5,000 skilled USDA employees and contractors located throughout the region, and houses more than one-dozen USDA agency operations, which have strong connections with industry partners across the two-state area.

□ The trio of finalists came from a USDA selection process which generated 136 expressions of interest received from parties in 35 states. USDA says that the short list of locations "took into consideration critical factors required to uphold the important missions of ERS and NIFA," as well as "factors important to our employees, such as quality of life," says U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue. As part of a "rigorous" site selection process, USDA narrowed the expressions of interest list using a set of established criteria defined by USDA, NIFA, and ERS leadership that included:

- Quality of Life: Subcategory examples include Diversity Index, Residential Housing Costs, Access to Healthcare, and Home and Community Safety Ranking.

- Costs (Capital and Operating): Subcategory examples include Commercial Real Estate Costs, CPI Index, and Wage Costs.

- Workforce: Subcategory examples include Labor Force Growth Rate, Unemployment Rate, and the Labor Force Population.

- Logistics / IT Infrastructure: Subcategory examples include Lodging Availability, Proximity to Customers, and Airport Accessibility.

□ While not among the top three, USDA disclosed that a pair of other options remain under consideration as alternative locations should the top three not suit USDA's needs:

- St. Louis, Missouri (St. Louis Regional Consortium, St. Louis Economic Development Partnership, State of Missouri, Missouri Department of Agriculture, Missouri Partnership)

- Madison, Wisconsin (City of Madison, the University of Wisconsin-Madison College of Agricultural & Life Sciences (CALS), University of Wisconsin-Madison Office of University Relations, University Research Park, State of Wisconsin Department of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection, and 910 Mayer, LLC)

□ U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) sent a letter to the President on May 3 suggesting that the Trump Administration could make an important statement and first step by relocating federal agencies outside of Washington D.C. He had introduced the "Decentralize Regulatory Agencies, Include the Nation (DRAIN) Act," a measure that would require federal agencies to relocate their headquarters outside of D.C. and closer to the communities they serve.

● ArcelorMittal plans to invest almost $20 million in a rebuild of its Burns Harbor steel mill No. 2 coke battery . . . Cormo USA Inc., incorporated as a joint venture between Switzerland-based Cormo AG and Florida-based Sustainable Projects Group Inc. in 2018, plans to invest some $29.5 million to establish its first U.S. production plant in Rushville, a facility that will use technology to turn corn field waste into sustainable products, expecting to create as many as 250 new jobs by the end of 2023. New positions are expected to offer average salaries 50% above the state's average wage. The state-of-the-art facility will be built on 10 acres in the Commerce Park at Rushville, and will process maize straw from up to 150,000 acres of corn fields each year into a 100% sustainable peat moss substitute (TEFA) for agricultural uses and into foam products (BABS) for material science uses. This patented process has been utilized at the company's pilot plant in France since 2016. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation is expected to will offer Cormo USA up to $3.5 million in performance-based tax credits. The City of Rushville is considering additional incentives . . . Sweden-based defense and security company Saab plans to invest $37 million to locate, construct, and equip a facility in West Lafayette to produce major aero structural sections and handle final assembly for the U.S. Air Force's next-generation T-X advanced pilot training jet aircraft, an all-new aircraft designed, developed, and purpose-built for the U.S. Air Force by Boeing and Saab. The facility, located in Discovery Park District Aerospace on the west side of the Purdue University campus, is anticipated to create up to 300 new jobs, with hiring starting in 2020. The expansion is a fundamental part of the company's strategy to grow its U.S. industrial and technology base. Saab also will collaborate with Purdue University to expand Saab's U.S.-based research and development within possible areas such as sensor systems, artificial intelligence and autonomous systems. IEDC will offer Saab up to $3.9 million in performance-based tax credits, and up to $1.15 million in training grants over two phases. IEDC also will offer up to $200,000 in tax credits from the Hoosier Business Investment (HBI) tax credit program based on the company's planned capital investment in Indiana . . . Continental Diamond Tool, a producer of superabrasive grinding wheels and custom tooling, plans to invest $5.5 million in a 15,000 square-foot expansion of its New Haven facility, expecting to create more than 225 new jobs over the next four years. IEDC offers Continental Diamond Tool up to $1.2 million in performance-based tax credits. Northeast Indiana Works will provide the company with additional hiring and training assistance. The New Haven City Council approved real and business personal property tax abatements . . . Pretzels, Inc. plans to invest approximately $70 million in a 120,000 square-foot expansion of its Plymouth peanut butter pretzel and bulk pretzel manufacturing facility, expecting to create 180 new jobs by mid-2020.

IN Transition

● Rep. Cherrish Pryor (D) is selected to serve another term as the Indiana state director for the National Foundation for Women Legislators. Pryor will serve as state director through the end of 2019.

● Indiana Horse Racing Commission Executive Director Mike Smith made his plans to retire public a while back, and the Horse Racing Commission will be accepting applications through May 24 to replace him, and Smith, a former legislator who has led the agency since leaving his leadership post with the Casino Association of Indiana in 2016, will assist with the process and transition.

□ Recall that despite some attempts in past administrations to make the position a gubernatorial appointment, the executive director (there have only been two in the 29-year history of the panel) continues to be an appointee of the Horse Racing Commission itself.

● Dr. Steve Yager has not been reappointed to the State Board of Education, reports our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT. Dr. Yager was originally appointed in 2015 by then-Senate president pro tem David Long (R). The term of the former superintendent of the Northwest Allen County Schools and M.S.D. of Southwest Allen County Schools is set to expire June 30, 2019. Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) has yet to indicate his pick.

● Andy Mallon will leave his post as head of the Office of Corporation Counsel for the City of Indianapolis to become the new executive director of the Capital Improvement Board, the municipal corporation that owns and/or operates assorted high-profile local facilities including the Indiana Convention Center, Lucas Oil Stadium, Bankers Life Fieldhouse, Victory Field, and Hudnut Commons. Mallon will replace Barney Levengood, the longtime leader of the CIB, who announced his retirement earlier this year.

□ Donnie Morgan will become the new corporation counsel for the city. Morgan joined the office as chief litigation counsel in March 2016 after beginning his career as a litigator and appellate advocate at Faegre Baker Daniels.

● The President plans to nominate former U.S. Rep. Todd Rokita (R) to the remainder of a vacant term on the Amtrak Board of Directors that is set to expire January 3, 2021.

□ Rep. Rokita, a pilot who was involved in aviation issues during his service on the House Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, is perceived as an opponent of federal funding for Amtrak, but he has voiced his support for Amtrak in public meetings in his old CD 04, and for the Hoosier State Cardinal Line in particular, on which he has traveled.

IN the Lobby

● Hanka Advisor LLC files a federal lobby termination statement for its representation of Anderson University.

● Former Indiana Republican Party chair and Pence advisor Jeff Cardwell of Sextons Creek files a federal lobby registration to "Explore opportunities for those with disabilities and enhance employment opportunities for those who are blind" for G2 Strategies (on behalf of Bosma Enterprises).

TRUMP LIKES TO SEE MAYOR PETE, HUSBAND: In a break from some of his most conservative supporters, President Trump said that he thinks "it's great" to see Democratic presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg onstage with his husband, Chasten (CBS News). In an interview with Steve Hilton for "The Next Revolution" on Fox News, Mr. Trump, taking note of the fact that "some people" might object, the president said he thought it was a good thing to see the two together. "I think it's great. I think that's something that perhaps some people will have a problem with. I have no problem with it whatsoever. I think it's good," Mr. Trump said, in response to a question about Buttigieg's candidacy as a symbol for the progress gay rights have made in the U.S. Some of Mr. Trump's most prominent surrogates are evangelical Christian leaders who vehemently oppose same-sex marriage, like Jerry Falwell Jr. and Franklin Graham. Graham voiced his objection to Buttigieg in a tweet last month, suggesting that he should repent for being gay. Mr. Trump has expressed tolerance towards gay people since his campaign. However, the Trump administration has faced criticism for its policies towards LGBT Americans, such as the ban on transgender soldiers from serving in the military.

RED STATES SEE THEIR MOMENT ON ABORTION: With red states passing a record wave of abortion restrictions, Planned Parenthood Federation of America today will announce a six-figure digital ad buy over the coming weeks urging women voters to contact their legislators (Allen, Axios). The first ads will run in Arizona, Colorado, Georgia, Iowa, Kentucky and North Carolina. The message: "You deserve to know if the people who represent you in office support the Republican Party's dangerous agenda to ban all abortion, or if they stand against it, and will stand up for your health and rights." What conservatives are thinking ... National Review's David French: "Two generations of pro-life activism, persuasion, and argument have yielded pro-life supermajorities in state houses across much of the South and Midwest, and they recognize the fact that we have reached a moment of legal possibility we may never attain again — perhaps not for generations. It is possible (maybe not likely, but possible) that the Supreme Court could overrule Roe v. Wade, and these legislatures have chosen to go for broke."

REPUBLICANS LINING UP AGAINST ALABAMA ABORTION LAW: House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) said Thursday that he opposes a new Alabama law that outlaws virtually all abortions, even in cases of rape and incest, arguing that it "goes further than I believe" (Washington Post). "I believe in exceptions for rape, incest and life of the mother, and that's what I've voted on," McCarthy said at his weekly news conference. The new antiabortion law in Alabama, the strictest in the country, has divided Republicans and put them on the defensive on the issue. Until this week, Republicans had been playing offense by casting Democrats as extreme due to a recent New York law expanding access to late-term abortion. In addition to not including exceptions for rape or incest, the law also allows a penalty of up to 99 years in prison for doctors who perform abortions. The other top Republican in Congress, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (Ky.), also parted ways with Alabama lawmakers on the issue, although he did not specifically weigh in on the new law. McConnell is up for reelection in 2020.

WILL SCOTUS ACT ON ALABAMA LAW? The authors of Alabama's new law criminalizing abortion have left no doubt that they passed it to provoke the Supreme Court into overturning Roe v. Wade's protection of a woman's right to choose. But there's no guarantee that will happen (Williams, NBC News). Republican state Rep. Terri Collins, one of the law's sponsors, says it was intended to challenge Roe "and hopefully to let that decision go back to the states, so that states can make the laws that are most appropriate for their people." Planned Parenthood and the American Civil Liberties Union have both said they intend to challenge the law. They will file their lawsuits in federal district court in Alabama, seeking to block enforcement before the law takes effect in six months. Because the lower courts are bound by Supreme Court precedent, judges have no choice but to declare the law unconstitutional. Alabama would then take the law to the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta, which would also be bound to reach the same conclusion. But the state's right to an automatic appeal ends there. It would have to ask the Supreme Court to take the case, and such a move would face long odds. The justices most often accept an issue for review when the lower courts are divided — when there's a split among the circuits. But because the spate of recent laws so clearly violate Roe and follow-on Supreme Court rulings, it's most likely that all the appeals courts will declare them unconstitutional, leaving no circuit split. A second reason Alabama faces a strong headwind is that the law is quite blunt in asking the Supreme Court to overturn 46 years of legal precedent, beginning with Roe in 1973 and reaffirmed repeatedly. But supporters of the state law are hoping that President Donald Trump's newest appointment to the court, Justice Brett Kavanaugh, changed the court's fundamental arithmetic.

XI UPENDED TRADE DEAL WITH U.S.: China's leader, Xi Jinping, seemed confident three weeks ago that a yearlong trade war with the United States could soon subside, handing him a potent political victory (New York Times). He even made a speech saying China would protect intellectual property, encourage foreign investment, and buy more goods and services from abroad — all changes the United States had been demanding as the countries tried to negotiate a deal. But just a week after that speech, Chinese negotiators sent the Americans a substantially rewritten draft agreement, prompting President Trump to accuse Beijing of reneging on terms that had been settled. That has left hopes for a historic breakthrough in tatters. In China's top-down political system, where President Xi has amassed formidable power, it's unlikely that anyone else would have had the authority — or, for that matter, the nerve — to fundamentally alter the emerging pact at this late date. Having apparently made that decision, it is clear that Mr. Xi misjudged Mr. Trump's eagerness for a deal and how far he could push the American negotiators, according to more than a dozen people, including current and former officials, researchers, lawyers, and trade experts familiar with the deal and how it fell apart. Now Mr. Xi risks being backed into a corner, unable to compromise between his own positions and Mr. Trump's.

CHAMBER WARNS OF TARIFF IMPACTS: The Indiana Chamber of Commerce says the recent increase of tariffs on Chinese goods, along with the subsequent retaliatory tariffs from China, could lead to "devastating effects" for Hoosier businesses. President and Chief Executive Officer Kevin Brinegar says the effects would be felt by companies from a variety of industries (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). Last week, the Trump administration increased tariffs on $200 billion of Chinese goods from 10 percent to 25 percent. China responded on Monday saying it would impose a similar increase on $60 billion in U.S. goods. "We are hearing from a variety of members — from all kinds of manufacturers to agricultural companies — that this latest tariff war with China could have serious business implications for them and even throw some into a fight for survival," Brinegar said. "This is such a big, big deal for Indiana, which annually exports $1.1 billion of goods to China." Brinegar says the chamber agrees with President Trump that China "has gotten off far too easy over the last few decades," but adds "there has got to be a better way than putting American businesses and jobs on the line."

RESOLUTION HONORS LUGAR'S ARMS LEGACY: A group of U.S. senators has introduced a resolution honoring the legacy of the late Indiana Sen. Richard Lugar (Gong, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Specifically, the resolution recognizes Lugar's commitment to nuclear nonproliferation and arms control and reaffirms U.S. commitment to reducing nuclear dangers. The resolution was sponsored by Sens. Jeff Merkley, D-Oregon, Todd Young, R-Indiana and Rand Paul, R-Kentucky. "Today, as we honor the life of Sen. Richard Lugar, we also focus on carrying on his legacy with this resolution and our continued commitment to nuclear nonproliferation," Young said in a statement. "At a time when nuclear proliferation was civilization's greatest threat, Sen. Lugar helped save the world." The resolution calls for nonproliferation efforts by encouraging all parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons to fully comply with the treaty, maintains support for the International Atomic Energy Agency and considers extending the New START Treaty, which will expire in February 2021. The resolution also condemns Russia's violation of the Intermediate-Range Forces Treaty. The resolution will be introduced in the U.S. House by Reps. Brad Sherman, D-California, Jim Banks, R-Indiana, Bill Foster, D-Illinois, Jeff Fortenberry, R-Nebraska, Ben Ray Lujan, D-New Mexico and Chuck Fleischmann, R-Tennessee. "Senator Lugar was one of the greatest statesmen of our time. His leadership on the Cooperative Threat Reduction Program and the New START Treaty led to an era of denuclearization and peace," Banks said in a statement.

SALESFORCE SIGNS PLEDGE AS IVANKA TRUMP LOOKS ON: The chairman and co-chief executive officer of Salesforce says signing the White House's Pledge to America's Workers is exciting for his company. Marc Benioff signed the pledge at an event this morning at Salesforce Tower in downtown Indianapolis, which was also attended by Ivanka Trump, advisor to President Donald Trump (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). Salesforce officially committed to help train 500,000 workers as part of the pledge, though Benioff said as he signed it that the company would increase that number to one million. "This is exactly what we need to transform all of our workforce throughout America," said Benioff. "We can't do this alone. We know that. We need to do it together in partnership not only with government, not only with industry, but with our community as well. I think that's our message." The Pledge to America's Workers was launched in July. Benioff and Salesforce were part of that launch and Trump says while more than 215 companies have taken the pledge since then, Salesforce is the first to take it a step further. "This was our way of getting our private sector to partner with us and say, 'You owe it to your community. You owe it to your workforce and by the way, it's good for you. This is a smart investment and there is a return on this investment and you'll see it the minute you offer somebody the opportunity, the minute you upskill somebody, the minute you give them a chance,' and the response has been incredible."

KHASHOGGI FIANCEE PLEADS FOR JUSTICE: Jamal Khashoggi's fiancée Hatice Cengiz offered pointed criticisms of the Trump administration's response to the slain Saudi journalist's brutal 2018 murder, pleading with the United States and other western governments to hold Saudi Arabia accountable through sanctions and an international investigation (Politico). "It has been more than six months since this horrible event, but there has been no truth, justice or accountability for those responsible for this terrible incident, to this stain on human rights and press freedom," Cengiz said at a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing Thursday focusing on the heightened attacks on press freedom worldwide. "Every day, I have nightmares thinking of Jamal's suffering," she added. "Is it not natural for me then to demand that those responsible for his death are held accountable through the proper channels?"

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Throughout my 40-year journalism career, there was always the Lugar organization, or "Lugar World." Actually, it pre-dated my "pro" status when my dad informed me of a Lugarite, Lou Gehrig, who wasn't in the Cooperstown. During this journey of civic stewardship, the staff of Sen. Richard Lugar was always accommodating, friendly, factual and adroit in their understanding of a complex world. The senator was accessible, despite his arduous schedule. The staff would always go the extra mile, to the point where Kenny Myers was prepared to stay with me in Yekaterinburg if my passport hadn't miraculously turned up. The Lugar ethic matriculated into this very publication, with Mark Schoeff Jr. and

Cam Carter playing important roles. This past week, in the wake of the senator's passing, I witnessed what was, essentially, the last hurrah of Lugar's splendid staff, though most continue to make important contributions to our society. From Mark Lubbers to Bob and Ellen Whitt, Nick Weber, Andy Fisher, David Willkie and Emily Krueger, I watched these seasoned pros coordinate the final send-off for their beloved mentor, and it renewed in volumes my appreciation for the staffers who help make someone like Dick Lugar a truly great and generational public servant. Please accept, from the depth of my heart, this final tip of the hat. - Brian A. Howey

COMMON CAUSE SUES OVER ST. JOE ABSENTEE BALLOTS - An Indiana watchdog group says dozens of St. Joseph County voters had their ballots rejected in the 2018 election — wrongly in most cases — and were never told their votes didn't count, all because election workers decided the signatures on absentee ballots did not appear genuine (Sheckler & Bauer, South Bend Tribune). The nonpartisan group Common Cause Indiana filed a lawsuit Thursday asking a federal judge to strike down as unconstitutional the state law allowing election officials to reject ballots based on perceived mismatched signatures without allowing voters to prove the ballots are authentic. "Indiana's ... signature-matching requirements violate due process," the lawsuit said. "The voter is given no written or oral notice that his or her ballot has been rejected due to a signature mismatch and is thus given no opportunity to challenge the decision to reject their absentee ballot." The lawsuit alleged the "process of determining whether a voter's signature is 'genuine' is fraught with error and inconsistent application" because "ballot counters and members of county election boards are not experts in handwriting analysis and cannot make an accurate and reliable determination whether a voter's signature is 'genuine.'"

VOTE FRAUD CASE IN KOKOMO: Kokomo business owner Allen Wilson is facing financial ramifications after voter fraud allegations were leveled against him in the lead-up to Election Day. The latest development in Wilson's situation was revealed Wednesday during a meeting of the Kokomo Board of Public Works and Safety, when Kokomo Police Department Maj. James Calabro read a memo from Chief Rob Baker requesting a suspension of his company from the call rotation within the city's towing contract (Myers, Kokomo Tribune). Competition Towing & Recovery, located at 1101 S. Apperson Way, is owned by Wilson. Competition Auto Body is located at the same address, show online records. The memo cited the "voter fraud allegations" against Wilson and requested to the Board of Works a suspension of Competition Towing "while that investigation is pending." The email alleged Wilson illegally changed his voter registration on April 2 to the Apperson Way address, inside city limits, in order to vote in this spring's municipal primary election.

HANSCOM JOINING UNITED WAY: United Way of Central Indiana has named Peter Hanscom the organization's vice president of marketing. This role will be critical in the leadership and development of marketing and communication strategies, increasing regional presence and enhancing the overall brand of United Way (Howey Politics Indiana). Hanscom joins United Way of Central Indiana with several years of experience in the political arena. As the current president of Left Done Right Consulting, LLC and former campaign manager for U.S. Senator Joe Donnelly, Hanscom has overseen various large-scale projects and budgets with progressive outcomes, including his role as initiative director for Indiana Competes, a business-led coalition partnered with the Indy Chamber that advocates for nondiscrimination protections for Hoosiers across the state.

SWALWELL TO DISCUSS GUN VIOLENCE IN INDY: Democratic presidential candidate Congressman Eric Swalwell will meet with Indianapolis community activists at the Kountry Kitchen Soul Food Place in Indianapolis at 8 this morning to discuss how best to end the gun violence plaguing America (Howey Politics Indiana). "I'm meeting with Indianapolis leaders to hear their thoughts, and share my plan, on how to save American lives," Swalwell said. "I'll be doing the same soon in Iowa, Illinois, Maryland, Texas, and California — all Americans' voices must be heard, and we all must work together, if we're going to put a stop to gun violence and heal our communities." Kountry Kitchen is at 1831 N College Ave. Swalwell also will hold a public Town Hall, co-sponsored by the Bartholomew County Democrats, at 2 p.m. Sunday at the Factory 12 Event Loft, 1235 Jackson St., Columbus, IN. Doors will open at 1:15 p.m.

BIDEN SURGES IN FOX POLL; SANDERS FADING; PETE AT 6%: Former Vice President Joe Biden leads the race for the 2020 Democratic nomination for president, according to the latest Fox News Poll. Among Democratic primary voters, Biden's 35 percent (up from 31 percent in March) leaves Bernie Sanders in a distant second place with 17 percent (down from 23 percent). Elizabeth Warren is next at 9 percent, Pete Buttigieg receives 6 percent, followed by Kamala Harris at 5 percent, Beto O'Rourke at 4 percent, Cory Booker at 3 percent, and Julian Castro and Amy Klobuchar at 2 percent apiece. John Delaney, Tulsi Gabbard, Jay Inslee, Tim Ryan, Marianne Williamson, and Andrew Yang each garner one percent. The highest priority of Democratic primary voters is defeating Donald Trump, as 73 percent feel that is "extremely" important. Next, 71 percent say it's extremely important their nominee has high ethical standards.

BIDEN UP 11% AGAINST TRUMP; PETE DOWN 1%: Joe Biden also performs best in hypothetical 2020 matchups in the Fox News Poll. Among all registered voters, he leads President Trump by 11 points (49-38 percent), up from a 7-point advantage in March. Biden's is the only lead outside the margin of sampling error in the matchups tested -- and he is the only Democrat to push Trump's support below 41 percent. Bernie Sanders tops Trump by 5 points (46-41 percent) and Elizabeth Warren is up by two (43-41 percent), while Kamala Harris ties Trump (41-41 percent) and Pete Buttigieg trails him by one (40-41 percent).

BUTTIGIEG SPEAKS OUT AGAINST ALABAMA ABORTION LAW: In a speech to the City Club of Chicago on Thursday, South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg addressed the anti-abortion bill that was signed into law in Alabama, saying women can't be free "if your reproductive health can be criminalized" (Howey Politics Indiana). "Now, I come from Indiana as a democrat. There are people I love, people I trust, people who support me politically who view this issue differently than I do," Buttigieg said. "But I must say that I don't think that you are free in this country if your reproductive health can be criminalized by government. This is not an easy choice for anybody to face and I would be loath to tell anybody facing that situation what the right thing to do is but that's exactly the point. I'm a government official. I don't view myself as belonging in that conversation. And to see in Alabama that if someone is raped and she seeks an abortion, the doctor who treats her will be penalized with a longer prison term than her rapist, makes me question whether the discussion about freedom in this country has gone off the rails."

BUTTIGIEG UNVEILS RESOURCE PAGE: The Buttigieg presidential campaign unveiled a new resource page (Howey Politics Indiana). "Today we're launching a resource page that explains Pete's positions and grounds them in his values," the campaign explained. "We hope this page will be useful as you talk to your friends and family about what's at stake this election, and why you believe in Pete's bold vision for our future. As our campaign releases further policy ideas and initiatives, this page will continue to be a resource."

BUTTIGIEG GOT $75K BOOK ADVANCE: Democratic presidential hopeful Pete Buttigieg has lots of student loan debt and received a $75,000 advance for his political memoir, according to a financial document he filed this week (Sikich, IndyStar). Those details were part of an annual personal financial disclosure form that candidates must submit within 30 days of filing a president candidacy, which Buttigieg officially announced April 14. IndyStar obtained the document through a records request Wednesday, the day after he filed the form. Buttigieg, of course, lists his occupation as mayor of South Bend. His annual income for running the state's fourth-largest city is $149,725, according to the document. That puts him among the highest-paid mayors in Indiana, likely the highest. While the state doesn't keep a list of mayoral salaries by city, IndyStar has reported Carmel Mayor Jim Brainard will make $148,786 in 2019; Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson, $142,000; and Fishers Mayor Scott Fadness, $135,174. Buttigieg also plays the stock market. He, and his husband, Chasten, have invested as much as $50,000 in Apple, and up to $15,000 in Alphabet Inc., the parent company of Google. Income on those was between $2,702 and $6,000.

De BLASIO BOTCHES ROLLOUT: Bill de Blasio found a way to stand out. The 23rd candidate to enter the Democratic presidential field found a slice of the limelight by botching his carefully planned announcement rollout. First a high schooler in Missouri scooped de Blasio by tweeting that the New York City mayor would visit the Truman Club in Sioux City, Iowa, for the first stop on his "Presidential announcement tour," with the club initially misspelling the mayor's name (Politico). Then protesters appeared outside the windows as de Blasio was on nationally watched "Good Morning America" this morning for his first campaign appearance. His announcement video quickly drew a mocking tweet from his would-be opponent President Donald Trump. The announcement came just days after de Blasio faced protesters so loud that they drowned him out when he tried to make an climate announcement at Trump Tower. All this was only after he equivocated for weeks about whether he should run as the 2020 field grew increasingly crowded.

BANKS ACCUSES PELOSI OF HOLDING UP USMCA: Trade has been a hot topic this week in DC, but not just trade with China. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said on Wednesday that a deal is close to remove the steel and aluminum tariffs on Canada and Mexico. The United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement has yet to be sent to the House as the White House is waiting for assurance from Speaker Nancy Pelosi that it has the votes to get through (Pfeiffer, Hoosier Ag Today). Northeast Indiana Congressman Jim Banks said that her concerns about passing the agreement are nothing but political. "Who would benefit the most? Donald J. Trump, the President of the United States of America, heading into an election year, and Nancy Pelosi can't get beyond that. That's what is holding up this deal. If and when this is ratified and passed and goes into effect, it could potentially be the biggest win that President Trump has had his entire administration. That will only help him moving into election day." Banks said the deal is a good one for agriculture and manufacturing. He added the many moderate Democrats were calling on Pelosi to bring the deal to a vote, including House Ag Chairman Collin Peterson from Minnesota. Peterson had this to say on Wednesday.

BANKS STATEMENT ON EQUALITY ACT: U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R-IN), released the following statement regarding his opposition to H.R. 5, the Equality Act, which is scheduled for a vote in the House Friday (Howey Politics Indiana). Said Rep. Banks, "The Equality Act represents the absolute worst of the radical-left's pro-infanticide, anti-conscience agenda. By amending the definition of 'sex' in the Civil Rights Act of 1964, this legislation codifies a fundamental right to an abortion up until the moment of birth. It also ensures that American taxpayers foot the bill for these abortions by effectively eliminating Hyde protections – protections I recently pledged to uphold in a letter to Speaker Pelosi." "Additionally, the so-called 'Equality Act' would undermine President Bill Clinton's Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 by forcing health care providers to perform abortions and gender reassignment surgeries regardless of their religious or moral convictions. This egregious abuse of Americans' First Amendment rights is why I will be voting no without hesitation."

DISASTER AID BILL VOTE NEXT WEEK: Majority Leader Mitch McConnell says the Senate will vote on disaster relief next week, right before the lawmakers leave town for Memorial Day. He's hopeful that the Senate will vote on legislation that the president is willing to sign (Hoosier Ag Today). While the House passed a disaster bill last week, congressional leaders and the White House have been hard at work on a bipartisan bill that can get through both chambers easily. Senate Appropriations Chair Richard Shelby says that senators are on the verge of an agreement. Politico says McConnell, Shelby, and Trump all have interests that have been holding up the deal. McConnell is a big supporter of the hemp industry and is looking to make sure crop insurance by 2020 for hemp producers is in the legislation. Shelby wants more money for harbor maintenance, while Trump is pushing for more funds to address border security. Negotiators say the biggest points of contention yet to work through are nearly settled.

CORRECTION: VISCLOSKY OPPOSED TALIBAN FUNDING - A headline in Thursday's Howey Politics Indiana's Ticker Tape section said that U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky and his House committee backed a plan to pay for Taliban travel during Afghanistan negotiations. Visclosky and the panel opposed the proposal from the Trump administration.

NTI BACKS LUGAR-TRAUSCHER ACT ACT ON START TREATY: Ernest J. Moniz, Nuclear Threat Initiative Co-Chair Sam Nunn, NTI Board Member and Admiral Michael Mullen (USN, ret.), NTI Emeritus Board Member former Secretary of Defense William Perry, and former Secretary of State George Shultz together expressed support for the bipartisan "Richard G. Lugar and Ellen Tauscher Act to Maintain Limits on Russia Nuclear Forces" (Howey Politics Indiana). The House bill, which would extend the New START arms-reduction treaty with Russia until 2026, is named to honor Lugar and Tauscher, NTI board members and giants in the field of global security who passed away last month. "Extension of New START will ensure that Russia and the United States maintain verifiable limits on their strategic nuclear weapons and delivery systems; exchange data about their strategic nuclear forces; and keep boots on the ground through on-site inspections," the leaders said in a statement.

BANKS LIKES TRUMP IMMIGRATION PLAN: U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R-IN), released the following statement regarding today's immigration announcement by President Donald J. Trump (Howey Politics Indiana). Said Rep. Banks, "I was honored to be in the Rose Garden today as President Trump outlined his plan to create a fair, modern and lawful immigration system. Our current immigration laws are badly broken, do a disservice to American workers and jeopardize our national security. The President's plan is rooted in common sense principles that should be above the din of politics. I urge Speaker Pelosi to stop playing political games and bring this important legislation up for a vote."

BROOKS REFILES JAKE LAIRD ACT BILL: During National Police Week and Mental Health Awareness Month, U.S. Reps. Susan W. Brooks (R-IN05), Ted Deutch (D-FL22), Fred Upton (R-MI06) and Debbie Dingell (D-MI12) reintroduced the Jake Laird Act, a bipartisan bill named after an Indianapolis, Indiana, police officer who was shot and killed in 2004 in the line of duty by a man who struggled with mental illness (Howey Politics Indiana). This bill provides grants to encourage states to adopt laws, similar to Indiana's 2005 Jake Laird Law, that enable local law enforcement, with probable cause, to temporarily remove and retain firearms from individuals who are determined to be an imminent danger to themselves or others. "Red flag laws save lives and are already working in states across the country, including Indiana and Florida, to prevent devastating losses of life," said Brooks. "As our country continues to grapple with how to keep our communities safe, the Jake Laird Act of 2019 will provide local law enforcement officers the tools and training necessary to help prevent senseless acts of violence from claiming more innocent lives. I am proud to reintroduce this bipartisan gun violence reduction tool that will help us better avoid situations that could jeopardize the lives of our loved ones, friends, and neighbors while also protecting individual constitutional rights."

YOUNG INTRODUCES EMPLOYEE FLEX ACT: U.S. Senators Todd Young (R-Ind.), Joe Manchin (D-W.Va.), John Barrasso (R-Wyo.), and Kyrsten Sinema (D-Ariz.) introduced the Employee Flexibility Act of 2019, which would change the definition of a "full-time employee" under the Affordable Care Act from someone who works an average of 30 hours per week to the traditional 40 hours per week (Howey Politics Indiana). Our nation has traditionally used the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) as the standard of defining full-time employment as 40 hours per week. However, in 2010, the Affordable Care Act (ACA) enacted a full-time threshold for the purposes of requiring employers to offer their employees health coverage at 30 hours per week. This new threshold fundamentally changed workforce policy and business operations and resulted in employers cutting their workers' hours. This change primarily hurt variable-hour and part-time workers who have lost the flexibility to add or trade shifts to make ends meet or earn extra money for such things as school tuition and credit card payments.

YOUNG JOINS SURPRISES MEDICAL BILL: U.S. Senators Todd Young (R-Ind.), Bill Cassidy, M.D. (R-La.), Michael Bennet (D-Colo.), Maggie Hassan (D-N.H.), Lisa Murkowski (R-Alaska), and Tom Carper (D-Del.), members of the Senate Bipartisan Working Group, today introduced the bipartisan STOP Surprise Medical Bills Act, legislation to protect patients from surprise medical bills. U.S. Senators Dan Sullivan (R-Alaska) and Sherrod Brown (D-Ohio) are also cosponsoring the bill (Howey Politics Indiana). This legislation is a product of a nearly year-long effort revising proposals and requesting feedback on draft legislation released last September by Cassidy, Bennet, Young and Carper—and legislation introduced last Congress by Hassan. Examples of patients receiving surprise medical bills include a patient who received a bill of nearly $109,000 for care after a heart attack, and a patient who received a bill for $17,850 for a urine test. "Too many American families have been hit with costly surprise medical bills at their most dire time of need. This includes Hoosiers who have been caught off guard by huge unexpected medical costs despite doing their research in advance," said Senator Young. "Our approach protects families from financial strain by establishing a process that keeps patients out of these billing disputes and enables them to focus on their health rather than unexpected medical bills."

WALORSKI FILES EMPLOYEE FLEXIBILITY ACT: U.S. Reps. Jackie Walorski (R-Ind.), Dan Lipinski (D-Ill.), Mike Kelly (R-Pa.), and Collin Peterson (D-Minn.) today introduced the Employee Flexibility Act (H.R. 2782), bipartisan legislation would provide relief to middle-income families by restoring the traditional 40-hour work week under the Affordable Care Act. Companion legislation was introduced in the Senate by U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R-Ind.), Joe Manchin (D-W.Va.), John Barrasso (R-Wyo.), and Kyrsten Sinema (D-Ariz.) (Howey Politics Indiana). "The redefinition of full-time employment under Obamacare is hurting workers who want to earn more money by picking up extra hours or trading shifts, and it's placing unnecessary burdens on our Main Street job creators," Congresswoman Walorski said. "The Employee Flexibility Act will bring relief to hardworking Hoosiers by ensuring they have flexibility in the hours they work each week. This bipartisan, commonsense bill will also give businesses the certainty they need to expand, invest in our communities, and create more jobs."

State

GOVERNOR: STATE SEEKS HIP TRANSITION - The state is looking to ease the transition to commercial health insurance for Healthy Indiana Plan participants who obtain jobs with better wages after the HIP employment mandate fully goes into effect next year (Carden, NWI Times). The Indiana Family and Social Services Administration (FSSA) has requested federal approval to establish the HIP Workforce Bridge to assist individuals who lose HIP eligibility because they're earning higher incomes. Under the plan, HIP participants could use up to $1,000 from their program-funded health savings account to pay premiums, deductibles, co-payments and co-insurance associated with commercial health policies for up to one year after losing HIP eligibility. "When you take a step forward in your career you should also continue to take steps to be healthy," said Gov. Eric Holcomb. "We want Hoosiers to pursue meaningful employment while continuing to see their doctor, take their medicines and maintain their overall health."

CORRECTIONS: PUTNAMVILLE OFFICER CHARGED - A Putnamville Correctional Facility officer has been fired amid allegations he trafficked drugs into the state prison (WRTV). Michael Miller, of Brazil, is charged with official misconduct, trafficking with an inmate, dealing in a schedule III controlled substance, all felonies, as well as misdemeanor possession of a controlled substance. A spokeswoman for the Indiana Department of Correction said Miller was dismissed from his position. "Putnamville Correctional Facility has a zero-tolerance policy for this type of misconduct," Warden Brian Smith said. "Anyone found trafficking will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law; this will be no exception."

GAMING: CAESARS COMING TO SOUTHERN INDIANA - As progress is made on Horseshoe Southern Indiana's land-based casino, officials announced today it will open as Caesars Southern Indiana — part of the internationally-known Caesars gaming and entertainment brand (News & Tribune). With completely new gaming facilities, increased amenities and new restaurant offerings on the way, Caesars Southern Indiana will elevate the entertainment experience to a new level for the Kentuckiana region. The $85 million project creates a 100,000-square-foot integrated gaming and entertainment facility. The new project will allow Caesars to combine dining, retail, entertainment and all your favorite slot machines, table games, and poker in one space. "When guests visit our casino, it will be an entirely new experience," said Horseshoe Southern Indiana Senior Vice President and General Manager Brad Seigel. "Enhancements to the guest experience will include many new sights and sounds, but what will be familiar to them is our friendly team members, always ready to make their visit memorable."

EDUCATION: PURDUE FORT WAYNE RAISES TUITION - Purdue University plans to increase tuition at the Fort Wayne campus in each of the next two years, and anyone wanting to comment on the hikes may soon have their say, the university announced Thursday (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). A public hearing is set for 11 a.m. May 29 on the West Lafayette campus, with videoconferencing available in Room 176 of the Science Building at Purdue University Fort Wayne. A 1.65% per year tuition increase is planned for Fort Wayne in 2019-20 and 2020-21, according to a news release. The proposed general undergraduate rate for residents is $8,589 for this fall and $8,730 in fall 2020. For nonresidents, the proposed rates are $20,622 and $20,961, respectively, according to Purdue.

MEDIA: VONNEGUT MUSEUM REACHES FUND GOAL - With hours to spare, the Kurt Vonnegut Museum and Library is closing in on a fundraising goal that will allow it to acquire and open a new home on Indiana Avenue in downtown Indianapolis (IBJ). KVML founder and CEO Julia Whitehead said late Wednesday morning that the not-for-profit museum was still about $75,000 short of its goal of $1.5 million. The remaining funds must be received or pledged before midnight, she said. The museum, which is currently homeless, signed a purchase agreement in February for a freestanding Italianate building at 543 Indiana Ave.

MEDIA: CSPAN BUS COMING TO FISHERS TODAY - C-SPAN's award-winning state-of-the-art, 45-foot customized Bus will visit Fishers High School on Friday, May 24 to honor local winners Sophie Foley and Lauren Higginbotham for their winning entry in C-SPAN's annual student video documentary competition, StudentCam (Howey Politics.com). In partnership with Comcast, C-SPAN will present a StudentCam certificate of merit and oversized check to the students during a school-wide ceremony of classmates, teachers, family members and elected officials. The winning video will also be viewed during the congratulatory event.

SPORTS: DAMON, BALE WILL BE INDY 500 STARTERS - Academy Award-winning actors Matt Damon and Christian Bale will wave the green flag as honorary starters for this year's Indianapolis 500 (AP). The two are co-starring in the movie "Ford v Ferrari" — which profiles the corporate battles waged by American car designer Carroll Shelby and British driver Ken Miles. They teamed up to use a Ford car against Enzo Ferrari's dominant team at the 24 Hours of Le Mans in 1966. The movie is scheduled for a Nov. 15 release. Indianapolis Motor Speedway President Doug Boles says the duo are used to performing under the bright lights and they should enjoy themselves.

Nation

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP ROLLS OUT IMMIGRATION PLAN - President Trump on Thursday rolled out a new immigration plan that would move the U.S. toward a "merit-based" system favoring highly skilled workers over migrants with family members living here, saying it would make the nation "the envy of the world" (The Hill). But the president made it clear he views the plan, which has little chance of passing Congress, as a political cudgel against Democrats as much as a serious legislative proposal. "Today we are presenting a clear contrast," Trump said during a speech in the Rose Garden of the White House. "Democrats are proposing open borders, lower wages and, frankly, lawless chaos. We are proposing an immigration plan that puts the jobs, wages and safety of American workers first." The president said he would use his "common sense" plan to paint Democrats as unreasonable during the 2020 elections if they do not work with him to make it become law and predicted it could help propel him to a reelection victory.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP TAMPES DOWN IRAN WAR DRUMS - President Trump told a group of top aides including his acting defense chief that he doesn't want tensions between the U.S. and Iran to lead to war, administration officials said (Wall Street Journal). During a meeting at the White House on Wednesday, Mr. Trump made the comments to acting Defense Secretary Pat Shanahan as part of a conversation, the officials said, though they added he didn't issue a specific order. The comments came after Mr. Trump in recent days had told advisers that he is reluctant to start any kind of unilateral conflict with Iran, one administration official said. Instead, he has expressed his interest in a negotiated solution, even if that means speaking to the Iranians directly, this person said, a move that would be counter to the recommendation of some top advisers. Last week, Mr. Trump in remarks at the White House suggested Iran's leaders also consider talks. "What I'd like to see with Iran, I'd like to see them call me," he said then. Iranian officials have said they don't see a reason to hold talks with Mr. Trump, who has pulled out of an international nuclear agreement with Iran and reimposed punitive economic sanctions. On Thursday, Mr. Trump again steered around talk of a confrontation. Asked at the White House if the U.S. would have a war with Iran, he replied: "I hope not."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SEEKS OFF-RAMP ON WAR TALK - President Trump has sought to put the brakes on a brewing confrontation with Iran in recent days, telling the acting defense secretary, Patrick Shanahan, that he does not want to go to war with Iran, administration officials said, while his senior diplomats began searching for ways to defuse the tensions (New York Times). Mr. Trump's statement, during a Wednesday morning meeting in the Situation Room, sent a message to his hawkish aides that he does not want the intensifying American pressure campaign against the Iranians to explode into open conflict. For now, an administration that had appeared to be girding for conflict seems more determined to find a diplomatic off-ramp. Mr. Bolton's independence has rankled the acting chief of staff, Mick Mulvaney, and has even prompted rumors that his job might be in jeopardy — something the White House denies. "But Mr. Trump has poked fun at Mr. Bolton's reputation for hawkishness, joking in meetings with him. 'If it was up to John, we'd be in four wars now,' one of the senior officials recalled Mr. Trump as saying."

WHITE HOUSE: KUDLOW EXIT? WEST WING WORRIES ABOUT FARMERS - According to sources, Larry Kudlow, a famous supply-side free-trader, is burned out by the job (Sherman, Vanity Fair). (In June 2018 he suffered a heart attack). Kudlow's relationship with Trump has never been particularly close. "Any time the markets go down, Trump bothers Larry," a person close to Kudlow told me. While Kudlow is telling friends he's "having the time of his life," he's also eyeing an exit. According to sources, Kudlow wanted to leave the White House this summer, but Kudlow agreed to stay after Trump said he didn't want Kudlow leaving until the China trade war was resolved. "I need you here for the markets. We need a united front," Trump said, according to a source. (A White House official said Kudlow has no intention of leaving.) As the trade war drags on, daylight is appearing between the president and his G.O.P. stalwarts. "Trump is getting a lot of shit from Republican senators," a Republican close to the White House said. Speaking with reporters this week, Iowa Senator Chuck Grassley said "both countries are going to be hurt" if a deal isn't reached soon. "People are getting nervous about the farmers," a former West Wing official said. "Farmers are planting right now and farmers need to make sure customers are there when this is all over."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP PARDONS FORMER SUN-TIMES OWNER - They'd known each other for two decades, the New York real estate mogul and the Canadian-British owner of a transatlantic newspaper empire, working together as business partners on a Chicago skyscraper project (Washington Post). They showered praise on one another. Donald Trump was "a loyal friend in my late legal troubles," Conrad Black once wrote. Trump returned the favor, at times. He once called Black "a tremendously strong man," but in 2007, when Black was on trial for ripping off his own company, Trump was asked in a radio interview whether Black was his friend. "I just have to see," Trump replied. On Wednesday, President Trump granted Black a pardon, wiping clean the fraud and obstruction of justice convictions for which the former owner of the Chicago Sun-Times served three years and two weeks in prison.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP MADE $434M LAST YEAR - President Donald Trump made at least $434 million in 2018, according to his annual financial disclosure released Thursday by the White House (CNN). That includes $40.8 million from his Trump International Hotel in Washington, DC, just blocks from the White House. Trump reported that his Mar-a-Lago resort in Florida generated $22.7 million in income, a slight drop from last year's reported $25.1 million. Overall, Trump's income appears to have gone down from last year, when he reported making at least $450 million. The disclosure forms include income ranges rather than exact totals for some categories. Since taking office, Trump has broken presidential precedent by maintaining his interest in the Trump Organization, which is run on a day-to-day basis by his adult sons Don Jr. and Eric. He's also the first president in decades not to release his personal tax returns, though he has submitted his required financial statements each year to the Office of Government Ethics.

WHITE HOUSE: JIMMY, ROSALYN CARTER RELEASED FROM HOSPITAL - Former President Jimmy Carter has been released from a Georgia hospital after hip replacement surgery (AP). A spokeswoman for Carter said former first lady Rosalynn Carter also was hospitalized Wednesday in Americus after feeling faint but was discharged Thursday along with her husband. The 94-year-old former president injured his hip earlier this week when he fell at his home before a planned turkey hunt. He and the 91-year-old former first lady will continue recuperating at home. The former president also will undergo physical therapy. Jimmy Carter plans to teach Sunday school this weekend at Maranatha Baptist Church in his hometown of Plains, Georgia.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will leave Trump Tower at 9:10 a.m. en route to Washington. He will arrive at the White House at 11:15 a.m. via the South Lawn. Trump will leave the White House at 1:30 p.m. en route to the Marriott Wardman Park Hotel. He will deliver remarks at the National Association of Realtors legislative meeting and trade expo at 2 p.m. Afterward, he will return to the White House.

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE TO GIVE TAYLOR U. COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS SATURDAY - Vice President Mike Pence will be the featured commencement speaker at Taylor University on Saturday, May 18, 2019, at 10:00 am, in the Kesler Student Activities Center (Howey Politics Indiana).

BUSINESS: ANTHEM 33RD ON FORTUNE 500 - Indianapolis-based Anthem was 33rd on the 2019 Fortune 500 list. It was the only Indiana company in the top 100.

MEDIA: GANNETT SHAREHOLDERS REJECT HEDGE CANDIDATES - Shareholders of the Gannett newspaper chain—the owner of The Indianapolis Star—backed all eight of the company's board candidates Thursday, turning away an attempt by New York hedge fund Alden Global Capital to populate the board with its own candidates (Washington Post). The vote, completed at Gannett's annual meeting in McLean, Virginia, amounted to a rejection—possibly the final one—of Alden's attempt to acquire Gannett through a hostile takeover launched in January by its Media News Group unit. Board chairman John Jeffry Louis pumped his fist after the vote to applause from the company's board members and employees in the company's auditorium. Gannett issued a statement afterward saying the outcome "demonstrates that Gannett shareholders recognize the continued progress we have made toward" transitioning its 100-plus newspapers, including USA Today, into predominantly digital businesses. MNG, formerly known as Digital First, initially proposed six board candidates, later narrowing it to three, including Heath Freeman, Alden's president. Alden owns 7.5 percent of Gannett's stock and controls more than 100 local newspapers.

MEDIA: SUNDAY TALK - "Fox News Sunday": Sen Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) Panel: Ben Domenech, Julie Pace, Katie Pavlich and Mo Elleithee. Power Player: Robert Caro (live from Claremont, N.H. ahead of a town hall with Mayor Pete Buttigieg at 7 p.m.). CNN "State of the Union": Sen. Mitt Romney (R-Utah), Montana Gov. Steve Bullock, Panel: Rep. Pramila Jayapal (D-Wash.), Rick Santorum, Bakari Sellers and Mia Love. CBS "Face the Nation": Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.), Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-N.Y.). Political panel: Peter Baker, Kristen Soltis Anderson, Jamelle Bouie and Ed Wong. ABC "This Week": David Petraeus. Panel: Jonathan Karl, Chris Christie, Heidi Heitkamp and Yvette Simpson. NBC "Meet the Press": Panel: Rich Lowry, Janet Napolitano, Heidi Przybyla and Eugene Robinson. CNN's "Inside Politics": Maggie Haberman, Jonathan Martin, Seung Min Kim and Jeff Zeleny.

SPORTS: CUBS STAR DIVORCING WIFE - Chicago Cubs star Ben Zobrist reportedly filed for legal separation from his wife, Julianna, alleging she "has been guilty of inappropriate marital conduct" (Fox News). Zobrist, 37, filed for separation earlier this week in Tennessee and days after he announced he was taking a leave of absence from the team, the Tennessean reported Wednesday. Zobrist's wife, Julianna, filed for divorce Monday in Cook County, Ill., the Chicago Sun-Times reported. Julianna reportedly cited "irreconcilable differences."

Local

CITIES: CUMMINS TO BUILD IN GREENWOOD - Cummins Inc. announced Thursday that it plans to spend more than $68 million to expand its operations in Columbus, Greenwood and Indianapolis as it grows its new Electrified Power Business segment (IBJ). Plans include constructing a $35 million, 100,000-square-foot office building at the southeast corner of Interstate 65 and County Line Road in Greenwood that will serve as the hub for 500 digital and information technology employees. These will not be new jobs—the employees will transfer from Cummins' other facilities around the state, primarily from Indianapolis and Columbus. Columbus-based Cummins is not seeking a tax abatement for the Greenwood site, but the city is offering other incentives. Greenwood's Redevelopment Commission has purchased 83.5 acres of property in the area, and it will sell 31 of those acres to Cummins for $10. The city says the true value of the land is about $5 million.

CITIES: MUNCIE BUYING RUSHVILLE AMBULANCES - The fire chief for the city of Rushville says his department has a tentative agreement to sell two ambulances to the city of Muncie for $85,000 (Muncie Star Press). While little information has come from Muncie officials, Muncie Fire Department Chief Eddie Bell confirmed that they have been in talks with Rushville officials about buying the ambulances, but there was no formal contract to make a purchase. If a purchase takes place, it would be the latest step in the city's effort to start a fire-based EMS. Mayor Dennis Tyler and Bell have wanted to purchase three ambulances for use by MFD since early February, a scaled-back version of a total takeover of EMS duties that first came up in 2017. The Star Press filed public records requests with both Muncie and Rushville on May 15 seeking email correspondence and contracts between officials regarding ambulances for the Muncie Fire Department.

CITIES: CIB APPROVES VICTORY FIELD PROJECT - Plans for $8.3 million in upgrades to Victory Field are moving forward after getting approval from the city board that owns the stadium (IBJ). The Capital Improvement Board approved more than $6.5 million in contracts for changes to the 23-year-old baseball stadium that's home to the Indianapolis Indians. The upgrades include an expansion of the Indians' administrative offices and the creation of a 4,500-square-foot Home Plate Club, which will replace four suites behind home plate. The club will also require the relocation of the stadium's press box and radio and control rooms. The indoor-outdoor club is expected to include amenities like beverage rails, televisions, movable seating, and a full bar, along with outdoor seating on three levels, giving more than 200 fans per game a more social viewing experience than what's generally offered with traditional seats.

CITIES: VALPO COUNCILWOMAN RESIGNS - Trista Hudson is resigning from the Valparaiso city Council after serving nearly 4 ½ years on the job, according to a city press release (NWI Times). Hudson is leaving to pursue "a new professional position," according to the release that did not elaborate on the move. "I enjoyed serving the city of Valparaiso and am proud to have provided fair representation to all," said Hudson, who intends to remain in the area following her resignation effective May 31. "Listening to all interested parties on each issue was a high priority for me."

CITIES: CENTURY CENTER RISKS BEING OBSOLETE - The Century Center could eventually slip into irrelevance if it doesn't eventually receive a major makeover (Semmler, South Bend Tribune). That's the opinion of Jeff Jarnecke, who oversees the Century Center and other sites as executive director of the city's venues, and a study that concluded that as much as $85 million might have to be spent to keep the facility competitive with convention centers in other midsize cities. On Wednesday, the Century Center's board of managers asked Jarnecke to continue advancing the proposal by identifying possible sources of financing, partners and even groups that would be interested in using the revamped and possibly expanded facility to determine what is possible and justifiable. "The way people design and use convention centers is very different than 45 years ago when the Century Center was first planned," said Aaron Perri, executive director of the city's department of Venues Parks & Arts. "It's important that we're keeping up with the needs and expectations of meeting planners."

CITIES: HAMMOND SUPERINTENDENT TO CLOSE 3 SCHOOLS - Staring down a projected $10.2 million deficit, the superintendent of the School City of Hammond made recommendations this week to close three elementary buildings and cut more than 130 positions districtwide by the start of next school year (NWI Times). The Hammond School Board will vote on Superintendent Scott Miller's recommendations in a public meeting next Tuesday. At a Wednesday night public work session, Miller recommended closing Columbia and Lafayette elementaries — serving kindergarten and pre-K programs through the fifth grade — and Miller School, offering Hammond's Head Start and special education pre-K programs.

COUNTIES: LAKE COUNCILWOMAN ELSIE FRANKLIN REMEMBERED - Public service wasn't just a promise to late Lake County Councilwoman Elsie Franklin, Lake County Sheriff Roy Dominguez told a crowd Thursday at the Genesis Convention Center (Dolan, NWI Times). He said she did it for living. Dominguez said he first met Franklin a quarter of a century ago when she worked for Gary Police as a radio dispatcher, answering calls for police, medical care and a myriad of other needs Gary residents had. He said she took that passion into local politics and county government where she oversaw the spending of public dollars for essential government services across the county. "She could interact with those in power and helped the poor and those who didn't have a voice. We will miss her strong voice. She left Lake County better than she found it," Dominguez said.

COUNTIES: HOWARD COURT MEDIATION FAILS - After a failed mediation session, a dispute over salary raises between the Howard County Council and Judge William Menges is headed to a special judge (Myers, Kokomo Tribune). Howard County Attorney Alan Wilson confirmed Wednesday "no resolution was reached" during mediation earlier this month but said he could provide no other details about the confidential process. The next step in the disagreement, which could lead to an expensive legal bill for Howard County taxpayers, is for the Indiana Supreme Court to appoint a special judge to preside over the case. The county has to pay the legal bills for both sides using taxpayer dollars, acknowledged Wilson. He said he cannot yet predict the total cost. "I would rather have been able to come to an agreement and end the process there. It just wasn't in the cards, I guess," said Howard County Council President Jim Papacek.

INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT

Quarter pays no dividends

Q1 decline is largest in five years; lowest revenue since 2003

Through the first three months of 2019, statewide win of $548,422,923 at Indiana's 13 gaming properties is down by almost $11.35 million (- 2.03%) from $559,768,486 during the same quarter of 2018, the largest percentage and real-dollar decline the state has seen during any first quarter in five years.

That dates back to January - March 2014, the noisome quarter which saw record cold, snow, and ice paralyze the casinos all across the state for a prolonged period.

In terms of total revenues, the first quarter of 2019 (which saw the first anniversary of the opening of the Native American casino in South Bend) produced the lowest numbers since the first three months of 2003 - the initial full first quarter of dockside gaming, a time when the state was home to one fewer commercial casino, and the two racinos had yet to open.

As we've told you before, this is an important quarter to Indiana's gaming properties. Casinos in the Midwest region have traditionally expected to post their top revenue quarter of the year in the January - March period.

After the first quarter of 2016 interrupted a depressing three-year losing streak, 2017 results took a step back, 2018 dipped further, and then 2019 took an even longer stride backwards . . . although the first quarter numbers in both 2016 and 2017 were better than any comparable January - March period since 2013. That year was also the last time in which first quarter results topped $575 million (a streak that began in 2004, before the last casino and two racinos were added to the bottom line). So Q1 2019 was flat-out lousy.

Guv wants law's impact studied

He waits, praises, signs, seeks monitoring

Governor Eric Holcomb (R) waited until about seven hours before the deadline for final action before signing HEA 1015-2019 and offering this statement:

"Gaming is a highly regulated industry that once had little competition, but now does from surrounding states and new technology. By modernizing our laws, this legislation will spur positive economic growth for our state and for an industry that employs over 11,000 Hoosiers. Additionally, it will bring in new revenue and create hundreds of new jobs - both permanent and in construction."

Beyond the banal and obvious, he served up a line indicating interest in its consequences: "I will direct the Indiana Gaming Commission to monitor for potential effects of this bill so that we can make necessary changes in future legislative sessions."

Bear in mind that such a study, requested by Rep. Holli Sullivan (R) in the House Committee on Ways and Means, was ultimately removed in conference. Even so, several House members kept suggesting such a study was in order, and assurances were continually provided by bill backers that the effects would be reviewed and that there would be two years in which to make any appropriate adjustments before the next budget.

So the Q1 doldrums continue, although the 2018 flooding in Southern Indiana that caused the closure of three different properties for assorted lengths in late February and early March was partially to blame, as was the 2019 flooding that shut down both Belterra Casino Resort and Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana for four days each, albeit a briefer dark period than the 10-day Q1 2018 closure at the Harrison County property.

As Eldorado Resorts, Inc. CEO Thomas Reeg told analysts on the company's first quarter earnings call earlier this month, "The first quarter is typically my least favorite to talk about because invariably the conversation turns to weather, and this one was no exception," While he wasn't necessarily referring to events at his company's Tropicana Evansville, Reeg added, "I've heard enough about bomb cyclones and polar vortexes to last me for quite some time."

After the January - March 2015 period marked the first time since 2003 in which none of the months in the first quarter hit $200 million, we managed to cross the $200 million rubicon in March 2016, and continued that one-month March trend in each first quarter since (note, however, that in contrast to recent years, no single casino topped $100 million in first quarter revenue in 2019).

While March 2019 again significantly outpaced the other months of the quarter, this year's March bottom line slipped from the prior year for the first time since 2015.

But after we broke the first quarter jinx in 2016 following over-the-year declines for an unprecedented three consecutive years, we're back where we started . . . or worse, falling to a first quarter low we have not seen since 2003.

* Rounding is approximate

Since the first full year of the financial crisis in 2009, eight of the 10 first quarters have experienced revenue declines from the prior-year quarter.

By comparison, 10 years ago during the first quarter of 2009 - a period theoretically depressed by the impact of "The Great Recession" - January through March win of $714,277,954 that year was not only a record for the quarter in Indiana history, but also $165.86 million (23.22%) more than during the first quarter of 2019. But that 2009 first quarter didn't include competition from some 30,000 Illinois video gaming terminals and a shiny new casino in Des Plaines, four land-based casinos and seven racinos in Ohio, historical wagering machines in Kentucky, and a land-based Native American casino in South Bend.

At this juncture back in 2015, we opined that "The state's failure to make a first quarter recovery is far more problematic than most people realize, particularly as it seems to result from a combination of tough to resolve factors."

As we told you four years ago, we likely won't find ourselves back at such lofty levels given the rise of competition around us, although a new inland Gary casino site, a Vigo County casino, and live table games at the racinos could help draw us closer to the glory days.

The casino that most directly affects the trio of Indiana's Cincinnati market casinos, JACK Cincinnati Casino, generated $52,965,641 in revenue for the 2019 first quarter, down from $61,072,210 in Q1 2018, but up from $51,330,806 in the 2017 first quarter (revenues were $50,171,465 in January - March 2016 and $48,305,525 during Q1 2015) . . . and when combined with the nearby Ohio racinos, the overall Q1 Buckeye State numbers in the local market are up substantially over the year.

Indiana's three Cincinnati market casinos generated just $78,958,180 during the first quarter of 2019, vs. $83,839,246 in first quarter 2018 win, down by $5.2 million (-6.2%). This was also down from the preceding few quarters which had shown remarkable stability ($84,160,759 in 2017 first quarter win and $84,185,332 in Q1 2016).

Illinois recorded $408,242,517 in first quarter revenues from its Video Gaming Terminals, more than $40 million (10.88%) above the $368,180,546 in Q1 2018 VGT revenues. Illini VGT receipts have grown progressively from $269,330,390 in Q1 2016 and $314,994,743 in Q1 2017.

Only two of 13 Indiana properties (French Lick Resort • Casino and Majestic Star Casino II) posted an improvement in first quarter win compared to January - March 2018, compared to four of 13 Indiana properties that enjoyed a gain in 2018 first quarter win compared to January - March 2017, and vs. the seven that improved from Q1 2016 to Q1 2017.

There were 10 properties which recorded a gain in 2016 Q1 win compared to 2015 January - March numbers. Only one property (French Lick Resort • Casino) managed to advance in first quarter revenue position from Q1 2018, moving ahead of Majestic Star Casino I to 10th in statewide Q1 win.

Eight of the 13 properties achieved their best first quarter over the past seven years well back in the rear-view mirror, in 2013, serving up further cause for concern.

Only two properties, Indiana Grand and French Lick Resort • Casino, posted their best quarter during the period in 2019, although that was one better than during the same quarter in 2018 (Tropicana Evansville, which was the only casino to debut a new gaming platform during those years, moving land-based in downtown Evansville).

Eight of the 13 properties also posted their worst first quarter in 2019, an ominous finding.

Four of the eight properties whose best Q1 last occurred in 2013 were southern tier properties, three were along Lake Michigan, and one was a racino.

Three of the seven which had their worst first quarter in six years in 2018 were on the Lake, three were along the Ohio River, and one was a racino.

Although you may be crestfallen about the first quarter results, please take solace in what transpired in each of the last two years: First quarter revenues also declined in both of those years . . . and yet when we reached the end of both 2017 and 2018, the statewide returns were up overall.

IN General

● As the Governor dawdled in signing into law HEA 1015-2019, reporters pressed him at an event earlier that day and he responded, "There's a lot of day left. I have until midnight."

□ Rep. Martin Carbaugh (R) of Fort Wayne tweeted as part of a colloquy with those following the fate of the final three bills left on the list, "He's being so cagey. But would anyone take a bet that he will veto it?"

□ After the Governor signed the measure, Casino Association of Indiana President and CEO Matt Bell told Travis Robinson of WISH-TV News8 in Indianapolis, "The industry will be healthier, the state will be healthier, we'll be more competitive, and better positioned for a bright future."

● Indiana Democratic Party Chairman John Zody requested the bipartisan Indiana Election Commission launch an investigation into the Governor's campaign activities related to a well-publicized pair of private jet flights in 2018 to Republican Governors Association events that the Indianapolis Star revealed were apparently effectively underwritten by the racino operator that eventually morphed into Spectacle Entertainment, LLC.

□ In a letter to the Election Commission, Zody called upon the panel to scrutinize almost two-dozen contributions received by the official campaign committee of Governor Eric Holcomb (R) as well as by Team Holcomb - Gov. Holcomb's joint fundraising committee - around the dates of the trips. Any of the contributions, if received at the out-of-state meetings, would directly contradict the Holcomb campaign's argument for not disclosing the flights, Zody explains.

□ According to Indiana Democratic Party, "The Eric Holcomb for Indiana and Team Holcomb committees logged 21 contributions on the dates in July 2018 and November 2018 when the governor was at RGA meetings, according to campaign filings. Those contributions included checks from organizations that pumped as much as $720,000 into the RGA in 2018. The Holcomb campaign also reported a fundraising expenditure on July 24, 2018. In a memo to the Indianapolis Star, Holcomb's campaign treasurer argued the campaign did not have to report the private jet flights because Holcomb did not directly benefit from the travel. In a May 3 letter to the Election Division, the Holcomb campaign evaded answering whether the fundraising agreement between Holcomb and the Indiana Republican Party, Team Holcomb, solicited contributions at RGA meetings. The contributions and fundraising expenditure paint a story that Zody believed demands additional scrutiny from the Election Commission."

□ Governor “Holcomb owes taxpayers the highest level of transparency and undisclosed private jet rides with lobbyists don’t give Hoosiers faith the governor is living up to that standard,” said Zody. “Holcomb should embrace the opportunity to clarify any fundraising activities on these trips and set the record straight.”

● Travis Robinson of WISH-TV News8 in Indianapolis looks into the dollars from HEA 1015-2019 that will be directed toward problem gambling treatment, and Casino Association of Indiana President and CEO Matt Bell tells him, “We’re excited to see problem gaming funding committed from new sports wagering revenue to combat that, identify it, combat it, educate it.” Less sanguine was Indiana Council on Problem Gambling Executive Director Christina Gray. “It’s accepted,” she lamented. “It’s kind of, ‘it will become the norm and accepted,’ and that can cause problems for people who do have a problem with gambling.” Gray adds, “I would like to see more money go toward the treatment, the actual treatment of problem gamblers. And so, I’m very thankful that we’re getting some money, but I would like to see at least more of it dedicated toward problem gambling.”

● We’ve been telling you that Eldorado Resorts, Inc. has been the frontrunner in the contest to buy out Caesars Entertainment Corporation, and one of the potential (albeit minor) sticking points in the deal has been resolved with the enactment of HEA 1015-2019, which not only makes it clear that Caesars will be able to maintain ownership of the two racinos when they become full-fledged casinos next year, but that a combined Eldorado-Caesars would be able to keep all five of its combined Indiana properties in the event of a corporate joinder. Eldorado is the parent company of Tropicana Evansville, and the lack of a need for divestiture makes the corporate merger less complicated. Further, the new entity could own as many as six properties, which would allow a new combined Eldorado-Caesars to bid for the Vigo County license as well.

□ The New York Post, which has had more internal insight into the Caesars end of the deal than any other publication in recent months, reported Wednesday that “lead prospective bidder Eldorado Resorts [is] busy investigating ways to slash at least half a billion in costs to wring a profit out of the debt-ridden business,” and “has not pulled the trigger on a bid in part because Chief Executive Tom Reeg has been determined to find $500 million in cost savings first,” even “as Caesars’ largest shareholder, activist investor Carl Icahn, has also complained of bloated expenses, including those at the executive level. Icahn, who owns a 28.5 percent stake in Caesars including swaps, has griped that the company’s $332 million in 2018 corporate expenses – a category that includes executive salaries – needs to be reined in, according to people familiar with Icahn’s thinking. If Reeg finds ways to slash the $500 million in costs, he plans to move forward with an offer to buy the owner of Harrah’s and Bally’s, which is worth $24 billion including debt and equity, sources said. If not, he is expected to walk away, sources said. ‘My hunch is he’s not going to get there,’ said a source who knows Reeg and thinks the cost-savings quest is part of a desperate bid to offset the risk of the acquisition. Caesars has given Eldorado until the end of the month, or Memorial Day, to make a binding offer, two sources close to the situation told The Post Houston Rockets Owner Tilman Fertitta is also trying to put together a rival bid for Caesars but is still struggling to secure the funding, sources said.”

● Gaming contributed $51.9 million in tax revenue to the state’s General Fund during April, the highest April amount since 2015. Gaming taxes account for 2.3% of total General Fund collections for the month. On a fiscal year-to-date basis, through the first three quarters of FY 2019, both the riverboat and the racino wagering taxes have out-performed the same nine months in the prior fiscal year by a double-digit percentage.

□ The riverboat wagering tax produced $39.1 million in April, as the category topped the most recent (April 17, 2019) monthly estimate by $3.6 million (10.1%) while growing on a year-over-year basis by $2.3 million (6.2%). Likewise, the racino wagering tax provided $11.6 million, beating the estimate by $800,000 (7.6%) and surpassing April 2018 by $1.0 million (9.8%). The riverboat admissions tax continues to dwindle, as expected. The tax brought in $1.2 million for General Fund tax coffers, off from the prior April by $1.2 million (- 50.3%).

● The Indiana Department of State Revenue issues a Final Order Denying Refund: 01-20182137R in which it finds that an Ohio resident was not a professional gambler, thus while he was required to report his Indiana gambling winnings on his 2016 Indiana income tax return (the Indiana casinos withheld income tax on his wagering gains and issued W-2G forms for these withholdings, which overall totaled approximately $9,100 on his Indiana wagering gains), he was disallowed from deducting his gambling losses.

□ While his gross wagering gains exceeded $330,000, he had a net wagering loss of just over $12,000. He filed an Indiana form IT-40PNR (Indiana Part-Year or Full-Year Nonresident Individual Income Tax Return), on which he reported zero Indiana income, and claimed he was entitled to a refund of the $9,100 withheld by Indiana casinos on his Indiana wagering gains. Upon reviewing his 2016 return, the Department of Revenue increased his Indiana income, resulting in a reduction of his refund from $9,100 to less than $50. The taxpayer protested this reduction. An administrative hearing was scheduled, but the taxpayer opted to waive it.

□ After some other issues were resolved, it boiled down to this: a taxpayer with income from gambling activities in Indiana must report that income in Indiana and remit income tax to Indiana regardless of that taxpayer’s residency. Similar to the federal rules, Indiana treats losses generated from gambling activities differently depending on a taxpayer’s classification as a professional gambler or a casual gambler. Indiana does not allow casual gamblers to deduct gambling losses on the Indiana return as those losses are reported as Schedule A itemized deductions at the federal level. Professional gamblers may deduct gambling losses since those losses are business losses under I.R.C. § 62.

□ In the instant case, the taxpayer was required to report his Indiana gambling income on his Indiana tax return, which he did not. Whether he was then allowed to deduct his gambling losses turns on whether or not he was a professional gambler. Revenue applied the analysis which we covered at length in these pages in the recent case of Popovich v. Dep't of State Rev., 90 N.E.3d 704 (Ind. Tax Ct. 2017). "The Indiana Tax Court set forth nine Treasury Regulation factors to help determine whether a taxpayer is engaged in an activity for profit. Those factors are: (1) the manner in which the taxpayer carries on the activity; (2) the expertise of the taxpayer or his advisers; (3) the time and effort expended by the taxpayer in carrying on the activity; (4) the expectation that assets used in the activity may appreciate in value; (5) the success of the taxpayer in carrying on other similar or dissimilar activities; (6) the taxpayer's history of income or losses with respect to the activity; (7) the amount of occasional profits, if any, which are earned; (8) the financial status of the taxpayer; and (9) the elements of personal pleasure or recreation."

□ Here, the Department asked the taxpayer to provide a log of his gambling activities, but he was unwilling to do so. From the W-2Gs provided, Revenue found that he had spent at least 59 days gambling in Indiana in 2016. "Further, Taxpayer provided a copy of his 2016 Federal Schedule C for both his gambling activities and an automotive business. On the Federal Schedule C for the automotive business, Taxpayer indicated that he 'materially participated' in the operation of the business and the business earned a profit in 2016. '[A] taxpayer's gambling activity is continuous and regular when the taxpayer gambles on a full-time basis and has no other source of employment or livelihood.' Id. at 711 (emphasis added). Despite the lack of a gambling log or other such documentation, the Department can determine that Taxpayer's gambling activities were not continuous and regular because Taxpayer had another source of employment or livelihood in the automotive business. Therefore, no further analysis is required. Because Taxpayer's gambling activities were not continuous and regular, Taxpayer does not qualify as a professional gambler; he is a casual gambler, and his gambling losses are not deductible on his Indiana return."

● The Indiana Department of Revenue issues Memorandum of Decision: 01-20190029R relating to an individual income tax issue for the years 2015 and 2016. What we presume to be an Illinois married couple filing jointly (the individuals live in Illinois but file Indiana income tax returns) was denied a refund of individual income tax in Indiana on the ground that they had not presented sufficiently reliable documentation justifying an offset of their gambling "losses" against their gambling "winnings."

□ In 2018, the taxpayers filed amended their 2015 and 2016 Indiana Part-Year and Full-Year Nonresident IT-40 PNR income tax returns seeking a refund of income tax withheld on Indiana gambling winnings. On their amended returns they reported approximately $900,000 in winnings and $928,000 in gambling and "offset" their Indiana gambling losses against their gambling winnings resulting in total losses of approximately $28,000. The Department of Revenue reviewed the return, rejected their gambling calculations, and denied the originally claimed refund. The Department told the taxpayers the State "must deny it because a federal schedule C will need to be sent if the customer is claiming they are a professional gambler." The taxpayers submitted a protest, an administrative hearing was conducted, and this Memorandum of Decision results.

□ In its initial review, the Department concluded the taxpayers were not entitled to the refund because they were not "professional gamblers," and thus had erred in their calculations. The taxpayers disagreed, admitting that they were not professional gamblers but contending that their calculations were based on relevant federal tax guidelines. The issue was whether the taxpayers presented sufficient information justifying their assertion that they are entitled to offset their daily gambling losses against their daily gambling winnings.

□ The taxpayers argued that the Department's decision denying the refund was wrong because "[w]e are NOT professional gamblers and did not indicate such on our Federal Tax Returns." They explained that the only Indiana income reported on their Indiana returns was from "casual gambling" at an Indiana casino and contend that they are entitled to a full refund of taxes paid to Indiana for tax year 2015 (and 2016) as they had no reportable gaming income in the State of Indiana. They incurred losses in excess of the reported Indiana W2G winnings for gaming activity occurring solely in the State of Indiana. The taxpayers told the Department of Revenue, "[They] record each session win/loss in accordance with Federal tax guidelines: each maintaining a contemporaneously prepared gaming journal. Furthermore, [T]axpayers maintain all banking & credit records of withdrawals and deposits made for gaming purposes on a per session basis in accordance with Federal guidelines." here, they provided the Indiana casino's daily gambling activity report, the casino's ATM per-session receipts and deposits reflecting net losses each year, their own handwritten journal summarizing net winnings and losses by date and location, and their federal 1040 "calculation of Indiana [adjusted gross income]."

□ "The Department concludes that the documentation provided is sufficient for the Department to substantiate Taxpayers calculation of the net winnings and losses attributable to Indiana gambling activities and – after verifying the calculation – to issue Taxpayers any consequent refund. On the issue of whether Taxpayers have provided sufficiently reliable information on which to base their calculation of net gambling winnings and net losses, Taxpayers' protest is sustained. However, this Memorandum of Decision does not address the actual calculation of those winnings and losses and takes no position on any other issue which may be contained in the 2015 and 2016 returns." The final conclusion: "Out-of-State Individuals provided sufficient documentation permitting them to 'net' their 'per session' gambling losses and gambling winnings on a 'per session' basis in determining the amount of 'other income' reported on their Indiana income tax return."

● Look for the Indiana Gaming Commission to do its best to provide closure on proposed sports wagering regulations at its meeting tentatively slated for August 28.

HEA 1015-2019 allows wagering to begin September 1, in time for the September 2 University of Notre Dame football season kick-off against the University of Louisville in Louisville (providing a likely boost for nearby Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana, in addition to those who will choose to gamble in-state on their personal electronic devices).

□ Also close in time to the September 1 start date: The National Football League first game, a Thursday night event on September 5, with the Green Bay Packers playing the Chicago Bears at Soldier Field, likely driving traffic with hopeful fans of Da Bears to the four Lake County casinos.

□ Alas, there has been no talk about rescheduling the football game in which Indiana University hosts Ball State University on August 31 – but if you were hoping to bet on that one, you’ve got a problem! If you want to wager on the Purdue University opener on August 30, and you are traveling with the team, you’re in luck, because the Boilers are playing the University of Nevada Wolf Pack in Reno.

● The Board of Governors of the Indianapolis-based National Collegiate Athletic Association votes to rescind the “NCAA Championships Policy Related to Sports Wagering,” which prohibited hosting championship competitions in any state that allows single-game sports wagering. The decision follows the board’s temporary action last year to suspend the policy following the 2018 ruling by the Supreme Court of the United States to effectively legalize sports wagering . . . and provides more top-tier competition for Indianapolis in hosting the national championship football game and both men’s and women’s Final Four basketball games. While Vegas won’t likely host swimming and diving championships, they will have a better shot than the Circle City at being a Frozen Four hockey championship venue.

□ The NCAA board also reinforced its support for federal legislative sports wagering standards. While the board stressed that an exemption of college sports in any federal or state legislation is desired, it emphasized that any proposed legislation should protect student-athlete well-being and the integrity of games.

● When the Summer Meeting of the National Council of Legislators from Gaming States convenes from July 12 - 14 in Minneapolis, the results of the post-PASPA world of legal sports betting and lessons learned from the early state adopters will be the focus of the NCLGS Committee on Emerging Forms of Gaming. The committee, chaired by Sen. Jon Ford (R) of Terre Haute, will hear from a panel comprised of these experts:

- Kevin Braig, Partner, Shumaker, Loop & Kendrick LLP
- Steve Geller, Principal, Geller Law Firm
- Nicole Metzgar-Schall, Corporate Counsel, Sportradar
- Dan Spillane, Sr. VP, National Basketball Association

□ “Being from Indiana, a state that has just passed sports betting, our focus is on making sure that the state benefits in the best way possible for our constituents. It is our job to get this right,” said Sen. Ford, who is also an NCLGS officer. “We can learn from where other states have gotten it right and when they might have stumbled. We can get ahead of the curb thanks to those who came before us and gave us the blueprint.”

● Rep. Dale DeVon (R) of Granger reveals to WNDU-TV of South Bend that he voted against HB 1015 because of the mobile gaming component. Rep. DeVon had not previously spoken publicly about the bill or his vote. “I voted against the bill,” the lawmaker told NewsCenter 16.

□ “If we have casinos, casinos are a destination place, it’s a place of entertainment and place to go, but I was a little fearful of the mobile app provision of the bill that allowed you to make a bet from your living room,” Rep. DeVon said.

● Full House Resorts, Inc. President and CEO Dan Lee reviews the implications of legalized sports wagering for its Rising Star Casino • Resort for analysts on the company’s first quarter conference call. After detailing the impact of the other major components of HEA 1015-2019, he explains, “The other thing that’s in the bill is it legalizes sports betting. And does so that it has to be done through the licensees, and we get a certain number of skins and so on. And so we will now have a sports betting capability both at the property and online in the state underneath our license. And in fact, we’re treated the same way as some of the big casinos. So what might not be a very big plus for Caesars is actually a pretty big plus for us. So that’s in the bill.”

□ Full House Senior Vice President and Chief Development Officer Alex Stolyar told analysts, “we are looking to monetize those with market access deals as we speak.” CEO Lee adds, “We are unlikely to do it on our own. It’s a lot of software knowledge that a number of companies have that we don’t have. So we’re probably going to joint venture on that stuff.”

□ Lee adds, “And we’re trying to figure out it, it might make sense for us to actually put a race and sports book in the property just as an additional amenity, and we’ve got a couple places we could put that. So we’re exploring that it’s one of the things we’re trying to figure out. I think we can put it. I think we could put it on land.” Stolyar added that while the Gaming Commission will be developing regulations for sports wagering over the Summer, “we believe it will allow betting on the land-based part” of the property.” Lee picks back up, “We have a lot of space in either one. I mean, I’d rather put it on the land-based side, but we also have lots of space on our boat we could put it on if we had to. And with the drop in the price of large-screen TVs – I can remember when we built Bellagio, the cost for the race and sports book was a huge number because of these very expensive large-screens. And today you can put one together for a lot less money.”

● Dan Nita, regional president of Caesars Entertainment Corporation and general manager of Horseshoe Casino Hammond, tells us that his company’s Hammond property is “actively engaged to be operational for Fall in sports wagering,” and has already begun working with a design firm on an in-casino site “We’re close to finalizing our location,” he says, and it will be in a high-visibility, high-traffic area close to some of the casino’s popular food and beverage options. One constraint: The area will require significant wall space to accommodate big screen televisions to show sporting events and for display boards offering odds. Nita is excited about the opportunity to welcome a “brand-new” type of guest to his facilities, but acknowledges that no one quite knows what the dynamics of in-person versus mobile gaming might be.

□ Nita also tells us that in the plans for the land-based casino at Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana, an area for a sports book was contemplated, and adjustments will be made in that property – which is “coming along” – to house a sports book, which will help it regain an edge over the Derby City Gaming facility in Louisville operated by Churchill Downs Inc. that has been eating into HCSI’s slot revenues, but will not yet be able to offer sports wagering.

□ Caesars has been the sports betting partner of the National Football League, and last week cemented a sports betting partnership with ESPN. “You’ll see more sports-related partnership opportunities in the future,” Nita told us the day before the ESPN deal was announced, and you can also expect more sport-celebrity appearances at casinos to promote sports wagering going forward.

● Look for Harrah’s Hoosier Park Racing & Casino and Indiana Grand Racing & Casino to undertake concurrent design and build-out of their respective sports books and new table game accommodations. While there may be a temporary sports book at each facility, both have bigger plans for table game venues and the sports book option will help drive that (although sports books could be located in parts of the “old” – or current – slot facilities as regular slot machines are moved around and the electronic table games are moved out).

● Trent McIntosh, senior vice president and general manager at Harrah’s Hoosier Park Racing & Casino, tells WTHR-TV 13 Eyewitness News political reporter Kevin Rader that Hoosier Park is exploring where to locate its new sports betting operations. “We have a couple of options. One is putting it in the racing side of our business. We feel that is a good crossover, good mix and a good use of space,” McIntosh tells the Indianapolis station.

□ Rader also reports that HP’s Winner’s Circle Pub, Grille & OTB in downtown Indianapolis is also evaluating how to configure its Pennsylvania Street facility to best accommodate sports wagering.

● GAN plc, a 15-year-old developer and supplier of enterprise-level B2B Internet gaming software-as-a-service solutions, and online gaming content, and other related services in the United States and Europe, is casting about for a mobile sports wagering partner in Indiana. GAN says that it “anticipates serving one or more land-based casino operators in Indiana with real money Internet gambling technology and supporting services in 2019.”

□ GAN developed GameSTACK™, a proprietary internet gambling enterprise software system, which it licenses principally to land-based U.S. casino operators as a turnkey technology solution for regulated real-money internet gambling, encompassing internet gaming, internet sports gaming and virtual simulated gaming.

● Rep. Lisa Beck (D) of Hebron voted for the HB 1015 Conference Committee Report on its final passage, but did not speak publicly about her vote or rationale on the floor.

□ Rep. Beck, a freshman lawmaker who was born and raised in Crown Point and practices law in Merrillville, was asked about the hold harmless provisions of the legislation by Jim Dedelow and Verlie Suggs on WJOB 1230-AM in Hammond. “I think it was a good thing,” she said of the controversial hold harmless subsidies protecting the revenues of East Chicago, Hammond, and Michigan City, but not elaborating on the amounts or duration.

● Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) sat down Tuesday for her first in-depth public interview since losing her race for renomination to a third term to Lake County Assessor Jerome Prince (D). She tells Jim Dedelow on WJOB 1230-AM in Hammond there was a concerted outsider effort to oust her, partly revolving around the Gary casino deal. “It wasn’t just Jerome Prince as an opponent,” she tells Dedelow. “It was Tom McDermott, Tom Collins, and Chris White,” respectively the mayor of Hammond, the head of Luke Oil, and the publisher of the Times of Northwest Indiana. Two of the three were lined up against her over casino considerations, she confides.

□ Mayor Karen explained that Collins, who “abruptly left” the Gary Economic Development Commission after leading it for just six months in 2011 “came to me last year” saying that he “felt bad” for having not been more involved, and could be helpful for the casino effort. After having “disappeared for seven years” he “showed up when the money showed up.” She says that he then told people in Indianapolis that “I wanted him to be part of the casino deal,” when she said all he had asked was “How can I help the city be assisted?” “I can’t insert you into a private deal,” she says she told Collins. “That’s not my job to do.” The mayor said Collins wanted her to then tell Spectacle Entertainment, LLC that she was “okay” with taking both casino licenses out of Gary, and asking the governor for a third license. Mayor Karen told Dedelow that “Anyone who knows anything about gaming knows it was a hard lift” simply to move one license off the Buffington Harbor footprint, and what Collins proposed was “simply naive, and frankly not in the best interest of the City” when the two licenses were “rightfully owned” by the City. “When I said no, his entire posture changed, and he went and supported Jerome it was revenge, pure and simple.” She added that she didn’t say anything about it during the primary race because “I didn’t want that to be the sum and substance of the campaign but it absolutely was the case.” She showed Dedelow a text she had received from Collins that indicated that Collins was not pleased with the way Buffington Harbor and the casino were being handled. Intriguingly, one of the earlier Luke Oil domos, Clay Potter, was a major local real estate developer (and top Hoosier Lottery retailer) who had made occasional exploratory forays into potential local casino ownership, land deals, and business-to-business partnerships before his death from a heart attack 15 years ago.

□ As for Mayor McDermott, “he was upset about the casino. That was the first thing,” and “He felt that he could work easier with Jerome.”

□ Asked why she lost even after the legislature approved the casino deal, opening the door for her Buffington Harbor transmodal plan, Freeman-Wilson simply responded, “People really didn’t understand the magnitude of what’s going to happen We didn’t do a good job of getting our message out. What does the casino mean? What does Buffington Harbor mean?” She said that she accepted ownership for not getting enough voters to sign on in her effort to get Gary moving forward in the direction she wanted to take.

● What's old is new. A strange #WeAreCaesar marketing campaign online and via billboards in Southeastern Indiana and the Louisville area consummated with a Wednesday announcement that Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana will be rechristened as Caesars Southern Indiana when the new $85 million, 100,000 square-foot land-based facility opens in December. The property was known as Caesars Indiana for its first several years of operation.

● A substantial portion of S.R. 156 was closed from May 7 - 13 due to yet another side issue east of Vevay (between Tapps Ridge Road and Markland Pike), cutting off the only direct route between the county seat of Switzerland County and Belterra Casino Resort. S.R. 156 reopened Monday, May 13, but restricted to just one lane, and regulated by a temporary traffic signal that allowed traffic to alternate directions. The Indiana Department of Transportation is working to establish a timeline for long-term stabilization of the site, a process complicated by utility lines.

● Tropicana Evansville could soon have a new corporate face against which it must compete. Ellis Park may be about to have its eighth different owner - virtually all of them in the past 35 years. Ellis Park, just a few furlongs from Trop on the north side of the Ohio River on Kentucky land, appears close to be cutting a deal with Laguna Development Corporation of New Mexico, which tells assorted local media that it can't comment - due to a non-disclosure agreement between the two entities. At least one other entity was reported to be in the market for the Pea Patch as well . . . but Laguna has been most prominently mentioned in recent weeks.

□ Laguna is the third-largest tribal gaming enterprise in the Land of Enchantment - but does not operate any racetracks (Ellis is home to historical horse racing machines as well as pari-mutuel horse racing). Laguna Vice President and Chief Operating Officer Kevin Greer is from Ohio, and before coming to Laguna in 2004, he was senior director of finance at Belterra Casino Resort, so Greer knows something about the Southern Indiana and Greater Northern Kentucky market.

□ In 2012, then-owner Ron Geary sold a 30% share of Ellis to Saratoga Casino & Hospitality Group, and Geary then unloaded the remaining 70% to Saratoga last July.

● A veteran table games dealer at Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg was arrested and charged in Dearborn County Superior Court 1 with two Felony 6 counts of Cheating at a Gambling Game after surveillance video allegedly showed him advising patrons via hand signals in April on how to wager their hands at a Three Card Poker table, and revealing his hand to players at a blackjack table.

□ Christopher Bayne, 43, of Burlington, Kentucky, who has been licensed as a dealer since 2006, was brought in for questioning by Indiana Gaming Commission agents. According to the probable cause affidavit in State v. Bayne, No. 15D01-1904-F6-000171, after being Mirandized, and waiving his right to counsel, told agents "he has been viewing his cards while dealing ... for approximately the past week or so. Bayne stated he liked to know what was in his hand and act like he was playing the game himself." When advised "players could possibly see his cards when he flipped them up, he apologized and stated he didn't think anything of it."

□ Bayne denied knowing any of the patrons playing at his tables, and he "denied having any collusion or direct payback from any of the players." When Bayne was advised that "it can be interpreted he was aiding the players in the outcome of the game which is classified as cheating[,] Bayne showed no emotion to the fact and stated he did not mean to."

□ Bayne, who gave the court an address in Alabama, is now represented by David Zerbe. He is set for a June 17 pre-trial conference, with a Jury trial slated for October 21 before Judge Jonathan N. Cleary.

● Full House Resorts, Inc. reports first quarter 2019 revenues for its Rising Star Casino • Resort. Full House explains that net revenues during the three-month period decreased by 3.2% for the quarter to $10.9 million from $11.2 million due to "disruption caused by both flooding and the repaving of the main highway leading to the property, resulting in lower business volumes." The company's new ferry service helped offset the U.S. 50 construction disruption and showed increasing usage during the quarter. The worst of the disruption is expected to be over in May. The ferry carried 2,240, 652, and 3,042 vehicles in January, February, and March, respectively. The ferry was, however, closed for 18 days in February due to seasonal flood-stage river levels. In April, the ferry carried 6,037 vehicles. Casino revenue decreased by 2.4% during the quarter, attributed mostly to a 2.3% decrease in slot revenue, and, to a lesser extent, a 2.8% decline in table games revenue. Food and beverage revenues were down due to the shortfall in guest volumes and a reduction in operating hours for the property's buffet. Hotel revenues increased by 2.5% for the quarter, reflecting both a higher average daily room rate and the implementation of a daily resort fee.

□ Adjusted Property EBITDA of $404,000 in the first quarter of 2019 compares to $493,000 in the prior-year period. Flooding and other adverse weather affected operations in both periods. Adjusted Property EBITDA for the three months ended March 31, 2019 decreased by 18.1%, due in part to the revenue declines, and to costs associated with the ramp-up of the property's new ferry boat operations. As a result, Adjusted Property EBITDA Margin declined to 3.7% from 4.4% in the prior-year quarter.

● Full House Resorts, Inc. officials provide some color on first quarter results at its Rising Star Casino • Resort during the company's earnings conference call with investment analysts. Chief Financial Officer Lewis Fanger details the weather and related infrastructure problems that led to decreased visitation and revenues. "At Rising Star, we had some flooding issues. In the month of February as an example, we had 18 days where the road to the ferry boat was flooded. So while the boat could go, you couldn't actually get to the boat via the roads. And on top of that, (U.S.) 50 was under construction towards the end of the quarter." He noted that "We're also in the early innings of some marketing changes over at Rising Star including a brand new campaign that just launched. It highlights Lucky Ben, our general manager there." Fanger reminded analysts of the "ferry boat operation that's starting to ramp up now that the weather is better. In the winter, you can get delayed by fog or snow or rain and in the summer, it's a bit easier for us to have a consistent ferry service. And you're seeing that in a result so with April we had three times more cars that used the boat ... than in January of this year."

□ President and CEO Dan Lee picks up where Fanger left off in praising the potential of the ferry operation and adding more color on this and other operational changes. "I think if the ferry had operated every day in February which it just couldn't because river was flooded. And if the main road there wasn't under construction, we probably would have been up there as well, but hard to quantify." With "better weather, one of the things we're finding with this ferry is the number of cars that show up to take it depends a lot on the weather. It's a little bit surprising because 2,000 feet across the river, the ferry's just as fast whether it's raining or sunny, but I guess people are more likely to get on a ferry when it's sunny than they are when it rains. And certainly as we get into this spring, the trip numbers are up quite a bit. That's masked by the fact that they're repaving (U.S. 50) the highway that leads to the property – and so if you're driving past our competing casino and you (have to) get 11 miles further to go to us. And there's construction disruption in that 11 miles so you may be a little more likely to stop at the competition. So that construction is supposed to be ... not finished until later this year, but the major disruption of it is supposed to be done this month. And so we think we're mostly past that."

□ And more detail on the ferry comes as an analyst runs some numbers by Lee. The analyst notes that in the Full House earnings release, management disclosed that the ferry transported 6,000 cars in April, and while it had earlier anticipated just 25 or 50 cars per day, the actual carriage rate is about 200 cars per day, and he asked about seeing benefits from this traffic, or whether they were using the ferry to cross the Ohio River, but not going to the property. Lee told him, "We're scratching our own heads wondering how we get more of those cars to go to the property. We're not really running this ferry to collect $5 a car. And in fact, we're just announcing that for the month of May we're not going to charge at all. And let's see what that does to it. It's kind of a little bit of an experiment, but while the road's under construction we're just going to say, 'Hey, come on down and try the free ferry,' and let's see what it does. And then so we're playing with lots of different tools to try to figure out how to do it. The good news is, carrying a couple hundred cars a day is a good number. That's a great thing. Now that's both ways. And so that's 100 cars coming in our direction each day. And if you work backwards, a ferry runs 14 hours a day and takes four trips an hour, so it's far from that capacity, it can carry quite a few more cars. But, yes, we are – look, the good news is there's people there. We're just trying to figure out how to have it help the casino more, because when you look at the casino revenues, they've been kind of weak for a while now. And so we're doing a lot of things to try to figure out how to improve the casino revenues. And the fact that the ferry is there and is carrying cars is certainly good. And hopefully we could figure out how to translate that into an increase in casino win."

□ Full House Senior Vice President and Chief Development Officer Alex Stolyar added that it reminded him of the experience that he and Lee had shared when they were at Pinnacle Entertainment, Inc. early in the century, running Belterra Casino Resort, and "we had a road that went across the Markland Dam on the way from Cincinnati to Belterra. And I remember when that road first opened, Dan and I went a month after it opened, and we were like, 'Why isn't anyone using this road?' And then a year later, everyone was using the road. And it took some time before you saw the road usage, and then saw as well the impact on Belterra's results, and these things take a little bit of time. It's nice to see as Dan said, the car is coming across. Dan is right. Those are two-way numbers that we gave, not one-way numbers. But the promising part is people are using it, and so now we've got to work on a part two which is getting those guys actually in the casino as well."

□ Lee continues, "We're also refurbishing a restaurant at the property converting a deli into a bistro – the first refurbishment we've done to that property in 25 years. As part of that we had a little coffee place like a Starbucks and it takes time for this stuff to show up and I think the ferry is one of those. The RV Park is another one. That the RV Park opened kind of late in the summer of 2017. We couldn't do much with it in 2017. In 2018 pretty much throughout the summer the occupancy that RV Park built gradually over the summer. And we think it's likely to have a good summer – this summer is the word-of-mouth as passed around the RV community. It's actually a very nice RV park – short walk from our casino, from our golf course, from the cute little town of Rising Sun. So I think that will continue to be a benefit. We've made quite a few management changes there, and trying to look forward and Ben – who worked for us for many years in Colorado and then ran Stockman's for a couple years – is a good guy, smart guy, and good personality and has lots of good ideas. So we're going with that. And in the casino among those ideas, there's – we've introduced the inner block stadium gaming just came up a few weeks ago. That allows us to not operate the table games 24/7 as we had for decades. Many times at five and six in the morning we had more employees in there than we had customers, which doesn't make any sense And so we decided we could save money by doing the same thing here (as in Colorado), and $5 blackjack tables, if you run the math, you don't make money but even if the table is filled, if everybody's only betting $5 a hand, you don't cover the payroll costs of operating the table. Now if somebody's betting more than $5 a hand, you do. And so like other companies, we're looking at trying to push the person who might want to gamble $5 a hand - we'll even let him gamble $3 a hand at the inner block or IGT's got a similar unit that's kind of a table game experience, but in a machine context and so it doesn't take as much payroll. And then we still long for live table games during most periods during the week. Just in the very slowest periods we won't."

□ Lee turns back to the food and beverage operations. "Similarly for decades, we've operated over 33 meals a day seven days a week. Buffets need high volume to make any sense. Otherwise the food sits are getting dry while you stand around looking at each other. And we started analyzing it, realized that a lot of our competition does not operate their buffet during slower periods, and so we no longer do either. We only operate buffets during peak periods and this kind of ties in a little bit with converting the deli into a bistro. So we have a good alternative that's easier to operate - and frankly offers better food because it's cooked to order. And then we will operate the buffet at lunch and dinner on weekends and holidays which are when we have volumes make sense with it."

□ The Full House CEO adds that on the lodging end, "we've introduced a $10 'resort fee' in our hotel, (a) pretty common thing in the hotel business and certainly here in Las Vegas. And with that you get a free buffet, but it's not the buffet we've operated for years. It's a buffet similar to a Fairfield Inn or a lot of budget hotel chains where you have to pour your own coffee, and maybe even make your own waffles. That allows us to operate breakfast buffet with two employees instead of a dozen employees, and people are paying us because we're charging a 'resort fee' for it. We get some grumbling, but I think overall we're still providing a better breakfast experience than most of our competition, and we do so at a much lower cost. So that's something we've recently implemented and we're looking at things kind of across the board to try to be more efficient there and make money."

□ Lee addresses the recent legislative changes in Indiana, including the sports wagering beginning in September, a reduction in certain gaming tax rates beginning in mid-2021, and a change in free play deductions (which are still transferable), and concludes that while these changes should benefit Rising Star's operating results in the long term, there could be a short-term negative hit to the Ohio County property from the acceleration to January 1 of live table games at the Central Indiana racinos. He explains that the new law "has some pluses and minuses for us. The principal minus is that the two racetracks outside of Indianapolis which Caesars bought out recently are scheduled to get table games a couple of years from now. Under this bill that accelerates to year end. As of January 1st, 2020, they can open live table games. That's a negative force. It's hard to know how big a negative it is. The closest of those is about an hour away from us. We don't get a whole lot of customers from that direction, and frankly we don't do a whole lot of table games business. The thing that's hard to quantify is there could be somebody who lives midway in-between, where the husband plays table games, and isn't really a high roller, but the wife is a major slot player. And when they come out of their driveway and turn right instead of left. And that's very hard for us to know. We don't think it's huge. Also, if you were to go to those racetracks today, they have a large number of blackjack type games where you sit at a blackjack table and there's basically an iPad built into the table. You make your bets on that iPad, I'm simplifying this right. And even have a person standing there dressed as a dealer, but the person doesn't actually act as a dealer. They're there to like smile and offer you a drink or something right. But it very much gives you a blackjack playing experience. And so when they're now allowed to take that table out and put in a traditional blackjack table. That's certainly a plus for them and somewhat of a negative for us. But I don't think it's as big a plus as they think it is. And I don't think it's all that big a negative for us, but that's in this bill, they get to do that sooner than they would otherwise."

□ Lee turns his attention to the change in tax rates. "Now somewhat offsetting that effect - probably significantly offsetting - is that it alters the tax rates for casinos at the lower end of the tier. There's a progressive tax scheme here and for any casino with under $75 million of gross gaming revenue. We do about $45 million gross gaming revenue. So we're significantly under that and there's one other casino in the state that is also significantly under that. And right now the tax rate on the $25 million of revenues is five percent, and under this bill it goes to 2.5 (percent). Under the next $25 million, it's currently 20% and goes to 10 (percent). And then on the next $25 million which for us is kind of an aspirational target, it goes from 25 to 20 (percent). So that's a pretty significant reduction in our tax rate. Unfortunately, it doesn't take effect until July 1st 2021. So it's two years out there. They didn't want to affect the current fiscal budget. They do two-year fiscal budgets there, but at least on the horizon we would get a pretty significant decrease in gaming tax to offset the fact that the tables are coming sooner to the tracks."

● Evansville Mayor Lloyd Winnecke (R) tells WFIE-TV in Evansville that approval of a new casino for Terre Haute could prove to be a financial blow to both the City of Evansville and Tropicana Evansville. Mayor Winnecke, who is seeking a third term in November, tells the tri-state's 14 News, "If a new gaming facility opens in Terre Haute, our corporate partners at Tropicana believe it would be a six to $12 million annual hit to them in revenue." The mayor says that translates to a $600,000 to a $1.2 million dollar hit to the Pocket City, but the bill does serve up at least a minimal degree of short-term protections. He explains, "This bill contains what's called 'hold harmless' language, which allows that over a three-year period, we would get $1.2 million dollars, $900,000 dollars, and then $600,000 dollars if, in fact, a new facility is open in Terre Haute, and we do start to see a loss in revenue because of that from a competitive standpoint."

□ After that three-year subsidy expires tax revenue would be lost "unless the casino can come up with a way to replace it and it may require a little bit of thinking outside the box. Mayor Winnecke said, 'What this bill does is protect us for a period of three years, it's only three years of protection, but hopefully in that three year period Tropicana can adjust marketing strategies to offset any potential loss in business.'"

IN Vigo County Casino News . . .

● Lots more (unsubstantiated) talk is percolating about the serious potential for more than one operator not currently licensed in Indiana bidding on a Vigo County casino license.

□ Why? Look at it from the perspective of someone outside Indiana. The state is viewed as providing a long-term stable legislative and regulatory environment – the April change is viewed in the industry outside Indiana as evolutionary and not revolutionary; the cost of entry is low; there is no need to build or float a silly riverboat; the competition within the state is collegial and not cutthroat; the market is discrete enough that a substantial return on investment can be expected; since none of the current commissioners have ever been involved in granting certificate of suitability – remember those?; the state-level licensing process is expected to be fair, even if some high-profile local investors have locked in with Spectacle Entertainment, LLC.

□ We're hearing that there are several big- and medium-sized operators out there who have previously sought an Indiana license and may still be interested . . . if only to protect a particular flank).

□ Our advice to any outside operator seeking a local edge over Indiana operators: propose a damn Target store on an outlot so local residents don't have to drive all the way to Plainfield.

● Dan Lee, president and CEO of Full House Resorts, Inc., parent of Rising Star Casino • Resort, sets aside some time on the Full House first quarter earnings call to comment for investment analysts on the Vigo County casino authorization that his company first fought for two years earlier. "The [bill] calls for a new casino in Terre Haute. We have spent a couple years getting to know Terre Haute and all those civic leaders and so on. It will be a competitive process and to be the developer of that casino, we think it's a pretty good opportunity. And we'll probably look at doing it. The Gaming Commission will choose who gets to do it. And so we don't have an inside track other than we know where it is. We know a lot of people there. That doesn't necessarily mean we still will (not) have to come up with the best proposal. I'm sure that we will look at doing that, but that's in the bill.

□ Lee assesses the chances of Spectacle Entertainment, LLC, the widely perceived front-runner for the Vigo County license. He believes "They ended up without any advantage in Terre Haute, except that they are well-known in Indiana. Well-known, and Rod Ratcliff, I think is the largest single contributor to the state Republican Party. But ultimately this isn't being determined by the politicians, being determined by the Gaming Control Board (sic). I will tell you in Indiana the Gaming Control Board has always been pretty apolitical. It's a pretty straight-up board and always has been. So in a state where sometimes things do get political, I'm optimistic that this would be an open process, but it's also open to anybody. So you could have some Malaysian casino company commit an offer to build something huge or anybody. And so I think it'll be an open process. I guess the advantage we have is it's a relatively small market. So said Malaysian company's probably not going to be interested just because of that. We know the market. And we're pretty good at proposing new places I think the Gaming Commission knows us, we've been a good licensee and we have a good relationship with them." Another plus, Lee says: "[I]f we were to get Terre Haute, we don't have to close Rising Sun to do it. We're not moving a license. It's a totally new license."

● Terre Haute Mayor Duke Bennett (R) speaks to WTHI-TV in Terre Haute about the Governor signing HEA 1015-2019, authorizing a local casino license. "We're very happy about it," hizzoner says. "We've been working hard on this for many months – actually, a couple of years. Now, we've taken that next big step to be able to put it in front of the voters."

□ "We have already started the conversation as to what ballot to put it on—these things take time and have to be done right," Vigo County Clerk Brad Newman (R) explained to WTWO-TV in Terre Haute. "I will speak with the state and get guidance on exactly how things have to be worded and to reassure that we are doing everything right in the process. It's a county wide vote, so as for the timing – we are still putting together a plan for that."

□ Terre Haute business leader Greg Gibson, part of the Spectacle Entertainment, LLC ownership group that hopes to be awarded a license to develop the local casino, told the Terre Haute Tribune-Star Monday that "he hopes for a November vote. Although this fall would normally bring only municipal elections, a referendum question can be added to extend the ballot countywide. 'The community and the Chamber [of Commerce] and a lot of people are putting their heads together trying to figure out when that will take place,' Gibson said of the referendum. 'I think there's a good chance it will be this fall, which is when I think it should be, if for no other reason than it gets us in ahead of another legislative session. It's no secret that there were some communities unhappy with our bill, and who knows what may happen,' he continued. 'There could be changes made if we haven't made any moves, so I think it's important for the community to move ahead as quickly as possible.'"

● More than two years ago, when a casino was being pushed for Terre Haute, your favorite gaming newsletter told you to keep an eye on land on the east side of the city, around a new highway interchange at I-70/U.S. 40 and S.R. 46, just a chip's throw southwest of Terre Haute Regional Airport (which everyone still calls Hulman Field). The land was controlled by local business leader Greg Gibson, and Gibson last year became a part of the Spectacle Entertainment, LLC ownership group, which forced the issue of a Vigo County casino in the 2019 session.

□ Our 2017 site hunch has proven right so far, as during a ribbon-cutting ceremony for a new Home2 Suites by Hilton extended-stay hotel (with 91 suites) on Monday, "community leaders also looked north toward adjacent empty acreage as the possible site of a new casino," reports the Terre Haute Tribune-Star. "I'd like it to go right out there," said Terre Haute businessman Greg Gibson about the proposed casino," as he "acknowledged the spot he pointed to is his ideal planned location, as it's in the midst of commercial development along the U.S.40/Indiana 46 corridor adjacent to Interstate 70 The eastside location will attract traffic from Indianapolis and central Indiana, Gibson said, adding to the traffic already coming from Illinois 'A casino in this area as we picture it, we think, will provide four to five hundred jobs to the community, which will be fantastic for this area, so we are very hopeful,' Gibson said Mayor Duke Bennett said more development on the city's east side is expected. 'This is our growing area out here on the east side, and it's just great to see another addition' " "We're always thinking ahead. I believe there will be more hotels out here," added Gibson. "The area is growing fast, and I believe the population will continue to move this way. We're excited for the opportunities."

IN Other Casino News . . .

- The Indiana gaming industry quietly crossed a historic milestone in April 2019: $50 billion in casino win. That's the total amount of money the industry has racked up since the first riverboat opened for business as Casino Aztar Evansville on December 8, 1995.

□ According to those of us on the team at your favorite gaming newsletter who are not mathematically challenged, at the current pace (we've averaged $2.2 billion in revenue per year over the past five years), Indiana will hit the $100 billion mark around mid-October, 2041. Since we're not sure if PASPA or the Wire Act applies, we're not going to establish a pool (even for jellybeans) or encourage anyone else to do so, but if anyone does do so, we'd be glad to publish any odds, as well as any over/under stats you might provide.

- Senate Majority Floor Leader Mark Messmer (R) of Jasper, the author of SB 552 (that morphed into HEA 1015-2019), tells 18WJTS in Jasper about how the moving parts in the gaming bill worked. He says that the casino move was "part of an overall economic development program in that Benton Harbor (sic) area. There's an international company that wants to come in and set up a barge-rail-trucking intermodal site there at the [Buffington] Harbor location of the two Gary boats, but the first part of that was getting the boats moved; and then how do we set up the rules for letting them move - what are going to be the parameters; what are they going to pay (for relocation). This really sets up the mechanism for how that's going to happen: Relinquish their license, pay $20 million, and then the Terre Haute license that's open to competition with any casino company, pays $5 million." He notes that referendum approval is required for a Vigo County casino.

□ He refers to the $20 million Gary fee as "basically a early transfer fee," observing that "We had a $50 million transfer fee in the two racinos; and those were two casinos - basically bigger than the one that's going to be in Gary - but we had a $50 million transfer fee that when those were sold last Summer from the current operators to Caesars. So historically, (there was) precedent for that and dollarwise, (it was) equivalent."

- Sen. Eddie Melton (D) of Gary expressed his delight with the official enactment of HEA 1015-2019, even though his SB 66 companion measure to detail a process for redevelopment of Buffington Harbor failed to gain approval. "I am pleased that the governor chose to sign this monumental bill into law," said a grateful Sen. Melton. "The impact it will have on Gary, Northwest Indiana as well as the entire state is widespread, and I look forward to the historic changes that will take place. This is something our community has been working on for over a decade, and with this signature, hundreds of Hoosiers will find employment. Gary now has the opportunity to become an intermodal gateway for the United States."

□ In addition to his formal statement, Sen. Melton tells Lakeshore Public Radio's Chris Nolte that approval of the legislation "sets the tone for economic development and growth in the City of Gary." He adds that Spectacle Entertainment, LLC is "very optimistic" that its proposed project "is going to take place," and this will create additional major opportunities for development along the I-80/I-94 corridor in Gary and neighboring jurisdictions.

- The hold harmless hullabaloo has not abated in the mind of Rep. Randy Frye (R) of Greensburg, whose district is home to Rising Star Casino • Resort.

□ Rep. Frye delivered the most passionate speech of the final night debate on the Conference Committee Report on HB 1015. He became emotional about the impact the measure would have on Rising Sun and Ohio County, and he has not lost that edge since sine die. Rep. Frye told Eagle Country 99.3-FM morning show host Bubba Bo that he "is still irked by the lack of consideration given to southeastern Indiana casino host communities." The projected impact of HEA 1015-2019 on Rising Sun "is a decline of more than $600,000 in annual gaming revenue. That figure is nearly half of the city's annual revenue from riverboat gaming," the Lawrenceburg station's news team calculates. Rep. Frye actually apologized in person to the Rising Sun City Council May 2 for his inability to save the dollars - at least for now.

□ In describing the events of the final hours of the session to Bubba Bo, Rep. Frye agreed that "It was a kick. I think you're being polite by calling it a kick in the shins. It was done in the very last minutes" of the session (he told the Rising Sun City Council that he only learned of the language at 5:00 p.m. on the final day of session, about 2½ hours before debate on the Conference Committee Report commenced). He explained that he had no problem with the portion of the measure that allowed an off-footprint move within Gary nor the effective move of a license from Gary to Vigo County. "Terre Haute is a long way from here, and I didn't think it would bother us, so I was okay with that. Terre Haute needs some economic development." The bill also included authorization of sports wagering, "which I thought needed to be done."

□ But Rep. Frye remains distressed over what transpired in the "last few minutes of conference committee" deliberations. He explains, "Normally there is no new language that gets put into a bill (in conference committee). Normally the things that got put in get deleted out until you get an agreement. But in this case, our held harmless money - your listeners are aware held harmless is money (casino host communities) receive back from the state - it is an agreement we have had for years that provides local riverboat gaming revenue to our local communities. That hold harmless (subsidy) was cut and it was done without testimony. It was done in about two hours, and Sen. (Chip) Perfect and I testified against it and we talked to our colleagues against it, and we voted against it, but in the end it passed. What happened was, there was so many things in the bill that other representatives from other districts wanted that there was enough votes to pass it. I don't believe that language could have passed on its own. but they knew that, those who wanted it, so that was the strategy."

□ Rep. Frye, however, has let no grass grow under his feet since session ended, telling listeners that "the good thing is that it doesn't take effect until July 1, 2021, and so Sen. Perfect and I will be working to try to turn it around, and we have a couple of plans - let's hope one of them works - and we've already begun working on what could we do to rectify this issue. The folks down here believe that that held harmless money is something that goes as long as the gaming goes down here, but the General Assembly doesn't agree - at least some people don't."

□ Frye reminds Bubba Bo and the audience that the damage amounts to about $500,000 for Lawrenceburg, but that amounts to a much smaller drop in the bucket given the millions more the Dearborn County community receives from gaming than does Rising Sun. But the hit is “a little over $600,000 to Ohio County, the smallest county in the state, and if you heard my testimony on the floor, we’re giving tax incentives to some of the wealthiest people in the world, these gaming entities, and yet we’re going to take $600,000 from some of the poorest and smallest county in the state. So again, my testimony didn’t get enough ‘no’ votes. It passed with 59 yes votes.”

□ Bubba Bo asked Rep. Frye if the bill itself – aside from the hold harmless controversy – would help Rising Star. Rep. Frye told him, “One of the things Rising Sun’s casino testified to in the General Assembly, and I believe it was probably a good thing that we did, because we gave them additional tax break, which should make them profitable. We cannot have that casino leaving Rising Sun – (it is) the largest employer in the county. But they paid for it – they being some of my colleagues in the General Assembly – by taking money away from Rising Sun and Ohio County instead of taking it out of the General Fund or across the state. There’s $33 million a year that goes to counties that don’t have a riverboat from that fund. They could have easily taken it from there.” And that’s where you might look for Rising Sun relief going forward – from that statewide pool, where the hit would be only about $7,500 per county from that revenue-sharing distribution. “We have two years to turn it around, and I’m confident we can get it done,” Rep. Frye concluded. Rising Sun Clerk-Treasurer Rae Gipson (D) told the Rising Sun City Council, “Some of these communities have gotten more than us for years, and they don’t even have a gaming boat.”

□ Another notion Rep. Frye and Sen. Perfect are pondering: Enter into a new intralocal agreement between the casino, city, and county to work outside of any tax implications.

□ Rep. Frye wants the locals to engage in a letter-writing campaign to lawmakers. “Write letters now! Every few weeks! Or at least every month. Let them know how you feel, and that you are not going away.” Not only does he want his colleagues to know that Rising Sun residents (remember those ubiquitous yellow shirts back in 1994-95?) won’t go relent, he wants his fellow lawmakers to see his constituents, asking them to schedule some days in January and March where they can travel to Indianapolis to serve as human bumper stickers.

April State Summary

April win was just downright depressing . . . so much so that we didn’t even want to bring you all the bad news while you were still on a high from passage of the big change to the gaming rubric.

□ April win of only $182.88 million was down by almost 6.4% from the prior year, a $12.47 million shortfall. And did you know it was the most miserly April win since 2003? The over-the-year percentage and real-dollar decline was the largest in more than a year, it was the largest April real-dollar decline in five years. We’re going to stop here and wait until our next issue to tell you about all the record lows when we break down all the summarizes and summarize performance for you. Steel yourself for the ugliness as the first quarter jinx lingers.

Hoosier Lottery

● The Hoosier Lotto jackpot for Saturday, May 18, grew to $37.4 million, a $300,000 jump over the previous jackpot. This came after the May 1 and 15 additions to the pool served as the lowest incremental growth for the jackpot since the April 10 draw. The draw on Wednesday, March 6 had marked the first time in more than seven years (since February 18, 2012) that the Hoosier Lotto jackpot topped $30 million, a key psychological number for casual players, but this jackpot is now climbing slowly toward record territory . . . and the next big psychological milestone – a $40 million pot – is about a month away.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot continues to reign as the largest up for grabs since the matrix was revised in May 2014, topping the $25.5 million jackpot of October 14, 2017. This jackpot is the largest available in Indiana in almost 12 years (having topped the $34.50 million jackpot hit on February 18, 2012 and a similar-sized jackpot that was won on October 30, 2010), but still significantly lags the record $54.5 million collected on November 7, 2007. Second place is closer: $42.0 million (won on June 5, 1999). The current jackpot has been growing since February 10, 2018, so it has now gone unclaimed for more than 15 months.

□ When the jackpot exceeded $35 million, internet users saw a ramping up of web ads promoting the new bottom line.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot ranked as the nation's fourth-largest domestic jackpot from the $24.2 million December 19 draw until January 2, trailing the two multistate draw games and California's SuperLotto Plus . . . but after the California jackpot was hit, the Hoosier Lotto jackpot was third domestically, and the top non-multistate game from January 24 until the draw dated April 10. That's when the Golden State game posted a $34 million jackpot compared to Indiana's $33.7 million stake - illustrating the power of $1 million increments in each draw, sometimes five times as much as Indiana was offering each time out.

□ For the May 18 draw, the California jackpot hit $45.0 million to Indiana's $37.4 million.

□ The Commission outlines requirements for the post, telling prospective applicants that the executive director must have a background in the horse industry, a high level of management skills, and possess previous experience with pari-mutuel horse betting administration. The successful applicant must also have "extensive executive level experience in leadership and communication skills necessary to successfully communicate with commission, staff and all sectors of the horse racing industry and public."

□ Recall that despite some attempts in past administrations to make the position a gubernatorial appointment, the executive director (there have only been two in the 29-year history of the panel) continues to be an appointee of the Horse Racing Commission itself.

● Caesars Entertainment Corporation Chief Financial Officer Eric Hession takes a moment during the company's first quarter earnings conference call to brief investment analysts on the performance and positive contribution of the two Indiana Centaur Gaming racinos to the larger Caesars portfolio. "Key operational highlights in the quarter include ongoing strength at the recently integrated Centaur properties," Hession begins. "At Centaur, performance continues to provide solid EBITDAR growth as we realize benefits from implementing our Caesars Rewards database and our centralized cost structure. The performance of Centaur remains in line with our expectations, and we've exceeded our internal plan in the first quarter. We're pleased with the progress in - of pending legislation in the State of Indiana. If enacted, the legislation would enable us to introduce table games earlier than anticipated, and would allow sports betting within the state. We remain confident in delivering our continued synergies and achieving our goal of $200 million in EBITDAR contribution from Centaur by July of 2020."

IN Horse Racing & Racinos

● Indiana Horse Racing Commission Executive Director Mike Smith made his plans to retire public a while back, and the Horse Racing Commission will be accepting applications through May 24 to replace him, and Smith, a former legislator who has led the agency since leaving his leadership post with the Casino Association of Indiana in 2016, will assist with the process and transition.

□ "Deciding to retire has not been an easy decision to make, especially when working in an industry which I have grown so passionate about. However, I'm looking forward to spending time with family and focusing on my existing business ventures," Smith noted on his impending retirement. "I believe I can speak for the entire industry in saying Mike's departure will certainly leave big shoes to fill," noted Dr. Phil Borst, the Commission chair. "His leadership skills have fostered an environment of open communication and consideration for the benefit of all sectors within our industry."

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

Counties look to help themselves

As resources, populations dwindle, smaller counties seek alternatives

Despite encouragement to consolidate school districts to save on costs and improve opportunities for students, action toward such reform has largely been ignored in recent years, with only Parke County seeing results . . . and we all know how those Kernan-Shepard Commission recommendations for townships turned out. But we're picking up more urgent consolidation talk on a surprise front: the county level.

Smaller counties are struggling to provide basic services to residents for a plethora of reasons. Their rural cities and towns continue to lose population – or, at best, stagnate. A 2016 Indiana University Public Policy Institute report forecasted “From 2010 to 2050, rural county population in Indiana is expected to remain relatively stable (around 1.6 million individuals), compared with roughly 15 percent growth elsewhere in the state,” and urban and suburban counterparts grow.

Employers of consequence (and even small employers are of consequence to small counties concerned about jobs and a property tax base) continue to close local operations and new employers are difficult to land. Indiana Public Media's Brock Turner reported Tuesday that “Estimates show most rural Indiana counties will lose a significant portion of their workforce by 2040,” and “only 14 counties are expected to grow their workforce population over the next 25 years – many of which surround large metropolitan areas.”

The rural population is also aging, straining already limited local medical and human services resources. “In rural areas, the 65+ population is expected to grow by nearly 62 percent, while every other age cohort is expected to decline,” the IU PPI report noted. And “In the 45-to-64 age group, an age when many grow into community leadership roles, rural Indiana is expected to lose nearly 20 percent of its 2010 population by 2050.”

But beyond the losses of and changes in human capital, there are also some practical day-to-day impediments to growth – cost increases for necessary items like salaries, benefits, and pensions; equipment; and insurance. And you will hear complaints about the state and federal governments and schools and not-for-profit entities taking more property off the tax rolls.

The latest blow to some of these smaller rural counties: the new farmland base rate assessment the General Assembly implemented to provide property tax relief for farmers. The base rate started to drop for taxes in 2017, will continue through 2020, and the base rate decrease for 2021 is projected to be even larger.

And the law of unintended consequences (which some in government with long memories complain began with elimination of the inventory tax) means that as farmland assessments decrease, there will be a transference of property taxes onto residential taxpayers, which, in turn, raises the prospect for the property tax circuit breaker law to kick in, adding to the hurt for governmental units serving smaller population bases.

The shift to local income taxes as a financing tool isn't as practical for counties in these circumstances when that requires a base of wage-earners that may not be quite as easy to rely upon in low-wage, high-unemployment jurisdictions.

AGrivating GOP establishment

Hill fights back on legal, political fronts

As a May 22 pre-hearing conference on his disciplinary charges approaches, Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) is back in the public eye, and goes on the offensive against charges he faces. His attorneys filed a formal response denying all of the substantive sine die party harassment allegations and sought dismissal of the disciplinary complaint over what his team contends is failure to provide adequate notice of certain allegations and evidence.

The AG's office has kicked up its promotion of cases – many of which involve amicus joinder with other GOP AGs – in which AG Hill has involved the state, most of which have appeal to social conservatives, the target-rich delegate pool he needs in the 2020 Republican convention to undermine GOP establishment resistance to his renomination.

He also has become more publicly visible – and more willing to at least obliquely answer questions about the disciplinary charges. In just the space of a few days, he appeared on radio shows in Hammond and Indianapolis; answered website queries from Abdul; and spoke Monday night to a GOP Grassroots Conservatives meeting in Monroe County. To WIBC 93.1-FM's Hammer & Nigel, he said the special prosecutor “cleared me” of the allegations, and “people understand what it is.”

Some rural counties which have relied largely upon property taxes from coal-fired electric plants may soon face the prospect of life without that long relied-upon tax source as major utilities start to phase out those facilities, and while counties such as Benton and White have some success in bolstering their tax rolls with alternative energy production (windmills), several other counties have recently seen public backlashes and remonstrances against similar potential projects.

The state's smallest county, Ohio County, is facing another potential major hit to its top employer and business and property taxpayer, Rising Star Casino • Resort, thanks to HEA 1015-2019, which accelerates the date for live table games at the racinos, perceived as a threat to jobs and revenues at the state's smallest-grossing casino, and which did not include Rising Sun among the communities that would be "held harmless" from a drop in gaming revenues.

A few counties north, Union County is contemplating relegating a retinue of employees to part-time status thanks to continuing budget issues - and an inability to find new resources - with county health department workers the initial focus. Officials are also looking at perhaps contracting with nearby counties or communities for 911 and emergency communications and dispatch services.

Faced with these circumstances, some counties may be forced to look for an alternative to their current state of independence.

There had been quiet internal discussions late in the Pence Administration - when Governor Eric Holcomb (R) was lieutenant governor and overseeing rural affairs - with a decade-ahead focus about which counties could find themselves so short of cash and resources that they would be unable to provide basic services to citizens . . . and thus simply cease to function absent state intervention.

Out of our 92 counties, 27 (just short of 30%) have fewer than 25,000 people. Those 27 host a combined population of 481,410, according to the most recent Census of Governments report from the U.S. Census Bureau. That represents barely seven percent of the statewide population, while the six largest counties cover just under 40% of the statewide population. Four Indiana counties are home to populations under 10,000: Benton, Warren, Union, and Ohio.

While elimination of counties as governmental units seems not to be on anyone's agenda today, there is increased attention to functional consolidation and more regionalization of assorted efforts, the Association of Indiana Counties' David Bottorff tells us.

The long-time AIC leader points to several services which different counties have teamed up to offer, including 911 and public safety dispatch; animal care; and health departments. Bottorff also notes the just-passed legislation providing for regional public defender commissions, and the effort by Rep. Tom Saunders (R), a former county official himself, to pave the way for privately run regional jails.

Bottorff also notes the success of some recent (as well as ongoing) regional planning efforts, including some outside the state's Regional Cities and Stellar Communities initiatives.

"People want their local officials," Bottorff notes, recalling unsuccessful efforts to pare township officials, but, he adds, "they want them to work efficiently."

Some counties are also creating fire districts at the request of townships to provide a larger tax base and efficiencies for township fire departments, and some sheriffs are patrolling smaller communities under special agreements, some of which add revenue - albeit minimal - to county coffers.

"We believe in a quality of place strategy," says Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch (R) touting the State's Next Level Connections as a means of advancing counties into the next decade and beyond. "A place where you want to play is a place where you want to stay," she says, but the LG would also be first to add that the foundation of a quality of life rubric involves provision of basic services at an acceptable level.

So while you may hear increased cries of county poverty moving forward, don't expect any structural change in governmental units on the horizon . . . but you should also expect state officials to watch for the proverbial canary in the county coal mine, and for rural and regional development researchers at Ball State University, Indiana University, and Purdue University to be planning for contingencies.

IN Politics

State Office Races . . .

• As Democrats talk amongst themselves about the 2020 gubernatorial race and how to contrast the vision they want to present to voters for 2021 and beyond, they look back at what will be 16 years of Republican control of the Governor's Office (and largely the General Assembly as well, the latter chunk with supermajorities), and see that even though they have chided Republicans from the left over assorted social issues (and social conservatives have hammered away at the incumbents from the right), they also see Republican governors pushing the state further left on assorted "sin" issues (although some would suggest that the swing has really been moving more toward the libertarian philosophy), at least by signing or allowing certain pieces of legislation to become law (even if some emanated from Democrats). Among the issues cited:

• Gaming Expansion

- Licensing a French Lick Casino
- Allowing slots at the tracks
- Permitting land-based gaming
- Allowing live table games at the "racinos"
- Legalizing sports wagering (with mobile option)
- Authorizing a Vigo County casino

• Social Concerns

- Allowing same-sex marriage
- Permitting driver's license gender flexibility
- Approving a RFRA "Fix"
- Passing a bias crimes law
- Preventing consideration of fetal heartbeat law
- Allowing felony conviction record removals
- Passing "ban the box" job application law
- Protecting coverage for pre-existing conditions
- Empowering local gov't syringe exchanges

• Drugs and Alcohol

- Expanding numbers/type of alcohol licenses
- Legalizing Sunday sales of alcohol
- Approving Type II gambling in bars/taverns
- Allowing certain CBD product sales
- Legalizing hemp production for farmers

- The Power PAC (affiliated with Indianapolis Power & Light Company) makes a $15,000 contribution to the Governor's campaign committee on Monday.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

- The entire Indiana Democratic congressional delegation (both of them) will host a June 13 fundraiser for Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett (D) in Washington, D.C.

● Three races on the Sunny Side of Louisville that we failed to tell you about last week: in Charlestown, Mayor Bob Hall (R) defeated challenger David Abbot (R) by only about 100 votes, a much closer contest than had been anticipated Treva Hodges (D) will be the general election standardbearer for Democrats in a campaign likely to revolve around growth and transparency . . . Jeffersonville voters have a pair of familiar names facing them on the Fall ballot. Mayor Mike Moore (R) seeks his third consecutive term, while the man he beat in 2011, then-three-term mayor Tom Galligan (D) is the Democratic nominee . . . New Albany Mayor Jeff Gahan (D) wins again in his rematch with David White (D), but while White loss by about 700 votes in 2015, the margin was only about 385 this time out of the blocks. Mark Seabrook (R) was unopposed for the GOP nod.

IN the Presidential Race . . .

- U.S. Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA), a presidential hopeful, was scheduled to host a town hall meeting Sunday, May 19, in Columbus, his wife's home town, following a Friday a.m. gun violence roundtable at the Kountry Kitchen in Indianapolis.

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) is grappling with how to win over black voters, reports POLITICO, a conundrum that has also been examined by assorted other media and individual cable pundits . . . Mayor Pete sends a Wednesday email to supporters reminding them that "Alabama just passed a cruel attack on women's health, autonomy, and freedom, and last week, Georgia enacted a ban on abortions before most women even know they are pregnant. So far this year, twenty eight states have introduced, passed, or signed restrictive abortion bills into law. Abortion is a woman's decision - one she must have the freedom to make, and lawmakers have the responsibility to protect. Our next president must stand up to protect American freedoms. And let me clear: reproductive freedom is an American freedom" . . . POLITICO reports that Team Pete adds the "advertising firm that aided Barack Obama's 2008 rise to the national stage. Larry Grisolano and John Del Cecato of AKPD Message and Media, are joining Buttigieg's team," and the "mayor's presidential campaign is also bringing on Tyler Law, a former Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee national press secretary who handles communications strategy for AKPD, and pollster Katie Connolly of Benenson Strategy Group. Grisolano, who also worked on Joe Biden's 1988 presidential campaign and was the director of paid media for Obama's presidential efforts, said he had talked to numerous campaigns about the coming presidential election before settling on Buttigieg" . . . the FOX News Buttigieg town hall was scheduled for Sunday, May 19.

IN Political News . . .

- Indiana Democrats boast that more than 1,200 Hoosier Democrats appeared on the May 7 ballot or were uncontested for municipal offices, what the party refers to as "the next step in the Indiana Democratic Party's multi-year process to prime the pump of Hoosier Democrats running at the local level." Since late 2016, "the Party has retooled its approach to direct new energy into action," it says, with active recruiting and training generating "a nearly 10 percent increase in municipal candidates on the ballot from 2015 to 2019" as the party seeks to build its bench.

- U.S. Sen. Jeff Merkley (D-OR) will keynote the Indiana Democratic Party's June 7 Hoosier Hospitality Dinner.

- The Prosper Group, which Hoosiers have come to know as a Greenwood-based data-focused public affairs firm that develops communications approaches and digital strategies for political campaigns, advocacy efforts, and trade association initiatives, launches a new digital firm focused on corporate and financial sectors: Everest Communications. Zack Condry, who worked for The Prosper Group from 2010-14, reunites with the agency's founders, Kurt Luidhardt and Kristen Luidhardt, to partner on the launch of Everest. Condry, a former senior digital leader at Brunswick Group and Edelman, will serve as president of Everest.

□ The new firm's areas of practice and capabilities include executive and corporate positioning; reputation analysis and repair (social, SEO, and Wikipedia); crisis preparedness and management; and in-house graphic design, video, and web development.

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

- U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) and U.S. Sen. Cory Booker (D-NJ) last week reintroduced their "Federal Retirement Commission Act," which calls for the creation of a federal retirement panel charged with reviewing private retirement benefit programs and submitting a report to Congress on how to improve private retirement security in the United States. The commission, comprised of the secretaries of Treasury, Labor, and Commerce; two presidential appointees, six U.S. Senate appointees; and six U.S. House of Representatives appointees, would not review the Social Security program. "With many individuals reaching retirement with little to no savings of their own, we must take a serious look at our current retirement programs and make the changes necessary to help secure the futures of so many hardworking Americans," said Sen. Young. "Our bill would enact a commission to better understand how we can strengthen private benefit programs and ensure our current and future generations have the tools necessary to plan for retirement." The panel would be charged with undertaking a comprehensive review of private benefit programs existing in the United States, with a particular focus on moving from defined benefit to defined contribution models; private retirement coverage, individual and household accounts balances, investment trends, costs and net returns, and retention and distribution during retirement; and societal trends, including wage growth, economic growth, unique small business challenges, serial employment, gig economy, health care costs, life expectancy, and shrinking household size, that could lead future generations to be less financially secure in retirement compared to previous generations . . . Sen. Young and U.S. Sens. Bill Cassidy, M.D. (R-LA), Michael Bennet (D-CO), Maggie Hassan (D-NH), Lisa Murkowski (R-AK), and Tom Carper (D-DE), members of the Senate Bipartisan Working Group, introduce the bipartisan “STOP Surprise Medical Bills Act” on Thursday, legislation to protect patients from surprise medical bills. U.S. Sens. Dan Sullivan (R-AK) and Sherrod Brown (D-OH) are also cosponsoring the bill. “Too many American families have been hit with costly surprise medical bills at their most dire time of need. This includes Hoosiers who have been caught off guard by huge unexpected medical costs despite doing their research in advance,” said Sen. Young. “Our approach protects families from financial strain by establishing a process that keeps patients out of these billing disputes and enables them to focus on their health rather than unexpected medical bills.” The STOP Surprise Medical Bills Act would address three scenarios in which surprise medical billing (also known as “balance billing”) would be prohibited: (1) Emergency services: The bill would ensure that a patient is only required to pay the in-network cost-sharing amount required by their health plan for emergency services, regardless of the patient being treated at an out-of-network facility or by an out-of-network provider. (2) Non-Emergency services following an emergency service at an out-of-network facility: This bill would protect patients who require additional health care services after receiving emergency care at an out-of-network facility, but cannot be moved without medical transport from the out-of-network facility; and (3) Non-Emergency services performed by an out-of-network provider at an in-network facility: The bill would ensure that patients owe no more than their in-network cost sharing in the case of a non-emergency service that is provided by an out-of-network provider at an in-network facility. Patients could not receive a surprise medical bill for services that are ordered by an in-network provider at a provider’s office, but are provided by an out-of-network provider, such as out-of-network laboratory or imaging services. Providers would automatically be paid the difference between the patient’s in-network cost-sharing amount and the median in-network rate for these services, but could to appeal this payment amount through an independent dispute resolution process from which the patient is completely removed.

- U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) joins a fellow freshman colleague, U.S. Sen. Kyrsten Sinema (D-AZ) in introducing the “Consider Teachers Act of 2019,” a bipartisan bill aimed at what Sen. Braun’s office characterizes as “fixing a broken system burdening teachers with unfair loans.” While the TEACH Grant program provides grant assistance to students who serve four years as a full-time teacher in high-need, often underserved communities, his office explains that “often due to basic clerical mistakes, thousands of teachers have found their grants converted into loans that must be paid back with interest. The Consider Teachers Act aims to fix this broken system permanently.” Sen. Braun says “The TEACH grant is an important program to incentivize teachers to serve in neglected communities, but 12 years of poor government management has turned these grants into groans for thousands of teachers. To show our appreciation for America’s great teachers, let’s get off the sidelines and fix this broken system once and for all” . . . Sen. Braun teams with U.S. Sen. Ed Markey (D-MA) on a pair of bipartisan bills to help combat the opioid epidemic.

The first measure, the “Lessening Addiction By Enhancing Labeling (LABEL) Opioids Act,” calls for labeling prescription opioid bottles with a consistent, clear, and concise warning that opioids may cause dependence, addiction, or overdose. The second piece of legislation, the “Safe Prescribing of Controlled Substances Act,” would require any prescriber of opioid medication to undergo mandatory education on safe prescribing practices. The bill would specifically require all prescribers applying for a federal license to prescribe controlled substances complete mandatory education that will help encourage responsible prescribing practices. This education would focus on best practices for pain management and alternative non-opioid therapies for pain, methods for diagnosing and treating a substance use disorder, linking patients to evidence-based treatment for substance use disorders, and tools to manage adherence and diversion of controlled substances, including Prescription Drug Monitoring Programs. “President Trump has declared the opioid a national emergency, he has secured $6 billion in new funding to combat the opioid crisis and these two bills will provide him with two additional solutions to fixing this crisis by requiring prescription opioid bottles with a concise warning labels, while also requiring mandatory education that will help encourage responsible prescribing practices,” said Sen. Braun . . . on Tuesday morning, Sen. Braun appeared live on CNBC to tell viewers that the discussion of Chinese trade is a false flag of sorts, because “What’s driving this economy – and believe me, I’ve had a business for 38 years – it’s never been hotter and it’s not due to trade. What’s driving things is tax reform and rolling back regulations.” He also took aim at former vice president Joe Biden (D) for an Obama-like economic plan which would bring on “the doldrums.” He explained that “None of us as entrepreneurs were looking optimistically into the future with the Obama plan.” As for the other Democrats, “if you look at some of the stuff they’re rolling out now, with the Green New Deal, Medicare for All, free college tuition, that ought to frighten a lot of people,” he added. Sen. Braun later tweeted from his campaign account, “This is the hottest economy I’ve seen in 38 years in business, while Joe Biden was first lieutenant to the Obama agenda that gave us 8 years of mediocrity & stagnation. Democrat proposals like Medicare-for-All, Green New Deal, & free college should frighten every entrepreneur” . . . Sen. Braun on Thursday partnered with U.S. Sens. Pat Toomey (R-PA) and Thom Tillis (R-NC) as a co-sponsor of the “Thin Blue Line Act,” a measure to ensure that criminals face the strongest possible repercussions in federal cases when they kill or attempt to kill local law enforcement officers. “Hoosiers can rest easy at night because our police never do,” said Sen. Braun. “Our phenomenal men and women of law enforcement put their lives on the line every single day to protect our communities from danger, and anyone who kills or attempts to kill a police officer should pay the highest price possible.” The bill would require a jury in a federal case consider the murder of a local law enforcement officer, prosecutor, or first responder as an aggravating factor in favor of the death penalty, just as it is if the murder victim is a federal law enforcement officer or federal prosecutor. The bill would also enhance the penalty when a defendant targets a law enforcement officer, prosecutor, or first responder solely because of that individual’s status.

- U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) and U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) are authors of parallel bipartisan, bicameral legislation to change the definition of a “full-time employee” under the Affordable Care Act from someone who works an average of 30 hours per week to the traditional 40 hours per week.

□ Sen. Young teams up with U.S. Sens. Joe Manchin (D-WV), John Barrasso (R-WY), and Kyrsten Sinema (D-AZ) to introduce the “Employee Flexibility Act of 2019,” while Rep. Walorski is co-author of the House version with U.S. Reps. Dan Lipinski (D-IL), Mike Kelly (R-PA), and Collin Peterson (D-MN).

□ “Many employees in Indiana faced reduced hours and earning ability as a result of the Affordable Care Act’s 30-hour threshold,” said Sen. Young. “Our bill would fix this error and ensure that Hoosiers can support their families, trade shifts, and earn more money. I previously led the introduction of similar legislation in the House and I will continue working to ensure it becomes law,” he adds.

□ Rep. Walorski asserts that “The redefinition of full-time employment under Obamacare is hurting workers who want to earn more money by picking up extra hours or trading shifts, and it’s placing unnecessary burdens on our Main Street job creators.” She adds, “The Employee Flexibility Act will bring relief to hardworking Hoosiers by ensuring they have flexibility in the hours they work each week. This bipartisan, common sense bill will also give businesses the certainty they need to expand, invest in our communities, and create more jobs.”

● Bicameral resolutions were introduced in Congress last week to extend the Lugar legacy by reaffirming U.S. support for the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) and America’s contributions to the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). The resolutions also call for an extension of New START in 2021, if it advances U.S. interests, while also recognizing the benefits of including China in future arms control treaties. The bipartisan, bicameral resolutions also strongly criticize Russia for violating the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty, which eliminated 2,700 medium-range missiles.

□ The Senate version was introduced by U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R) – former Lugar aide; Mike Braun (R), Jeff Merkley (D-OR), Rand Paul (R-KY), Ed Markey (D-MA), Sherrod Brown (D-OH), Susan Collins (R-ME), Ben Cardin (D-MD), Kirsten Gillibrand (D-NY), and Tina Smith (D-MN). U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R), along with U.S. Reps. Brad Sherman (D-CA), Bill Foster (D-IL), Jeff Fortenberry (R-NE), Ben Ray Lujan (D-NM), and Chuck Fleischmann (R-TN), introduced the “Richard Lugar Nonproliferation and Arms Control Legacy Resolution” in the House.

□ Sen. Young said that “as we honor the life of Senator Richard Lugar, we also focus on carrying on his legacy with this resolution and our continued commitment to nuclear non-proliferation. At a time when nuclear proliferation was civilization’s greatest threat, Senator Lugar helped save the world. Today, our world is once again facing the threat of nuclear weapons being developed by rogue regimes in Iran and North Korea. While Indiana and our entire country lost a great leader in Senator Lugar, the safety and security of our world now falls to us and carrying on his work to ensure the world remains free of the threat posed by nuclear weapons.”

□ Sen. Braun adds, “Senator Richard Lugar is a towering figure in Hoosier history and one of the greatest statesmen to ever serve in the U.S. Senate. It’s an honor to work for Hoosiers from his seat and his desk on the Senate floor where he served our state with distinction for over 30 years and I’m proud to join this resolution honoring him,” he said.

□ In the Fiscal Year 2019 National Defense Authorization Act, Rep. Banks requested a report from the U.S. Department of Defense to identify ways to strengthen the Nunn-Lugar Cooperative Threat Reduction (CTR) program, as interagency coordination, expeditious project approval, measuring program effectiveness, and policy gaps continue to pose challenges to effective and efficient utilization of CTR. Said Rep. Banks, “Senator Lugar was one of the greatest statesmen of our time. His leadership on the Cooperative Threat Reduction Program and the New START Treaty led to an era of denuclearization and peace. We now live in an era where these historic boundaries are tested. Russia violated the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty, and China is rapidly investing in its nuclear enterprise. If we are to keep the world safe from nuclear warfare, we must channel Senator Lugar and ensure our adversaries comply with the nuclear standards of a more peaceful era.”

● The legacy of former U.S. Rep. Dan Burton (R) comes back into focus this month as the Trump Administration ends a long-standing suspension of Title III of the Libertad Act – more commonly known as the Helms-Burton Act – which had been tolled not only by every past presidential administration, Democrat and Republican, since its 1996 enactment, but also by the current administration . . . until this month. Title III of the Helms-Burton Act authorizes a private right of action in federal courts by American citizens, including naturalized Cubans, against any person that knowingly traffics in property confiscated by the Cuban government after Fidel Castro seized power in 1959. Those properties are now valued at some $8 billion. Exxon Mobil Corporation and Carnival Corporation (the cruise line operator) were the first two companies to file suit this month after the Title II suspension was lifted. The problem: Cuban assets in the United States are effectively non-existent, so Canadian or European companies that do business in Cuba and the United States will most likely be the collection targets if a Title III lawsuit proves successful.

● U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) joins forces with U.S. Reps. Susie Lee (D-NV) (whose husband is president and CEO of Full House Resorts, Inc., parent of the Rising Star Casino • Resort in Rising Sun); Doug Collins (R-GA), and Chrissy Houlahan (D-PA) to introduce bipartisan legislation to improve health care coverage for newborn children of female veterans receiving any Veterans Administration maternity care.

The child must have been delivered in a VA facility or facility with which VA has a contract for such services. The “Newborn Care Improvement Act” would allow VA to provide post-delivery care for newborns for 14 days, doubling the current limit of seven days. “Women who served our country with strength and courage deserve the best health care possible from the VA,” Rep. Walorski says. “By improving care for newborns, this bipartisan bill will ensure women veterans get the support and care they need to raise healthy families.”

- U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R), a member of the House Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, introduces his first bill, “reducing the regulatory burden on the men and women of Indiana, and America’s, robust transportation and agricultural communities,” as his office puts it. The “Modernizing Agricultural Transportation Act (MATA) of 2019,” bipartisan legislation he co-authored with the House Committee on Agriculture chair, U.S. Rep. Collin Peterson (D-MN), would direct the U.S. Department of Transportation to examine Hours of Service (HOS) regulations and the Electronic Logging Device (ELD) regulations to identify obstacles to the safe, humane, and market-efficient transport of livestock and other perishable agricultural commodities. “The current regulatory regime places unnecessary burdens on the hard-working men and women in our agricultural community in Indiana, and across America,” Rep. Pence said. H.R. 2460 “will help ensure our farmers and producers can transport their goods and commodities in a safe, efficient manner.” The bill seeks to include the transportation and agricultural communities in the rule-making process, asking relevant stakeholders to share their experiences with the impact of existing HOS rules under the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations; incompatibilities, challenges and concerns caused by HOS rules and ELD rule provisions; initiatives and regulatory changes that maintain and protect highway safety and allow for the “safe, efficient, and productive marketplace transport” of livestock, insects, and perishable agricultural commodities; and other related issues that the U.S. DOT considers appropriate.

- U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) poses his Question of the Week to constituents: “Do you believe our country and our healthcare system need to provide greater access to and awareness of mental health services?” . . . Rep. Hollingsworth clashed with Disney heiress Abigail Disney at a hearing of the House Committee on Financial Services Subcommittee on Investor Protection, Entrepreneurship and Capital Markets. Disney has been critical of the earnings of Disney’s chief exec (more than $65 million in 2018). “I wonder if you might tell me how much he should make?” asked Rep. Hollingsworth, and when pressed, Disney offered a rate “closer to $10,000” per hour than the $20,000+ per hour rate he was paid. She wasn’t as concerned about how much he was paid, but rather that he was making that kind of money when other Disney workers were unable to afford basic services and health care. Rep. Hollingsworth asked her what a “living wage” would constitute in San Francisco – or in CD 09’s Salem. “The point I’m trying to make,” said Rep. Hollingsworth, “is we are throwing around numbers here on appropriate CEO pay, what CEO pay should be, what living wage should be in ‘X’ city, but there aren’t any specifics.” His concern? “What I continue to hear from you and others is, ‘Oh, we will just defer to a group of scientists who will endeavor to figure out what the appropriate CEO salary is, what the appropriate median wage is, what the appropriate living wage is, in every single location, for every single job, up and down the spectrum, from sea to shining sea.’ We have a definition of that. That is socialism.”

- U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) is backing conservative economist Judy Shelton for one of the two vacancies on the Federal Reserve Board of Governors that have gone unfilled after the President’s first two choices were largely dismissed by Senate Republicans. He tweets that Dr. Shelton, U.S. executive director for the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, would be a “great pick” for the board . . . Rep. Banks teams with U.S. Rep. Scott Peters (D-CA) to introduce the bipartisan, bicameral “Daniel Somers Network of Support Act,” which would create a network of support for servicemembers and their families. These networks are intended to improve servicemembers’ mental health by engaging directly with families on the challenges servicemembers experience, potentially preventing isolation and suicide. The bill directs the U.S. Department of Defense to establish a Network of Support, a pilot program that will provide friends and family of servicemembers a better understanding of the rigors, challenges, and needs associated with military service. The American Red Cross would collect contact information from people servicemembers designate in their networks of support, and DoD would send updates to those networks. This bill is named after Army Veteran Sergeant Daniel Somers, who died by suicide in 2013 after two tours in Iraq, suffering traumatic brain injuries and post-traumatic stress. Said Rep. Banks, “The suicide rate among our veteran community is heartbreaking, and we must do more to prevent such tragedies. I hope to honor the life of Daniel Somers by introducing this legislation and increasing mental health awareness among our nation’s heroes and those that love them. By connecting close family and friends of service members, we can better prevent suicide and get our veterans the help they need” . . . Rep. Banks is an original co-sponsor of the “New START Treaty Improvement Act,” a measure that would limit funding for any extension of the New START Treaty or successor agreement unless it includes the People’s Republic of China and covers all strategic and non-strategic nuclear forces of the Russian Federation. The New START Treaty will expire in 2021 unless both Russia and the U.S. agree to extend the treaty for an additional five years. H.R. 2707, was introduced in the House by U.S. Rep. Liz Cheney (R-WY). Rep. Banks says, “The United States wants to see nuclear non-proliferation agreements reached and extended, if it can successfully prevent future nuclear attacks. To be effective, future treaties must have strict compliance from Russia and China. The late Senator Dick Lugar’s legacy of shrewd negotiation with all nuclear powers must be continued, and the United States must ensure that when we restrict our nuclear capabilities, our adversaries are as well.” He expresses concern that Russia is using its arsenal of tactical weapons to employ an ‘escalate-to-deescalate’ strategy, rapidly modernizing its strategic nuclear systems and developing state-of-the-art hypersonic weapons that fall outside the bounds of New START. Meanwhile, he also notes, China has emerged as a regional power with global ambitions, investing heavily in its military and bolstering its nuclear and hypersonic capabilities . . . Rep. Banks is understandably pleased that the Trump Administration issued an Executive Order Wednesday that would “effectively prohibit U.S. companies from using any telecoms equipment manufactured by China’s Huawei.” He says, “I am thankful that President Trump clearly understands the risks involved with foreign companies linked to the Chinese Government, like Huawei, have on America’s national security. Telecommunications ‘companies’ in adversarial nations like China, are Trojan horses for their authoritarian regimes that seek to infiltrate and disrupt U.S. interests, both at home and abroad. As 5G technology grows domestically and throughout allied nations, it is critical that we do not allow these entities to gain a foothold in our infrastructure to steal information and conduct surveillance operations. I hope the President doubles down on this stance to address the many government-influenced companies worldwide that pose similar threats as Huawei” . . . Rep. Banks issued this statement after Thursday’s immigration announcement by the President: “I was honored to be in the Rose Garden today as President Trump outlined his plan to create a fair, modern and lawful immigration system. Our current immigration laws are badly broken, do a disservice to American workers and jeopardize our national security. The President’s plan is rooted in common sense principles that should be above the din of politics. I urge Speaker Pelosi to stop playing political games and bring this important legislation up for a vote” . . . Rep. Banks speaks with WOWO 1100-AM in Fort Wayne about the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement has on trade, and blames politics for delays. He asks, “Who would benefit the most? Donald J. Trump, the President of the United States of America, heading into an election year, and Nancy Pelosi can’t get beyond that. That’s what is holding up this deal. If and when this is ratified and passed and goes into effect, it could potentially be the biggest win that President Trump has had his entire administration. That will only help him moving into election day.” He adds, “I’m supporting this agreement. I have been from the time it came out because I told them if you don’t screw anything up, I’ll support it. That’s basically what they did. It doesn’t really do a whole lot of good for agriculture, but it doesn’t do any harm.” However, he doesn’t believe that the trade deal has the votes to pass now. “Our caucus has demands about labor, environment, these things that they always have demands about; those people are never going to vote for it anyway,” Rep. Banks explains. “The question is whether you can get this thing to a point where you’ve got 100 Democrats that are not only supporting but enthusiastic about it in order for the speaker to bring it up, but I think right now if it was brought to the floor it would fail” . . . in a late Thursday statement, Rep. Banks detailed his opposition to H.R. 5, the “Equality Act,” which is scheduled for a vote in the House May 17. He said that it “represents the absolute worst of the radical-left’s pro-infanticide, anti-conscience agenda. By amending the definition of ‘sex’ in the Civil Rights Act of 1964, this legislation codifies a fundamental right to an abortion up until the moment of birth. It also ensures that American taxpayers foot the bill for these abortions by effectively eliminating Hyde protections – protections I recently pledged to uphold in a letter to Speaker Pelosi. Additionally, the so-called ‘Equality Act’ would undermine President Bill Clinton’s Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 by forcing health care providers to perform abortions and gender reassignment surgeries regardless of their religious or moral convictions. This egregious abuse of Americans’ First Amendment rights is why I will be voting no without hesitation.”

- U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) and U.S. Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz (D-FL) reintroduce their “Protecting Access to Lifesaving Screenings (PALS) Act.” The bipartisan measure would postpone U.S. Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) recommendations that could severely limit women’s access to mammograms. An extension of the moratorium on USPSTF guidelines to 2021 was previously passed. “Women of all ages are affected by breast cancer and every woman should be able to access mammograms when they need them,” says Rep. Brooks. “Taking preventative measures, such as having mammograms, are key components to combating a disease that takes the lives of too many Hoosiers and Americans. If left in place, USPSTF recommendations put women, especially young women, at risk of losing insurance coverage for essential mammogram screenings that could save their life.” The PALS

Act would protect access to annual mammograms with insurance coverage with no-copay starting at age 40 by extending the moratorium on the USPSTF breast cancer screening guidelines, and also ensures that female veterans treated in the Veterans Health Administration do not face these same obstacles to getting the care they and their health care providers deem necessary . . . during National Police Week and Mental Health Awareness Month, Rep. Brooks partners with U.S. Reps. Ted Deutch (D-FL), Fred Upton (R-MI), and Debbie Dingell (D-MI) to reintroduce the “Jake Laird Act of 2019,” a bipartisan measure memorializing an Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Department officer who was shot and killed in 2004 in the line of duty by a man who struggled with mental illness. The bill would provide grants to encourage states to adopt laws, similar to Indiana’s 2005 Jake Laird Law, that enable local law enforcement, with probable cause, to temporarily remove and retain firearms from individuals who are determined to be an imminent danger to themselves or others. “Red flag laws save lives and are already working in states across the country, including Indiana and Florida, to prevent devastating losses of life,” said Rep. Brooks. “As our country continues to grapple with how to keep our communities safe, the Jake Laird Act of 2019 will provide local law enforcement officers the tools and training necessary to help prevent senseless acts of violence from claiming more innocent lives. I am proud to reintroduce this bipartisan gun violence reduction tool that will help us better avoid situations that could jeopardize the lives of our loved ones, friends, and neighbors while also protecting individual constitutional rights.” The former federal prosecutor says the Jake Laird Act of 2019 would respect constitutional Second Amendment protections for law-abiding gun owners, and provide for due process by guaranteeing a day in court within 21 days. If the court rules that the individual is not a danger to self or others, his or her firearms will be swiftly returned . . . interviewed by Ed Breen on the WBAT 2400-AM Good Morning Grant County show in Marion Wednesday, Rep. Brooks said that she is sensing a change among Hoosier farmers on the tariff issue. “Initially farmers in the Fifth District were supportive – initially – of the fights over tariffs because they do believe that they had not been getting a fair shake at markets,” she said, “but they have been pretty clear to me – and to other Hoosier representatives – that the tariff war cannot go too long because the tariffs will impact them in a pretty significant way, particularly with pork products, corn, and soybeans that are exported to China. So it is tough, but they were supportive initially – but I think that probably is waning, that support.” She says that “They want markets to open, and they want to have access to market. but they (also) want to have fair pricing for their products.”

- Chief Judge Joseph H. McKinley, Jr. of the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Kentucky finds Kentucky’s 2018 “dilation and evacuation” abortion ban, aimed at ending a common second-trimester abortion procedure, would create a “substantial obstacle” to a woman’s right to an abortion, a violation of privacy rights protected by the Constitution. The law, enforcement of which was suspended by a consent order pending resolution, is similar to Indiana’s new abortion prohibition. Indiana’s new law is being challenged by the ACLU of Indiana; the ACLU had also fought the Kentucky provision. Kentucky’s governor, who stands for re-election in November, has pledged to appeal the ruling.

□ At a recent Henry County GOP meeting, Sen. Mike Gaskill (R) was overcome by emotion in discussing HEA 1211-2019, according to an article in the New Castle Courier-Times written by Darrel Radford, himself a former Senate Majority Caucus aide.

□ “We had a lot of debate on that,” Sen. Gaskill told attendees. “There’s an abortion procedure that has been allowed in Indiana and other places as well that’s a dismemberment abortion. I wasn’t on the committee this bill went before but I sat in the audience and listened because I wanted to hear the testimony before it got to the full Senate. It was just gut-wrenching to think that an abortion procedure was allowed where once the baby was too big to be aborted in other methods, they would cut the arms, legs and head off.” Radford reports that “At that point, Gaskill stopped, clearly fighting off his emotions. ‘Sorry,’ he said ‘Republicans and Democrats can disagree on things but how do you argue the other side of that?’” Sen. Gaskill then “recalled one particular day when a pro-abortion lobbying group came to see him. They were angry with him about his support of the bill. ‘They unloaded on me and I just sat and listened,’ Gaskill said. Then, Gaskill was polite, but direct with the group. ‘Based on how you feel about that issue, my advice to you is rather than trying to change my mind, you should recruit a candidate in District 26 who supports your point of view because I’m not going to change,’ Gaskill said. Then, again struggling for composure, Gaskill told the GOP group ‘I’d rather be drug out on the street and set on fire than to allow something like that.’”

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) joins 43 other attorneys general in a lawsuit accusing Teva Pharmaceuticals USA, Inc., and 19 generic drug companies of conspiring to artificially inflate and manipulate the prices of more than 100 different generic drugs to reduce competition and unreasonably restrain trade, in violation of federal and state antitrust and consumer protection laws. The 510-page complaint, filed in U.S. District Court for the District of Connecticut, also names 15 individual senior executive defendants at the heart of the alleged conspiracy who were responsible for sales, marketing, pricing and operations. More than one-half of the corporate defendants are based in New Jersey, and one-third of the individual defendants reside in the Garden State.

□ The drugs at issue account for billions of dollars of sales in the United States. The complaint alleges that Teva, Sandoz, Mylan, Pfizer and 16 other generic drug manufacturers engaged in a broad, coordinated and systematic campaign to conspire with each other to fix prices, allocate markets and rig bids for more than 100 different generic drugs. The price-fixing practices by the defendants cited in the lawsuit is alleged to have caused significant financial damage to the health insurance market, state health plans, taxpayer-funded federal healthcare programs like Medicare and Medicaid, employer-sponsored health plans, and individual consumers who pay out-of-pocket for their generic medications.

□ Drugs that were subject to the allegedly unlawful pricing manipulations included all types of medication, including oral antibiotics, gels, ointments, creams, suspensions; as well as a wide range of classes, including statins, ace inhibitors, beta blockers, antibiotics, anti-depressants, contraceptives, non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs and treat a range of diseases and conditions from basic infections to diabetes, cancer, epilepsy, multiple sclerosis, HIV, ADHD, and more.

□ The complaint alleges that the collusive activity peaked between July 2013 and January 2015, when Teva is alleged to have significantly raised prices on about 387 formulations of 112 different generic drugs. The size of the alleged price increases varies, but a number of drugs saw their prices soar by “well over 1,000 percent.” The complaint lays out a picture of an interconnected web of industry executives participating in these activities. Competitors met with each other during industry dinners, “girls nights out,” lunches, cocktail parties, and golf outings. They communicated via frequent telephone calls, emails and text messages that the plaintiff states contend sowed the seeds for their allegedly illegal agreements. Throughout the process, the defendants are said to have employed terms such as “fair share,” “playing nice in the sandbox,” and “responsible competitor” to describe how they unlawfully discouraged competition, raised prices, and enforced what is described as an ingrained culture of collusion.

□ The lawsuit seeks damages, civil penalties and actions by the court to restore competition to the generic drug market. “This lawsuit should serve as a warning to any company that intentionally defies the trust of their customers,” General Hill said. “The rising cost of health care is daunting enough without price fixing of medications. Americans deserve options when they shop for these products. Any pharmaceutical company that engages in price-fixing and artificial cost inflation is part of the problem that ails health care in the United States. Here in Indiana, we will keep working to protect all Hoosier consumers from illegal schemes.”

● Overlooked: If the proposed transmodal development at Gary’s Buffington Harbor does transpire, the timeline for the deepwater port could parallel that for the proposed fourth port, at the Tanner’s Creek site in Lawrenceburg (ironically, a site seriously considered circa 1994 for a Dearborn County casino before it located elsewhere in Lawrenceburg). We would expect the Ports of Indiana to be heavily involved in any Buff deal as a condition precedent for state support for the site.

● The Indiana Black Legislative Caucus opened its annual series of town halls across the state with a stop in Indianapolis on Saturday, May 18. In all, look for IBLC members to visit seven locations across Indiana through the end of August, both reviewing the work of the General Assembly during the 2019 session, and beginning outreach in planning for the 2020 legislative session.

□ Here is the IBLC 2019 town hall schedule:

Indianapolis – May 18 12:00 p.m. - 2:00 p.m. EST

● Washington is the best state in the country, according to the third annual 2019 “Best States” rankings from U.S. News & World Report, which evaluated all 50 states across a range of criteria, including education, health care, infrastructure and the economy, to capture how states best serve their citizens. Indiana fails to rank in the top half overall, nor does it appear in the top three of any of the major eight ranking categories. We’re only 36th, and our only top 10 appearance is sixth place in “Fiscal Stability.”

● In Frederick, et al., v. Lawson, et al., No. 1:19-cv- 1959, Common Cause Indiana and several registered voters in Saint Joseph County filed suit in U.S. district Court for the Northern District of Indiana against Secretary of State Connie Lawson (R) and members of the St. Joseph County Election Board for rejecting their absentee ballots due to purported signature mismatches, which the plaintiffs allege is a violation of their due process and equal protection rights under the U.S. Constitution.

□ The plaintiffs explain that under Indiana’s absentee voter laws, signatures on absentee ballot envelopes are reviewed and deemed as matches – or not – with other signatures on file by county election officials. However, “Indiana law contains no standards or criteria absentee ballot counters or members of county election boards are instructed to use in determining whether a signature is ‘genuine.’ Indiana offers no training to absentee ballot counters or members of county election boards in handwriting analysis.” The lack of training in handwriting analysis and legitimate reasons why a signature may vary (“including age, physical and mental conditions, disability, medication, stress, accidents, and inherent differences in a person’s neuromuscular coordination”) render the system “fraught with error and inconsistent application,” the lawsuit alleges, and “The lack of standards, together with the unreviewable discretion imparted by Indiana law to absentee ballot counters and members of county election boards, results in vastly different rates between counties of absentee ballots rejected due to perceived signature mismatches. For example, approximately 45 Hamilton County absentee ballots were invalidated due to signature mismatches, 39 in St. Joseph County, 13 in Elkhart County, 13 in Madison County, and zero in Boone County and Porter County.”

□ These procedures are said to have resulted in several hundred and possibly more than 1,000 mail-in absentee ballots submitted in the 2018 general election not being counted – through no fault of their own – without any notice to the voter, or opportunity to cure a perceived signature mismatch. The plaintiffs also suggest that signature “variations are more prevalent among the elderly, the disabled, or those who speak English as a second language.”

□ Attorneys for the plaintiffs, Bill Groth and David Vlink of Fillenwarth Dennerline Groth & Towe, LLC, and Mark Sniderman of Findling Park Conyers Woody & Sniderman, PC, tell the court that “There are already processes in place that provide at least some semblance of due process for other voters whose ballot is questioned,” including a provisional ballot for those without proper ID, but “No due process is available to a voter who submits an absentee ballot by mail that is improperly rejected due to a perceived signature mismatch. It would not be administratively burdensome to notify a voter whose absentee ballot has been rejected due to a perceived signature mismatch and give that voter an opportunity to show cause why the ballot should not be rejected.”

□ To ensure every eligible vote cast is counted, the plaintiffs seek both a preliminary and permanent injunction preventing the continued enforcement of the current law. They note that courts across the country have granted relief in the form of due process in similar cases and seek a similar favorable outcome in this case.

● An interesting new report from Transportation for America contends that states are prioritizing road expansion over needed repairs, and “investments in expansion don’t just redirect funds away from much needed investments in repair; they continually grow our annual spending need, widening the gap. Every new lane-mile of road costs approximately $24,000 per year to preserve in a state of good repair. By expanding roads, we are borrowing against the future,” the group contends.

□ While Indiana’s 2017 Next Level Roads program funds both expansion and rehabilitation, older Transportation for America data (highway capital spending on state-managed roads from 2009-2014) finds that only four states devoted a greater percentage of their available highway capital funds to road expansion between 2009 and 2014 than Indiana’s 49% (skewed, of course, by our I-69 extension, though 10 states added more lane-miles between 2011-17 than Indiana), while roadway repair in Indiana as a percentage of total capital spending was only 20%, with only nine states spending a lower percentage than Indiana. On the positive side, only six states reported that a greater percentage of their roads were in good condition in 2017 than the 54% of Indiana roads (though our numbers may have been skewed by the addition of new I-69 miles).

□ Transportation for America estimates that the total annual spending needed on road repair in Indiana over six years will be $5,153,081,538.

● Indiana Michigan Power (I&M) submits its “Innovate Indiana” plan to the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission, seeking an overall rate increase of about $172 million, or 11.75%, with new rates to be phased in over three steps (the first occurring in Spring 2020, the second on June 1, 2020, and the third in early 2021). Assuming it is authorized to take full effect, the monthly increase would be $21.11 for a residential customer using 1,000 kilowatt hours of electricity per month.

□ This cost includes a proposed increase in the monthly residential service charge. Innovate Indiana proposes to adjust rates to more accurately reflect what it says are the true costs of service provided to each customer. I&M’s service charge for residential customers is $10.50 per month, which it touts as second-lowest of the major Indiana electric utilities. In a move bound to be vehemently opposed by the Citizens Action Coalition, among others, I&M proposes raising the residential customer service charge to $15 (this service charge is included in – not an addition to – the proposed rates).

□ I&M plans to enhance the energy infrastructure for tomorrow’s needs, modernizing and strengthening the energy grid with more high-tech equipment to reduce the number, extent, and duration of power outages. The package includes an annual outlay of more than $600 million for infrastructure. The I&M package supports continued operation of Cook Nuclear whose two units are being renovated as part of their extended licenses allowing them to continue generating low-cost, emission-free power through the mid-2030s – 20 years beyond their original licensing periods.

□ The smarter energy grid project also includes smart meter technology that the company says “not only enhances reliability but also empowers customers with better control of their individual energy usage.”

□ Some other elements of the Innovate Indiana plan include incentives to expand electric vehicle charging (rebates and special rates for charging electric cars overnight along with incentives for businesses and fleet vehicles); reimbursing employers for qualifying apprenticeships and training; a fund to help construct spec buildings for job-creators seeking quickly available locations; and continuation of programs to assist low-income patrons having difficulty paying their utility bills.

● Rep. Earl Harris, Jr. (D) may have been unsuccessful in advancing HB 1154, which called for a state census count committee – funded to the tune of $13 million – to develop, recommend, and assist in the administration of a census outreach strategy to encourage full participation in the 2020 federal decennial census, but you can look for key elements of the “plan and structure” of his proposals to be incorporated into the state census plan after assurances from the Governor.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) spoke to people from at least six counties Monday night in Monroe County at the monthly Grassroots Conservatives meeting, and, according to the Indiana Daily Student, addressed a variety of topics, while detailing to the group the rationale behind his involvement in a variety of legal matters across the nation. “I believe in freedom, and my job is to defend freedom.” General Hill also “spoke at length about being dumbfounded by people’s obsession with Facebook. ‘Social media has really eroded our system of justice and accountability,’ he said. Hill said he agrees with President Donald Trump about the media. ‘Fake news is real,’ Hill said. He talked about his disbelief that other states, particularly New York, had legalized abortion. He blamed grassroots Republicans like those in the crowd. ‘We waved the white flag,’ he said. ‘That’s on us.’”

● The Family and Social Services Administration is seeking federal approval to create a program that officials say would help Healthy Indiana Plan participants transition more easily to employer insurance or other health care coverage. The HIP Workforce Bridge emanates from the Governor’s 2019 Next Level agenda, in which he directed FSSA to develop a proposal that helps Hoosiers maintain coverage while transitioning from HIP.

□ As FSSA sees it, the HIP Workforce Bridge program would assist individuals who become ineligible for HIP because they are earning higher incomes. If approved, the policy will be a first-in-the-nation approach to eliminate a common obstacle that can prevent HIP members from pursuing meaningful employment. The program would afford outgoing HIP participants the ability to continue to use up to $1,000 from their individual POWER accounts for premiums, deductibles, co-payments, and coinsurance for the next 12 months during their transition to commercial coverage (unlike traditional health savings accounts, POWER accounts do not remain with the HIP enrollee if he or she transitions to private insurance).

□ To establish the HIP Workforce Bridge, FSSA is proposing a change to the HIP program federal waiver. FSSA says that the new request aligns with full implementation of Gateway to Work in early 2020. The Gateway program, of course, requires some HIP members to work or perform other qualifying educational or volunteer activities to maintain health care coverage.

● As part of a consent decree filed by the U.S. Department of Justice on Monday, ArcelorMittal USA resolves what it describes as “alleged Clean Air Act air permit issues” at four facilities in Indiana (Burns Harbor, Indiana Harbor East and West, and the former Indiana Harbor Long Carbon operation) and on in Ohio (Cleveland). The company claims that “The issues are primarily related to regulated process deviations and sporadic, intermittent permit exceedances. They are not indicative of any systemic issues with our operations.”

□ Under the comprehensive settlement agreement outlined in detail in U.S., et al., v. ArcelorMittal USA LLC, et al., No. 2:2019cv00179, and filed in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana, the company resolves Title V air permit issues reflected in Notices of Violations issued in 2011 and 2019 by investing more than $22.5 million in pollution controls at the five facilities (since 2007), and paying a fine of $2.5 million to the federal government, $2 million to Indiana and $371,000 to Ohio.

● In Lopez-Aguilar v. Marion Co. Sheriff’s Dep’t, No. 18-1050, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit takes issue with the decision by Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana denying the State of Indiana the ability to intervene in a case to defend Indiana statutes requiring local police cooperation with federal immigration detainer requests. The Office of the Attorney General explains that “Marion County officials colluded with the American Civil Liberties Union to avoid following state law.” In November 2017, Judge Barker approved a consent decree between the Marion County Sheriff’s Department and an individual (detained in 2014) represented by the ACLU of Indiana that permanently enjoined MCSD from “seizing or detaining any person based solely on detention requests from ICE, in whatever form, or on removal orders from an immigration court, unless ICE supplies a warrant signed by a judge or otherwise supplies probable cause that the individual to be detained has committed a criminal offense.”

□ OAG explains that “No one, however, informed the Office of the Attorney General of the consent decree until it was already entered by the federal court. Immediately upon learning of the collusive decree, Attorney General Hill moved to intervene in the case to argue the agreement violated state law. The district judge refused the request, asserting that even if the State had standing to intervene, its motion would fail because it was untimely. In a 40-page May 9 ruling, however, the appellate not only declared that OAG had the right to intervene on behalf of the State, but it also held that the trial court lacked jurisdiction to even approve the consent decree. “Indiana seeks to protect a state prerogative of constitutional dimension The State seeks to protect its sovereign prerogative to cooperate with the federal government and to require subordinate entities of state government to comply with that legislative policy directive,” fund a three-judge panel that included Hoosier Amy Coney Barrett. They conclude, “The district court cannot ‘suspend the application of Article III’ and the parties cannot ‘stipulate to the enlargement of federal jurisdiction’ by means of a consent decree.”

□ “This appellate ruling is a win for common sense, state sovereignty and public safety,” Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) said. “When federal authorities ask an Indiana police agency to detain a person in the agency’s custody, Indiana law requires the agency to cooperate. To establish any contrary policy at the local level not only violates Indiana law but jeopardizes the safety and security of Hoosiers.”

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) on Tuesday filed a motion to strike the appearance of an attorney enlisted by Marion County Prosecutor Terry Curry (D) to represent the prosecutor in a case challenging a new abortion law banning dilation and evacuation procedures, which the Office of the Attorney General describes as “dismemberment abortions, in which living fetuses are killed during extraction by cutting or ripping off one piece of their bodies at a time.” The motion comes in a suit filed in U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana by a physician represented by the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana, Bernard, et al., v. Indiv Members of the Indiana Medical Licensing Bd., et al., No. 1:19-cv-01660-SEB-DML, challenging the constitutionality of the statute similar to a Kentucky law struck down in federal court in early May.

□ City of Indianapolis Assistant Corporation Counsel Daniel Bowman filed a notice of appearance for the Marion County Prosecutor, and OAG tells Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker that “Bowman’s notice of appearance should be stricken because only the Attorney General has authority to represent the prosecutor in this case. Only the Attorney General represents the State of Indiana through his representation of the Marion County Prosecutor and the members of the Indiana Medical Licensing Board.” In a memorandum supporting the motion, OAG contends that This Court should ... strike Mr. Bowman’s appearance. Otherwise, not only the Marion County Prosecutor, but every other state official who may disagree with the Attorney General’s litigation position, will be emboldened to designate private counsel, agency counsel, or some other lawyer to represent that official’s interests in court. Such a development would not only thwart the will of the General Assembly but would also create uncertainty and inefficiency for the federal judiciary as it adjudicates cases against state officials.”

□ In announcing its filings in Bernard, the AG’s Office complains that “Prosecutor Curry’s effort to appoint his own attorney in this case is not the first time he has interfered with efforts by the attorney general to defend state law. In May of 2018, Prosecutor Curry announced he wanted to simply admit the allegations made in another abortion-related lawsuit.” “Prosecutor Curry is not enlisting counsel to represent his personal interests, which would be another matter entirely,” General Hill said. “Rather, he is seeking his own representation in his official capacity to respond to a constitutional challenge to state law.” That’s inappropriate in the eyes of the Attorney General. “The legislature has designated only one official – the attorney general – to be the voice of all state officials in court,” AG Hill adds. “To permit others to speak for the state would engender chaos and confusion as to the position of the people of Indiana before state and federal courts.”

□ Expect Prosecutor Curry to fight the motion by arguing that the provisions cited by OAG do not grant the attorney general exclusive jurisdiction to usurp the role of a named defendant, and that he should be entitled to a seat at the table.

● No word from the Supreme Court of the United States in its past two conferences on the big Indiana abortion case awaiting a decision on whether the justices will grant a writ of certiorari to the State of Indiana. The justices were scheduled to convene for a conference on Thursday, May 16, with orders from that conference likely to be released on Monday, May 20. This will be the 14th time that the Indiana case will be up for consideration, more appearances than any other case on the SCOTUS conference docket ... and some of the national news media is starting to notice as talk suggests this many appearances may be a record.

□ The State of Indiana filed its petition for cert back in October in Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-483. You know the drill by now: This case involves a challenge to provisions of HEA 1337-2016 that would: (1) require health-care facilities to dispose of fetal remains in the same manner as other human remains, i.e., by burial or cremation; and (2) prohibit abortions motivated solely by the race, sex, or disability of the fetus and require physicians to inform patients of the prohibition.

□ Joined on the May 16 conference list: Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-1019, the appeal of a constitutional challenge to the requirement of ultrasound as part of informed consent at least 18 hours before an abortion. There had been some speculation that the Court had been waiting for this case to pop up on the conference list before joining the Indiana challenges and considering them together. With the spate of recent laws in other states seeking to reverse Roe v. Wade, joinder and decision of these less “radical” laws could offer SCOTUS a way to uphold or set limits on Roe instead of overturning it.

IN the Economy

● Tax revenues exceeded April estimates in every category except sales tax, driving General Fund revenue collections to the highest April level in state history. General Fund coffers received $2.275 billion during April, exceeding expectations by $90.3 million (4.1%). When measured on a fiscal year-to-date basis, revenues for the first three quarters of Fiscal Year 2019 are running slightly ahead of most recently updated (April 17) forecast, by $98.8 million (0.8%). We are running about $200 million ahead of the FY 2017-19 budget plan.

□ While this is good news, of course, Indiana is, however, most certainly not an outlier when it comes to enjoying a strong month of collections. The National Association of State Budget Officers (NASBO) reports that the first 15 states reporting April tax collections have each posted revenues stronger than they had expected as the impact of the Tax Cut and Jobs Act seems to have evened out at tax-time, and taxpayers who may have been paying lower withholding in the early months of TCJA implementation as rates were being worked out and individuals had not adjusted their withholding are now making catch-up payments or receiving lower tax refunds. Stock market gains in late 2017 may also have played a part for higher earners and retirees. NASBO specifically suggests that “The positive April surprise is likely due to several factors including continued growth in the economy, gains in non-withholding including capital gains and dividends, a shift in the amount of estimated payments made in December to higher payments with tax returns in April due to the new federal tax limit on state and local tax deductions, and higher first quarter estimated payments.” NASBO adds “States will now begin analyzing ... to understand the amount that may be of one-time nature, such as higher than normal capital gains.”

□ If you were impressed by Indiana’s April tax collections topping forecasts by about $90 million, don’t glance to your west at Illinois, where April collections were astronomical. State budget officials wrote to legislative leaders that “More than $4.1 billion in individual and corporate income tax revenues were deposited into the General Funds in the month of April 2019, up $1.14 billion or 38% from April 2018 income tax deposits of $2.999 billion. This is also more than $1.5 billion more than internally projected for April 2019.”

□ Illinois budget officials offer a few potential explanations, some of which parallel those posited by NASBO: “A number of factors likely contributed to this increase, including the performance of the stock market, better federal reimbursement for Medicaid, the elimination of the federal state and local tax deduction and additional changes in the federal tax law that meant many taxpayers didn’t withhold sufficient taxes through payroll deductions, backloading their end-of-year tax payments. Anecdotally, strong revenue collections occurred in many other states in April. Additional data and analysis are required to present a comprehensive explanation for the revenue shift, and our staffs are working to provide the General Assembly with a more detailed analysis.”

□ How big is this for Illinois? “As an immediate result of the strong April performance, coupled with revenue collections year-to-date, the State of Illinois will be able to address most of the $1.6 billion shortfall in the enacted FY19 budget because of the April revenues alone.” Illinois’ governor quickly backed off his proposal to delay some of next year’s pension payment, which resulted in improvement in the price of the state’s junk bonds, driving down the yield penalty to the lowest since July 2018.

□ Towering tax collections during April also position New Jersey to be able to make the first deposit to the Garden State’s rainy day fund deposit since the pre-recession days of 2008.

□ April tax revenues increased on a year-over-year basis at an unprecedented clip, fueled by the largest individual income tax collections in any month in state history. Even cigarette taxes and fees are running ahead of estimates and prior-fiscal year performance. State tax collections soared over April 2018 by $236.0 million (11.6%). With three months still to go on the fiscal year calendar, General Fund tax collections have grown compared to the same nine months in FY 2018 by a healthy $632.7 million (5.0%).

□ Individual income tax collections rose to a state-record $1.233 billion for April, surpassing the monthly estimate by $67.7 million (5.8%) and improving vs. April 2018 by $215.1 million (21.1%) as collections related to withholding, estimated, and final payments each saw particularly strong over-the-year growth. Fiscal year-to-date individual income tax collections out-perform the same July - April period in the prior fiscal year by $115.7 million (2.3%).

□ Sales taxes added $671.4 million to the General Fund, which trailed the monthly estimate by $4.5 million (-0.7%) and grew over April 2018 by a marginal $2.8 million (0.4%). Fiscal year-to-date sales taxes have outperformed the same period in FY 2018 by $214.8 million (3.4%), thanks in part to an increase in collection of online sales tax collections that ramped up beginning in December.

□ Corporate taxes of $224.8 million beat the monthly projection by $11.2 million (5.2%), and exceeded the same 10-month period in FY 2018 by $4.4 million (2.0%). Fiscal year-to-date corporate tax collections remain well ahead of the pace in the prior fiscal year by $208.0 million (48.3%).

□ Gaming contributed $51.9 million in tax revenue to the state’s General Fund during April, the highest April amount since 2015. Gaming taxes represent 2.3% of total General Fund collections for the month. On a fiscal year-to-date basis, both the riverboat and the racino wagering taxes have out-performed the same three quarters in the prior fiscal year by a double-digit percentage.

● We told you above that the Hoosier congressional delegation has been getting an earful recently from the state’s agricultural producers about the tariff issue, and now the Indiana Chamber of Commerce is cautioning that the recent tariff hikes on Chinese goods could lead to what it characterizes as “devastating” effects for the Hoosier business community. “We are hearing from a variety of members – from all kinds of manufacturers to agricultural companies – that this latest tariff war with China could have serious business implications for them and even throw some into a fight for survival,” says Indiana Chamber President Kevin Brinegar. “This is such a big, big deal for Indiana, which annually exports $1.1 billion of goods to China.” He notes that among the top U.S. exports to China are gear boxes for vehicles ($94 million) and medical products like needles and catheters ($57 million).

□ While Brinegar agrees with the President “that China has gotten off far too easy over the last few decades – paying comparatively low duties and especially with its essentially non-existent intellectual property rights law that encourages innovation theft,” he adds, “there has got to be a better way than putting American businesses and jobs on the line.”

□ Not only is the Chamber communicating that to members of Indiana’s congressional delegation and the Trump Administration, but it is now urging business owners and citizens to get in touch with their D.C. lawmakers to tell solons the new tariffs “amount to tax increases on Hoosier consumers and businesses, with the price of products we use daily becoming even more expensive.”

● The Indiana gaming industry quietly crossed a historic milestone in April 2019: $50 billion in casino win, scoops our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT. That’s the amount of money the industry has racked up since the first riverboat casino launched in Evansville on December 8, 1995.

● Although lawmakers approved transferability of the state’s venture capital investment (VCI) tax credit in the recently concluded legislative session, a new study by the Indiana Chamber of Commerce Foundation suggests the State take one more step forward: Raising the amount of the VCI credit available. Indiana Venture Capital Study: Then and Now offers a two-page overview of the state’s status in 1999 and the resulting enactment of the VCI in 2002, documenting Indiana’s improved venture capital ranking in the late 2000s and the subsequent dip as competitor states enacted increased and more flexible credits before calling for more change.

□ “Indiana’s VCI credit is currently 20%,” observes Chamber President Kevin Brinegar, but he points out that “The incentives for nearby states range from 25% to 50% plus the transferability options. In addition,” Brinegar suggests, “strong consideration should be given to raising the $12.5 million annual cap.”

● Agricultural producer sentiment in April continues the plunge we’ve seen since January in the Purdue University/CME Group Ag Economy Barometer. The barometer, a sentiment index, is based on a monthly survey of 400 agricultural producers across the nation, and April’s plummeting numbers mark the fourth largest one-month drop in ag producer sentiment since Purdue researchers commenced data collection in October 2015.

□ The barometer's decline was driven by both worsening perceptions of both current economic conditions and weaker expectations for the future, according to the Purdue research team, with the Index of Current Conditions diving by 17.5%, and the Index of Future Expectations falling by more than 10 percent. Producer expectations for farmland values in the upcoming year also softened, but this was more modest compared to their reservations regarding building and equipment purchases. Producer confidence that the trade dispute with China will be resolved soon waned in April compared to perceptions expressed during the previous month, even though a strong majority continues to expect that the problematic trade dispute will ultimately be resolved in a way that benefits American agriculture. The survey, however, was undertaken before U.S. officials accused Chinese officials of backtracking in the trade talks and suggested that some $200 billion in Chinese goods could soon be slapped with a long-delayed increase in tariffs . . . and before the long stretch of soggy and cooler weather that has caused delays in planting corn (only six percent of the corn crop was planted by May 12, a point at which about 50% has typically been in the ground in recent years).

□ Farmers are becoming increasingly anxious over their future financial performance," is how the numbers are interpreted by James Mintert, the barometer's principal investigator and director of Purdue University's Center for Commercial Agriculture. "Producers have taken stock of their financial position and prospects for 2019 as they head into planting season and are concerned about the uncertainty arising from the on-going trade disputes with key ag trading partners. Right now it seems that producers are being cautious." He believes that this caution is observed in producer attitudes toward making large investments in their farming operation. In the April survey, when asked whether they feel now is a "good time" or "bad time" to make large farm investments, only 22% of farmers stated it was a "good time" while 74% stated it was a "bad time." That combination pushed the Large Farm Investment Index down by more than 15% compared to March, and the fourth weakest reading of the investment index since Fall 2015.

□ In the St Louis Federal Reserve district, which includes roughly the southern one-third of Indiana, farmland values declined 0.3% during the first quarter.

● While in Washington, D.C. Monday in her role as president of the National League of Cities, Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) told those assembled for the 7th annual Infrastructure Week national week of education and advocacy that a federal infrastructure measure is needed to jumpstart the sluggish municipal bond market. "Bonding is one of the most viable financing opportunities outside of a state partnership or some type of federal grant," Mayor Freeman-Wilson told Iweek participants. "You have to have a funding stream in order to make that bonding viable," and municipal governments are not likely to continue to go to market for debt financing absent a clear repayment mechanism, or clear federal government assistance. One alternative she cites: Increased reliance upon public-private partnerships.

● Duke Energy selects six Indiana locations to participate in its Site Readiness Program, an effort which identifies, evaluates, and improves sites in the company's 69-county Indiana service territory for potential industrial development.

□ The locations include:

- The Kokomo Industrial Park (Howard County)
- A 186-acre parcel in Fortville's South Madison TIF district(Hancock County)
- A 100+ acre parcel on S.R. 1 in West Harrison (Dearborn County)
- The Northpoint Business Park (Hamilton County)
- The North Manchester Industrial Complex (Wabash County)
- The North Warrick Industrial Park (Warrick County)

● Faced with a soaring deficit (think in excess of $10 million next year; Gary schools are $93 million in the red), the School City of Hammond School Board will decide Tuesday on closing three schools and cutting up to 150 jobs at all levels.

● Alabama-based AMERICAN Cast Iron Pipe Company's valve and hydrant division AMERICAN Flow Control, introduces AMERICAN Innovation LLC, which plans to invest $9 million to build a new 30,000 square-foot research and development facility on 17 acres in the Crawfordsville Commerce Park in Crawfordsville. The new venture expects to create almost 10 new research and development jobs by the end of 2020. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offers AMERICAN Innovation LLC up to $130,000 in performance-based tax credits based on the company's job creation plans. The City of Crawfordsville approved additional incentives . . . Opus Packaging Group, a Michigan-based corrugated packaging and supplies manufacturer, plans to invest almost $3 million over the next few years to construct and equip a new 170,000 square-foot facility in Park 130 in Whitestown, expecting to create more than 40 new jobs in Boone County by the end of 2022. IEDC offers Opus Packaging Group up to $240,000 in performance-based tax credits . . . MetaCX, a venture-funded Software-as-a-Service (SaaS) startup, plans to scale up its operations in Central Indiana, investing $1.4 million to lease, renovate, and equip office space on the 10th floor of the Salesforce Tower in downtown Indianapolis, expecting to create up to 75 new, high-wage jobs by 2023. MetaCX developed a "digital success layer" that brings together SaaS vendors and buyers for better collaboration and outcome management, offering real-time visibility into customer success. IEDC offers MetaCX up to $2.55 million in performance-based tax credits . . . Aisin Drivetrain plans to invest as much as $19.5 million in its Crothersville auto parts manufacturing plant, expecting to create more than 45 new jobs by 2021 in a two-phase project for which it seeks business personal property tax abatements from the Crothersville Town Council . . . Covance Central Laboratory Services, Inc., a global contract research organization and drug development services company, plans to invest $17.5 million in a 20,000 square-foot renovation and 11,000 square-foot expansion project of its Indianapolis west side campus that is expected to result in retention of 1,500 employees and creation of more than 200 new high-paying jobs. The City of Indianapolis is expected to offer a 10-year business personal property tax abatement for $5.7 million in IT and cold-storage equipment . . . as it begins its second century of operations in Indiana, Cummins plans to invest another $33 million in its Columbus operations, with a significant portion directed to upgrading and equipping the 1.6 million square-foot Columbus Engine Plant making it the corporate hub and primary North American manufacturing center for the company's newest business segment, Electrified Power. This is expected to create up to 75 new jobs. Cummins also plans to grow its footprint in Greenwood and Indianapolis, constructing a new, $35 million office building to serve as a hub for approximately 500 high-salary digital and information technology employees at I-65 and County Line Road in Johnson County. In Indianapolis, the company will build out additional space at its Distribution Business headquarters downtown and also occupy additional space at the Salesforce Tower. IEDC offers Cummins up to $950,000 in performance-based tax credits, and up to $100,000 in training grants to establish its Electrified Power business headquarters in Columbus.

IN Transition

● Kara Kenney reports for WRTV-TV Call6 Investigates in Indianapolis that three more Indiana Department of Veterans Affairs employees have resigned positions following a series of investigations – now including a Marion County Prosecutor's Office criminal investigation – prompted by her initial reports of improprieties at the agency. Those reports, what Kenney labels as a state audit that questioned spending of $700,000+ in federal funds meant to help struggling veterans, and a subsequent Indianapolis Star investigation resulted in a major IDVA shake-up.

□ Now, IDVA assistant director Matthew Vincent is leaving on May 31 after IDVA communications director Adryanne Bonner resigned on May 6 (we had told you a few months ago about the State contracting with an outside PR firm to help repair IDVA damage). IDVA's director of veteran and employment and outreach, Jeff Wirt is out as of June 14.

□ Assistant House Democratic Leader Karlee Macer (D), who has quietly been raising her political profile lately and has been the most outspoken legislator to date on the IDVA morass, tells WRTV's Kenney, "Unfortunately, I expect the additional investigation to further highlight the severe lack of oversight from our governor regarding the repeated abuse of funds that could have gone to assist our veterans in their time of need. Hoosiers expect their governor to hold himself and state departments accountable for stewarding their taxpayer dollars, and fulfilling their end of the bargain when it comes to taking care of our veterans. This fraudulent behavior was reported to have been questioned and kept confidential in 2017."

● Senate Majority Floor Leader Mark Messmer (R) will serve on the Workforce of Tomorrow Subcommittee of the Council of State Governments' (CSG) national Future of Work Task Force, a panel that will convene a diverse group of state officials across a two-year timeline to explore how states can best navigate the challenges and opportunities of the new economy. The task force will examine how technology creates new jobs and eliminates existing jobs, share success stories and best practices, and provide guidance on how states can best embrace innovative and ever-evolving opportunities in the new economy. The Messmer subcommittee will explore policy options to ensure state workforces can accommodate the shifting needs of employers and employees alike in the face of technological disruptions from automation, robotics, artificial intelligence and the expansion of the "gig economy."

● Sen. Eric Koch (R) will serve on the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) Consumer Advisory Committee, a panel that provides advice and recommendations to the FCC on consumer matters as specified by the Commission. CAC members represent a diverse mix of consumers, the communications industry, government regulators, trade associations, academia, and other stakeholders.

● After more than 13 years, Karen Avery leaves her post as director of public relations for the Association of Indiana Counties to move to Paducah, Kentucky, where she becomes director of planning for the American Society of Interventional Pain Physicians. Avery also spent five years before her stint at AIC as a legislative reporter for WIBC and Network Indiana.

□ Succeeding Avery at AIC is Elizabeth Mallers, who spent 2002 - 08 handling communications for the House Republican Caucus.

● The Department of Child Services brings aboard Kimberly Spindler of Indianapolis as its new assistant general counsel for the central region. Spindler worked most recently as a family court mediator for the Marion County Superior Court, but also brings 13 years of DCS experience to her post as well, having served in the agency's legal division.

● Democratic campaign guru Peter Hanscom joins United Way of Central Indiana as the organization's vice president of marketing where he will particularly concentrate on increasing regional presence and enhancing UWCI's overall brand.

● Trent McCormick leaves his post as a science teacher at Decatur Middle School in Indianapolis to become the new athletic director for the Covington Community School Corporation. He is married to Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R).

IN the Lobby

● Hobart Hallaway & Quayle Ventures, LLC files a federal lobby registration on behalf of the informal Overland Park, Kansas-based Kansas City Coalition, to lobby Congress on "Issues affecting the Kansas City area including highways, housing & urban development, and disaster recovery."

IN Court

● After 12 years on the Lawrence County Circuit Court bench, Judge Andrea K. McCord will leave for a 14-year term as a New Albany-based bankruptcy judge in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana later this month, succeeding Judge Basil H. Lorch III who is retiring.

● As the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) issues a new round of guidance on how corporate compliance and ethics programs will be evaluated by DOJ when Department prosecutors conduct investigations of corporations, look for U.S. Attorney Josh Minkler of the Southern District of Indiana to convene a private sector seminar this Summer to discuss the three basic, overarching questions Department lawyers will contemplate:

- (1) Is the corporate compliance program well designed?
- (2) Is the program being applied earnestly and in good faith?
- (3) Does the compliance program work in practice?

Our 2020 Vision

Since we are less than a year away from the May primary, we here at TCS have decided to take a look at the political landscape and see where things are. And if you're Governor Eric Holcomb, you are in a pretty good place, at least according to the latest public polls. The poll of 800 registered voters conducted by We Ask America had Holcomb's approval ratings at 54 percent, and 50 percent thought the state was moving in the right direction. Donald Trump was only at 46 percent.

What was really interesting was in the crosstabs.

Eric Holcomb

Holcomb's approval ratings amongst blacks were 40 percent. In the Chicago and South Bend media markets, his approval ratings averaged about 46 percent, and you know neither of those is necessarily a Republican stronghold. And among Democrats overall, Holcomb's approval ratings are at about 33 percent.

The Cheat Sheet, Vol. 8, Issue 13 – May 2019

When asked whether Indiana was on the right track, 35 percent of blacks thought Indiana was on the right track. 51 percent of the respondents in the Indianapolis media market, 40 percent of those living in the Chicago media market and 48 percent in the South Bend media market thought Indiana was on track and 23 percent of Democrats thought Indiana was headed in the right direction.

And Holcomb's approval ratings among Independents is over 40 percent.

So what about his re-election? Forty-six percent of blacks said yes or probably. 45 percent of those living in the Chicago media market said yes, while 44 percent of those living in the South Bend market. And about a third of Democrats thought the Governor should be re-elected as did 51 percent of Independents.

Curtis Hill

The Attorney General hasn't specifically said he is running for re-election, however, in our last conversation in my LNG capacity (Legitimate News Guy for you new subscribers) he has a lot of room to maneuver because a lot of voters just don't have an opinion of him, despite the recent controversies.

Overall, Hill's approval rating was 13 percent and his disapproval rating was 26 percent, but 60 percent had no opinion of the AG. With that said, Hill's strongest approval ratings were among blacks at 22 percent. And 61 percent of Democrats had no opinion of Hill.

Pete Buttigieg

If Mayor Pete wants to win the Presidential nomination, he will have some work to do here in the Hoosier state. Buttigieg polls third (20 percent) after Joe Biden (33 percent) and Bernie Sanders (23 percent); however with the margin of error, Sanders and Buttigieg are statistically tied. With voters 35 and older Buttigieg comes in second after Biden, He polls second with women and third with men. He polls at zero percent with African Americans.

Indiana Democrats

They are currently in the process of fielding candidates for next year. The two names TCS keeps hearing for Governor are Dr. Woody Meyers, former State Health Commissioner and former Congressman Baron Hill. The other person we are keeping an eye on is State Rep. Karlee Macer. She recently changed the name of her Facebook page to Karlee Macer for Indiana. This is leading to speculation that Macer wants to run for Lt. Governor. That leads to speculation that would only happen if Meyers didn't run for Governor since both are from Marion County. And if you're wondering about Christina Hale, all signs point to her running against Susan Brooks in CD 5 next year.

Jim Banks

We are hearing Jim Banks may be getting a primary challenge next year. As if only getting seven percent of the vote in 2016 wasn't enough, Pam Galloway, the former Wisconsin State Senator (I won't say carpetbagger because that's an insult to carpet baggers) is likely going to challenge Banks next year. They self-funded last time and spent nearly a quarter million dollars to come in 4th place. She also affiliated with Hoosiers for Life and Tea party Empress Monica Boyer.

A Few Other Items of Note

Long time Indiana State Police Spokesman Dave Bursten going to take over Communications at the Indiana Department of Corrections.

OMB Director Micah Vincent is the latest Holcomb administration official to depart. He is heading to the Heritage Group. Deputy Chief of Staff Cris Johnston is taking his place,

As you know last week we wrote that the word on the street was that the gaming corporation Penn National was believed to be behind some of the bad press regarding the omnibus gaming legislation in an effort to protect its interest in Northern Indiana.

We got a call from one of their representatives who told us Penn had nothing to do with the bad press and our sources were wrong.

TCS told them our sources were pretty reliable and we had to politely agree to disagree. We did offer them a chance to go on the record and chat in our LNG capacity and they were very receptive to the offer, so stay tuned.

DOCTOR WHO WROTE HUNDREDS OF OPIOID PRESCRIPTIONS GETS PROBATION: A Bluffton doctor who wrote over 400 prescriptions for more than 50,000 opioid pills, including hundreds that were illegally resold by drug dealers, had his license placed on probation for three years and was fined $7,000 after the state found he was unfit to practice (Miley, CNHI). John Greenman, who operates Wells Medical Service, was disciplined Thursday by the Indiana Medical Licensing Board. Most of the complaint by the Indiana Attorney General's office is based on what is known as Rule 6, a 2014 set of standards for physicians who prescribe opioids. Part of the rule is triggered after a patient is prescribed more than 60 opioid pills per month for three consecutive months. That happened when a 55-year-old female patient was prescribed 270 opioid pills consecutively for three months beginning in late 2015, according to documents. Greenman later wrote two prescriptions to the same patient — one for 180 tablets of oxycodone and another for 90 tablets of morphine. The woman died July 2, 2016 of acute intoxication from oxycodone, cyclobenzaprine, fentanyl and morphine. A report showed that Greenman was the only doctor prescribing her opioids.

TRUMP ANNOUNCES $16B AGRICULTURE BAILOUT: President Trump, flanked by more than a dozen U.S. farmers at the White House, on Thursday announced a new $16 billion farm aid package to offset losses from the U.S. trade war with China (Washington Post). Trump told the farmers in attendance, including an Idaho potato farmer wearing a red "Make Potatoes Great Again" cap, that he was "honored to have done this for you." "This support for farmers will be paid for by the billions of dollars the Treasury takes in" from China, Trump said. He said it will keep America's "cherished" farms thriving. Despite Trump's assertion, China does not pay tariffs imposed by the United States on its goods. Importers pay those tariffs, and some of them pass the cost on to U.S. consumers. In a conference call with reporters ahead of the event, Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue said $14.5 billion of the $16 billion would be paid out directly to producers, who have been hit hard by Trump's tariff showdowns with China, Mexico and other countries.

PELOSI CALLS FOR 'INTERVENTION' WITH TRUMP: Speaker Nancy Pelosi said Thursday that Donald Trump needs "an intervention" after his latest "temper tantrum" at the White House, ratcheting up her criticism of a president she says is not fit for office (Politico). "I wish that his family or his administration or his staff would have an intervention for the good of the country," Pelosi told reporters a day after the president stormed out of a meeting on infrastructure and the two leaders held dueling news conferences. "What goes on there? Who's in charge? And he says he's in charge. And I suspect that he may be," Pelosi added. "And I suspect he may be even more since yesterday, because I don't think that any responsible assistant to the president of the United States would have advised him to do what he did yesterday." Pelosi's comments underscore how eager she is to keep pummeling Trump, even as she resists an effort from a growing number of House Democrats to impeach the president, for fear that it would backfire politically.

TRUMP SAYS PELOSI HAS 'LOST IT': President Trump said at a freewheeling news conference Thursday that reports of his behavior during a meeting the previous day with House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, whom he called "Crazy Nancy," were untrue -- and he called on other White House officials to back him up (Fox News). "She's not the same person. She's lost it. ... She is a mess," he said about Pelosi. White House Counselor Kellyanne Conway said he was "very calm, no temper tantrum." Others spoke in his defense as well. "You were very calm," White House National Economic Council Director Larry Kudlow said during the briefing. Trump also then asked Press Secretary Sarah Sanders next. "Very calm," Sanders said.

BRAUN VOTES AGAINST DISASTER AID BILL: The Senate passed a long-awaited bipartisan disaster aid package on Thursday after reaching a last-minute deal with President Donald Trump (Politico). In a 85-8 vote, the Senate approved a multi-billion dollar disaster aid bill, which will assist states devastated by wildfires, hurricanes and flooding, comes after months of roadblocks. U.S. Sen. Mike Braun voted against the measure. The stalled aid package had faced several setbacks — including over Trump's reluctance to provide more money to hurricane-ravaged Puerto Rico. More recently, talks stalled over a White House request for more border funding. The bill does not include the additional border funds the president sought. Among the Senators who voted against the bill — all Republicans — were Sens. Marsha Blackburn of Tennessee, Mike Crapo of Idaho, James Risch of Idaho, Mike Braun of Indiana, Mike Lee of Utah, Mitt Romney of Utah, Martha McSally of Arizona and Rand Paul of Kentucky. Following the bill, both Republicans and Democrats claimed victory. Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) said Thursday that the disaster aid bill gives enough money to Puerto Rico for disaster relief and that Senate Democrats are ready to support the bill. "We Democrats said that Puerto Rico has to be treated fairly and they are," Schumer said. "I suggested this morning that we just do disaster and no border and that's what we're doing and each time the President messes in things get messed up. It's better off letting us just do our work."

TRUMP SUCKS DO-NOTHING CONGRESS INTO HIS VORTEX OF CHAOS: If President Trump has succeeded in anything over the last month or so, it's this: He has dragged House Democrats into his vortex of chaos, forcing them to wage momentary political battles without any reasonable evidence that they'll succeed in the long term (Politico Playbook). It's a method he's employed with varied success as he hops from crisis to crisis, considering only the smallest increment of time in front of him while he runs out the clock on the Democrats' various efforts to soften him up for the 2020 election. Trump has called this the "do nothing" Congress, but he has a part in this, too. After losing the midterms, the president mused that he might be able to work better with Democrats than his Republican allies because they could bring him bills and then he would decide if he wanted to sign them. As this recess begins, 20% of the 116th Congress has been completed. So let's review what a divided Washington has produced: 17 laws have come out of 2019 so far: Five were simply related to keeping the government operating.

HPI HOLIDAY BREAK: The next HPI Daily Wire will be published next Tuesday. The HPI website will be updated throughout the Memorial Holiday weekend. Have a great and safe holiday, folks.

HARRIS, WARREN SURGE IN MONMOUTH POLL: Former Vice President Joe Biden maintains his front-runner status among Democratic voters nationwide, but some female candidates – namely Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren, California Sen. Kamala Harris, and Minnesota Sen. Amy Klobuchar – have seen some small but notable upticks in their favorability ratings over the past month. The latest Monmouth University Poll also finds a drop in support for Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders and a decline in the net rating for former Texas Rep. Beto O'Rourke. Overall, the poll provides yet another reminder that name recognition continues to drive party preferences at this early stage of the race, with many Democratic voters saying they remain unfamiliar with the majority of the two dozen candidates in the field. The race would actually look tighter if there was more focus on the voters who live in states with early primary contests with more influence determining the party's nominee. Among a field of 24 contenders, Biden currently has the support of 33% of Democrats and Democratic-leaning voters. This marks a small increase since he entered the race, from 27% in April and 28% in March. The rest of the field is tightly grouped below the clear front-runner position. Sanders has the support of 15% of Democratic-identifiers, which represents a decline over the past few months from 25% in March and 20% in April. Harris has 11% support, similar to 8% in April and 10% in March. Warren stands at 10%, compared to 6% in April and 8% in March. Other candidates receiving support in the poll include South Bend, Indiana Mayor Pete Buttigieg at 6% (8% in April and less than 1% in March), O'Rourke at 4% (4% in April and 6% in March), and Klobuchar at 3% (1% in April and 3% in March).

BUTTIGIEG SAYS TRUMP 'FAKED' CONDITION TO DODGE DRAFT: In a Washington Post interview Thursday morning, South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg accused President Trump of using his "privileged status to fake a disability" to dodge the draft during the Vietnam War (CBS News). The Democratic presidential candidate and military veteran also talked about his own service record, drawing a contrast with the president, who has said he was exempted from the military draft because of bone spurs in his heel diagnosed in 1968. "This is somebody, who I think it is fairly obvious to most of us, took advantage of the fact that he was a child of multimillionaire in order to pretend to be disabled so that somebody could go to war in his place," Buttigieg said of Mr. Trump. "I don't have a problem standing up to somebody who was you know working on season 7 of Celebrity Apprentice when I was packing my bags for Afghanistan," Buttigieg also said.

NADLER WANTS MUELLER TO TESTIFY PUBLICLY: Special counsel Robert Mueller has expressed interest in giving private testimony to Congress about his two-year investigation into Russian interference with the 2016 presidential election (MSNBC Daily). Mueller has told House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler that he is willing to make a public opening statement, but leave his testimony behind closed doors, Nadler said on "The Rachel Maddow Show" Thursday night. Rep. Nadler has made repeated efforts for Mueller to speak in front of Congress. If Mueller did proceed with private testimony on his report, the public would get a transcript, Nadler said. "We think it's important for the American people to hear from him and to hear his answers to questions about the report," Nadler said. "He envisions himself correctly as a man of great rectitude and apolitical and he doesn't want to participate in anything that he might regard as a political spectacle," Nadler said about Mueller not wanting to testify in public. But he added, "I'm speculating really."

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Final thoughts for the week ... 1. We have a do-nothing Congress, aided and abetted by a chaos president. This year should have been a good one to make inroads on immigration and infrastructure, and yet nothing will happen. Nothing. There is a troubling courage deficit in Washington. 2. We watch female Democratic contenders Kamala Harris and Elizabeth Warren rise in the polls as Mayor Pete fades a bit. Buttigieg is struggling to attract black voters, coming at a time when his campaign morphed from a mayor who just happened to be gay, to media exposure that focused on his sexuality and marriage. That's not finding traction with black voters. It's curious that not a single Hoosier African-American from South Bend or downstate has endorsed his candidacy. 3. The Warren/Harris rise could be a reaction to the draconian Alabama abortion law. 4. Americans deserve to hear Robert Mueller to provide a narrative to his report. It is explicitly in the national interest. 5. If I were to frequently tell you that I'm a "stable genius," you would think I'm nuts. When the President of the United States does that 6. Have a great weekend, folks, enjoy the greatest race in the world, the Indianapolis 500. Hoping to see an Andretti redux 50 years after Mario's greatest moment. - Brian A. Howey

BUTTIGIEG AGAINST MILITARY PARDONS: Pardoning U.S. service members accused or convicted of war crimes would be "disgusting," South Bend Mayor and Democratic presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg said today in a Washington Post interview that was live streamed (South Bend Tribune). You can watch the full interview here. President Trump has reportedly asked the Justice Department to ready paperwork to pardon several U.S. service members accused or convicted of war crimes. "If you are convicted by a jury of your military peers of having committed a war crime, the idea that the president is going to overrule that is an affront to the basic idea of good order and discipline and to the idea of law, the very thing that we're putting our lives on the line to defend," said Buttigieg, who served in active duty in the U.S. Navy Reserve in Afghanistan in 2014. In the interview with Washington Post political reporter Robert Costa, Buttigieg defended athletes who choose to kneel during the national anthem. "I felt that I was watching Americans exercise a right that I had put my life on the line to defend," he said when asked about athletes who kneel to protest police brutality and mass incarceration of African Americans.

BUTTIGIEG TALKS OF NFL PLAYERS KNEELING: When Democratic presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg saw professional football players kneeling during the national anthem to protest racial injustice and police brutality, the Afghanistan war veteran said, he saw Americans "exercising a right that I had put my life on the line to defend" (Washington Post). Buttigieg, who has broken into the top tier of Democratic candidates in early polling, appeared Thursday with The Post's Robert Costa at a Washington Post Live event, the first of a series of public interviews with President Trump's prospective 2020 challengers. Asked for his perspective as a Navy veteran about the demonstrations that for a time roiled the NFL, Buttigieg said, "I felt that I was watching Americans exercise a right that I had put my life on the line to defend."

YOUNG DISTURBED BY THEFT OF YEMEN AID: U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R-Ind.) and Chris Murphy (D-Conn.), members of the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, issued the following joint statement on Thursday, raising continued alarms on the humanitarian crisis in Yemen following a bipartisan meeting with World Food Program (WFP) Director David Beasley and reports that the WFP may be forced to suspend aid deliveries due to illegal diversion by Houthi forces (Howey Politics Indiana): "We are deeply disturbed by recent reports that the Houthis are diverting desperately needed food aid in Yemen. The Yemeni people already face a collapsed economy, a cholera epidemic, and extremely limited access to food and medicine. Over one million more people now risk starvation if the Houthis do not immediately resume cooperation with the WFP in addition to the over 85,000 children who have died from starvation," said Young and Murphy. "Congress cannot turn its back on the humanitarian catastrophe and national security threat in Yemen. That includes condemning the Saudi-led coalition's obstruction of aid and bombing of civilians, as well as the Houthis' diversion of aid, torture of detainees, and indiscriminate shelling of civilian areas."

VISCLOSKY PANEL SLASHES REPROGRAMMING FUNDS: The House Appropriations defense subcommittee has slashed the Pentagon's reprogramming authority by 75% in the approved defense appropriations bill reported out on May 15 (Daily Signal). The subcommittee, led by Rep. Pete Visclosky, D-Ind., reduced the ability of the Defense Department to shift unused resources from lower to higher priorities within the department from $4 billion or about 0.5% of the budget to $1 billion, or about 0.13% of the 2019 budget. The move comes as a response to the Trump administration's use of reprogramming authorities to move resources from the Pentagon to the Department of Homeland Security to help tackle the challenges at the southern border. If it were to make it into law, this loss of reprogramming authority would create serious obstacles in properly managing the defense funds as the Pentagon executes its budget.

BUSCHON CO-SPONSORS SURPRISE MEDICAL BILL LEGISLATION: U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon, M.D. (IN-08) released an outline of the bipartisan Protecting People from Surprise Medical Bills Act, forthcoming legislation that will protect patients from unfair and expensive surprise medical bills. The finalized legislation is expected to be introduced in the coming weeks (Howey Politics Indiana). "As a physician, I believe it is important that patients are not financially burdened with surprise medical bills for unanticipated out-of-network care," said Dr. Bucshon. "Instead of picking winners and losers, I support this bipartisan proposal that offers an independent dispute resolution process that is mediated by an arbiter. Access to life saving care is critical for all Americans and it should not come with lifelong penalties."

BANKS TO TOUR MILITARY FACILITIES: U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (IN-03) will be joined at three events in Fort Wayne with Congressman Phil Roe, M.D., Ranking member of the House Veterans Affairs Committee. Any members of the press interested in attending these events should contact Rep. Banks' Communications Director, T.W. Arrighi, so he may notify the event organizers (Howey Politics Indiana). Briefing and Tour of Fort Wayne VA Medical Center (VAMC), Friday, May 21st, 2019, at 8:00 a.m., Fort Wayne VA Medical Center, 2121 Lake Ave, Fort Wayne. Friday, May 21st, 2019, at 10:00 a.m., Shepherd's House, 519 Tennessee Ave, Fort Wayne. Allen County Right to Life Healthcare Roundtable with Reps. Banks and Roe, M.D., Friday, May 21st, 2019, at 11:15 a.m.m Allen County Right to Life, 2126 Inwood Dr., Fort Wayne Reps. Banks and Roe, M.D. will join Cathie Humbarger and members of the Allen County Right to Life for a dialogue about their work in Washington, D.C. and answer questions from local pro-life activists.

HOUSE PASSES RETIREMENT CHANGE: The House of Representatives passed legislation that would bring substantial changes to the U.S. retirement system, making it easier for employers to offer 401(k)-type plans and include annuities, which guarantee an annual income, as options for workers (Wall Street Journal). Backed by a bipartisan group of lawmakers including Rep. Richard Neal (D., Mass.), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, the legislation would repeal the age cap for contributing to traditional individual retirement accounts, currently 70½. It would also increase the age to start taking required withdrawals from 401(k)s and IRAs to 72 from 70½. The House bill, known as the Setting Every Community Up for Retirement Enhancement, or Secure Act, passed with a vote of 417-3. A Senate GOP aide said the plan is for the Senate to vote on the House's Secure Act, rather than its own version, and Sen. Rob Portman (R., Ohio), a Finance Committee member who is active on retirement policy, said the Senate should swiftly pass the House bill. "The House-passed legislation is very similar to the Senate bill, and I'm working with Chairman Grassley to get legislation signed into law as soon as possible," said Sen. Ron Wyden (D., Ore.) a co-sponsor of the Senate's retirement bill.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB ANNOUNCES STEM SCHOLARSHIPS - Governor Eric Holcomb Thursday honored the four winners of the 2019 Governor's STEM Team awards during a ceremony in the Governor's Office (Howey Politics Indiana). "Indiana is home to many talented students and this year's pool of STEM Team award applicants is proof of that," Gov. Holcomb said. "These four students represent the best and brightest of Hoosier high school students. I can't wait to see what great things they accomplish in the years ahead." The awards highlight Indiana's elite high school students for their work in science, technology, engineering and math (STEM). Science: Annie Ostojic, Munster High School; Technology: Carter Goldman, Lake Central High School; Engineering: Eliza Mount, Scottsburg Senior High School; Math: Jerry Wang, Carmel High School. Each student received a $1,000 college scholarship through Indiana's CollegeChoice 529 Direct Savings Plan and letterman jackets identifying them as members of the Governor's STEM Team.

STATEHOUSE: HILL CALLS ON CONGRESS TO AMEND DECENCY ACT - Attorney General Curtis Hill joined 46 other attorneys general across the country this week to ask Congress for the third time to amend the Communications Decency Act in order to make sure state and local authorities are able to protect citizens online and take appropriate action against criminal acts (Howey Politics Indiana). The Communication Decency Act of 1996 (CDA) was designed to encourage the growth of the internet by promoting free expression, particularly on online message boards. The Act was intended to allow companies that sponsor message boards to remain immune to repercussions from inappropriate posts, but, due to a misinterpretation of Section 230 of the Act, some federal court opinions have interpreted it so broadly that individuals and services that knowingly aid and profit from illegal activity have evaded prosecution. "We must do our best to protect our citizens, enforce the law and penalize violators," Attorney General Hill said. "Congress must hold internet service providers accountable." "Stop Enabling Sex Traffickers Act" and "Allow States and Victims to Fight Online Sex Trafficking Act" (known as FOSTA-SESTA) was signed into law in 2018, making clear that the CDA's immunity does not apply to enforcement of federal or state sex trafficking laws. The abuse on these platforms does not stop at sex trafficking; it also includes other harmful illegal activity such as online black market opioid sales, identity theft and election meddling.

DNR: OUTDOOR SKILL DERBY AT O'BANNON WOODS JUNE 1 - Watch outdoor demonstrations, test your fishing skills, or learn about photography at O'Bannon Woods State Park's Outdoor Skills Workshop and Fishing Derby on June 1 (Howey Politics Indiana). The outdoor demonstrations include a variety of activities. Tomahawk and atlatl throwing, outdoor cooking, canoeing, and leatherworking are some of the skills that will be showcased. There will also be a demonstration on how to age a fish, and two associations will provide information about mountain biking. The fishing derby offers an opportunity to test your angling skills. Fishing poles and bait will be provided, or use your own. Since June 1-2 are Free Fishing Days, a license will not be required for the derby. Door prizes will be awarded at 2:45 p.m. for three age groups. Arts in the Parks photographer Steve Polston will conduct a few different photography workshops during the event. On June 1, he will do a cyanotype demonstration during the outdoor skills workshop. Later in the day he will conduct a landscape photography workshop from 3:30 to 5 p.m., which includes a tour of the property. On June 2, Polston will conduct another cyanotype demonstration. At noon he will do a pinhole photography demonstration.

EDUCATION: PURDUE NW PROVOST RESIGNS - Purdue University Northwest Provost Ralph Mueller has resigned, the university has confirmed (NWI Times). PNW Chancellor Thomas Keon announced Mueller's immediate resignation on Monday, university spokesman Douglas Clark said. Clark said he was not given an indication why Mueller resigned. Keon will assume Mueller's roles as provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs, including the university's "Imagine PNW" curriculum planning, while officials search for an interim replacement. Clark said an interim will be selected on or before July 1. Mueller's resignation comes about a month after students and faculty spoke out against program eliminations recommended in a Strategic Resource Allocation report emailed to students on April 12.

STEEL: IMPORT APPLICATIONS RISE - Steel import permit applications soared by 27.4% month-over-month in April (Pete, NWI Times). Foreign steelmakers applied to import 2.89 million tons of steel into the United States in April, according to the U.S. Commerce Department's most recent Steel Import Monitoring and Analysis data. That's up 3.6% as compared to the 2.79 million tons applied for in March and 27.4% more than the final March import total of 2.27 million. Import permits for finished steel that would require no further processing in the United States, such as at the 22 steel companies based out of the Port of Indiana-Burns Harbor, totaled 1.98 million tons in April, according to the American Iron and Steel Institute. That's up 6.6% from the import total of 1.86 million in March.

MEDIA: MACANALLY RETIRES FROM WTHR - After nearly 33 years, David MacAnally has retired as a reporter from WTHR-TV Channel 13, the station announced Tuesday evening (Schoettle, IBJ). "It's a very bittersweet day for us here at Channel 13, for our family, as today we say goodbye to our longtime Nightbeat reporter David MacAnally, who we affectionately call Mac," WTHR anchor Andrea Morehead said on the air. WTHR added MacAnally to its news team in September 1986. He spent much of his time as a reporter working on the late-afternoon and evening newscasts. During much of his tenure, WTHR had the highest-rated local evening newscast.

WHITE HOUSE: BIG BANKS HAND OVER TRUMP RECORDS - Wells Fargo and TD Bank have turned over President Trump's financial records to the House Financial Services Committee, Fox News confirmed on Thursday, amid a contentious legal battle between the Trump administration and congressional Democrats seeking access to sensitive files (Fox News). The committee, led by Chairwoman Maxine Waters, D-Calif., is one of several panels that have issued subpoenas and requests for Trump's financial files. NBC News first reported that Wells Fargo turned over a few thousand documents to the committee, and TD Bank provided a handful. The banks are two of the nine financial institutions with which congressional Democrats are seeking cooperation. The push has led to an escalating legal battle on multiple fronts.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP GIVES BARR AUTHORITY TO PROBE CAMPAIGN - President Trump took extraordinary steps on Thursday to give Attorney General William P. Barr sweeping new authorities to conduct a review into how the 2016 Trump campaign's ties to Russia were investigated, significantly escalating the administration's efforts to place those who investigated the campaign under scrutiny (New York Times). In a directive, Mr. Trump ordered the C.I.A. and the country's 15 other intelligence agencies to cooperate with the review and granted Mr. Barr the authority to unilaterally declassify their documents. The move — which occurred just hours after the president again declared that those who led the investigation committed treason — gave Mr. Barr immense leverage over the intelligence community and enormous power over what the public learns about the roots of the Russia investigation. The order is a change for Mr. Trump, who last year dropped a plan to release documents related to the Russia investigation amid concerns from Justice Department officials who said making them public could damage national security. At the time, the president was being encouraged by a group of Republican Congress members to declassify the information.

WHITE: TRUMP MAY CIRCUMVENT CONGRESS ON SAUDI ARMS DEAL - Republicans and Democrats on Capitol Hill are urging President Trump not to go over Congress's head to complete controversial arms sales to Saudi Arabia and other countries amid concerns that he may soon use his emergency powers to sidestep lawmakers' power to check such deals (Washington Post). Lawmakers and human rights advocates are anticipating that the administration may exploit a legal window that permits the president to circumvent congressional roadblocks, or "holds," on proposed arms sales. Sen. Robert Menendez (D-N.J.), the ranking Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, has placed such a hold on a planned sale of precision-guided munitions to Saudi Arabia, over concerns that the weapons may be used against civilian targets in war-torn Yemen.

WHITE HOUSE: STAFF DENIES TRUMP 'STORMED OUT' - The White House on Thursday denied that President Donald Trump's eruption one day earlier at a meeting with Democratic leaders was a pre-planned stunt, rebuffing lawmakers' accusations that the president was trying to bow out of serious infrastructure negotiations (Politico). Trump abruptly ended his meeting at the White House after complaining that he could not work with Democrats while they were investigating him and discussing impeachment. He specifically blamed House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.), who earlier in the day had claimed Trump is engaging in a "cover-up." The blow-up has devolved into finger pointing, with the White House and Democratic leaders each blaming the other for the impasse. White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders on Thursday argued there were a number of reasons the infrastructure session was doomed, but she pressed the line that Democrats are unable to simultaneously legislate and investigate. "So far what we've seen from the Democrats in Congress, Alisyn, is that they are incapable of doing anything other than investigating this president," Sanders told host Alisyn Camerota in an interview on CNN's "New Day."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP RIDICULES TILLERSON - When Donald Trump chose Rex Tillerson to be his secretary of state in December 2016, he praised the former head of ExxonMobil for his "tenacity, broad experience and deep understanding of geopolitics." In a tweet touting the pick, Trump called Tillerson "one of the truly great business leaders of the world." In each episode of his weekly YouTube show, Chris Cillizza will delve a little deeper into the surreal world of politics (CNN). "Rex Tillerson, a man who is 'dumb as a rock' and totally ill prepared and ill equipped to be Secretary of State, made up a story (he got fired) that I was out-prepared by Vladimir Putin at a meeting in Hamburg, Germany. I don't think Putin would agree. Look how the U.S. is doing!"

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE VISITS RNC SITE - Vice President Mike Pence says Democrats in Congress need to focus on passing trade agreements that help North Carolina workers, rather than extend what he called unfounded investigations of President Donald Trump (Statesville.com). Pence made the comments at a Union County textile plant Wednesday during his trip to the state. The afternoon tour and speech at Parkdale Mills in Monroe fell between two private functions attended by the former Indiana governor. Soon after flying into Charlotte, Pence participated at a 2020 Republican National Convention kickoff event. He was scheduled later to attend a "Trump Victory" fundraising event in Greensboro. U.S. Sen. Thom Tillis, who is seeking re-election in 2020, also was slated to participate.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump and first lady Melania Trump will leave the White House at 11:40 a.m. en route to Tokyo. The president is expected to have a busy visit, which includes meeting Japan's new Emperor Naruhito, watching a sumo wrestling match and golfing with Prime Minister Shinzo Abe.

PENTAGON: PLANS FOR 100K TROOPS IN MIDDLE EAST - The U.S. military is presenting options to President Trump that would enhance the protection of American forces in the Middle East in response to rising tensions with Iran, and potentially involve sending more troops to the region, acting defense secretary Patrick Shanahan said Thursday (Washington Post). His comments came as U.S. military leaders were expected to present the White House with a proposal during a meeting Thursday afternoon to send thousands of additional troops to the Middle East for security reinforcement, according to U.S. officials. "What we're looking at is: Are there things that we can do to enhance force protection in the Middle East?" Shanahan said at the Pentagon ahead of a meeting with officials from Vietnam. He said those measures "may involve sending additional troops." The proposal from U.S. Central Command, which oversees the Middle East, comes as the military seeks to address what officials have described as a spike in threats against U.S. forces, detected by U.S. intelligence streams, from Iran and its proxy groups. The military has already taken steps in recent weeks to boost its presence in the Middle East, the latest sign of mounting tensions between the Trump administration and Tehran.

JUSTICE: 17 CHARGES AGAINST ASSANGE - Justice Department officials on Thursday announced 17 additional felony charges against WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange (The Hill). A grand jury in Alexandria, Va., returned the superseding indictment charging Assange with conspiring with former Army intelligence officer Chelsea Manning to obtain, receive and disclose "national defense information," in violation of the Espionage Act. Assange is also charged with publishing a select range of the classified documents that revealed the names of low-level, local sources utilized by the U.S. government, including Afghan and Iraqi nationals, as well as journalists, human rights activists, and religious leaders. "These alleged actions disclosed our sensitive classified information in a manner that made it available to every terrorist group, hostile foreign intelligence service and opposing military," said John Demers, the assistant attorney general for DOJ's national security division.

TERROR: LINDH RELEASED FROM TERRE HAUTE PRISON - A return to terrorist affiliation for John Walker Lindh — frequently called "the American Taliban" — isn't likely, federal prison said Thursday as they cited rehabilitative programs and improved oversight through the probation system (Trigg, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Lindh, 38, was released Thursday morning from the Terre Haute Federal Correctional Institution after completing 17 years of a 20-year sentence imposed in 2002. Lindh pleaded guilty to supplying services to the Taliban and carrying an explosive device through his involvement with an overseas terrorist organization. The Bureau of Prisons issued a statement Thursday following Lindh's release explaining policies and regulations for inmates such as Lindh, who now will serve three years of supervised probation in Virginia. "Based on a series of focused interviews conducted by BOP staff," the statement says, "the BOP has found that many inmates have turned away from radicalized ideology in prison based on self-study or due to participation in programming or sentence length."

INTEL: COATS SEEKS TO SORT DATA - The Office of the Director of National Intelligence will ramp up its outreach to technology providers as part of its Intelligence, Science, and Technology Partnership, or In-Step, according to a May 22 request for information (Bloomberg). ODNI, an entity established after the Sept. 11 terror attacks to oversee the federal government's sprawling intelligence apparatus, will invite companies and academic institutions to showcase their state-of-the-art technologies in a series of one-on-one meetings held this summer in Washington and virtually. The In-Step program's "wish list" includes technologies ranging from artificial intelligence and data analytics, to cybersecurity and identity management, to smart sensors and space-based technologies. "Our collection of data has improved so much over the years that we continue to be challenged in a very critical area," said Director of National Intelligence Dan Coats at an event hosted by Purdue University on May 14. "We're running the risk of just simply being buried under all of it," he said.

ILLINOIS: EXEC INDICTED OVER TRUMP TRANSITION - Stephen Calk, a former economic adviser to President Trump's 2016 presidential campaign, was indicted Thursday for allegedly approving $16 million in loans to former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort in exchange for his help seeking a top post in the administration (Washington Post). Calk, the founder of mortgage lender Federal Savings Bank of Chicago, illegally used the bank's resources to curry favor with Manafort, lying to regulators and ignoring concerns raised by employees, according to the indictment unsealed in the Southern District of New York. As the bank rushed through the high-risk loans, Calk gave Manafort a list ranking the senior administrative jobs he wanted, starting with treasury secretary, the indictment alleges. Calk ultimately was interviewed as a candidate for undersecretary of the Army but did not get the job, prosecutors said.

TEARFUL BRITISH PM MAY QUITS: Theresa May said she would quit as British prime minister once her party chooses a successor after failing repeatedly to win parliamentary backing for the Brexit divorce agreement she negotiated with the European Union (Wall Street Journal). With little prospect of getting her deal passed, three years after the U.K. voted to leave the bloc, Mrs. May said the race to find her replacement would formally begin after she quits as head of her party on June 7. "It is now clear to me that it is in the best interest of the country for a new prime minister," she said during a statement on the steps of 10 Downing Street. Mrs. May, her voice breaking, spoke of her sadness at no longer serving as prime minister and urged lawmakers to compromise over Brexit.

CITIES: FADNESS STRESSES REGIONALISM - Fishers Mayor Scott Fadness delivered his State of the City address Thursday and expressed his increased focus on regional collaboration. The mayor highlighted some efforts currently underway, as well as other quality of life initiatives in the Hamilton County city (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). Fadness talked about his work in advocating for Regional Investment Hubs during the 2019 Indiana General Assembly. The mayor, along with Accelerate Indiana Municipalities, launched the effort in January to push for legislation for investment hubs, which they said would help regional development officials raise revenue. The mayor also discussed the collaboration between the Fishers Police Department and the Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Department to create a database for confiscated firearms and ballistic materials that would track ballistic and DNA evidence for every firearm and bullet collected in Indianapolis. He says having Fishers officers training on the database is a first step toward a regional approach to combating violent crimes. "Today, cities do not exist or thrive because of their proximity to farms or their distance to natural resources, but they exist to create an experience and quality of life that supports the most precious natural resource of all, people," Fadness said.

CITIES: EVANSVILLE MAY END HYDROPLANE RACE - The Convention & Visitors Bureau's director is recommending the summer hydroplane racing planned for Aug. 16-18 on the Ohio River not take place (Martin, Evansville Courier & Press). Last year's HydroFest lost about $70,000, and according to the CVB, a contract with the Hydroplane Racing League, the racing organization of choice for this year, has not been finalized. Evansville Events, which is an arm of the CVB, is the owner of HydroFest. "There is no contract. We were working in that direction, but we're less than 90 days from the event," CVB director Joe Taylor said.

CITIES: FISHERS COUNCIL HIRES FIRM TO PROBE CLERK - The Fishers City Council has hired a "third-party firm" to investigate allegations that City Clerk Jennifer Kehl violated the federal law that prohibits employment discrimination (IBJ). The council released a written statement Thursday afternoon saying it became aware May 10 of "several" allegations by current and former employees that Kehl violated Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which prohibits employment discrimination on the basis of sex, race, color, national origin and religion. The statement gave no details about the allegations, and the council said it would not provide further comment until the investigation is complete to respect due process for all parties involved. "The City Council takes every allegation of discrimination and harassment very seriously and immediately acted to provide workplace accommodations," the council said in the statement.

CITIES: CARMEL TAKES AIM AT LUCAS PARTIES - Carmel plans to take legal action to stop Charlotte and Forrest Lucas from hosting events at their massive estate, the city announced in a press release Wednesday afternoon (Quinn, IBJ). The city said it plans to file requests for preliminary and permanent injunctions against the estate to prohibit the family from conducting a business at its private residential property. It did not say when the filings would take place. Michael Wukmer, a partner at Ice Miller LLP who represents the Lucases, told IBJ that neither he nor his clients have heard from Carmel about any legal action. But he said if the city does file the requests with the court, he'll oppose them because they're based upon "inaccuracies."

CITIES: MAYOR TYLER APPROVED MUNCIE AMBULANCE BUY - Despite the City of Muncie moving ahead with its plans for an EMS service under the Muncie Fire Department, many people who will be impacted by the plan are badly uninformed (Ohlenkamp, Muncie Star Press). Muncie Fire Department Chief Eddie Bell made two requests during the Wednesday morning Board of Works meeting for four ambulances at a combined cost of $340,000. Both requests were approved. Bell and Mayor Dennis Tyler are apparently moving forward on their own. The Star Press contacted city council members, the 911 director as well as the Delaware County Emergency Management director. All said they have not had any communication from the mayor or Bell, who have also not returned repeated phone messages and text messages from the Star Press. The Star Press spoke with eight of the nine city council members Wednesday afternoon, all of whom were unaware of the Board of Works action.

CITIES: BENNETT REACHES DEAL TO REOPEN TERRE HAUTE POOL - After months of negotiations, Mayor Duke Bennett said Thursday he has reached an "agreement in principle" with the YMCA of the Wabash Valley to re-open the indoor pool at the Y in Terre Haute's Fairbanks Park (Terre Haute Tribune-Star). "The agreement is verbal and will be put in writing to present the YMCA board," Bennett said. "I suspect that we will have formal, final (agreement) in the next few weeks."

CITIES: WHITESTOWN, WESTFIELD GROWING FAST - For the eighth consecutive year, Whitestown is the state's fastest growing community, according to estimates released Thursday by the U.S. Census Bureau and analyzed by the Indiana Business Research Center at Indiana University's Kelley School of Business. This year, however, it will have to settle for a first-place tie (Quinn, IBJ). The populations in both Whitestown and Westfield grew 5.2% in 2018, making both communities the fastest-growing places on a percentage basis among those with a population of at least 5,000 residents. Over the past eight years, Whitestown has nearly tripled its population, growing from 3,132 in 2010 to 8,627 in 2018. Westfield now has a population of 41,528 people, up from 39,482 last year, according to the estimates. Meanwhile, in terms of sheer numbers, three Hamilton County cities were among the top five Indiana communities in adding residents last year. Indianapolis finished No. 1 by adding 5,235 residents last year, followed by Fort Wayne (2,178), Westfield (2,046), Fishers (1,679) and Carmel (1,521).

CITIES: INDY HOMELESS POPULATION DECLINES - Indy's homeless population is the lowest in eight years (WIBC). The annual count of the homeless finds the total dropped this year for a second year in a row. The total tally of 1,567 has dropped 12% in two years. Workers fan out across shelters and streets one night each January to take the count. It's a requirement for federal housing grants. IU's Public Policy Institute says the number of chronically homeless dropped 39% from last year, while about 160 people were homeless for the first time.

CITIES: BLOOMINGTON JOINS GREEN COUNCIL - The city of Bloomington has announced its participation in the U.S. Green Building Council LEED for Cities and Communities grant program. The city says it will receive financial assistance, educational resources and technical support when it becomes a certified city in the program (McLaughlin, Inside Indiana Business). LEED certification is based on need, leadership support, commitment to data-driven decision-making, staff capacity and coordination with other local initiatives. Representatives from Bloomington will attend a two-day orientation at USGBC headquarters in Washington, D.C., in June. There, they will go through training and develop an action plan for the upcoming year.

INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT

GEO no-go to go to re-do

Structural changes already in the works should facilitate ICSB approval

None of the three applications before the Indiana Charter School Board seeking to open new schools in Indianapolis received approval when the board met on May 14. Board members unanimously rejected the Indianapolis STEAM Academy and the HIM by HER Collegiate School for the Arts, and they deadlocked 3-1 on the Next Generation Academy high school proposed by the GEO Foundation.

ICSB has now deadlocked twice in as many meetings. Board rules require four votes to take action.

Board Chair Joshua Owens directed GEO and ICSB staff to work together to bring the high school application back to the board for consideration in July or August . . . after the implementation of structural changes enacted during the 2019 legislative session.

The changes are designed to improve the efficiency of board operations, and should facilitate the approval of GEO's application without further hiccups. "Applicants and schools deserve action, whether it's positive or negative," says James Betley, ICSB's executive director.

The legislative changes include expanding board membership from seven to nine. At only four out of the past 23 ICSB meetings have all seven appointees attended. The legislation also revises the definition of a majority to mean a majority of members present, rather than a majority of members appointed.

ICSB staff recommended Board approval of the GEO application. "We felt this was as good of an application as we've seen," says Betley. The three yes votes came from Board Chair Josh Owens, Vice-Chair Jill Kramer Robinson, and Virginia Calvin. Janet Rummel recused herself because of an employment conflict. Gretchen Gutman and DeLyn Beard were not in attendance.

The lone no vote came from MaryAnn Schlegel Ruegger of Indianapolis, who was recently appointed to the Board by House Democratic Leader Phil GiaQuinta (D) of Fort Wayne to replace his brother, Mark GiaQuinta (a former school board president), who had been appointed by then-Democratic Leader Terry Goodin (D) of Austin, himself a public school superintendent.

Owens and Beard will not be returning to the board when their terms expire on July 1. Governor Eric Holcomb (R) will appoint Owens' replacement and both of the expansion seats. Owens has served as chair since he was appointed by then-Gov. Mike Pence (R) in September 2015. Beard's replacement will be picked by Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D) of Anderson.

The enabling statute is silent on geography, but staff view the next round of appointments as an opportunity to improve the geographic balance, which currently skews in favor of Indianapolis. Recruitment is expected to focus on Northwest Indiana and southern Indiana.

ICSB staff did not recommend approval of the Indianapolis STEAM Academy or the HIM by HER Collegiate School for the Arts. The primary reason was enrollment, but enrollment wasn't the sole concern, says Betley, former deputy director of education policy for then-Gov. Pence.

Tanoos: No crime committed Vigo ex-super appeals bribery allegations

In Tanoos v. State, No. 19A-CR-01086, the State's bribery case involving former long-time Vigo County School Corporation superintendent Danny Tanoos, Dr. Tanoos, represented by the top-tier Indianapolis legal defense duo of Jim Voyles and Jennifer Lukemeyer, files a motion with the Indiana Court of Appeals seeking an immediate appeal of the Marion County trial court's denial of his motion to dismiss the charges.

Counsel for Dr. Tanoos argues an explicit quid pro quo and a specific act must exist for a bribery conviction - "both of which are clearly lacking in this case." His attorneys assert that "Payments to a public official for the hopes of later influencing an unspecified act does not cut the bribery muster."

Tanoos was charged in September 2018 with three counts of bribery stemming from three instances where the State alleges he accepted, agreed to accept, or solicited property from Energy Solutions Group in exchange for a recommendation of future business with VCSC on energy savings projects.

The acceptance of dinners or concert tickets "cannot be tied to any specific act. The State merely pleads that Tanoos would make a 'recommendation to award a contract and/or continued business.' It is undisputed that at the time these dinners and tickets were accepted by Tanoos, ESG had no pending bids before VCSC," his attorneys explain.

The Next Generation Academy would launch in August 2020 with up to 150 ninth graders, adding one grade per year until reaching full 9-12 enrollment of up to 700 students.

An outside consultant hired by ICSB to review applications wrote this about the Indianapolis STEAM Academy: “The application lacks an articulation of the structures, systems, policies, practices, and processes necessary to operationalize the school design. Further, the application raises questions about the applicant’s approach to financial planning and how the proposed school, if approved, will be able to meet budgeted enrollment targets – in year one or thereafter, or that contingency plans as presently articulated would alleviate enrollment shortfalls.”

On HIM by HER, a third-party evaluator concluded, “The applicant group provided high-level narratives and basic elements of an educational program; however there are major areas of concern, including the reliability of the financial projections. The generalized and high-level narrative, along with a lack of supporting citations and research-based best practices, does not provide the necessary clarity needed to ensure high-quality outcomes for students and successful fulfillment of the stated goals.”

The last four Indianapolis charter schools opened by the Board have had real enrollment challenges. ACE Preparatory Academy in 2016 and Circle City Preparatory in 2017 opened well below their estimated enrollments, although both have managed to weather the crisis. The jury is still out on the two that opened in 2018, Allegiant Preparatory Academy and Vanguard Collegiate. “I wouldn’t say there’s a moratorium, but it’s a reluctance. The past couple years have made us more weary. And we’ve had to close some schools, too.”

GEO is the first new operator staff have recommended for Indianapolis in more than a year. “The reasons we feel this is a different situation is because of the experience of the team, their actual partnerships in effect, and although there’s no guarantee, they have fairly realistic enrollment goals,” Betley explains.

The Next Generation Academy is modeled on the 21st Century Charter School at Gary (21C) operated by GEO since 2005. Unlike 21C, however, the Next Generation Academy will not cover K-12.

“Because of the enrollment challenges in Indianapolis, we decided not to go after the K-8 space,” says Dana Teasley, GEO’s chief financial officer and general counsel. “We realize that is very saturated, so we strategically limited this application to 9-12.”

The hallmark of the proposal is a 9-12 school that achieves 9-14 results, says Kevin Teasley, chief executive officer of GEO.

Of the 65 seniors who graduated from 21C in May, 17 received either an associate degree or a career certification. “Completely paid for by the way,” says Teasley.

21C at Gary is termed an “Early College” program, but “it’s really a college immersion program,” says Teasley. A lot of schools organize college tours and help students complete the FAFSA, but for GEO, “Our goal is to get them on a college campus as quickly as possible.”

In the summer before their ninth grade year, students take a college placement exam to determine whether they are academically ready to handle college-level coursework. If they fail, GEO provides remediation. Those who are ready complete an orientation/bridge program then start taking on-campus classes in the fall.

Two years ago a female student graduated 21C with a high school diploma and bachelor’s degree. A current student who just earned an associate degree as a tenth grader is on pace to graduate with a bachelor’s degree in 2021.

Beginning with the class of 2022, all students must earn at least 24 college credits to receive a high school diploma. The majority of learning in grades 11 and 12 takes place on a college campus. Even so, say the Teasleys, it wouldn’t be accurate to describe the high school as “out-sourcing” the junior and senior years to Ivy Tech. “Even at the 11th and 12th grade levels, we have students taking standard high school courses,” says Dana.

GEO has partnered with the Indiana Black Expo, which has offered to let the Next Generation Academy locate on the IBE campus on the eastside of Indianapolis. GEO hopes to replicate the 21C model to other communities where Ivy Tech has a strong presence, including Marion and Anderson in 2022 and Michigan City in 2023. The network of schools will operate with a legal structure similar to the one used for the Excel Centers.

IN Elementary & Secondary Ed

IN General . . .

- The U.S. Department of Education recognizes the Goshen Community Schools with the Green Ribbon Schools award, one of only 14 districts nationally and the only Hoosier district selected for the distinction.

- The three pillars of the Green Ribbon program are reducing the environmental impact of school operations, improving the health and wellness of students and adults, and offering environmental and sustainable curricula and programs.

- GCS implemented an energy conservation program with Cenergistic that has resulted in energy cost avoidance of $4.4 million since 2009, a 25% savings.

- Waterford Elementary School and Goshen High School each have more than 1,000 solar panels. The district has installed water-bottle filling stations. Every school has a purposeful recycling program. A few GCS campuses have irrigation systems equipped with rain sensors. Custodians use eco-friendly cleaning solutions. The district has partnered over the past six years with the Northern Indiana Public Service Company to provide every fifth-grade student with an energy-reduction kit as part of the curriculum that includes LED lights, LED night lights, an air filter aerator, high-efficiency kitchen and bathroom sink faucet heads, high-efficiency shower heads, a water bag so that students can measure and record how much water shower heads and sinks are using in the house, and a digital thermometer.

● Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R) addresses the gubernatorial appointment of the state's top education official in an opinion column published in various newspapers.

□ Dr. McCormick uses the forum to explain that "Balanced and meaningful debate is a healthy approach to K-12 education policy. Indiana must demand elected officials who have the courage to welcome and embrace such an approach. Students cannot afford a 'get-in-line' Secretary of Education. House Enrolled Act 1005 had the opportunity to establish a more balanced approach. Yet, it missed the mark. Now more than ever, Hoosiers must hold all of Indiana's elected leaders accountable. From the rhetoric of the campaign trail to the actions in governing, officials must be honest and transparent regarding their position surrounding K-12 policy. Stakeholders must be bold, direct, and persistent in our questioning and expectations for accountability. The 2020 gubernatorial race bears more weight in this new governance structure. Important decisions lie ahead for our state, and most importantly, our students. Education impacts all of us. Our children, families, educators, communities, and businesses deserve a strong, representative voice. It is time to refocus our attention beyond political posturing and stand tall for our children."

● Superintendent Rocky Killion of the West Lafayette Community School Corporation writes about the challenging environment for teacher recruitment and retention. "Last week one of my administrators attended an education job fair to look for outstanding teacher candidates. Throughout the entire day, only four potential candidates visited with my administrator. Most troubling was the sight of many school district administrators from other states. One of those administrators told my administrator that his school district has found that persuading Indiana teachers to move to his state is very easy. His state pays more, offers better benefits and has fewer state-mandated restrictions on the work of teachers. Is it any wonder that Indiana teachers are leaving the profession or this state in droves?"

● Per-pupil spending for public elementary and secondary education in Indiana increased by 1.9% to $10,045 per pupil during the 2017 fiscal year, compared to $9,856 per pupil in 2016, according to new data from the U.S. Census Bureau. That's the largest increase since 2012, when per pupil spending in Indiana grew by 3.7 percent. Indiana's per-pupil spending ranks 36th among states and, for the second year in a row, behind all neighboring states.

□ Indiana spent $1,100 (12.4%) more per pupil in the 2017 fiscal year than in the 2007 fiscal year. Indiana ranked 30th among states 10 years ago with per-pupil spending of $8,938.

□ Indiana spent $3,635 per pupil on instructional employee salaries in the 2017 fiscal year, an increase of $210 (6.1%) from $3,425 in the 2007 fiscal year. This increase in instructional salary spending per pupil ranks as the fifth lowest among all states. Indiana ranked 43rd among states in the 2017 fiscal year for instructional salary spending per pupil, down five spots from 38th in the 2007 fiscal year.

□ Indiana spent $1,890 per pupil on instructional employee benefits in the 2017 fiscal year, an increase of $154 (8.9%) compared to $1,736 in the 2007 fiscal year. The 8.9% increase in per-pupil spending on instructional benefits over the past 10 years ranks as the third-lowest among states. Indiana ranked 25th among states in total per-pupil spending on instructional benefits in the 2017 fiscal year, down 11 spots from 14th in 2007.

□ Indiana expended $5,525 on instructional salaries and benefits in the 2017 fiscal year, an increase of $363 (7.0%) compared to $5,161 in the 2007 fiscal year. The percentage increase is the fourth lowest in the country behind only Arizona, Florida, and Oklahoma.

□ Public elementary and secondary education revenue in Indiana from all sources in FY 2017 amounted to $12.684 billion, up by 1.39% over the prior year . . . and an increase of 24.55% versus FY 2007. By comparison, public elementary and secondary education spending in Indiana in FY 2017 totaled $11.608 billion, up by 2.59% from 2016 . . . but an increase of just 3.55% versus FY 2007.

□ Between 2007 and 2017, K-12 enrollment in Indiana declined by 3.15% from 1,034,685 pupils to 1,002,135 pupils. State lawmakers frequently scratch their heads in bewilderment at how state appropriations for K-12 education have shot up, and yet teacher salaries in many districts have remained mostly stagnant and total enrollments have declined. One reason may be a sharp increase in school debt.

□ According to the U.S. Census Bureau, Indiana K-12 schools were burdened to the tune of $10.09 billion in debt outstanding at the end of fiscal year 2017. By comparison, at the end of fiscal year 2007, schools carried debt of $3.32 billion.

□ That means over the past 10 years, school debt loads have soared by 203 percent. Indiana is one of only four states where school debt has more than doubled in 10 years, and one of just two states where school debt has increased by 200% (the other is North Dakota, where despite the 200% increase, school debt remains under $1 billion). In 12 states, school debt actually declined between 2007 and 2017.

- On Tuesday, April 23, school bus drivers across the state documented the number of stop arm violations that occurred. The statewide survey tallied 2,530 violations. When multiplied by 180 school days, that's 455,400 violations for the school year . . . although taking e-learning days into account would likely drop the total to under 450,000.

IN Administration . . .

- The Indiana Association of School Business Officials (IASBO) creates a Hall of Fame and inducts its inaugural class. The eight individuals inducted into the Hall on May 9 were six past presidents of IASBO – Joe Scher, Ed Adams, Jerry Moore, Tom Grabill, Ray Pavy, and Tim Jackson – the late Patty Bond, and Denny Costerison, executive director of IASBO since 1984.

IN Budgets & Finance . . .

- Facing a $10.2 million deficit in 2020 (8.66% of current expenditures), the School City of Hammond board votes to shutter Columbia Elementary School, Lafayette Elementary School, and the Miller School at the end of the school year. The closures will reduce 17 non-teaching positions. The Lake County district will also exact a Reduction in Force of an additional 130-150 positions.

□ Parents, who packed the meeting at which the decision was made, were not happy, citing their votes to raise taxes in a referendum less than two years ago . . . a 2017 action that they thought would obviate the need for such drastic action.

- Headed to market with bond issues: May 29 – Lake Central School Corporation General Obligation Bonds, Series 2019 (maturities 2020 -0 2024), $4,970,000, with Cender and Company, L.L.C. as its advisor . . . and June 6 – Delphi Community Multi School Building Corporation Ad Valorem Property Tax First Mortgage Bonds, Series 2019, $5,170,000, with Baker Tilly Municipal Advisors as its advisor.

- Fitch Ratings assigns a rating of AA+ to the State of Indiana's School Aid Intercept Program. The intercept law requires the state treasurer to make any necessary payments within five business days of a claim filed by a bond trustee or paying agent for any unpaid amount of debt service.

□ School corporations can qualify for the AA+ rating if they meet the following three conditions:

- Moneys are due to the paying agent or trustee sufficiently in advance of the bond payment date (typically 15 days) to allow time for the state to exercise the intercept mechanism, if necessary.

- The paying agent or trustee is obligated to notify the state treasurer if the payment has not been remitted on time, or is insufficient, on a timely basis (typically within two days).

- State appropriations provide at least 1.25x coverage of pro forma maximum annual debt service as well as sufficient coverage from remaining annually appropriated interceptable funds of debt service on each debt service payment date.

- S&P Global Ratings raises its underlying rating on Pike County School Corporation by two notches. The ratings agency is pleased that "District finances were seriously stressed in the past but the financial recovery is well under way now."

- S&P Global Ratings revises its outlook to negative from stable on the underlying rating (SPUR) on existing ad valorem tax-supported debt issued for Center Grove Community School Corporation, and affirms its 'A+' SPUR and 'AA+' program rating on debt previously issued on behalf of the school corporation. The outlook on the program ratings is stable. S&P also assigned 'SP-1+' short-term rating to Center Grove Multi-Facility School Building Corporation's $29.5 million series 2019 bond anticipation notes (BANs), issued for the school corporation.

□ The outlook revision follows the school corporation's increasing debt levels (beyond previous indications) and marginal declines in (already low) available cash reserves, both on a dollar basis and as a percentage of expenditures, as the budget increases, according to S&P Global Ratings. While the budget remains operationally balanced and performance is stable, the ratings agency's view of overall flexibility has slowly weakened due to budget growth without a corresponding increase in available reserves.

□ While the ratings agency also notes that CGCSC has aimed to keep available reserves above 4.0% and is meeting this target, as the operating budget, capital needs, and debt burden continue to grow, analysts feel this level of reserves leaves little financial flexibility, especially considering such significant reliance on state aid funding. The agency cautions that it may lower the rating within the next two years if the district's reserve position does not strengthen, and debt ratios continue to grow.

IN Compensation . . .

- The Indiana State Teachers Association delivers a letter to the leaders of the four legislative caucuses requesting that they revisit the changes to the Professional Growth Plan requirements enacted in HEA 1002-2019.

□ After ISTA urged teachers to start their license renewal process in the Licensing Verification and Information System (LVIS) before July 1 in order to avoid the new PGP requirement, Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R) tweeted on May 14: "Since 5/9, 4608 new PGPs started in LVIS. 701 final submissions have been approved. @EducateIN licensing team has been amazing. A huge amount of work for our team & an unnecessary stressor on educators during a busy month. All consequences of policy void of practitioner voice." The rush to beat the deadline crashed the state website several times.

□ Indiana joins states such as Michigan, Louisiana, and Tennessee that have experimented with offering externships as professional development, reported Education Week. The Indianapolis Star reported that two beer breweries have responded to the requirement by offering a program for teachers to learn about beer production and small business ownership, while sampling beer. Rep. Holli Sullivan (R) of Evansville, the author of HEA 1002, responded to the uproar, in part, by pointing out that ROI (Regional Opportunity Initiatives) will sponsor its third annual Educator Boot Camp this Summer, a week-long experience involving visits to area employers where teachers learn about career opportunities for students and employer labor and skills needs.

□ Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) of Martinsville told the Indianapolis Star, “The teachers feel like they’re going to have to do this extra work in a business in the summertime, but the way I envisioned it ... it can be done in the same way they do professional development now, in your school building.” The change stems from the Governor’s Workforce Cabinet, which found that of the 90 Professional Growth Plan points teachers must obtain to renew their teaching licenses every five years, “there is no specificity that these points include any labor market information, current economic forecast at the national or local level, or connection to business and industry. Neither is there specificity as to how to integrate this information into the classroom.”

● The Metropolitan School District of Steuben County School Board raises the pay for substitute teachers to a base of $100 per day, apparently making MSD of Steuben County the highest-paying district for subs in the region. The board concurrently began the process to implement a new policy for substitute teachers that would trim the required qualifications for a sub to just a high school diploma and 30 semester hours of college credit.

□ The MSD Steuben board also approved stipends for high school advanced placement ($400 per class) and dual-credit ($500 per class with a per-student rate added when applicable) teachers.

IN Charter Schools . . .

● The Mind Trust will host former U.S. secretary of education John King to deliver the keynote address at its Celebration of Education Progress event on the evening of June 3, 2019 at the Indiana Roof Ballroom in Indianapolis.

□ The event will also honor former Indianapolis Mayor Bart Peterson (D) for his impact on education in Indianapolis as mayor and as founding chair of The Mind Trust’s Board of Directors. The Mind Trust has supported the launch of 24 charter schools, with five more schools preparing to open this fall.

IN Programs & Curriculum . . .

● Seventy-four students from the Batesville High School graduating class of 2019 earned the Statewide Transfer General Education Core (STGEC), meaning they’ll start college at any public four-year institution with 30 credits and sophomore status.

□ The Batesville Community School Corporation Board of School Trustees also approves creation of an Alternative Program for at-risk Batesville High School students.

● Wendell Phillips School 63 in Indianapolis will receive new outdoor classrooms after Reconnecting to Our Waterways (ROW) awarded $14,000 from the Nina Mason Pulliam Charitable Trust White River Fund to the Indiana Department of Natural Resources Division of Fish & Wildlife. The project is in partnership with Groundwork Indy.

□ Funding will assist with habitat installation maintenance as well as a workshop to provide teachers with Project WILD curriculum to use in their new outdoor classrooms.

● A procurement led by the Indiana Department of Administration recommends that the Family and Social Services Administration enter into a contract with Shine Early Learning, Inc., to provide technical assistance to the network of early childhood providers across the state on behalf of the Office of Early Childhood and Out-of-School Learning. The four-year contract is valued at more than $26 million. Shine Early Learning out of New York City beat out the Indiana Youth Institute, Indiana University, Eris Enterprises, and 4C of Southern Indiana. Shine Early Learning, a division of Acelero Learning, will subcontract with Geminus Corporation to hire and deploy coaches to support family child care homes and with Erikson Institute to develop an Indiana-specific version of its Town Square portal to serve as the go-to resource for professional development for providers of family child care homes.

□ Shine will develop a brand new Indiana Early Childhood Self-Assessment Tool (I-SAT) based on a series of rubrics to support programs in self-identifying their current strengths and future goals. The web-based Self-Assessment tool will be connected with Indiana’s Quality Rating and Improvement System (Paths to Quality) and linked electronically to child care licensing records. The I-SAT will generate an automated action plan with recommendations for professional development modules and quality improvement steps tailored to the expressed needs of the provider.

IN Policy . . .

● The Greenwood Community Schools was inundated with negative press coverage after a story reported by WISH-TV News8 in Indianapolis was picked up by media outlets across the country, including CNN, People magazine and Newsweek.

□ The local Nexstar TV station reported that a six-year-old girl at Southwest Elementary School in Greenwood was “lunch shamed” and had to do the “cafeteria walk of shame” because she didn’t have $2.25 in her account to pay for a hot lunch. She was fed a peanut butter sandwich and a milk.

□ Your favorite education newsletter has followed the spate of alternate meal controversies over the past few years in the Greenfield-Central Schools, Vigo County School Corporation, Monroe County Community School Corporation, and others. In 2018, Sen. Mark Stoops (D) of Bloomington authored SB 314 to address “lunch shaming,” but it did not receive a hearing.

IN Referenda . . .

● The Vigo County School Corporation has signaled that a referendum will be needed in the next few years to pay for $200 million or more in building improvements. Could the district be waiting to put the building referendum to voters until after the casino referendum takes place, likely this Fall? As our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, explains, there are no city offices up for a vote this Fall in Vigo County outside of Terre Haute, so turnout is likely to be low, and the universe of voters is likely to be skewed. Voters who have previously voted on a referendum are statistically more likely to approve a subsequent referendum, according to research by Purdue University agricultural economist Larry DeBoer.

Thank you for being a member of IAPSS!

- The South Bend Community School Corporation “will likely decide to ask voters to approve a referendum in May 2020,” reports the South Bend Tribune.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- The Carmel Clay Schools Board of Trustees awards $2.75 million in contracts to five firms to repair damage to Carmel High School caused by an explosion in a boiler room in December that impacted adjacent areas. CCS solicited quotes from 41 contractors with seven responding.

- The Knox Community School Corporation held public meetings May 7 and May 20 on the proposed 2020 Safety, Security, and Renovation Project, which includes an addition to the elementary school and an expansion of the high school. KCSC estimates a $20 million bond issue.

- Renovations in the M.S.D. of Wabash County will begin next month and should wrap up in December, financed by a $2.4 million bond issue underwritten by Stifel.

- Look for the Board of School Trustees of the Southwestern Consolidated School District of Shelby County to evaluate a proposal from Superintendent Paula Maurer for a new fieldhouse for Southwestern Jr./Sr. High School as the district prepares for rapid growth with major investment by new companies in Shelby County – and a casino expansion and several hundred new jobs expected from that as well.

IN Transition . . .

- Alicia Kielmovitch leaves her position as senior policy director for the State Board of Education to become chief of staff for the Governor’s Workforce Cabinet.

- Rhonda Peterson has been hired as director of curriculum, instruction, and assessment for the Carmel Clay Schools, replacing Martha McFarland, who retired in April.

- The Indianapolis Public Schools received 11 applications for superintendent. The district expects to name finalists and conduct public interviews. Interim Superintendent Aleesia Johnson is among the finalists.

- The Greater Clark County Schools proposes paying Superintendent Mark Laughner a salary of $155,000.

- Trent McCormick leaves his post as science teacher at Decatur Middle School in Indianapolis to become the new athletic director of the Covington Community School Corporation. He is married to Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R).

- Founder Caitlin Hannon, a former IPS board member, submits notice that she will be stepping down from her position as executive director of Enroll Indy, as the organization transitions from a start-up CEO to an operational CEO.

- Cheryl Pruitt, the former Gary Community School Corporation superintendent charged with theft and official misconduct in Lake County Superior Court for alleged double-billing of expenses, State v. Pruitt, No. 45D05-1812-PL-000541, is slated for a jury trial beginning February 1, 2021. Former Gary mayor Scott King (I) is her attorney.

- The Fort Wayne Community Schools Board of School Trustees names Erica Almas as principal of Northrop High School for the 2019-20 school year. Almas taught for five years in Brown County Schools, worked as a dean of students in Perry Township Schools and an assistant principal in North Adams Community Schools. In 2016, she joined FWCS as an assistant principal at Northrop before moving two years later to the FWCS Curriculum, Assessment and Instruction Department as curriculum coordinator.

- Marcus Wagner will leave his post as principal of McKinney-Harrison Elementary School in the DeKalb County Central United School District become principal at DeKalb High School.

IN Government . . .

- The Legislative Council met May 21 and formally assigned topics for lawmakers to study during the Summer interim period in preparation for the 2020 legislative session. The Legislative Council is comprised of eight members of the Senate and eight members of the House chosen by the leaders. In the coming weeks, House and Senate leaders will now assign members to each study committee. Study committee proceedings must wrap up by November 1.

□ The Interim Study Committee on Education has been charged with examining the following pair of topics:

(A) Issues relating to career counseling in elementary and high schools during the 2018 through 2020 interims, including:

(I) The adequacy of current state and local funding for a school corporation’s career counseling of students.

(ii) The current workload of a school corporation’s career counselors.

(iii) The impact of having multiple graduation pathways on a school corporation’s career counselor’s workload.

(iv) The fiscal impact of having multiple graduation pathways on a school corporation’s ability to provide adequate career counseling to students.

(B) How money generated by property tax referenda is used and the effect of property tax referenda on teacher pay.

□ The Interim Study Committee on Fiscal Policy will take a look at the Complexity Index. The final version of the biennial state budget that takes effect July 1 decreases complexity funding by nine percent. At earlier points in the budget process, decreases of 14% had been proposed.

□ “Everyone needs to understand that it costs more money to educate children of poverty,” says David Marcotte, executive director of the Indiana Urban School Association. “All of us need to make sure that our legislators understand why.” The complexity index is currently based on a count of TANF, SNAP, and foster care. “We know from boots on the ground the reality is that many of our families of poverty struggle negotiating the (welfare) system,” says Marcotte, so the need is likely greater than what’s reflected in the SNAP and TANF counts certified by the county and state. “We need to do a better job in school of helping families understand the system, and if they do qualify for services, help them negotiate the system.”

□ Complexity index funding declined in the new state budget because fewer Hoosiers qualified for welfare assistance. “We’re happy the State of Indiana can say we are 14% less poor,” says IUSA’s Marcotte, “but that doesn’t totally equate to having 14% less needy children. For example, we don’t have 14% less students in need of remediation or 14% less students in need of learning English. The two just don’t automatically equate.”

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) introduces the “Consider Teachers Act of 2019” to ameliorate the flaws in the TEACH Grant program that have burdened teachers with unfair loans. His office explains that “often due to basic clerical mistakes, thousands of teachers have found their grants converted into loans that must be paid back with interest. The Consider Teachers Act aims to fix this broken system permanently.” Sen. Braun says “The TEACH grant is an important program to incentivize teachers to serve in neglected communities, but 12 years of poor government management has turned these grants into groans for thousands of teachers. To show our appreciation for America’s great teachers, let’s get off the sidelines and fix this broken system once and for all.”

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) introduces the “Stop for School Buses Act of 2019” to ensure that no families have to suffer a tragedy like the one that occurred last year in Rochester, where a pickup-truck driver struck and killed three young siblings and injured a fourth student while they were crossing a state highway to board the school bus. S. 1254 requires a two-year study of the best methods for reducing school bus-related fatalities and mandates the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration to review and report on school bus safety technology that may discourage or prevent illegal passing. The bill would also create and execute a public safety awareness campaign. Companion legislation was introduced in the House by U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R).

□ Meanwhile, after last month’s passage of SEA 2-2019, the bill’s author, Sen. Randy Head (R) of Logansport wrote on Facebook, “It has been tough, but we did it!!! Thank you for supporting our efforts and the changes we had to make in order to shore up support. This was difficult – a lot more difficult than I envisioned when we started – but we kept fighting, and it has finally paid off. Thanks to everyone who rooted for this family and this bill!”

● The State Board of Education approves an official list of industry-recognized credentials for Graduation Pathways, A-F school accountability, and federal Perkins performance, in a move that will more closely align high schools with the needs of private industry. The Indiana Department of Workforce Development has historically been responsible for validating industry-recognized credentials for school accountability criteria, but the Graduation Pathways policy adopted by the State Board in December 2017 “forced DWD to strategically collaborate across multiple state agencies and purposefully engage with employers to update the listed certifications,” according to Alicia Kiernovitch, the outgoing senior director of policy and legislation for the State Board of Education. Working with the Indiana Chamber of Commerce, more than 100 employers from across economic sectors were convened to review the certification ecosystem.

□ Several of the certifications that had been on last year’s list were removed “due to resounding input from employers that these certifications have no value or use in their sectors,” wrote Kiernovitch.

IN Courts and Conduct . . .

● As we were heading to press with this issue, news was breaking in Central Indiana that a former Warren Central High School Spanish teacher and JV softball coach is facing charges in Hamilton County Circuit Court – two counts of felony sexual misconduct with a minor and one count of felony child solicitation for fondling or touching – for her alleged misconduct with a 15-year-old girl. State v. Mang, No. 29C01-1905-F4-003909. The relationship was discovered by the girl’s mother in the form of text messages.

□ While it was not clear from the charging documents whether the girl was a Warren Central student, Warren Township Schools issued this statement: “We have been notified of the results of the investigation concerning charges brought against one of our former employees. Throughout the investigation we have cooperated with authorities to the extent we were called upon. Although we cannot respond to the allegations specifically, we want everyone to know that we take seriously the responsibility and trust parents bestow on us to educate and protect their children when in our care. When an individual is accused of violating that trust, it should be, and is, an affront to us all. We will continue to be vigilant in our purpose to provide a safe and quality educational experience to the 12,000-plus students who come through our doors on a daily basis and will hold all of our employees to the highest standard of care.”

IN Higher Education

IN General . . .

● DePauw University President Mark McCoy will step down at the conclusion of the 2019-2020 academic year, ending a tumultuous tenure during which he angered students for not responding quickly enough to a series of hate crimes that roiled campus and faced criticism from faculty for his management style and response to the institution’s fiscal challenges. In November, about 40% of faculty voted no confidence in Dr. McCoy, and earlier this year, DePauw laid off 57 staff members through mandatory buyouts and offered voluntary buyouts to 100 faculty. Between 2009 and 2018, the number of entering freshmen fell 21% from 717 to 564 . . . and in news that may have precipitated the leadership transition, only 445 first-year students had committed to DePauw for Fall 2019 by the May 1, representing a one-year nosedive of 20 percent.

● Indiana University’s Office of Enrollment Management is launching a new College Advising Corps initiative that will place recent graduates from IU Bloomington in school districts to help students explore the entire range of post-secondary options.

IN Tuition . . .

● Vincennes University proposes a tuition hike that averages $172 for 2019-2020 and $176 for 2020-2021.

- Purdue University proposes a 1.65% per year tuition increase for Purdue Fort Wayne and Purdue Northwest and once again seeks no tuition increase for the West Lafayette campus.

- Ivy Tech Community College proposes a tuition increase of 3.1% per year. That comes out to an additional $4.40 per credit hour for 2019-2020, and an increase of $4.54 per credit hour for 2020-2021.

IN Enrollments . . .

- Wabash College is anticipating a slightly smaller-than-predicted freshman class. The number of applications, admitted students, and campus visits was on par with the prior year . . . but the College's yield rate fell, particularly for low-income and international students. Still, the class is stronger academically than last year, and net tuition revenue per student is higher.

IN Administration . . .

- The Indiana State University Board of Trustees approves a change in admissions policy that makes the submission of college-readiness test scores optional beginning with the 2021-2022 academic year. The change was recommended by the administration and approved by the Faculty Senate. The SAT or ACT will still be required for certain merit-based scholarships and for students seeking advanced placement in English and math courses. Applicants with a high school GPA below 2.5 will also be required to submit SAT and ACT scores. Test-optional admissions criteria "are increasingly the standard" for institutions of similar size and mission as Indiana State, says Provost Mike Licari.

- IUPUI faculty members Tandra Jackson and Annela Teemant submitted the winning proposal to provide Cultural Competency Training & Support Services to Hoosier Educators on behalf of the Indiana Department of Education. The estimated two-year contract value is $498,236. Proposals were also received from Cultural Intelligence Center; Public Consulting Group, Inc.; Solution Tree, Inc.; and Waterhorse, LLC.

IN Programs & Policy . . .

- The Goshen College education department receives a grant from the Community Foundation of Elkhart County that will be used, in part, to provide a signing bonus to students once they graduate from the GC teacher education program and begin teaching at a school located in Elkhart County.

- The University of Indianapolis announces The Gene and Joanne Sease Institute, which will focus on promoting workforce development solutions through original research, conferences, publications, public opinion data, and economic analysis. The institute is named in honor of Gene Sease, 86, president and chancellor of the University from 1970 to 1989. The Sease Institute will also generate new certificate experiences in non-credit courses in collaboration with school districts, law enforcement organizations, corporate partners, and hospital systems in Indianapolis. The institute is already creating certificate programs and educational experiences in certified nursing assistant, qualified medication aide, loss prevention, classroom management, community health worker training, health informatics, and data analytics.

- We told you many months ago to watch for this, and now the University of Evansville sells its campus radio frequency to WAY-FM, a non-commercial, contemporary Christian music radio station.

□ The Office of University Relations explains in an e-mail, "This decision did not come lightly. Ultimately it was a strategic decision with the long-term interest of our students as our most important consideration. The traditional radio business has seen a transformation over the last decade and easily accessible apps and streaming services have changed the game," and "UE students will continue to have access to an array of broadcast outlets, such as ESPN3 and the Old National Bank radio network, which provide the full spectrum of experience in preparation for today's multimedia environment. Additionally, WUEV's audio production facilities will be integrated into the multimedia resources that UE currently has for students to develop skills that will prepare them for the current digital media environment."

IN Gifts and Fundraising . . .

- In lieu of former Indiana University men's basketball coach Bob Knight, who backed out because of health issues, Saint Joseph's College announces former Purdue University men's basketball coach Gene Keady as the special honoree at the annual Purple Tie Dinner on July 27 at the Fair Oaks Farmhouse. Ticket go on sale on or around June 1.

- DePauw University receives $2 million in gifts from two couples to advance a first-year housing master plan for DePauw's South Quad and support construction of a new first-year residential quad. The lead alumni donors are Jeff Harmening, chairman and CEO of General Mills, and DePauw board member Doug Smith, CEO of Miller and Smith, one of the largest privately held residential land development and homebuilding companies in metropolitan Washington, D.C.

□ The first hall will provide 152 student beds, most of them in double rooms. The first floor of the four-story, 60,400 square-foot building will feature community-living space - the entry, a lounge, a kitchen and the like - and the top three floors will contain students' rooms. Construction of the first hall is expected to be completed in Summer 2020.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- Saint Joseph's College of Marian University Indianapolis held a ribbon-cutting ceremony May 14 for Saint Joseph Hall, the home of Marian University's new two-year college, Saint Joseph Indy.

- The Vincennes University Board of Trustees Finance Committee approves contributing $2 million to the City of Vincennes for a $5 million levee project designed to replace seepage relief wells that are 60 to 70 years old.

- Ball State University issued $83,650,000 in student fee bonds on May 8 for the construction and equipping of the Foundational Sciences Building and the refunding of $9.07 million of Series N Student Fee Bonds originally issued in 2008. Piper Jaffray served as lead manager, while Stifel and Backstrom McCarley Berry & Co. served as co-managers. Construction will begin this Summer and is to be completed by Fall 2021.

IN Government . . .

- U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) introduces the “Respond, Innovate, Succeed, and Empower (RISE) Act” to ease the transition to college for students with disabilities. The legislation would amend the Higher Education Act and clarify that students with previous documentation of a disability would be able to continue using that documentation as proof when they transition to higher education so that they do not need to spend time and money to go through unnecessary new diagnostic testing. The RISE Act would also make school policies and data more transparent for students and families so they can make informed decisions on the college that best fits their needs. The legislation would provide additional support for technical assistance to colleges and universities to better serve people with disabilities.

IN Transition . . .

- Katherine Kent becomes acting chancellor for the South Bend-Elkhart campus of Ivy Tech Community College. Kent currently serves as vice chancellor of academic affairs.

- Michael P. Raters is stepping down as dean of students at Wabash College after 11 years.

- Angela M. Salas, currently associate vice chancellor for academic affairs at Indiana University Southeast, has been selected as provost at Framingham State University. She will start her new position June 10.

- The Saint Joseph’s College Board of Trustees names Michelle Meadows, most recently director of the Gary Area Career Center, as vice president of career and technical education, an indication that CTE will be a key element of the institution’s revival. She’ll initiate new programming that results in industry recognized certifications and credentials.

- Alexis S. Montevirgen, the current vice chancellor for student affairs and enrollment management at Indiana University Northwest, is expected to be named the next president of Los Angeles Pierce College.

- The University of Southern Indiana has named Catherine Carey as dean of the Romain College of Business. Carey leads the Gordon Ford College of Business at Western Kentucky University. She will succeed Mohammed Khayum, who served as the business college dean for 12 years before being named USI provost in 2018.

- Hilary Kahn has been selected as associate vice chancellor for international affairs at IUPUI and associate vice president for international affairs at Indiana University. She currently serves as assistant dean for international education and global initiatives and as director of the Center for the Study of Global Change in the Hamilton Lugar School of Global and International Studies at IU Bloomington.

- University of Wyoming Vice President for Finance and Administration Neil Theobald has been chosen to serve a year-one appointment as the university’s acting president. Dr. Theobald is the former chief financial officer for Indiana University from 2007-2012 and was the president of Temple University from 2012-2016.

- Two members of the University of Notre Dame Board of Trustees have been elected Fellows. The 12 Fellows – six lay men and women and six priests of the Congregation of Holy Cross – are the University’s ultimate governing body.

- Sara Martinez Tucker is a former U.S. undersecretary of education and past chief executive officer of the National Math and Science Initiative. Shayla Keough Rumely is an attorney and the daughter of prominent donor Don Keough, the former president of Coca Cola.

- John J. Brennan is re-elected to a second three-year term as chair of the University of Notre Dame Board of Trustees.

- With Scott College of Business Dean Brien Smith leaving to become provost at Youngstown State University, Jack Maynard will serve as interim dean of Indiana State University’s college of business. Maynard has previously served ISU as provost, interim president, and dean of the College of Education.

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

- Indiana University Maurer School of Law associate professor Ian Samuel announces on Twitter that he has resigned following the conclusion of a university investigation into a Title IX complaint filed against him last year. The young Samuel (he graduated law school in 2008) was well-known nationally because of his strong presence on popular legal academic social media. The former Supreme Court (Scalia) clerk had been on leave from IU since the Fall, and had come to IU from a teaching post at Harvard.

- Samuel chose to forgo any procedural appeals “that might (though I doubt it) preserve my job,” he said in the statement. We told you last year that his alleged misconduct had rocked the world of legal academia because Samuel had previously exposed how big law firms force their summer associates (current law school students) to sign mandatory agreements to arbitrate sexual harassment claims, a disclosure that the popular Above the Law blog notes triggered an onslaught of student protests and boycotts, threats and condemnation from law school officials, and “an industry-wide look at how forced arbitration is used at law firms that is still ongoing.”

Tanoos - Turpin common thread

Defense invokes Gov. "Oh, Danny boy, the pipes, the pipes are calling"

Spoiler alert! There's a particularly interesting - and some might even suggest brazen - item tucked away in an appellate motion filed by the top legal defense duo of Jim Voyles and Jennifer Lukemeyer on behalf of their client, Danny Tanoos, a former Vigo County School Corporation superintendent, Tanoos v. State, No. 19A-CR-01086. But the entire fact situation, charges, and defense in this case are of interest to anyone in public office, so it bears some background and detail on other elements of the action.

Following a federal investigation (the case was eventually turned over to state prosecutors) Dr. Tanoos was charged in Marion County with three counts of bribery; one count as a Class C Felony, and two Level 5 Felony counts. The State alleges Tanoos accepted, agreed to accept, or solicited property from a school district contractor in exchange for a recommendation of future business with VCSC. Tanoos unsuccessfully moved to dismiss the charges, in part, arguing that the facts stated did not constitute an offense. With the trial court's approval and State consent, he filed a motion with the Court of Appeals seeking an interlocutory appeal.

Tanoos contends that "the case presents a substantial question of law and a unique issue as to Indiana's bribery statute and its application," particularly in light of the ruling by the Supreme Court of the United States in McDonnell v. United States, 136 S.Ct. 2355 (2016), and because "immediate determination of the issues presented in the motion to dismiss could prevent a very complex, lengthy, and costly trial."

However, most importantly, Voyles and Lukemeyer challenge the underlying premise of the charges - and case itself, reviving the "retainer bribery" dispute that ensnared then-House Committee on Ways and Means chair Sam Turpin (R) 20 years ago (while the bribery charges were tossed, perjury and false campaign-finance reporting charges stood, and Turpin resigned and entered into a plea agreement).

As counsel for Tanoos explain (some citations omitted), "Indiana does not recognize a 'generalized bribery' theory. Wurster v. State, 708 N.E.2d 587 (Ind. Ct. App. 1999). In Wurster, the defendants were charged with paying money to a house representative with the intent the representative would support or promote legislative items that would result in economic gain to the defendant's company. This case clarified that a prosecution for bribery must rely on an explicit quid pro quo element in order to gain conviction. Wurster demands that the State have proof of a specific quid pro quo and that there be a specific act for which the public official was bribed. Payments to a public official for the hopes of later influencing an unspecified act does not cut the bribery muster. The Court of Appeals in Wurster reversed the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion to dismiss."

In the two decades since that ruling, Indiana lawmakers never even sought to amend the Criminal Code to explicitly authorize prosecutions for "retainer bribery," under which a "Manchurian Candidate" of sorts could accept payment for favorable treatment well in advance of a time (or act) of the payor's choosing.

The new (and national) element emanates from a U.S. Supreme Court ruling three years ago.

OMG! OMB budging ongoing Vincent leaves helm; Johnston moves in

On the heels of the departure of Jason Dudich as state budget director for the CFO post at UIndy, Office of Management and Budget Director Micah Vincent, who has served in key financial and policy positions in three different administrations, will leave his post June 30 to become vice president, strategy+M&A, with The Heritage Group, the multi-generational Fehsenfeld family business in Indianapolis.

Vincent has been credited with moving a big chunk of the state's economic development portfolio from business recruitment by the Indiana Economic Development Corporation to public-private partnerships and leveraging innovative projects and infrastructure plans through the Indiana Finance Authority and the Governor's Office.

Succeeding Vincent will be Cris Johnston, the Governor's deputy chief of staff, who previously served eight years in the Daniels Administration as executive director of the Office of Management and Budget's division of government efficiency and later, as deputy chief of staff. A Wabash alum who earned his MBA from Butler, The Region native was a practice director with KSM Consulting, LLC, was a member of the Indiana Gaming Commission, and served as a deputy state treasurer in the O'Laughlin Administration.

Attorneys for Tanoos assert that the nation's high court, in a multi-faceted gift case involving a governor of Virginia, "recently held that bribery statutes must not be read so broadly that 'nearly anything a public official accepts - from a campaign contribution to lunch - counts as a quid; and nearly anything a public official does - from arranging a meeting to inviting a guest to an event - counts as a quo.' McDonnell v. U.S., 136 S.Ct. 2355, 2372 (2016)(citation omitted)."

Rather, the Tanoos legal team proceeds to elaborate, "A jury must be able to 'determine whether the public official agreed to perform an 'official act' at the time of the quid pro quo.' Id. at 2371 (emphasis added). The term 'official act' must therefore be 'defined with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited,' and 'in a manner that does not encourage arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement.' Id. at 2373 (citations and quotations omitted). Chief Justice Roberts thoroughly dissected the federal bribery statute and specifically the definition of 'official act' and the items on which 'official acts' are taken."

As posed by Voyles and Lukemeyer, "Ultimately the holding in McDonnell was: 'In sum, an 'official act' is a decision or action on a 'question, matter, cause, suit, proceeding or controversy.' The 'question, matter, cause, suit, proceeding or controversy' must involve a formal exercise of governmental power that is similar in nature to a lawsuit before a court, a determination before an agency, or a hearing before a committee. It must be also something specific and focused that is 'pending' or 'may by law be brought before a public official. To qualify as an 'official act,' the public official must make a decision or take an action on that 'question, matter, cause, suit, proceeding or controversy,' or agree to do so.' Id. at 2371, 2372."

Team Tanoos asserts that the facts stated in this case do not constitute an offense. "Not only does the McDonnell Court line up with the Indiana cases prohibiting a generalized bribery theory, McDonnell seems to require a temporal link between the quid and quo both of which clearly are lacking in this case. Nowhere is it pled, or included in the probable cause affidavit, that Tanoos accepted the dinners and tickets in exchange for performing a specific official act or agreeing to perform a specific act. McDonnell demands there be something focused or concrete to effectuate by the public official. In this case, the State's theory runs afoul of McDonnell in that Tanoos's acceptance of dinners or tickets cannot be tied to any specific act. The State merely pleads that Tanoos would make a 'recommendation to award a contract and/or continued business.' It is undisputed that at the time these dinners and tickets were accepted by Tanoos, ESG had no pending bids before VCSC. Nor is it disputed that there was any evidence of possible business on the horizon. These facts, as set out in the information and more fully developed by the probable cause affidavit, are analogous to those in Wurster."

While the Tanoos legal team added in a footnote to its motion that "It is notable that 77 former state attorneys general from States other than Virginia joined as Amici Curiae for McDonnell and his position," none of the then-living six Indiana past or present attorneys general (three Democrats and three Republicans) signed on that referenced amici curiae brief.

But here comes the interesting Indiana application.

Voyles and Lukemeyer tell the appellate panel that "Whether this application of the Indiana bribery law should be allowed is a substantial question of law that may not only impact the prosecution of Tanoos but public officials across the State of Indiana."

And you can judge for yourself whether the inclusion of the following is gratuitous, or whether it seeks to force the judges to ponder the broader legal and political implications of the facts in the Tanoos case.

"As recently as May 9, 2019, such issues appear as top news," notes the Tanoos defense team. "For instance, the Indianapolis Star ran a story about Governor Holcomb signing legislation into law effecting the gaming industry. A large benefactor of that legislation is a local company that has provided private plane service to the Governor and contracts and/or collateral business to legislators. Kaitlin Lange, Holcomb Signs Bill Legalizing Sports Betting, Allowing Lucrative Casino Industry Change, Indianapolis Star, May 9, 2019 (online citation omitted). A generalized bribery theory would seem to expose politicians like Governor Holcomb to criminal prosecution for accepting gifts, donations, or money that could be perceived as influencing the receiving public official. McDonnell and Wurster specifically prohibit such prosecutions. The trial court should have granted Tanoos's motion to dismiss because the facts stated do not constitute an offense."

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

- The CD 03 campaign of Jim Banks For Congress, Inc. is the sole Indiana campaign to merit an April contribution ($1,000) from the NRA Political Victory Committee.

- We're hearing that social conservatives statewide are furious with U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) for casting her vote in favor of H.R. 5, the "Equality Act," on May 17. Elsewhere in this issue we detail for you her comments on why she backed the bill (discrimination concerns) and here reservations (sanctity of life concerns), and even one of her Hoosier GOP congressional colleagues, U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R), labeled it "the absolute worst of the radical-left's pro-infanticide, anti-conscience agenda," and disagrees with her about the anti-abortion protections that she sees remaining effective. Suffice it to say that this will bring social conservatives out to work against her, and they comprise probably a larger percentage of the voter bloc in a CD 05 primary than upscale pro-choice moderates, and the social conservatives will be voting for the President in the 2018 primary while some of the Hamilton County GOP crowd may be distracted by the Democratic presidential primary (as they were in 2008) as they look toward a Trump challenger. One name that keeps surfacing as a primary challenger: Former Sen. Mike Delph (R), the former Burton CD 05 district director who is beloved by social conservatives across the state, and still has one of the best Republican rolodexes (that's what we used in the era before cell phone contact lists) in the district. He took to Facebook after the vote to blast the incumbent, who is also attracting general election attention, despite her mega war chest.

State Office Races . . .

- Indiana Economic Development Corporation President Elaine Bedel and her husband, Eric Bedel, contribute $10,000 to the Lieutenant Governor's Friends of Suzanne Crouch committee May 16, the same day that Evansville's Bob Koch adds two $10,000 contributions of his own to the Crouch committee, and Evansville's John Schroeder ponies up $15,000 . . . the day before, the Raytheon Political Action Committee of Arlington, Virginia makes a $10,000 contribution to the Governor's Eric Holcomb for Indiana committee.

IN Legislative Races . . .

● The Indiana Republican Party will convene a caucus to fill the vacancy in HD 93 created by the pending resignation of Rep. David Frizzell (R), effective May 31, 2019. The caucus will be held at 6:30 p.m. on Tuesday, June 4, at the Perry Township Government Center in Indianapolis.

□ Former Orr Administration communications advisor Dollyne Pettingill Sherman (R) has registered an exploratory committee for an HD 93 bid. Dr. Phil Borst (R), a former Indianapolis City-County Council member, and the chair of the Indiana Horse Racing Commission, is her campaign chair. Sherman has been a close campaign advisor to U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) and has honchoed Indiana Society of Chicago annual dinner activities for the past several years. Her husband was an Indianapolis Department of Public Works director in the Ballard Administration.

□ Look for Megan Dugan (R) to also cast her hat into the ring. She was unsuccessful in a caucus bid last November to take over the Indianapolis City-County Council District 23 seat vacated by Scott Kreider (R), and won by Dant Advocacy lobbyist Danielle Coulter (R).

● The U.S. Chamber of Commerce examines nine Republican-led state legislatures which increased their gas taxes since 2016, and finds that in six of those states, including Indiana Republicans have since faced the voters and were overwhelmingly reelected. In Indiana, 86% of Republicans voted for the tax hike – the only state among the nine in which more than 80% of Republicans supported a tax increase – and 92% were re-elected.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

● In West Lafayette, citizen activist Zach Baiele, who runs his own business development, strategy, and relations firm, plans to seek the 241 signatures needed to qualify for the ballot as an independent candidate for mayor. West Lafayette Mayor John Dennis (R) was seeking his fourth term without a general election challenger.

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) has been absent from the city for almost one-half of the days in recent months, reports the South Bend Tribune . . . Morning Consult finds that former vice president Joe Biden (D) is the second choice of 24% of Buttigieg backers, followed by U.S. Sens. Kamala Harris (D-CA) at 17% and Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) at 15% . . . the Sunday, May 19 Fox News town hall event was a big one for Mayor Pete, with 1.1 million viewers and lots of pre- and post-event Butti-Buzz. The hype started before the unfiltered hour-long broadcast, when the President weighed in as part of a tweet-storm, blasting Fox for “wasting airtime on Mayor Pete,” and asserting that “Fox is moving more and more to the losing (wrong) side in covering the Dems. They got dumped from the Democrats boring debates, and they just want in,” he tweeted. At a Monday night Pennsylvania rally, the President asked the crowd rhetorically, “What’s going on with Fox, by the way? What’s going on there? They’re putting more Democrats on than you have Republicans. Something strange is going on at Fox, folks.” The President also knocked host Chris Wallace via tweet for his comments that “‘Mayor Pete has a lot of substance...fascinating biography.’ Gee, he never speaks well of me - I like Mike Wallace better...and Alfred E. Newman will never be President!” At the start of the event, Wallace told viewers, “I’ve gotta tell ya, and you can feel it, this is a hot ticket. More people have shown up for this town hall than any of our previous ones,” and Mayor Buttigieg earned a standing ovation from the Fox studio crowd at the end of the evening – even after knocking a pair of Fox opinion show hosts. Typically reserved Fox News emeritus analyst Brit Hume raved Monday evening that Mayor Pete “may be the most impressive candidate I’ve seen since the emergence of Barack Obama.” Hume also responded directly to the President: “Say this for Buttigieg. He’s willing to be questioned by Chris Wallace, something you haven’t done since you’ve been president. Oh, and covering the Democratic candidates is part of the job of a news channel...” Team Pete media maven Lis

Smith tells CNN’s Brian Stelter that this was the campaign’s second “biggest media moment,” trailing only the CNN town hall that propelled Mayor Pete onto the presidential map.

● U.S. Rep. Eric Swalwell (D-CA) took his nascent presidential campaign to Columbus, his wife’s home town, for a town hall meeting on Sunday, May 19. Some 250 people attended, along with a substantial contingent of Moms Demand Action for Gun Sense in America, and gun violence, health care, and student loan debt consumed the bulk of his remarks, according to the Columbus Republic.

● PoliticalBank, LLC, the Indiana-based venture founded in 2015 by Adam Berry and Frank Short as a non-partisan political ecosystem that connects candidates, their constituents, and the issues, launches a private placement offering through

MicroVentures in accordance with federal crowdfunding regulations. This crowdfunding offering is selling Crowd Notes to raise maximum offering proceeds of $107,000 with a minimum investment of $100. The offerors currently anticipate closing this offering on July 14.

□ PoliticalBank, LLC is seeking growth capital to develop proprietary technology (67.29%), market its platform (14.02%), repay debt (14.02%), and purchase equipment (4.67%).

□ The company generated more than $212,000 in revenue during 2018 and a net loss of roughly $235,000; hosted more than 1,680 candidate profiles; provided revenue-generating services to 190 candidates; and managed more than $100,000 in campaign expenditures for then-House candidate Chuck Goodrich (R). Low 2019 cash on hand has led the company to halt salaries for all employees.

● In a unanimous vote during a Wednesday meeting of the RNC’s Midwest Caucus, Indiana Republican Party Chair Kyle Hupfer was elected to serve on the Republican National Committee’s Budget Committee.

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) partners with U.S. Sen. Gary Peters (D-MI) in the introduction of the "Stop for School Buses Act of 2019," bipartisan legislation that seeks to address such tragedies as occurred last year in Rochester, where a pickup-truck driver struck and killed three young siblings and injured a fourth student while they were boarding a school bus. S. 1254, companion legislation to measure introduced in the House last month by U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R), would mandate a comprehensive evaluation of methods to prevent the dangerous and illegal passing of school buses at loading zones. The National Highway Transportation Safety Administration (NHTSA) would be required to review and report on existing school bus passing laws and current school bus safety technology to prevent illegal passing. NHTSA would be required to conduct a comprehensive review and report to Congress on best practices. "The tragedy that occurred in Rochester is unimaginable, and my heart breaks for the parents of those young children. We cannot allow this to happen ever again," said Sen. Young. "The Stop for School Buses Act will help prevent the illegal passing of school buses and keep our children safe on their way to school" . . . Sen. Young, who had written to the President in January 2018 and spoken with him since expressing concern over the pending 232 tariffs against our key global partners, was pleased with the agreement to end steel and aluminum tariffs against Canada and Mexico. "This is welcome news in Indiana," he said Monday, "and I commend President Trump and Ambassador Lighthizer for working with our Canadian and Mexican partners to reach this necessary agreement. Lifting the steel and aluminum tariffs on Canada and Mexico, and ending the retaliatory tariffs on U.S. products, will provide much needed relief to Indiana's manufacturers and farmers. This agreement will allow the United States to work in close concert with our Mexican and Canadian allies to focus on the fundamental source of aluminum and steel overcapacity: China" . . . in what is becoming an increasingly familiar coalition of bill authors, Sen. Young is joined by Sens Bob Casey (D-PA), Bill Cassidy, M.D. (R-LA), and Maggie Hassan (D-NH) to introduce the "Respond, Innovate, Succeed, and Empower (RISE) Act" to help ease the burden of transitioning to college for students with disabilities. "All Hoosiers deserve a fair shot at success. This legislation takes an important step to simplify the college enrollment process for people with disabilities, which will help more students access higher education and open doors of opportunity," said Sen. Young. The legislation would amend the Higher Education Act and clarify that students with previous documentation of a disability would be able to continue using that documentation as proof when they transition to higher education. This would help ensure students who receive special education or accommodations because of a disability do not need to spend time and money to go through unnecessary new diagnostic testing. The RISE Act would also make school policies and data more transparent for students and families so they can make informed decisions on the college that best fits their needs. The legislation would provide additional support for technical assistance to colleges and universities to better serve people with disabilities . . . the bipartisan legislation cosponsored by Sen. Young to crack down on illegal robocall scams passed the Senate Thursday on an 97-1 vote. The "Telephone Robocall Abuse Criminal Enforcement and Deterrence (TRACED) Act" would afford regulators more time to find scammers, increase civil forfeiture penalties for those who are caught, promote call authentication and blocking adoption, and bring relevant federal agencies and state attorneys general together to address impediments to criminal prosecution of robocallers who intentionally flout laws. The TRACED Act now heads to the House for consideration. "Hoosiers are fed up with the increasing number of robocall scams that are flooding their phones," noted Sen. Young after the vote. "These calls, sometimes reaching 10 a day, are more than just an annoyance, they are a real threat to the vulnerable people they are designed to prey on" . . . Sen. Young and U.S. Sen. Chris Murphy (D-CT), members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, issued a joint statement Thursday, raising continued alarms on the humanitarian crisis in Yemen following reports that the World Food Program (WFP) may be forced to suspend aid deliveries due to illegal diversion by Houthi forces. "We are deeply disturbed by recent reports that the Houthis are diverting desperately needed food aid in Yemen. The Yemeni people already face a collapsed economy, a cholera epidemic, and extremely limited access to food and medicine. Over one million more people now risk starvation if the Houthis do not immediately resume cooperation with the WFP in addition to the over 85,000 children who have died from starvation," said Sens. Young and Murphy. "Congress cannot turn its back on the humanitarian catastrophe and national security threat in Yemen. That includes condemning the Saudi-led coalition's obstruction of aid and bombing of civilians, as well as the Houthis' diversion of aid, torture of detainees, and indiscriminate shelling of civilian areas."

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) adds his voice to those of U.S. Sens. Marco Rubio (R-FL), Ted Cruz (R-TX), and Tom Cotton (R-AR) in condemning what the senators say is the Cuban government's practice of jailing parents who attempt to homeschool their children. The four have introduced a resolution calling for religious freedoms in Cuba. "Parents have a right to teach their children free from state communist indoctrination," says Sen. Braun. "This resolution calls on the Cuban regime to end the shameful practice of jailing parents for enrolling their children in religious education, and expresses American solidarity with Cuban parents who have become political prisoners for something as simple as homeschooling" . . . Sen. Braun takes to Bloomberg TV's Balance of Power Wednesday to explain the importance of the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement passing Congress quickly, adding that Democrats shouldn't play political games with it. "It better be the highest priority here because that is the most important thing. We do more trade with both Canada and Mexico than we do with China, and they are generally friendly in nature," said Sen. Braun. After the show, he tweeted, "#USMCA will be a huge win Hoosiers and all Americans. We can't afford to let this urgent deal be used as a political football in Congress" . . . after he voted against the $19.1 billion emergency supplemental disaster relief bill on Thursday that the President said he supported and agreed to sign, Sen. Braun explained his rationale for being one of only eight votes against it. "In the private sector we budget for rainy days and offset unexpected expenditures with spending cuts, and the same principles should apply to Congress because the current disaster assistance process is just another path for runaway spending on unrelated projects,” said Sen. Braun. “If legislators in Washington actually read this $19.1 billion spending bill, maybe they would share my concern with spending taxpayer funds on pet projects – like provisions for cherry farmers who make over $900,000 a year – instead of dealing with real problems like relief for victims of natural disasters or the humanitarian crisis on our southern border.”

- U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) introduces legislation that would prevent Thrift Savings Plan (TSP) funds from being invested in Chinese and Russian companies. TSP is the principal retirement plan for federal government employees and has a total investing power of over $550 billion. He observes that “The governments of Russia and China have a long history of malicious activity against the United States. If we are to confront the growing threats from these hostile countries, we should not be supporting their economies financially. This common-sense legislation would prevent federal money from entering countries that are actively attempting to undermine our global leadership.” In an era of near-peer competition with China and Russia, he believes the United States must formulate a whole-of-government approach in preventing unnecessary economic support to either nation – and this includes the investment strategies utilized by TSP. The TSP International Stock Index Investment Fund (I-Fund) is designed to diversify investor portfolios to include companies from outside of the U.S. As written, the Thrift Savings Plan is mandated by law to “select an index [for the I-Fund] which is a commonly recognized index comprised of stock the aggregate market value of which is a reasonably complete representation of the international equity markets excluding the United States equity markets.” Currently, based on the chosen index, the Thrift Savings Plan’s I-Fund invests in the economies of allied nations. In November, the Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board changed the I-Fund index to the MSCI ACWI Index, to be enacted in 2020, which allows TSP resources to be invested in adversarial nations, principal among them China and Russia. The Banks bill would add new language to the investment mandate to prevent TSP funds from being invested in China and Russia, and force the Investment Board to reevaluate choice of I-Fund index funds to one of many that are both financial lucrative and do not support threatening economies.

- U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) issued a statement below following the House of Representatives’ passage of the “Equality Act,” legislation that would extend anti-discrimination protections to LGBTQ Americans in employment, education, access to credit, jury service, federal funding, housing and public accommodations. “Congress made historic progress in the ongoing struggle to achieve liberty and justice for all Americans. The Equality Act is a major step in securing fundamental rights and protections that LGBTQ people need and deserve. As a longtime member of the Congressional LGBT Equality Caucus, I am proud to cosponsor this bill and even prouder to vote for it “In a majority of states, members of this community don’t have these explicit protections, meaning they can legally be fired from their job, denied housing, and face a number of other injustices simply because of who they are or who they love. That’s unfair and un-American, plain and simple. The Equality Act helps right this wrong, while also respecting religious exemption laws already on the books.” He called the “advancement ... cause for celebration, but we must keep working to make this bill law, which now heads to the Senate. The crusade to protect civil rights for Hoosiers and all Americans continues, and I’m honored to help lead that effort.”

- U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R), teams up with a fellow former Marine, U.S. Rep. Ruben Gallego (D-AZ), to introduce bipartisan legislation to help American victims of the 1983 Marine Corps barracks terrorist bombing in Beirut satisfy financial judgments against Iran connected to the act of terror. Their measure would amend the Iran Threat Reduction and Syria Human Rights Act of 2012 to allow the families of the bombing victims to execute court judgments on $1.68 billion in Iranian funds currently held by Clearstream S.A., a Luxembourg-based firm.

- U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) was pleased that the Trump Administration unveiled a six-month delay in deciding whether to impose Section 232 tariffs on automobiles and automotive parts. “President Trump’s decision not to impose auto tariffs in the coming days comes as a relief to millions of American workers and families who would bear the cost of a massive tax hike on cars and auto parts,” she said. “I support the President’s goal of ensuring a level playing field for U.S. businesses and workers, but auto tariffs would be devastating to manufacturers in my district and across Indiana that make cars, RVs, auto parts, and more. Moving forward, the administration should make the Section 232 national security investigation report public and should not take any action that would threaten our nation’s strong economic momentum.” Rep. Walorski, a member of the House Committee on Ways and Means, has repeatedly called on the Trump Administration not to put American jobs and economic growth at risk with costly auto tariffs, and earlier this month led a bipartisan group of 159 members of Congress urging National Economic Council Director Larry Kudlow and the President not to impose auto tariffs . . . Rep. Walorski introduces a House resolution recognizing the service and sacrifice of military working dogs and their handlers who served in the U.S. Army’s Tactical Explosive Detection Dog (TEDD) program. H.Con.Res. 43 would also encourage government agencies and military services to prioritize former handlers when a former military working dog becomes available for adoption. “Military working dogs and their handlers have served our country with courage, and we owe them a debt of gratitude for risking their lives to protect our national security and keep our servicemembers safe on the battlefield,” Rep. Walorski said, citing the recent experience of a Culver Army vet reunited with the bomb-sniffing dog who served at his side during a nearly year-long deployment to Afghanistan.

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) was one of only eight House Republicans to vote for H.R.5, the “Equality Act,” on May 17. She explains, “Discrimination of any kind, towards anyone, is wrong and at this time in our nation’s history, we cannot turn a blind eye to the discrimination the LGBTQ community faces. In order to work towards eliminating discrimination throughout our country, whether in the workplace, when purchasing or renting a home, staying in a hotel, at schools, applying for credit or in jury service, we must expand civil rights protections to the LGBTQ community. Including sex, sexual orientation, and gender identity among the prohibited categories of discrimination is a necessary step in order to make our country a safer place to live and work for all Americans. Because I’m aware of the discrimination members of the LGBTQ community face around the country when renting or buying a place to call home, I’ve authored legislation with Rep. Brad Schneider (D-IL) that has been included as a provision in the Equality Act. This provision ensures anyone, regardless of their race, religion, sexual orientation, gender identity, handicap, familial status and national origin is treated fairly and equally under the law as they buy or rent a home.” Rep. Brooks added, “I must acknowledge this bill is not perfectly drafted. I am pro-life and share the sentiment of my pro-life colleagues and constituents that conscience protections need to remain in place for medical providers with religious or moral objections so that they cannot be forced to perform abortions. However, these conscience protections under the Weldon and Hyde amendments in current law are not altered by this bill and will remain in place under current law. As the legislative process moves forward, I will advocate for clarification language that would improve this bill.”

● U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) poses this question to his CD 09 constituents last week: “Do you support President Trump’s efforts to put American companies on a level playing field and pave the way for the new U.S. - Mexico - Canada Agreement?”

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) was the only member of the Hoosier congressional delegation not to vote on H.R.5, the “Equality Act,” on May 17 (the delegation split, 5-3 against it) . . . Dr. Bucshon on Thursday released an outline of the bipartisan “Protecting People from Surprise Medical Bills Act,” forthcoming legislation that will cosponsor to help protect patients from unfair and expensive surprise medical bills, particularly those related to out-of-network treatments. The finalized legislation is expected to be introduced in the coming weeks. “As a physician, I believe it is important that patients are not financially burdened with surprise medical bills for unanticipated out-of-network care,” said Dr. Bucshon. “Instead of picking winners and losers, I support this bipartisan proposal that offers an independent dispute resolution process that is mediated by an arbiter. Access to life saving care is critical for all Americans and it should not come with lifelong penalties.” The measure would ban the practice of billing patients for unanticipated out-of-network care; implement a ‘baseball-style’ arbitration model that identifies a reasonable payment rate when insurers and providers cannot agree on the cost of care; and improve transparency by requiring health plans to clearly identify in-network providers and patients’ deductibles.

IN State Circles . . .

● Those magic words from the Legislative Council Tuesday morning: There will be no technical corrections day for the 2019 session.

□ The Council did, however, assign a long litany of study topics to interim study committees. There were 155 proposed topics this year, and the list was pared down by leadership vote to somewhere between 40 and 50 studies. A topic required the votes of three of the four leaders to be approved.

● Look for a five-day-long late October disciplinary hearing for Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) in front of former Supreme Court justice Myra Selby presiding as a special master. Given the timing for the next major public stage of the proceedings (scores of witness statements need to be taken between now and the hearing and some two-dozen witnesses are expected to testify in the hearing - including legislators and lobbyists, who may be called upon to testify as to their own activities and state of inebriation); the 30 days (think Thanksgiving) the former justice will need to allow both parties for their final responses; the need to formally prepare her findings and assemble the evidentiary record; and the time required for the Supreme Court to review her findings and the underlying evidence, there would likely be about a year left in General Hill’s term by the time a decision is rendered. Look for the special master to render her recommendation based upon whether there is clear and convincing evidence that the Rules of Professional Conduct were violated (though the Supremes can apply their own standards to a final decision).

□ We’ll stand by our expectation that the Court would be willing to avoid potential constitutional issues, administrative confusion, and the need to appoint an acting attorney general for less than a year if it were to believe severe discipline would be merited . . . and instead would broker an agreement under which any appropriate discipline would be meted out effective the day after Hill’s term expires - effectively impinging upon his eligibility for office again, even if no formal agreement were brokered to keep him off the ballot.

● The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency adds the Cliff Drive Groundwater Contamination in Logansport to the Superfund National Priorities List (NPL), which includes the most serious contaminated sites in the country. The Cass County site, at the intersection of Cliff Drive and Ottawa Road, was one of seven new sites nationally added to NPL. EPA uses NPL as a basis for prioritizing contaminated site cleanup funding and enforcement activities. The site, next to the Wabash River, is about 500 feet north of the Logansport Juvenile correctional Facility, and about one-half mile northwest of the Logansport State Hospital.

□ The Cliff Drive Groundwater Contamination site consists of a co-mingled plume of chlorinated substances that has contaminated the untreated groundwater in five municipal wells that supply drinking water to the city of Logansport. The contamination was first discovered in 1994, and the PCE (perchloroethylene) contamination in the municipal wells has remained constant for over 20 years. Untreated water in municipal wells has been contaminated with PCE at concentrations that do not exceed the Safe Drinking Water Act Maximum Contaminant Levels, but the contamination has persisted over the years at a constant level. The contaminated wells provide water to over 18,400 residents, most living in Logansport, Indiana. The water is blended and disinfected before it is distributed to residents. Area residents are hooked up to the municipal water supply distribution systems and use municipal water as their potable supply.

□ Despite several investigations in the area by the Indiana Department of Environmental Management, the origin of the contaminants has not yet been determined. IDEM has identified more than 20 active and former facilities that may have used chlorinated substances and could be contributing to the contamination. The State of Indiana referred the site to the EPA because the site requires further investigation and may require long-term cleanup. Other federal and state cleanup programs were evaluated but are not viable at this time. The EPA received a letter of support for placing this site on the NPL from the state. IDEM told EPA last year that “The state of Indiana remains concerned about the undiscovered source of the contamination that has been constant since 1994, which may present a current or future exposure risk to this community.” There are no EPA or state response actions planned.

● The Air Pollution Control Division issues an emergency rule to temporarily to designate Clark and Floyd counties to nonattainment for the 2015 ozone standard.

● The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency plans a $26 million cleanup beginning yet this month on Lake George Canal in the cities of East Chicago and Hammond. The waterway is part of the Grand Calumet River Area of Concern on Lake Michigan, and has been identified by the United States and Canada as one of 43 “toxic hotspots” in the Great Lakes basin. Great Lakes Restoration Initiative work will be funded through a cost-sharing partnership with the East Chicago Waterway Management District, Atlantic Richfield Company and BP Products North America. Approximately 60,000 cubic yards of contaminated sediment will be dredged from the Lake George Canal. Any material that may remain will be capped and controlled, as needed. EPA anticipates the cleanup will be completed in 2020.

□ The Grand Calumet River flows 13 miles through Gary, East Chicago, and Hammond. The river was designated as an Area of Concern (AOC) under the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of 1987 largely due to legacy pollutants. These types of pollutants were found in sediment both at the bottom of the Grand Calumet River and the Indiana Harbor and Ship Canal. The river is recognized as one of the most contaminated in the nation and consists mostly of drainage from nearby cities and industries. Historical industrial activities such as steelmaking, meatpacking, and oil refining contaminated the river's sediment with heavy metals, polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs), polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs), and oil and grease. The Grand Cal is the only AOC that was originally considered impaired on all 14 beneficial uses under the bi-national Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. So far, two beneficial use impairments (BUIs) – “Restrictions on Drinking Water Consumption, or Taste and Odor Problems” and “Added Costs to Industry or Agriculture” – have been removed. Once the remaining 12 BUIs have been lifted, EPA will work with the state to begin the process of delisting.

● The Naval Facilities Engineering Command, Atlantic is working with residents living near Naval Support Activity Crane to inform them about recent groundwater test results in the area that show traces of PFAS, a compound used in military firefighting foam and associated with adverse health conditions. While the testing has largely showed levels below certain federal levels of concern, the Navy is seeking to ensure that the material has not migrated off the Crane footprint, and is offering to test local private drinking water wells.

● The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit held oral argument Tuesday in Common Cause Indiana, et al., v. Marion Co. Election Bd, et al., No. 18-2735. This is the litigation over a July 2018 consent agreement entered into by the Marion County Election Board with Common Cause and the NAACP to offer additional satellite early voting sites. After the agreement was reached, Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) intervened to block the deal, asserting that it violated state law and was contrary to the public interest given, in part, that the plaintiffs failed to show that the failure of election officials to offer additional early voting options caused unequal voting opportunities for minorities in violation of the First and 14th amendments – that no ruling was ever made on the merits. Much of the dispute focused upon whether the consent decree should be declared moot on the merits or moot because it was moot. Judges Joel Flaum, Diane Sykes, and Michael Kanne heard less than 12 minutes of oral argument on the matter, as Judge Sykes suggested the underlying controversy was not moot. The original plaintiffs argued that there was no collusion.

● The State of Indiana is a party to a settlement agreement with Sephora USA Inc. to resolve allegations that it failed to collect certain taxes on internet sales in violation of the state's False Claims Act. The claims involve shipments to Indiana from February 2010 through March 2019, well before the new state law on online sales tax was enacted. What's interesting about this settlement is that it arises from a claim made by the Chicago law firm of Stephen B. Diamond P.C. in 2016 against Sephora, in which the (Zoeller Administration) Office of the Attorney General declined to become involved, and Stephen B. Diamond P.C., represented by Plews Shadley Racher & Braun LLP, prosecuted the action on behalf of the State under the False Claims Act.

□ Sephora allegedly failed to pay use tax on shipping, handling, and freight charges for internet sales of goods shipped to Indiana consumers. While it disputes the amount sought, Sephora, potentially subject to treble damages and at least $5,000 per violation, opted to settle, and the State consented to dismissal of the litigation.

□ Under the terms of the settlement agreement, State ex rel. Stephen B. Diamond P.C. v. Sephora USA, Inc., No. 49D13-1602-PL004602, Sephora will pay $68,293 to Stephen B. Diamond P.C., which raised the initial concerns regarding alleged false claims conduct, and another $157,358 in attorney's fees and costs to Plews Shadley. The State pockets $159,349.

□ “My office works tirelessly on behalf of Hoosier taxpayers to root out fraud against the government and recover taxpayer monies,” Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) said in a news release. “Settlements such as this one send a message to all business entities that we will hold them accountable for following the law and being truthful.” OAG reports that This investigation and settlement resulted from the coordinated efforts of the Litigation Division of the Office of the Attorney General. As best as we can tell from the Marion County court docket, the State's role was largely just in signing off on the deal under law. “In September 2018, the parties reached an agreement in principal to settle this case and agreed on the terms of a settlement agreement. That draft was forwarded to the Indiana Attorney General's Office for the State to review. The State has returned the draft with its changes and the parties are reviewing the revised draft,” read a February status update submitted to Marion County Superior Court 13 Judge James Joven.

- Purdue University tax guru Dr. Larry DeBoer tweets that “K-12 appropriations have grown 3.9% above inflation from 2012-2021. That’s just a smidge higher than the general state revenue increase over the same time period.”

- In City of Gary v. Smith & Wesson Corp., et al., No. 18-A-CT-181, a unanimous Court of Appeals panel allows the City of Gary’s liability lawsuit against 10 handgun manufacturers to proceed, even in light of the 2015 amendment to the State’s Immunity Statute which seemingly barred the action. In a 33-page ruling authored by Judge Terry Crone and concurred in by judges Ted Najam and Rudy Pyle, the court allowed the action to continue despite finding that “the City has failed to establish that the Amendment is unconstitutional.”

□ The panel rules that Gary’s lawsuit is not an unlawful attempt to regulate firearms; the Immunity Statute does not bar all of its claims; the manufacturers are not entitled to attorney’s fees and costs; and it reaffirms its prior holding that the federal Protection of Lawful Commerce in Arms Act (PLCAA) does not bar the City’s claims. The panel affirms in part, reverses in part, and remands the matter to the Lake County Superior Court for further proceedings on claims for public nuisance and negligence in distribution of firearms (but not on its claim of negligent design).

- Hoosier legislative leaders (specifically House Speaker Brian Bosma (R), House Committee on Public Policy Chair Ben Smaltz (R), and former Senate president pro tem David Long (R)) stood firm against Hoosiers for Life and their often over-the-top crusade for “the protection of innocent human life from conception to natural death” that even provoked a backlash from Indiana Right to Life, will leaders be able to resist H4L (and Rep. Curt Nisly (R)) going forward after other states have so publicly enacted “fetal heartbeat” legislation in recent weeks – since Hoosier lawmakers adjourned sine die?

□ And will the fate of pending lawsuits filed by the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana have any bearing on the General Assembly taking the next step just before the 2020 primaries – in which social conservative groups have pledged to battle the Governor – and legislators who have differed with the groups on bias crimes legislation?

- The Supreme Court of the United States emerges from its May 16 conference without a decision on whether the justices will grant a writ of certiorari to the State of Indiana on either Pence-era Indiana abortion case awaiting a decision. The initial Indiana case up for appeal was before the Court for the 14th time for decision on acceptance, more appearances than any other case on the SCOTUS conference docket . . . and the national news media continues to watch the initial Indiana case more closely as other appeals of more extreme laws are likely to emerge and talk suggests this many appearances may be a record. Expect the two Indiana cases to be back on the conference docket on May 23, with dispositions announced on Tuesday, May 28.

□ The State of Indiana filed its petition for cert back in October in Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-483. You know the drill by now: This case involves a challenge to provisions of HEA 1337-2016 that would: (1) require health-care facilities to dispose of fetal remains in the same manner as other human remains, i.e., by burial or cremation; and (2) prohibit abortions motivated solely by the race, sex, or disability of the fetus and require physicians to inform patients of the prohibition.

□ Joined on the May 16 conference list: Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-1019, the appeal of a constitutional challenge to the requirement of ultrasound as part of informed consent at least 18 hours before an abortion. There had been some speculation that the Court had been waiting for this case to pop up on the conference list before joining the Indiana challenges and considering them together. With the spate of recent laws in other states seeking to reverse Roe v. Wade, joinder and decision of these less “radical” laws could offer SCOTUS a way to uphold or set limits on Roe instead of overturning it.

□ “AG Curtis Hill defends ban on abortions in which living fetuses are ripped from womb piece by piece” is the headline on a news release last week announcing that the State of Indiana has filed its response to the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana in Bernard, M.D., v. Indiv. Members of the Indiana Medical Licensing Bd., et al., No. 1:19-cv-1660-SEB-DML. General Hill defends HEA 1211-2019, a law banning dismemberment abortions (which those who support availability of the second trimester procedure label by the medical term “dilation & evacuation”; the nomenclature debate is similar to the war of words some two decades ago between “partial-birth abortions” and late-term abortions). The State’s filing is in response to an ACLU motion for a preliminary injunction against the law that would prevent it from going into effect July 1 as planned. ACLU is representing a physician at IU Health Methodist and Eskenazi hospitals in Indianapolis, who performs abortions using the procedure to be banned.

□ The State’s response begins by explaining, “The State of Indiana seeks to ban a single specific abortion procedure – one that entails ripping a live fetus limb-from-limb from the mother’s womb. The State has determined that this ‘brutal and inhumane procedure’ will ‘coarsen society to . . . vulnerable and innocent human life,’ and the Constitution permits the State to prohibit the procedure in light of this judgment.” In its release about the law, Hill’s office explains that under this procedure, “physicians use forceps to rip live fetuses piece by piece from their mothers’ wombs. As they are being dismembered, the fetuses bleed to death.”

□ OAG, in a submission by Solicitor General Tom Fisher, sets forth the following in its memo in support of denying the preliminary injunction: The dismemberment ban does not impose an undue burden on a woman’s right to decide whether or not to bear a child, and the ban “does not violate a woman’s right to bodily integrity.” The State’s filing asserts that the State has a compelling interest in “protecting the value and dignity of fetal life by banning a brutal and inhumane procedure; rulings by the Supreme Court of the United States allow bans of specific procedures as long as safe alternatives remain available and evidence demonstrates that there are safe alternatives to dismemberment abortion. The State also contends that the ban” will not impose an undue burden on a large fraction of women between 16 and 20 weeks’ gestation.” OAG’s bottom line: the plaintiff has not demonstrated irreparable harm and public policy and the balance of equities favor the State.

□ On the same day as AG Hill released his statement about the latest abortion law defense, the Democratic Attorney Generals Association sent a fundraising email nationally seeking first-time contributions “to support Democratic AGs in their fight against Trump and Republicans who are waging a war on women,” noting that “Trump and the GOP have repeatedly tried to defund Planned Parenthood and other healthcare providers and to restrict access to abortion for women across the country. And in Republican controlled states, we're seeing a flood of radical abortion bans that seek to overturn Roe v. Wade That's why Democratic AGs are so important. Since Trump took office, they have taken non-stop action to protect access to abortion, contraception, and funding for family planning clinics like Planned Parenthood. And they're winning. Simply put, no other elected officials in the country have had more success stopping Trump and Republican attacks on women's health than Democratic AGs. When Trump came after access to birth control, Democratic AGs across the country sued and won injunctions to preserve access to contraception nationwide. When Trump came after funding for healthcare providers like Planned Parenthood, Democratic AGs again sued and won more injunctions to continue funding for healthcare centers and education. And when Kentucky moved to restrict abortion access, a coalition of Dem AGs came together to protect women's rights."

□ The missive concludes, "There are more than a dozen AG races at stake in 2019 and 2020, and the outcome could determine whether we will be able to stop the next Republican attack on women's rights and abortion."

● R-CALF USA (Ranchers-Cattlemen Action Legal Fund United Stockgrowers of America), files suit in U.S. District Court for the District of Montana seeking to declare the beef checkoff practices in 15 states - including Indiana - as unconstitutional.

□ R-CALF USA, the largest producer-only membership based organization that exclusively represents U.S. cattle and sheep producers on domestic and international trade and marketing issues, contends that in each of the 15 states, the state beef councils are private corporations that have been keeping one-half of all the mandatory beef checkoff assessments collected within their states to fund their private speech. The group challenges this practice on the grounds that the First Amendment prohibits the government from compelling cattle producers and other citizens to subsidize private speech. The remedy to this violation, according to R-CALF USA, is to allow producers in those 15 states to choose whether or not to fund private corporations. If producers choose not to fund their private state councils, their money should go to the government to fund its work on behalf of ranchers, which the Supreme Court has held is constitutional. The lawsuit claims R-CALF USA and its members are injured by the state council's private speech because rather than promote consumption of domestically produced beef, which R-CALF USA believes will benefit its members, the councils promote beef regardless of how or where it was raised. The alleged injury arises because the councils are not accountable to the public, meaning R-CALF USA cannot employ traditional lobbying techniques to advocate for change. Another of the group's objections is that the state beef councils send checkoff money to third-party entities that are likewise not publicly accountable and that use the money to support the consolidation of the cattle and beef industry.

● The Office of the Attorney General's Complex Litigation team, assisted by the law firms of Cohen Milstein Sellers of Washington, D.C. and and Toll PLLC and Zimmerman Reed LLP of Minneapolis, files suit in Marion County Superior Court, Civil Division 13 against members of the Sackler family, alleging that as owners and directors of Purdue Pharma the Sacklers have played a key role in worsening the opioid crisis in Indiana. State v. Sackler, et al., No. 49D13-1905-PL-020498.

□ Cohen Milstein describes itself as "a pioneer in plaintiff class action lawsuits on behalf of victims of corporate abuses," while Zimmerman Reed calls itself "a firm committed to being the voice of people injured by fraud, negligence or other illegal conduct." Purdue Pharma is best known for manufacturing and marketing the painkiller OxyContin. In November, the State filed a lawsuit against Purdue Pharma, alleging the company intentionally understated the health risks of long-term opioid use and deceptively marketed several drugs in ways that violated Indiana law. That matter remains pending in Marion County Superior Court. In last week's lawsuit, the State of Indiana, following the lead of some other states, alleges that members of the Sackler family directed, approved of, and participated in their company's "destructive" strategies. The lawsuit further alleges that the Sacklers enriched themselves to the tune of billions of dollars from these schemes. In fact, according to the Office of the Attorney General, the Sacklers instructed Purdue Pharma to distribute approximately $4.3 billion to the Sackler family from April 2008 until 2016 alone." The State alleges that certain members of the Sackler family - who individually served as Purdue Pharma's CEO, vice presidents and/or board directors - violated the Deceptive Consumer Sales Act, the Prescription Drug Discount and Benefit Card Statute, the False Claims Act and the Medicaid False Claims Act, among other unlawful activities. The lawsuit seeks civil penalties, treble damages, disgorgement of ill-gotten gains, and restitution of sums constituting unjust enrichment.

□ "We believe the Sacklers' wrongful acts have left a wake of addiction, death and devastation in Indiana and across the country," Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) said. "The Sackler family and Purdue Pharma bear substantial responsibility for causing this crisis. Now they must bear substantial responsibility to help fix it." He adds, "I hope this lawsuit serves notice to all that this office will continue to hold accountable companies and individuals who are engaging in abusive, deceptive, illegal and/or unfair conduct that causes harm to Indiana consumers."

● Look for the State Ethics Commission to propose a rules package that would amend 40 IAC 2-2-1 regarding Commission procedures; amend 40 IAC 2-2-2 regarding reconsideration or clarification of formal advisory opinions; amend 40 IAC 2-2-4 regarding advisory opinions signed by the director; amend 40 IAC 2-2-5 regarding others providing information; amend 40 IAC 2-2-6 regarding the public record; amend 40 IAC 2-3-1 regarding applicable statutes and rules; add 40 IAC 2-3-1.5 to include new definitions; add 40 IAC 2-3-2.3 regarding investigations; add 40 IAC 2-3-2.5 regarding complaints filed by the inspector general; amends 40 IAC 2-3-3 regarding agreed settlements; adds 40 IAC 2-3-4.1 regarding public hearings; add 40 IAC 2-4.5 regarding fines; and amend 40 IAC 2-5-4 regarding certification of documents and records.

□ A series of policy and procedural provisions would also be repealed.

● The Indiana Department of Transportation updates its Conflict of Interest Policy, and the new policy does not allow consultants that performed design work to serve as prime consultant for inspection, and does not allow these consultants to provide the Project Engineer/Supervisor services. Design firms, however, could perform in any subconsultant capacity subservient to the prime consultant and to the Project Engineer/Supervisor.

□ INDOT clarifies Monday in response to an inquiry that the updated policy applies to Local Public Agency (LPA) program projects “except when indicated otherwise in the specific details. The construction inspection policy change was on a detail statement only applicable to INDOT sponsored projects.”

● We’re hearing that an embarrassment of riches is posing problems for some local road projects. Talk around the state is that some local government units are asking the Indiana Department of Transportation to hold off on funding some local projects from the big bucket ’o bucks generated by the Next Level Roads program because so much highway and infrastructure work is taking place now that contractors are telling them they can’t handle all the work because they don’t have enough workers and equipment.

□ Another problem: Short-term infrastructure issues popping up that require immediate responses, including road and roadside slides in southeastern Indiana, and a major I-265 sinkhole that required closure of several miles of all eastbound lanes in Floyd County at mid-week.

□ We’re also hearing, however, that with projects not just a one-time, short-term phenomenon, contractors are looking to invest in equipment, hiring, and training to bolster their resources going forward.

● On the same day that Carmel Mayor Jim Brainard (R) offered insights at a sustainable living seminar in Carmel from his travels to international climate conferences . . . and the same day that the Purdue Climate Change Research Center’s statewide effort that puts global change into local perspective, helping Hoosiers understand the risks of a changing climate so they can make better decisions for the future rolled out a new set of resources including county-level climate summaries, and made available in one place eight recent Indiana climate change reports, Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) revealed that he led a coalition of 18 Republican attorneys general in filing an amicus brief in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit arguing that the cities of San Francisco and Oakland should not be able to use the common law of “public nuisance” to force five fossil fuel companies to pay for the harms the cities say the companies created by contributing to global climate change. City of Oakland, et al., v. BP p.l.c., et al., No. 18-16663.

□ General Hill urged the appellate court to dismiss the lawsuit filed by the State of California on behalf of the two cities against the five named companies. “The justiciability of climate change lawsuits is an issue of extraordinary importance to the Amici States,” begins the brief authored by Solicitor General Tom Fisher. “Adjudication of claims to abate harms allegedly produced by global climate change would disrupt carefully calibrated state-federal regulatory schemes devised by politically accountable officials. Courts should not use public nuisance theories to confound state and federal political branches’ legislative and administrative processes. Courts should not be in the business of establishing emissions policy (or, as is more likely, multiple conflicting emissions policies) on a piecemeal, ad hoc, case-by-case basis under the aegis of common law.” Fisher explains, “States have an especially strong interest in this case because the list of potential defendants is limitless. Plaintiffs’ theory involves nothing more specific than promoting fossil fuels. As utility owners, power plant operators, and significant users of fossil fuels, States and their political subdivisions themselves may be future defendants in similar actions.”

□ “The issues surrounding climate change and its effects – and the proper balance of regulatory and commercial activity – present political questions that cannot be resolved by judicial decree,” General Hill said. “Indeed, were the court to intervene here it would trample Congress’s carefully calibrated process of cooperative federalism, in which states work in tandem with the EPA to administer the federal Clean Air Act.” He adds, “States have an especially strong interest in this case because the list of potential defendants is limitless. As utility owners, power plant operators, and significant users of fossil fuels, states and their political subdivisions themselves may be future defendants in similar actions. Our amicus brief should send a loud message that the rest of the nation will not stand idle while California tries to become its own regulatory empire.”

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) and Arkansas Attorney General Leslie Rutledge (R-AR) co-lead a coalition of Republican attorneys general from 12 states (six of whom are on the nine-member executive committee of the Republican Attorneys General Association) supporting the rescission of a 2017 Consumer Financial Protection Bureau rule governing small, short-term loans and replacing it with a proposed regulation that they contend would return consumer protection to the states and recognize state attorneys generals as the frontline consumer defenders. They assert that the 2017 rule, drafted under the Obama Administration, improperly sought to cut the states out of the consumer-protection picture, and that this one-size-fits-all approach to short-term lending hurt consumer freedom to choose which financial products best serve their own individual interests. In the letter, the attorneys general write, “The proposed rule respects the states’ role in maximizing consumers’ welfare by ensuring both that consumers are protected from illegal practices and that they have access to credit” on fair terms.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) is not among a bipartisan coalition of 38 state and territorial attorneys general signing a letter under the auspices of the National Association of Attorneys General urging congressional leaders to pass the federal Secure and Fair Enforcement (SAFE) Banking Act to afford licensed cannabis businesses access to the federal banking system. The attorneys general argue that under existing law, federal regulators are forcing legal businesses to operate as cash-only operations, which poses serious safety threats, creating targets for violent and white-collar crime. They also explain that law enforcement is less able to track potential financial crimes, and it is more difficult for businesses to pay – and for the state to collect – tax deposits.”

□ Those AGs who did sign the letter – including those from each of our neighboring states – explain that they “recognize that the states, territories and federal government share a strong interest in protecting public safety and bringing grey market financial activities into the regulated banking sector. To address these goals, we urge Congress to advance legislation that would allow states and territories that have legalized certain use of marijuana to bring that commerce into the banking system Our banking system must be flexible enough to address the needs of businesses in the various states and territories, with state and territorial input, while protecting the interests of the federal government. This includes a banking system for marijuana-related businesses that is both responsive and effective in meeting the demands of our economy.” The AGs contend that allowing banks the requested safe harbor would promote a flow of billions of dollars into the banking industry and help state and federal regulatory authorities to be more effective in their roles in monitoring and taxing marijuana businesses.

□ General Hill was also not a signor of a similar January 2018 letter sent by a bipartisan coalition of 18 AGs to congressional leaders urging them to enact such legislation.

IN the Economy

● How well-prepared is Indiana to weather a recession? Moody's evaluates all 50 states on four fiscal and credit variables to determine the likelihood a state will be able to effectively weather a moderate recession without significant adverse credit impact, and doesn't find Indiana in particularly good shape. Indiana is one of 26 states that only rates in the "moderately prepared" category overall and in each individual category, including revenue volatility (25% weight); coverage by budgetary reserves and rainy day funds (25%); pension liability risk (20%); and financial flexibility (30%). Indiana is joined in the "moderately prepared" category by our neighbors to the north in Michigan and south in Kentucky, while Illinois is one of only two states that fares "weaker in recession preparedness," and Ohio grades out in the "strongly prepared" classification.

● The April unemployment rate in Indiana remains unchanged from March at 3.6% unemployment. The rate in Indiana has only fluctuated by one-tenth of a percentage point since August 2018. The current rate is 0.4 percentage points higher than the 2018 low of 3.2% that lasted from February through May of that year. This extends the longest period of no improvement in unemployment on record in the state. Sixteen months have now passed since the Indiana unemployment rate has decreased, dating back to November to December 2017.

□ With the exception of one month when it was equal (in October 2014, at a hefty 5.7%), Indiana's rate held below the U.S. rate for 5½ years – until April 2019. Indiana's April rate failed to trail the national average for the first time in a remarkable 66 months, with both the Indiana and national rates tied at 3.6% in April as the national average was down from the previous month's rate of 3.8 percent. Indiana remains ranked 23rd for lowest unemployment in the country for the second month in a row.

Monthly Unemployment Rates, Indiana vs. Neighbors

	04/19	04/18	03/19	02/19	01/19	12/18	Monthly	Annual
Indiana	3.6%	3.2%	3.6%	3.5%	3.5%	3.5%	0.0%	0.4%
Illinois	4.4%	4.3%	4.4%	4.3%	4.3%	4.3%	0.0%	0.1%
Kentucky	4.0%	4.4%	4.0%	4.1%	4.2%	4.3%	0.0%	(- 0.4%)
Michigan	4.1%	4.3%	4.0%	4.0%	4.0%	4.0%	0.1%	(- 0.2%)
Ohio	4.3%	4.6%	4.4%	4.6%	4.7%	4.5%	(- 0.1%)	(- 0.3%)
National	3.6%	3.9%	3.8%	3.8%	4.0%	3.9%	(- 0.2%)	(- 0.3%)

□ Indiana remains unchanged in having the lowest unemployment rate compared to our immediate neighbors, though we have seen a much higher increase in unemployment rates over the last year (rates in all of our surrounding states except Illinois have decreased). Indiana is one of 20 states that saw no changes from March to April. Only six states nationally experienced an increase in unemployment over the last month, and one of them was Michigan. Indiana's unemployment rate remains 7.0 percentage points lower than the 10.6% rate in July 2009, the high point of unemployment experienced in the state during the national financial crisis.

□ While three of our neighboring states have seen their unemployment rates decline since the beginning of 2018, Indiana has seen a growth of 0.3 percentage points, just as it did in March. Since the new administrations respectively took office in Indiana and nationally, our unemployment rate is down by 0.2 percentage points, which continues to be a significantly less impressive decrease than that which any of our neighbors recorded . . . and while we can no longer claim that our rate is at the lowest it had been since 3.1% in December 2000, it does remain lower than that of any of our neighbors for a 32nd consecutive month. The gap between Indiana's April unemployment rate and that of our closest neighbor-state remains at 0.4 percentage points.

Rate of Change in Unemployment Rate

	04/19	01/18	01/17	vs. 01/18	vs. 01/17
Indiana	3.6%	3.3%	3.8%	0.3%	(- 0.2%)
Illinois	4.4%	4.4%	5.2%	0.0%	(- 0.8%)
Kentucky	4.0%	4.3%	5.2%	(- 0.3%)	(- 1.2%)
Michigan	4.1%	4.5%	5.0%	(- 0.4%)	(- 1.1%)
Ohio	4.3%	4.5%	5.2%	(- 0.2%)	(- 0.9%)
National	3.6%	4.1%	4.8%	(- 0.5%)	(- 1.2%)

□ Indiana's total labor force – the number of people who have a job or are actively looking for one – continues to grow (for a 14th successive month), experiencing a net increase of 1,349. The rate of growth continues to be lower than previous months, 5,420 fewer than in March. The Department of Workforce Development attributes the gains to an increase of 2,634 unemployed residents and an increase of 4,135 employed Hoosiers.

□ Indiana's seasonally adjusted total labor force now stands at 3,415,523, up marginally from 3,414,389 in March. Indiana's labor force has grown for 27 consecutive months now, the longest streak in more than a decade. While the state ended 2018 with record employment numbers for the year, the total number of employed Hoosiers in April preliminarily reached 3,292,177, a new record high, topping the previous peak of 3,291,068 for the state set in March. Total private employment exceeded its December 2018 peak by 11,400, now standing at 2,743,500. An estimated 123,346 Hoosiers are currently unemployed and seeking employment, virtually spot-on the 123,321 March number. Since the low point of global financial crisis unemployment in July 2009, private sector employment growth in Indiana (18.0%) has been passed by the U.S. growth rate (18.8%).

□ The state's 65.3% labor force participation rate had improved slightly each month this year until stalling in April, but it remains above the national rate of 62.8% (which fell slightly). Indiana's labor force participation rate has now outperformed the national average for 59 consecutive months.

□ After reaching new heights for the last five months, private sector employment has grown by 36,700 over the year, but fell by 3,600 over March. Losses were primarily driven by decreases in Financial Activities (- 600) and Manufacturing (- 400). Losses were partially offset by gains in the Leisure and Hospitality (1,600) and the Construction (1,100) sectors.

□ Howard County, which had ranked 18th in March unemployment at 4.4%, jumped to the top of the unemployment rate chart at 6.9% for April, well above the 5.1% rates posted by Miami and Vermillion counties – one of the largest disparities we can recall seeing between first and second place. Lake County topped the state at a steady rate of 6.9% in February and March, and dipped to a fourth-place finish at 4.8% in April. Only 13 counties exceeded the 3.6% average state unemployment rate. While only four counties were at or above five percent unemployment in December, 13 counties earned that dubious distinction in January and the same number were in that cohort during February before dropping to 11 in March and back to just three in April, better resembling where we ended 2018. While only 12 counties topped the four percent unemployment rate threshold in December, 37 did so in February, down from 50 in January (and four more were also at precisely 4.0% in both January and February), and 38 were in that category for March. Nine were at 4.0% or below in April, closer to the eight counties that were above 4.0% in November.

□ There were 50 counties below 3.0% unemployment during April compared only six in March, with Bartholomew and Dubois, counties tied for lowest unemployment honors at 2.1%, between than the three-way state tie at 2.8% seen in March. There were 27 counties under the three percent threshold in December after November had seen just 11 counties that fell below. In October, 17 counties did so – but 41 had been south of that mark in September. A majority of counties (52.17%, or 48 counties) trailed 3.0% as recently as April 2018.

● Indiana Farm Bureau recently conducted an online survey of farmer members to gauge how the ongoing trade conflicts and increasing tariffs are impacting their operations. Almost three-quarters (72%) of respondents claim the current trade environment's impact on commodity prices is jeopardizing their farm operation. The INFB survey also sought to understand the level of satisfaction with the current trade climate and the importance of passing the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement. When asked about the current trade situation, 56% of Farm Bureau members who responded said they were not satisfied, and 65% said it was very important that USMCA is ratified.

□ “Farmers’ patience on the trade situation certainly seems to be stretched thin,” says IFB President Randy Kron. “It’s crucial that the administration finalizes and implements the USMCA, and that they continue to work toward additional agreements with Japan, the European Union and other nations. It will take many years to replace the export market that was lost during the trade war with China. Farmers understand the need to take corrective action regarding some of the trade inequities with China and to address the Chinese disregard for intellectual property rights. But if agreements aren’t passed and additional efforts aren’t made, some Indiana farmers will not be able to weather this storm.”

● We’ve mentioned that Hoosier farmers are high on the prospect of hemp as a major Hoosier cash crop thanks to changes in federal and now state law, and the state is also seeing an infusion into the economy from CBD products. We’ve told you about the regional convention about CBD products in Indianapolis a few months ago, and web sites, broadcast media, print publications and billboard companies have benefited from a spate of advertising for CBD retailers. One other benefit: vacant spaces in often-aging strip malls across the state have been filled by retailers of CBD products. Craft 1861, a provider of CBD, was on track to make sports history over the weekend as the first CBD industry sponsor of a major professional team to race at the Indianapolis 500.

□ Lawmakers recognize this boom: a legislative interim study committee will study taxation of CBD oil.

□ But this buzz could prove short-lived as consumers find that they may not be realizing any medicinal benefit; supply becomes so prevalent that prices plummet; or the Food and Drug Administration allows some minimal level of CBD in food and supplements, making the product less novel.

● When the economist for the national economic consulting firm retained by the State Budget Agency to provide guidance for the revenue forecast update last month was asked by State Budget Committee members as to what constituted “red flags” for a coming recession, IHS Markit economist Tom Jackson he indicated a decline in manufacturing (hard goods and vehicle manufacturing in general) as well as “rising gas prices” should be monitored as signals. Well, gas prices at several stations in Indianapolis were at $2.99 per gallon race week, and the Wall Street Journal’s “Real Time Economics” newsletter reported Friday, that the latest surveys on manufacturing- and service-sector activity for the U.S. “plunged in May, suggesting American business confidence is faltering and the economy is decelerating much more than expected. IHS Markit’s U.S. index for manufacturing dropped to the lowest level since September 2009 and the measure for services to the lowest level since March 2016. ‘Worse may be to come, as inflows of new business showed the smallest rise seen this side of the global financial crisis,’ said IHS economist Chris Williamson.”

□ Pay attention. Both canaries in the Hoosier coal mine identified by IHS Markit just last month are now chirping, with the manufacturing data IHS Markit’s own, and Jackson’s own IHS Markit colleagues exhibiting national concern.

● Dressbarn is the latest retailer to fall victim to national trends, closing all of its locations nationally, including 16 throughout Indiana (three in Indianapolis proper) . . . Penske Logistics plans to close its Fort Wayne operations beginning in mid-July, ending 80 jobs after a local trucking contract was terminated . . . NIBCO, Inc. plans to close its Charlestown plastics plant as a result of its sale to another company. The closure will begin in mid-July, and some of the employees may be rehired by the purchaser. . . IN Transition

- Whitney Downard will take over the CNHI State House Bureau when Scott Miley retires at the end of June. Downard is a 2016 graduate of St. Bonaventure University. She has worked for CNHI in Mississippi as a reporter for the Meridian Star since September 2016 and has already been named journalist of the year twice by the Mississippi Associated Press.

- Alicia Kielmovitch leaves her position as senior policy director for the State Board of Education to become chief of staff for the Governor's Workforce Cabinet.

- Expect to hear yet this month about a very familiar face (and voice) moving from one state entity to another to handle media work.

- The incoming slate of officers for the Government Finance Officers Association chosen last week includes Dan Hugel of the Indiana Finance Authority, the state's public finance director, as one of five new at-large selections to GFOA's 18-member executive board.

- Scott Rudd, director of broadband opportunities in the Office of the Lieutenant Governor, is a new appointee to the Federal Communications Commission's newly convened Broadband Deployment Advisory Committee. The panel will address how to best improve broadband infrastructure before a disaster occurs and how to use strategies during and after the response to a disaster to minimize broadband network downtime; how to encourage the deployment of high-speed broadband infrastructure and services to low-income communities; and make job skills training and development opportunities more widely available.

- Legislative Council Subcommittee assignments for 2019:

Audit Subcommittee: Sen. Victoria Spartz (R) - Chair

• Sen. Karen Tallian (D), Reps. Matt Lehman (R) and Greg Porter (D)

Personnel Subcommittee: Sen. Rodric Bray (R) - Chair

• Speaker Brian Bosma (R), Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D), House Democratic Leader Phil GiaQuinta (D)

Space Utilization Subcommittee: Sen. Sue Glick (R) - Chair

• Sen. Karen Tallian (D), Reps. Greg Steuerwald (R) and Mara Candelaria-Reardon (D)

Technology Oversight Subcom.: Sen. Randy Head (R) - Chair

• Sen. Jean Breaux (R), Reps. Todd Huston (R) and Cherrish Pryor (D)

IN the Lobby

- Hobart Hallaway & Quayle Ventures, LLC files a federal lobby registration on behalf of the International Franchise Association to lobby Congress on "Issues related to the Trademark Licensing Protection Act."

- Sextons Creek files a federal lobby registration on behalf of Nuo Therapeutics Inc., a "Biomedical therapies" firm based in Gaithersburg, Maryland, for former Indiana Republican Party chair and Pence Administration policy advisor Jeff Cardwell to lobby on "Medicare/Medicaid approval."

- NiSource, Inc. retains the Washington, D.C. law firm of Wilmer Cutler Pickering Hale and Dorr LLP to lobby Congress on "Issues related to pipeline safety and natural gas transportation and distribution."

- Faegre Baker Daniels Consulting terminates its federal lobby registration on behalf of Collegium Pharmaceutical, Inc.

IN Court

- A few years ago we were first to tell you of the interest by then-new Chief Justice Loretta Rush in establishing a pilot commercial court program. After the Supreme Court enacted the pilot program in 2016 in six counties to help expedite business and commercial litigation and provide litigants with arbiters better qualified to preside over such dockets, it has deemed the experiment a success, and an order makes the Commercial Courts Pilot Project a permanent component of the Hoosier judiciary effective June 1 - the date the pilot was to expire.

□ The order formalizes six permanent commercial courts to be presided over by the current pilot judges:

- Judge Craig Bobay, Allen County Superior Court Civil Division

- Judge Stephen Bowers, Elkhart County Superior Court 2

- Judge Richard D'Amour, Vanderburgh County Superior Court

- Judge Maria Granger, Floyd County Superior Court 3

- Judge John Sedia, Lake County Superior Court

- Judge Heather Welch, Marion Co. Superior Ct. Civil Division 1

□ Under the order, the commercial court judges will select the members of the Indiana Commercial Court Committee, a panel tasked with providing the commercial courts with guidance and comprised of the commercial court judges, litigators, transactional attorneys and in-house counsel representing businesses, other attorneys with commercial experience, a lawmaker, an Indiana Chamber of Commerce representative and a commercial law professor. The panel has been helping guide the judges during the pilot phase and will be made permanent. A rules change from existing pilot rules will also allow the commercial court judges the discretion to appoint a special master without consent of the parties.

AREA MAYORS PAN HOGSETT'S REGIONAL PLAN: Mayor Joe Hogsett's plan to shore up funding for Marion County roads by pooling income tax revenue from a nine-county area has struck a nerve with public officials in other counties, who say the proposal isn't in line with a larger vision they've been forming together. Several area mayors say they've been meeting to discuss regional cooperation—talks that Hogsett has been a part of—but had not signed off on any plan like the one the Indianapolis Democrat proposed (Colombo & Quinn, IBJ). The plan "doesn't reflect the conversations many mayors and town leaders have been having about ways to collaborate and invest in transformative projects," Greenwood Mayor Mark Myers said Thursday morning. And Fishers Mayor Scott Fadness, a strong proponent of regionalism, said the group's discussions have focused on long-term solutions that go "beyond fixing potholes." Fadness said he's "perplexed" by Hogsett's proposal and said it's not consistent with work that's underway by the Central Indiana Conference of Elected Officials. Brownsburg Town Council President Brian Jessen equated Hogsett's proposal to "standing on a street corner with a cup asking for contributions." And Westfield Mayor Andy Cook said he's seeking "a future-focused system in which we all participate in the decision-making versus an Indianapolis-only solution." Still, some observers—including officials at Indy Chamber—say the proposal is an encouraging sign that local mayors are thinking regionally. "This was such a taboo topic. It was a third rail type issue," said Indy Chamber CEO Michael Huber. "These mayors talk very frequently. A decade ago they didn't." Under Hogsett's plan, all nine central Indiana counties—Marion, Hamilton, Madison, Boone, Hendricks, Hancock, Morgan, Johnson and Shelby counties—would send a portion of their future income tax revenue growth to a fund that would be used to issue bonds for infrastructure.

PROF WHO PREDICTED LAST 9 RACES SAYS DEMS SHOULD IMPEACH: An American University professor who has correctly predicted the last nine presidential elections says President Trump will win the 2020 election unless congressional Democrats, "grow a spine," CNN reported (The Hill). Allan Lichtman, a political historian, said Democrats only have a shot at the White House if they begin impeachment proceedings against Trump, calling the decision both "constitutionally" and "politically" right in the wake of special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election. "It's a false dichotomy to say Democrats have a choice between doing what is right and what is constitutional and what is politically right. Impeachment is also politically right," Lichtman told CNN's Brooke Baldwin on Wednesday. Lichtman has developed a system of 13 "key factors" that help determine whether the party in the White House will maintain its hold, according to CNN. The factors range from whether the party has an incumbent president running to the country's short- and long-term economic conditions to foreign policy successes and failures. If the party loses out on six factors or more, he says they will lose the presidency. Lichtman says the Trump administration is down three key factors: Republican losses in the midterms elections, a "lack of foreign policy success" and Trump's "limited appeal to voters," CNN reported. Impeachment would trigger a fourth key — scandal over the proceeding's public nature. "Let's not forget, impeachment is not just a vote in the House," Lichtman said. "It involves public hearings as part of the impeachment inquiry, and, what everyone forgets, a public trial in the Senate in which House prosecutors present evidence, present documents, make opening and closing statements." Lichtman cited scandal as a central factor in former Vice President Al Gore's loss in the 2000 presidential election after President Clinton's impeachment process. "Democrats are fundamentally wrong about the politics of impeachment and their prospects for victory in 2020," Lichtman told CNN's Chris Cillizza on Tuesday.

BUTTIGIEG CONDEMNS TRUMP ON USS MCCAIN: Navy Reserve veteran and Democratic presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg is critical of President Trump's treatment of the USS John McCain during his Memorial Day state visit to Japan (Howey Politics Indiana). "This is not a show. Our military is not a prop. Ships and sailors are not to be toyed with for the benefit of a fragile president's ego," Buttigieg tweeted Thursday. It came after multiple media reports surfaced that the White House sought to hide the USS John McCain during Trump's visit. Trump said he didn't order the snub but said the White House effort was "well meaning." The Wall Street Journal reported that in addition to instructions for the proper landing areas for helicopters and preparation for the USS Wasp — where the president was scheduled to speak—the official issued a third directive: "USS John McCain needs to be out of sight." The White House official wrote, "Please confirm #3 will be satisfied." A tarp was hung over the ship's name ahead of the president's trip, according to photos reviewed by the Journal, and sailors were directed to remove any coverings from the ship that bore its name. After the tarp was taken down, a barge was moved closer to the ship, obscuring its name. Buttigieg served an Afghanistan war zone tour of duty as a Naval Reserve intelligence officer in 2014. U.S. Sen. John McCain was a Navy pilot shot down during the Vietnam War and spent five years in a POW camp. President Trump received a military draft deferment for bone spurs.

TRUMP SLAPS 5% TARIFF ON ALL MEXICAN IMPORTS: In a surprise announcement that could derail a major trade deal, President Donald Trump announced Thursday that he is slapping a 5% tariff on all Mexican imports, effective June 10, to pressure the country to do more to crack down on the surge of Central American migrants trying to cross the U.S. border (AP). He said the percentage will gradually increase — up to 25% — "until the Illegal Immigration problem is remedied." The decision showed the administration going to new lengths, and looking for new levers, to pressure Mexico to take action — even if those risk upending other policy priorities, like the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement, a trade deal that is the cornerstone of Trump's legislative agenda and seen as beneficial to his reelection effort. It also risks further damaging the already strained relationship between the U.S. and Mexico, two countries whose economics are deeply intertwined. Trump made the announcement by tweet after telling reporters earlier Thursday that he was planning "a major statement" that would be his "biggest" so far on the border. The tariffs would then increase by 5 percent on the first day of each month, starting on July 1." The tariffs could hit as high as 25%. An across-the-board tariff on all Mexican goods would exact a serious toll on American consumers and corporations, and is likely to generate significant opposition among businesses (New York Times).

MEXICAN TARIFF COULD BATTER AUTO INDUSTRY: The auto industry is facing a direct hit from President Trump's threatened tariffs on all goods from Mexico, Axios Markets editor Dion Rabouin reports: The industry has already laid off the highest number of employees in nearly a decade, and is attempting to recover from a year in which declining global car sales likely reduced world GDP by 0.2%. The White House followed up Trump's tweet by saying that if the "crisis" at the border isn't resolved, tariffs on Mexican goods will rise by 5 percentage points each month, as high as 25% on Oct. 1. Mexico recently became the No. 1 trading partner with the U.S., and a significant percentage of that trade is completed by auto companies. In addition to impacting consumers and company bottom lines, the tariffs are likely to impact jobs. The economic consequences of Trump's new plan could be swift and severe (Washington Post). If the tariffs damaged the Mexican economy, more of its citizens would try to cross the border to find work in the United States."

TRUMP CHALLENGES PELOSI ON USMCA PACT: The White House plans to trigger a process Thursday that would allow President Trump to submit his new trade deal with Canada and Mexico to Congress within 30 days, three people briefed on the planning said, a direct challenge to House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) who had warned against such a step (Washington Post). The decision to send the draft "Statement of Administrative Action" to Congress would mark a major milestone in President Trump's push to overhaul the 1994 North American Free Trade Agreement, but it heightens tensions with Democrats who have said they need more time to review the deal and work for changes. Pelosi directly cautioned U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer not to send the draft report until Democrats had spent more time working with the White House on the plan. By filing the report with Congress, the White House will signal to Democrats that it does not plan to allow lawmakers to delay the process and will push for a vote soon.

TARIFF WAR CHANGING MANUFACTURING PLANS: When the Trump administration first imposed tariffs on $34 billion in Chinese imports in July, Andy LaFrazia figured it was just another curveball for his company (New York Times). "Everyone was saying: 'Oh, it's a negotiating tactic. It won't last long,'" Mr. LaFrazia recalled. But nearly a year later, the trade war shows no sign of cooling off. So ControlTek, the electronics manufacturer that Mr. LaFrazia runs near Portland, is taking steps to protect itself, a strategic shift that has been repeated in boardrooms and executive suites around the world in recent weeks. ControlTek is rewriting contract language to make it easier to pass the cost of tariffs on to its customers. It is shifting supply chains out of China where possible, and redesigning products to avoid Chinese components where it isn't. And as a tiny player in an enormous global industry, it is discovering that there is only so much it can do. "We're very much at the end of the whip getting thrown around," Mr. LaFrazia said. Despite dire warnings from economists, Mr. Trump's trade war has so far done little to derail the decade-long recovery from the Great Recession. Economic growth has remained strong, and the unemployment rate last month hit a 50-year low. But evidence is mounting that the conflict has taken an economic toll. The Commerce Department said Thursday that trade — both imports and exports — slumped in April, and data released earlier this week showed a sharp slowdown in the manufacturing sector, amplifying a recent trend. The bond market in recent days has been sending signals that the trade war could be a threat to growth in the United States and globally.

NORTH KOREA EXECUTES ENVOY TO U.S. FOLLOWING HANOI SUMMIT: North Korea executed its nuclear envoy to the United States as part of a purge of officials who steered negotiations for a failed summit between leader Kim Jong Un and U.S. President Donald Trump, a South Korean newspaper said on Friday (Reuters). Kim Hyok Chol was executed in March at Mirim Airport in Pyongyang, along with four foreign ministry executives after they were all charged with spying for the United States, the Chosun Ilbo reported, citing an unidentified source with knowledge of the situation. "He was accused of spying for the United States for poorly reporting on the negotiations without properly grasping U.S. intentions," the source was quoted as saying.

HOOSIER FARMERS FACE UNPRECEDENTED WEATHER: In Kendell Culp's corner of northwest Indiana, relentless rain began falling on his farm months ago, saturating the ground his family has nurtured for generations and delaying the start of their planting season by more than a week (Washington Post). It eased up briefly at the end of April, enough time to plant corn on about 350 of his 2,000 acres. Then the rain started falling all over again. "There's just not a lot you can do," he said. "I've never had a yield where I couldn't get my crop planted," Culp said, noting that his father, who is in his 80s, recalled the same. "This is unprecedented, what we're facing." For months now, the Culpes — and many farmers across wide swaths of the Midwest — have rarely seen days dry enough to work, leading to what agricultural experts are calling a historically delayed planting season that could exacerbate the economic and personal anxieties brought on by a multiyear slump in farm prices and the Trump administration's trade war with China, the world's largest soybean buyer. For the past five years, the 18 states that produce the majority of the United States' corn crop had an average of 90 percent of their fields planted by the end of May, according to data released Tuesday by the Agriculture Department. At the same point this year, 58 percent of the corn crop is in the ground. The outlook for soybeans is just as dismal, with 29 percent in the ground compared with 66 percent in years past.

U.S. HAD WETTEST YEAR ON RECORD: There's never been a wetter 12 months than the period that recently ended, reported the National Weather Service, which has been keeping such records for 124 years (CNN). The continental US is also free of severe to exceptional drought for the first time in the two decades the US Drought Monitor has been in business, officials reported. It's all a result of hurricanes, atmospheric rivers and the very wet autumn that unfolded between May 1, 2018, and April 30. The effect fits the broad trend of climate change pushing up US precipitation totals. The continental United States averaged 6 inches of precipitation above average during the one-year period, with 36.2 inches tallied. That blew away the previous record, set in 2015 and 2016, by almost half an inch.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: If you're a U.S. Navy or Marine veteran (i.e. Gov. Holcomb, Sen. Young), you have to wonder what they're really thinking. On Memorial Day in Japan, with President Trump on a state visit, the White House apparently ordered the USS John McCain to be hidden from view. Its proud name honoring three generations of this patriotic Navy family was covered up with a tarp in the harbor and later obscured by a barge. Its sailors were ordered off duty and to lay low. The reason? Apparently to keep our president from having another conspicuous temper tantrum from just seeing the name of a man he despises. Trump denies knowledge of this disgraceful incident, but described the effort as "well-meaning" and is now calling the story "fake news." I keep watching this "show," hoping and praying for an uneventful week or month where the norms we would teach our children and students aren't breached with such ludicrous behavior. - Brian A. Howey

DEFIANT MOORE PUSHES BACK AT TRUMP: A defiant Roy Moore brushed aside Donald Trump's warning not to run for Senate again, telling POLITICO on Wednesday that Alabama voters are capable of deciding for themselves whether he's fit for office (Politico). "The president doesn't control who votes for the United States Senate in Alabama," Moore said in a phone interview. "People in Alabama are smarter than that. They elect the senator from Alabama, not from Washington, D.C." The scandal-plagued former judge said he is "seriously considering" running for Senate again and plans to decide in a "few weeks."

Presidential 2020

BUTTIGIEG HOSTS MAYOR'S NIGHT OUT IN SOUTH BEND: It was not your typical Mayor's Night Out, but these aren't typical times for Pete Buttigieg. During his more than seven years as mayor, before announcing he was exploring a run for president in late January, Buttigieg had tried to host Mayor's Night Out every other month, intended as a way to periodically bring his office to the people rather than requiring them to visit him on the County-City Building's 14th Floor (Parrott, South Bend Tribune). He usually does them in school gymnasiums or city recreational centers, where he sets up a card table and gives anyone with a comment, question or complaint about city business up to five minutes of one-on-one time, usually drawing about 50 people. On Thursday night, about 180 people came to the South Bend Civic Theatre's 200-seat Wilson Theatre for the first Mayor's Night Out in more than four months. "For some reason, attendance has picked up a little bit," Buttigieg quipped to the crowd. Pat Hinkle asked Buttigieg, simply, "Why are the streets so bad?" Buttigieg began his response by saying the state must increase the money it sends cities to maintain roads, but until that happens, he said there are things the city can do to mitigate against northern Indiana's roller coaster freeze-and-thaw cycles as winter turns into spring. Buttigieg thanked the city's common council for approving his administration's request for this year to spend more money on sealing cracks in streets with tar before they grow into potholes.

BUTTIGIEG IN CALIFORNIA THIS WEEKEND: This weekend, Mayor Pete Buttigieg will travel to California for a series of public events (Howey Politics Indiana). On Saturday morning, he will speak at the SEIU California Democratic delegate breakfast. On Saturday afternoon, he will address the California Democratic Party State Convention. On Monday, he will host a meet and greet in the morning and join MSNBC's Hardball Live for a special town hall event at 7:00 PM ET.

WARREN TOWN HALL IN FORT WAYNE NEXT WEDNESDAY: Democratic presidential candidate Elizabeth Warren will make a campaign appearance in Fort Wayne next week – but the venue is already sold out (Francisco, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Cable news network MSNBC on Wednesday night tweeted an image promoting a town hall forum featuring the Massachusetts senator and Chris Hayes, host of the network's "All In" program, scheduled for 8 p.m. Wednesday in Fort Wayne. MSNBC could provide no information on the event Thursday morning, and neither the network nor Warren's campaign responded to emailed questions later in the day. Allen County Democratic Party Chair Misti Meehan confirmed that the event is taking place and said in an email, "I've been helping MSNBC get panelists and work on the location." On Thursday night, the party's Facebook page linked to an announcement of the town hall on the ticketing website Eventbrite, which stated the town hall would be from 7:30 to 9 p.m. at Ceruti's Bergstaff Place, 2020 E. Washington St., and would air live at 8 p.m. But the site also stated that the event was sold out. Bergstaff Place has a capacity for 300 people.

HALEY TO CAMPAIGN FOR ERNST IN IOWA: Nikki Haley is emerging as a fundraiser and surrogate for 2020 Republican Senate candidates, and next month will begin zigzagging across the country to campaign for a trio of GOP senators (Politico). The former South Carolina governor's summer itinerary includes a June 15 stop in Boone, Iowa, where Haley will help Sen. Joni Ernst launch her reelection campaign at Ernst's annual Roast 'n Ride event, where Iowans are slated to grill over 2,000 pounds of pork. "Given its location in a key presidential caucus state, the event is sure to spark murmurs about Haley's own political ambitions, including the prospect of a 2024 presidential bid.

Congress

60% OF EX-MEMBERS GO LOBBY AS BRAUN TAKES AIM: Roughly 60% of recently defeated or retired members of Congress went straight to lobbying firms and other gigs with political influence, according to a report by left-leaning advocacy group Public Citizen published Thursday (Daily Caller). The report examined members of the 115th Congress taking part in the so-called "revolving door of K Street" — lawmakers using their connections to join lobbying firms once they are out of office. The list includes former Indiana Sen. Joe Donnelly. Law mandates ex-House members must wait a year to lobby their former colleagues, while ex-senators must wait two. While there is a waiting period for congressmen, "they often engage in so-called shadow lobbying, participating in activities that might be considered lobbying but declining to register under the Lobbying Disclosure Act (LDA)," according to Open Secrets. "Here's something I don't say often: on this point, I AGREE with [Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez]. Indeed, I have long called for a LIFETIME BAN on former Members of Congress becoming lobbyists. The Swamp would hate it, but perhaps a chance for some bipartisan cooperation?" Republican Texas Sen. Ted Cruz wrote on Twitter Thursday. In the Senate, two Republicans introduced legislation in Feb 28 to permanently ban members of Congress from lobbying Congress once they exit office. Sens. Rick Scott of Florida and Mike Braun of Indiana are the cosponsors of the Banning Lobbying and Safeguarding Trust (BLAST) Act. "Whenever you've got a system that is so ingrained like this one, I'm sure there will be resourceful ways to skirt," Braun told The Daily Caller News Foundation in an interview in March. "If you craft good legislation from the get-go ... you have a way to at least throw something out there as the first barricade." Braun is serving his first term in the Senate after beating former Democratic Indiana Sen. Joe Donnelly in a close race during the 2018 midterm elections. Donnelly is one of the former lawmakers highlighted in Public Citizen's Thursday report for joining lobbying and law powerhouse Akin Gump in April. He's focusing on financial services, defense and health care clients.

SEN. GRASSLEY CONDEMNS MEXICAN TARIFF: U.S. Sen. Chuck Grassley, the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said this Thursday evening (Politico Playbook): "Trade policy and border security are separate issues. This is a misuse of presidential tariff authority and counter to congressional intent. Following through on this threat would seriously jeopardize passage of USMCA, a central campaign pledge of President Trump's and what could be a big victory for the country."

SEN. COCHRAN DIES AT AGE 81: Thad Cochran, a Mississippi Republican who brought Southern gentility to Washington and Washington largesse to the South over nearly four decades in the U.S. Senate, where he was a past chairman of the powerful Appropriations Committee, died May 30 at a nursing home in Oxford, Miss. He was 81 (Washington Post). His death was announced by the office of U.S. Sen. Cindy Hyde-Smith (R-Miss.), who succeeded Mr. Cochran in the Senate after he resigned in April 2018 amid failing health. The cause was renal failure, said his daughter, Kate Cochran. Mr. Cochran spent nearly half a century on Capitol Hill, first as a House member representing a district that included Jackson, Miss., from 1972 to 1978 and later in the Senate. He narrowly defeated an insurgent tea party challenger — in a primary race that drew national headlines for its nastiness — and went on to win his seventh term in 2014.

State

GOVERNOR: MAYOR MEER BACKS HOLCOMB PLAN FOR SOUTH SHORE - When he heard that the state legislature was changing the makeup of the NICTD board, which oversees the South Shore Line, Mayor Ron Meer made a personal call to the governor's office (Mayes, Michigan City News-Dispatch). "Michigan City is at the heart of the South Shore corridor, both the commuter line and the freight line. With the yards here and Double Tracking on the way, I felt it was important for the city to have a voice on the NICTD board," Meer said Wednesday. "I contacted the governor's office to make sure we were properly represented." And though the mayor and governor are from different parties, Holcomb must have paid attention. In announcing the four members – one from each county served by the South Shore – of the new Northern Indiana Commuter Transportation District board, he named Meer as La Porte County's representative. The five-member board will also include Gary Mayor Karen Freeman Wilson, Porter County Commissioner Jeff Good, St. Joseph County Commissioner Andrew Kostielney, and will be chaired by Indiana Department of Transportation Commissioner Joe McGuiness. Meer thinks a smaller board might be a good thing. "In my experience, I have found that smaller boards and commissions are more effective and more able to respond effectively," he said. "This will give the four counties more immediate representation. There were concerns about Michigan City and La Porte County having proper representation, and I felt having the chief executive of Michigan City on the board was critical."

GAMING: SPORTS BETTING COULD BE DELAYED - Hoosiers may have wait a little longer than expected to legally bet on sports (Erdody, IBJ). Indiana Gaming Commission Executive Director Sara Gonso Tait said Thursday that state regulators might not be ready by Sept. 1 to allow sports betting, even though a law approved earlier this year makes it legal beginning on that date. "It is a tall order," Tait said during a meeting of the regulatory body. "And there are many factors outside of our control." Tait said commission members are aiming to have everything in place for a Sept. 1 start date, but "are making no promises." The law, which Gov. Eric Holcomb signed May 8, legalizes sports wagering on professional and college sports such as basketball, football and soccer as of Sept. 1, and implements a 9.5% tax rate on those wagers. Betting on esports or high school and other amateur youth sports is prohibited.

AUTOS: BARRA ANNOUNCES $24M INVESTMENT AT FORT WAYNE GM PLANT - Mary Barra, chairman and CEO of General Motors Co., today announced plans for a $24 million investment in GM's local assembly plant (Slater, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Barra traveled to the facility from corporate headquarters in Detroit to share the news with workers and state and local officials. GM employees have expressed a desire to see top executives more often, according to a spokeswoman. This is the first time in at least a decade that GM's chief executive has visited the local operation, which assembles Chevrolet Silverado and GMC Sierra pickups. The trucks are among the industry's best-sellers.

TOURISM: INDY TO PARIS FLIGHT POPULAR - Indianapolis International Airport officials say they're encouraged by strong passenger bookings during the first year of Delta Air Lines Inc.'s nonstop service to Paris_and they're excited about the ways the high-profile route's success might make it easier to land new routes (AP). "The flight has exceeded our expectations," said Maggie Bishop, the airport's business development analyst for air service development. "We are pleased with the performance in the first year." Atlanta-based Delta began flying between Indianapolis International Airport and Paris' Charles de Gaulle Airport on May 24, 2018, giving Indiana its first-ever nonstop trans-Atlantic flight. Between then and the end of November_the most recent date for which U.S. Department of Transportation data is available_Delta carried nearly 23,400 Paris-bound passengers on the flight.

EDUCATION: NOTRE DAME PURCHASES LONDON LIBRARY - The University of Notre Dame's London Global Gateway has announced plans to acquire the G.K. Chesterton Library. The collection includes books, personal effects, art and other items related to the 20th Century English writer. Financial terms of the acquisition were not disclosed (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). The library is currently housed at the Oxford Oratory and will be transferred to the London Global Gateway, which Notre Dame says will provide increased access to researchers and Chesterton enthusiasts. It was compiled by Aidan Mackey, who the university describes as one of the foremost Chesterton experts.

ENVIRONMENT: LAKE MICHIGAN BEACHES HAVE HIGH BACTERIA - Some of the beaches along Lake Michigan, but not all, were seeing high levels of E. coli bacteria in the water this week. Meanwhile, surface water temperatures are still cold — in the 40s and 50s — at the southern end of Lake Michigan (South Bend Tribune). The beach at Warren Dunes State Park was temporarily closed Wednesday for high E. coli levels but reopened Thursday as further tests showed that bacteria levels had dropped. You can check for beach advisories and closures across Michigan at www.deq.state.michigan.us/beach. Indiana Dunes National Park doesn't close its beaches, but it advised visitors against swimming at Dunbar, Kemil, Porter and West beaches because of high bacteria levels that were tested Wednesday. The beaches at Mount Baldy and Lake View, though, weren't over Indiana's safety threshold of 235 colonies of bacteria per 100 milliliters. Health officials advise that people can get sick when they have direct contact with water at that level.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP MEXICAN TARIFF SENT STAFF SCRAMBLING - As Trump announcements go, this one appeared more orchestrated than most, Axios' Jonathan Swan reports: At 7:30 last evening, President Trump tweeted: "On June 10th, the United States will impose a 5% Tariff on all goods coming into our Country from Mexico, until such time as illegal migrants coming through Mexico, and into our Country, STOP. Shortly after that, there was a presidential statement from the press office and a background call with reporters. But behind the scenes, it was an administration-wide scramble. As with many presidential "announcements," this once sprang from intense frustration and boiled over quickly with staff rushing to react. While the plan was hurried out the door to appease Trump, he has been privately talking about doing this for a while, per two sources who've discussed it with him. Between the lines: The White House has made a number of immigration demands of Mexico over the past several months, but Trump has not defined what they need to show him. "Mexico has very strong immigration laws and could easily halt the illegal flow of migrants, including by returning them to their home countries," the president said in his statement. The bottom line: Seeing as there's no chance of a "STOP" to illegal migration through Mexico into the U.S., Trump's demand is entirely subjective. The president's next move may depend as much on his mood as anything else.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP ATTACKS MUELLER - President Trump on Thursday attacked Robert S. Mueller III as "totally conflicted" and "a true never-Trumper" and claimed that the former special counsel would have brought charges against him if he had any evidence — a characterization directly at odds with what Mueller said in a public statement Wednesday (Washington Post). Trump's attacks came in morning tweets and later while speaking to reporters at the White House. In one of his tweets, he also seemingly acknowledged for the first time that Russia had helped him get elected in 2016 — but he strongly pushed back against that notion while talking to reporters as he prepared to leave Washington. Mueller ended his role as special counsel on Wednesday and said his office could not consider whether to charge Trump with a crime because of a long-standing Justice Department opinion that a sitting president cannot be indicted. Mueller repeated a line in his report explaining that his team would have exonerated Trump if it could have.

WHITE HOUSE: CHINA THREATENS RETALIATION WITH PRECIOUS METALS - Facing new trade sanctions and a U.S. clampdown on its top telecommunications company, China issued a pointed reminder Wednesday that it has yet to unleash all its weapons in its trade war with the Trump administration (AP). Chinese state media warned that Beijing could cut America off from exotic minerals that are widely used in electric cars and mobile phones. The threat to use China's rich supply of so-called rare earths as leverage in the conflict has contributed to sharp losses in U.S. stocks and sliding long-term bond yields. For months, the world's two biggest economies have been locked in a standoff over allegations that China deploys predatory tactics—including stealing trade secrets and forcing foreign companies to hand over technology—in a drive to supplant U.S. technological dominance.

WHITE HOUSE: SHORT PUSHED FOR AGGRESSIVE TRADE STANCE - Elements of the White House including Marc Short, the VP's chief of staff -- had pushed for a more aggressive stance in getting the trade deal passed (Politico Playbook). House Speaker Nancy Pelosi said Thursday evening that the White House's decision to start the clock indicated "a lack of knowledge on the part of the administration on the policy and process to pass a trade agreement." House Democrats feel like this deal -- as written -- is toothless, lacking enforcement provisions Democrats had been demanding. One aide told us it was "worse than NAFTA" without the changes Democrats were seeking.

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE SAYS RELATIONS WITH CANADA STRONG - Vice President Mike Pence said Thursday that the U.S.-Canada relationship has "never been stronger," less than a year after a trade tiff had chilled the allies' historically warm ties (AP). Pence was in the Canadian capital hoping to build momentum to pass a new trade deal with Canada and Mexico. President Donald Trump recently removed U.S. steel and aluminum tariffs on Canada and Mexico, clearing a roadblock to a North American trade deal that his team negotiated last year. The trade penalties were a sore point in relations that reached a low last summer when Trump called Prime Minister Justin Trudeau "weak" and "dishonest" after the Canadian-hosted Group of Seven summit of major industrial nations. "President Trump and I believe the relationship between the United States and Canada has never been stronger and that is a reflection of his leadership and your leadership," Pence told Trudeau.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump and first lady Melania Trump will attend a reception for Gold Star families at 5:30 p.m. on the State Floor.

JUSTICE: BARR SAYS MUELLER COULD HAVE INDICTED TRUMP - Attorney General William Barr said special counsel Robert Mueller could have reached a decision on whether President Donald Trump obstructed justice (AP). Barr said in an interview with "CBS This Morning" that though Justice Department rules prevent the indictment of a sitting president, Mueller nonetheless could have decided whether Trump had committed a crime. The interview excerpt was aired one day after Mueller made his first public remarks on the Russia investigation. In that statement Wednesday, Mueller said it was "not an option" to consider whether Trump had broken the law in light of a longstanding Justice Department legal opinion that presidents cannot be charged.

EPA: SUMMER ETHANOL BAN LIFTED - The Trump administration has decided to approve expanded use of ethanol fuel, a move that will help corn farmers hurt by the trade conflict with China—and that might pay political dividends for President Trump in farm-belt states such as Iowa (Wall Street Journal). Under the decision to be made public Friday, the Environmental Protection Agency will allow gasoline with a 15% mix of ethanol to be sold year-round, instead of just eight months a year, effective as soon as it is published in the Federal Register, which officials expect to happen within days. The move has been opposed by oil companies and environmentalists, who object that it could lead to higher prices at the gas pumps and increase air pollution during the summer months when 15% ethanol fuels had been banned. They are expected to sue to try to block the move.

CITIES: INDY TO RENOVATE 'ANN DANCER' - The Indianapolis Cultural Trail hopes to raise $262,800 to keep an electronic piece of public art in operation for years to come (IBJ). If successful, the Keep Ann Dancing fundraising campaign, announced Thursday morning, will pay for hardware and technology upgrades and a maintenance fund for Ann Dancing by British artist Julian Opie. Originally designed to be a temporary installation, Ann Dancing is more than 10 years old and is the oldest piece of public art on the Indianapolis Cultural Trail. She is installed at the intersection of Massachusetts Avenue and Vermont Street in the Mass Ave Cultural District. Organizers said the goal is to raise the money by June 29.

CITIES: KEVIN SMITH TO HEAD HAMMOND LAW DEPARTMENT - A local trial lawyer and close ally of Hammond Mayor Thomas McDermott Jr. has been selected to head the city's law department (NWI Times). Kevin Smith, a partner at Munster law firm Smith Sersic, will become corporate counsel effective June 3, according to McDermott's office.

CITIES: BLOOMINGTON EXTENDS PROTECTIONS FOR CONTRACTORS - The city of Bloomington is proposing extending harassment protections to contractors and volunteers because of gaps illustrated by sexual harassment allegations a contractor made against former Monroe County commissioner Amanda Barge earlier this year (Brosher, Indiana Public Media). The city says in a press release the allegations prompted Mayor John Hamilton, the Bloomington Human Rights Commission and City Legal Department to evaluate how well Bloomington's code protects contracted employees. "What really sparked the city taking action and reviewing its policy to make sure we had all the protections we could was the incident at the county," says Barbara McKinney, director of the Human Rights Commission and assistant city attorney. "And we wanted to make sure we were protecting independent contractors to the extent we can."

CITIES: MUNCIE MALL GOES BACK TO BANK - Its owner has identified Muncie Mall as an over-leveraged shopping center for which it plans to engage a special servicer on the property's $33.9 million mortgage (Slabaugh, Muncie Star Press). This information, disclosed by owner Washington Prime Group in its first-quarter statement, matches its earlier annual report indicating WPG is planning to remove Muncie Mall from its assets. "In short, handing the property back to the bank," Michael Hicks, a Ball State University economist, told The Star Press. "This implies the future value of the property is expected to be less than the cost of making further payments." Special servicers handle the administration of loans that are delinquent, in default or need special attention. As for what happens next with Muncie Mall, there is definite uncertainty. "The question is whether it is better for the bank to again lease or sell the property or simply close it down," Hicks said. "This does not yet mean the mall's closure."

CITIES: DOWNTOWN SOUTH BEND PROJECT HALTED - Construction has halted in the massive hole developer Dave Matthews has dug next to his Commerce Center building in the 300 block of East LaSalle Avenue, in a scenario South Bend Common Council member Oliver Davis called a "nightmare" (South Bend Tribune). "It was a tough process anyway," Davis said, recalling the contentious series of council meetings in late 2016 and early 2017 in which Matthews obtained a variance to build the 10-story structure taller than what zoning rules allowed. "It was a stressful situation but we were finally able to get that done. This is something we didn't see coming." That something was Grand Rapids-based, publicly traded grocery chain SpartanNash buying South Bend-based Martin's Super Markets in December, months after Martin's CEO Rob Bartels had been a very public supporter of the project. SpartanNash has signed a letter of intent to consider still opening a Martin's on the ground floor but hasn't yet committed to doing so.

CITIES: INDOT TO BUILD OVERPASS IN COLUMBUS - Construction of a planned railroad overpass over the State Road 46 and State Road 11 crossing on Columbus' west side could begin in November (Columbus Republic). More than 50 people attended a public hearing Wednesday night at Columbus City Hall to learn more details about the $30 million overpass project. The first steps of the project will take place this summer as utility poles and other infrastructure are relocated along State Road 11, Indiana Department of Transportation officials said. INDOT is scheduled to open bids for the project on Oct. 9, and construction could begin in late November or early December, said Dave Hayward, Columbus' executive director of public works and city engineer.

COUNTIES: FENNEL MUST REPLAY VIGO SCHOOLS $110K - A federal appeals court has upheld the $110,600 restitution that Franklin Fennell must repay to the Vigo County School Corp. after his December 2017 conviction in a vendor kickback scheme (Terre Haute Tribune-Star). The former facilities and transportation director for the school district, Fennell had asked the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals to review U.S. Chief District Judge Jane Magnus-Stinson's order for restitution. Fennell claimed the U.S. Probation Office should have performed an independent accounting of the Vigo County School Corp.'s actual loss. In the seven-page decision issued Thursday, however, Judge David F. Hamilton wrote Fennell's objection to the restitution amount cited no factual errors in the restitution calculation. And, Hamilton wrote, it was fair to assign the restitution using the government's chart created for Fennell's trial.

INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT

Vigo vote now vs. later

Referendum on track for November vote – is history still relevant?

Under strong encouragement from Wabash Valley leaders, the Vigo County Election Board is moving forward with plans to conduct the countywide casino referendum during the general election on November 5 instead of waiting for the 2020 primary election next May. The cost to do so now is estimated to be around $50,000.

Holding a countywide referendum in November is an interesting strategy, given that only voters in Terre Haute and the county's several towns will have any races on the ballot; voters in the county outside municipalities will have to make a special decision to cast a ballot in the election (as our sister Hannah News Service newsletter, INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT, reported, a Vigo County School Corporation referendum could also land on the November ballot – affecting the dynamics – but may be more likely to wait until May).

Do the factors which shaped the riverenda around a quarter-century ago still stand true? Back in the Day, voters in urban areas of each county generally strongly favored the casino authorization, while those in smaller towns and the rural areas even more overwhelmingly opposed the coming of casinos. Some of that opposition was ginned up by social and religious conservative groups – particularly the Methodist Church – and by the fear of The Mob extending its tentacles into those respective counties (this was largely before most of the casino operators were publicly held companies), a skeptical Indiana Republican Party, as well as concern over high crime rates and the creation of “downtown Disneylands.”

When Vigo County voters are called upon to decide “Shall inland casino gambling be permitted in Vigo County,” they will do so with a Methodist Church that no longer has two key leaders (one from Indianapolis and one from Valparaiso) who had led the anti-casino crusade and which seems much more accepting of casinos in Indiana; a quarter-century history of casinos operating largely devoid of business or political scandals; more than 10,000 direct gaming jobs statewide; billions of state and local tax dollars and local investment; no suggestion that the casinos have led to additional crime (beyond that expected by the numbers of daily patrons visiting communities); no strain on local public safety resources; a casino landscape which sees more Republican than Democratic lawmakers representing Indiana casino, racino, and satellite wagering facility districts; and no negative alterations of community quaintness or values.

While this would suggest that the factors that downed some of the original riverenda, no longer apply, there is one big anti-casino factor you should add in for a November 5 contest.

The ability of rural voters to cast a ballot is much easier today (largely through “no-fault” absentee ballots and in-person early voting), and county officials seem prepared to offer more voting options in the form of convenient vote centers. County officials appear poised to open vote centers outside of city limits for 30 days prior to election day. That means the voters who might be more predisposed to oppose a casino will find it more convenient to turn out . . . perhaps canceling out the impact of not having any races on the rural ballot that would encourage voting.

Lottery on record pace – again

Sales should be up by 4.5% over FY 2018

The Hoosier Lottery is on pace to transfer a record $309 million to the State of Indiana for Fiscal Year 2019, according to an updated forecast provided at mid-May to the State Lottery Commission of Indiana. The Lottery contributed $306 million to the State last year.

The forecast anticipates finishing Fiscal Year 2019 with sales of $1.33 billion, another new all-time record, and an increase of 4.5% over $1.27 billion in FY 2018. If the forecast comes to fruition, FY 2019 will mark the first time in history that lottery sales have topped $1.3 billion, even as scratch-off ticket sales have not performed up to budget.

Provider Net Income is on track for $323 million, easily exceeding the Incentive Net Income threshold of $305 million spelled out in the operating contract.

IGT Indiana and the Hoosier Lottery split 50/50 anything above the Incentive Net Income level, meaning IGT is in line to receive a year-end bonus of $9.02 million. IGT received a $9.19 million bonus in FY 2018 based on an incentive threshold of $300 million and actual income of $318 million. The $323 million of income currently forecasted for FY 2019 would represent an increase of 5.6% over the $306 million in the budget.

Waiting until primary day in May 2020 would mean that a high voter turnout could be expected, but its composition would be in question.

There is considerable grassroots Trump voter support, both among rural Republican and urban blue collar Democrats in what is a national general election bellwether county. No one knows yet who might generate particular interest on the Democratic presidential primary ballot, and there should be no other high-salience state or federal races to watch – at least as of now – with no serious CD 08 races expected, no U.S. Senate race on the ballot for the first time since 2014, and no serious primary contest for governor. If abortion continues to increase in importance as a national issue, that could drive voters from both sides to the polls.

IN General

● At its Thursday meeting, members of the Indiana Gaming Commission were briefed on the key gaming law changes from the 2019 session. Commission staff outlined the provisions of the charity gaming law changes (and the need for new regulations thanks to the remodification); the mechanism by which a Gary casino can move inland within Gary off the footprint and a license can be opened for Vigo County; and the intricacies of the new sports wagering law.

□ Since some of the details of what will become I.C. 4-38 thanks to HEA 1015-2019, Licensed facilities – riverboats, racinos, satellite wagering facilities – may conduct sports wagering. The law established three new license types:

- (1) Certificate of Authority
 - Casinos, racinos, and satellite wagering facilities
 - $100,000 application fee
- (2) Vendor
 - An entity that contracts with certificate holders
 - Three allowed per certificate holder (e.g., FanDuel)
 - $100,000 application fee
- (3) Sports Wagering Service Provider:
 - Odds providers
 - $10,000 application fee

□ This includes a $50,000 “removal fee” for certificate of authority and vendor licensees. Fees will be paid into to the newly created Sports Wagering Fund which will support supplier and occupational licensing work by the Gaming Commission for both individuals and entities. The Gaming Commission is also authorized to test and approve sports wagering devices before authorizing certificate holders or their respective vendors to conduct sports wagering activities. The Gameboys must also test and approve any sports wagering platform and devices, a process that likely will be undertaken by the Commission’s long-time contract testing firm, Gaming Laboratories International.

□ A Certificate holder or a vendor may only accept wagers placed on mobile devices within the state, under strict geofencing technology. The Commission may also approve data sources, such as requirements for use of official league or sanctioning body data for certain types of wagers.

□ The Commission should begin accepting the assorted sports wagering applications on July 1, and sports wagering is authorized by law to begin on September 1. Recall that the original start date envisioned by optimistic lawmakers was July 1, but Indiana Gaming Commission Executive Director Sara Tait told them that the Department of Revenue could not implement appropriate taxation systems that quickly, and even the licensing process would be pressed by a September 1 target.

□ “We are making no promises for a September 1st launch,” Tait explained, “but we are going to say this is a goal we are striving to meet.” Nevertheless, while she comminutes to target September 1, “it is a tall order with many factors outside of our control,” and thus “are making no promises.” The panel still has to draft, approve, and implement the enabling rules. Look for draft regulations to be ready by early July, and largely mirror the process Commission staff took with paid fantasy sports, with formal rules prepared for adoption at the Commission’s August business meeting.

□ Much of the timing may be contingent on the operators, Tait explained, and their ability to get comprehensive applications in on time and be prepared for background investigations. One option Tait outlines: a possible two-tiered launch, with Thursday, Tait suggested it’s possible that sports betting will be rolled out in phases—initially by launching at casinos, racinos, and satellite wagering facilities going first before mobile wagering, given the additional complications with additional vendors, player verification and geofencing.

● Cris Johnston, a former member of the Indiana Gaming Commission, will become the new director of the Office of Management and Budget June 30, bringing some gaming knowledge to the green eyeshade division. Johnston is currently the Governor’s deputy chief of staff, and previously served eight years in the Daniels Administration as executive director of OMB’s division of government efficiency and later, as deputy chief of staff. The Region native was also a practice director with KSM Consulting, LLC, and was a deputy state treasurer in the O’Laughlin Administration.

● In its May 21 meeting, the Legislative Council approved a lengthy list of interim study topics . . . and none this year pertain to gaming, largely because the state and local fiscal impact of the changes that everyone seems interested in studying will not take hold for another year or so (live table games at the racinos January 1; the eventual inevitable move of the Gary casino; free play deduction increases; wagering tax structural changes; and a potential Vigo County casino . . . and perhaps the impact of the charity gaming overhaul and related tweaking?).

● An investigation started with a tip from a concerned citizen to Crime Stoppers early last Fall uncovered another alleged multi-county animal fighting operation. An Indiana Gaming Commission raid on a pair of properties in Morgan County and Owen County May 23 resulted in the removal of about one-dozen dogs found tied to heavy chains and housed in a manner consistent with dogfighting, and more than 550 roosters found with physical alterations commonly associated with cockfighting. Search warrants executed by the Indiana Gaming Commission at the two properties also found animal fighting paraphernalia.

□ Martin James Anderson of Camby was arrested at his home on Handley Road, where investigators seized one pit bull and searched for documents. At the LMB Farm on Cunot Cataract Road in northern Owen County, said to be owned by Anderson, more than 550 roosters and at least nine pit bulls were recovered. Anderson was arrested and sent to the Morgan County Jail on one preliminary count in Morgan County Superior Court 2 of purchasing an animal to be used in an animal fighting contest. In Indiana, conducting an animal fight and the possession of animals for fighting are level 6 felonies, each punishable by six months in county jail to 2.5 years in state prison, and a potential maximum fine of $10,000.

□ Indiana Gaming Commission Superintendent for Law Enforcement Rob Townsend tells Russ McQuaid of WXIN-TV Fox 59 in Indianapolis "the tipster told investigators they would find roosters trained for fighting. 'We don't have anything at this point that leads us to believe that there is fighting going on here. Basically we have the tip that they're being raised for the purpose of fighting and that's why we acted.' Townsend says his office has received 37 tips in the past two years about animal fighting for gambling purposes in Indiana. While the Owen County seizure was of average size, Townsend said the number of birds and dogs would overwhelm the abilities of his agency and local animal shelters to handle." The animals were transported in two semi-tractor trailers to temporary shelters at undisclosed locations established by the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (ASPCA), which is also assisting local authorities with evidence collection, medical assessments, and veterinary forensic exams by ASPCA veterinary and behavior experts until custody is determined by the court. Townsend tells McQuaid that "while the ASPCA, a not-for-profit entity, provided logistical support, his agency was solely responsible for the investigation. 'We rely on them very heavily and we have a great partnership with them in the state of Indiana and whenever we do one we always reach out to them and ask them for help. We have built the investigation and developed the probable cause for the search warrant. They have subject matter expertise that comes on the property on the day of the search warrant and helps us build and continue on that foundation.'"

□ The following animal welfare organizations provided ASPCA volunteers to assist with this case: Animal Care Centers of NYC; Animal Care Services - City of Indianapolis; Charleston Animal Society; Humane Society of the Pikes Peak Region; Humane Society of Southwest Missouri; Oregon Humane Society; Quincy Humane Society; San Diego Humane Society.

Southern Market News . . .

● Full House Resorts, Inc., parent company of Rising Star Casino • Resort, issues $10 million of Senior Secured Notes (due 2024), and required the Indiana Gaming Commission to sign off. Full House President and CEO Dan Lee jokes with investment analysts on the company's first quarter earnings call that "It was kind of interim; we needed the Indiana Gaming Commission's approval - as we do for almost everything. And in that discussion they said, 'Well, so how levered are you?' I said, 'Well, we're a lot less levered than Caesars.' They started laughing. They said, 'Please don't use Caesars as your modicum of financial propriety.' And I said, 'No, we don't,' but we are probably less levered than other licensees in Indiana as well probably a little more levered than I would normally like to be, but I hope we can get de-levered through growth and we did this at Mirage. We did it at Pinnacle," when Lee ran the company which was then in charge of Belterra Casino Resort. "Where you go and build something that might cause your leverage to go up in the mean time, but then when it comes on stream and does 20% cash on cash return or something then ultimately you come out of that with less leverage than you had before," he adds.

● A body was found near the pond next to the Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg parking garage during the daylight hours on Monday. While the circumstances still seem a bit unclear, assorted local media outlets were reporting that there was no foul play, nor was there anything to connect the victim to any gaming activity while he was on HCL property.

IN Other Casino News . . .

● Governor Eric Holcomb (R) appeared on WJOB 1230-AM in Hammond Tuesday morning and was asked by Jed in the Morning's Jim Dedelow about the new casino legislation.

□ Governor Holcomb labeled it "just another tool in the economic development tool box for the Northwest region," and when all the factors were considered, it was a "win-win-win" for everyone. "It's a game-changer, no pun intended," he believes. "This legislation will obviously spur economic growth." The Governor said that when he was asked about the concepts at the beginning of the session, he had said that "Every 20 years or so, you need to review where you're at" and make any changes that are needed," and lawmakers did so this session. The Guv observed that members from not only The Region but from Southeastern Indiana "minimized if not eliminated negative impacts."

□ Dedelow asked the Governor about the strong statements made by Hammond Mayor Tom McDermott, Jr. (D) on WJOB that Spectacle Entertainment, LLC's Rod Ratcliff had "corrupted" the process, if not the Governor himself. "That's unfortunate, but I'm not shocked," that Mayor McDermott would "twist the facts and make it something it wasn't," responded the Guv. He dismissed the mayoral comments by explaining that the process was "transparent" and that he "didn't dictate the terms," but simply reviewed the legislation sent to his desk after a lengthy legislative process. "I understand peoples' emotions and personalities might flare up" with so much at stake was his last word on the subject.

● The president of UNITE HERE Local 23 writes to the members of the Indiana Gaming Commission "to raise concern about recent changes in the leadership at Caesars Entertainment," citing Carl Icahn winning the rights to three board seats at Caesars and effectively gaining the right to select the next CEO while owning less than 10% of the company's stock. "This change, while significant in itself, seems to be part of a broader trend of hedge fund investors pushing for changes in gaming companies that serve their own short-term interests."

□ Marlene Patrick-Cooper explains, "The State of Indiana and its residents have an interest in sustained reinvestment in the casino industry to ensure that the economic benefits from gaming revenue and casino jobs are preserved. Wall Street investors do not necessarily share this perspective. Hedge funds and private equity generally operate on short investment timelines and are interested in extracting maximal amounts of capital without regard to the long-term effects on the company. As such, they are a serious threat to the stability and longevity of the casino industry. Yet regulators currently seem ill-equipped to deal with the ability of hedge funds and other corporate raiders to exert control over a company while owning a relatively small percentage of the stock. We come to you not to simply raise the alarm. We believe that workers, regulators, politicians, and other community stakeholders need to work together to develop a solution. We hope you will work with us," she concludes.

□ Unite Here Local 23 Research Director Kate O'Neil was at the meeting to express the union's concern about recent changes to the ownership and the board of Caesars, and the need for reinvestment.

April State Summary

Indiana's 13 commercial gaming properties generated the weakest April win since 2003 (the first April with dockside gaming) with only $182.88 million, dwindling from last year by 6.38% (- $12.47 million).

The decline constitutes the steepest year-over-year tumble since February 2018 (and was the first $10 million+ shortfall since then), as well as the most precipitous in any April since 2014. Win has declined from the prior year by more than five percent in two out of the first four months of the calendar year – a phenomenon not experienced since 2014, when record cold, snow, ice, and wind devastated the state from January through March. This also interrupts the first two successive months of over-the-year improvement since March-April 2018. The calendar was consistent from April 2018, so it played no part. After every property showed a February to March gain, only one (Majestic Star Casino I) did so from March to April, and that was marginal (a 0.19% gain)..

Year-over-year gains were enjoyed at only four properties (one north, one south, and both racinos), while nine properties endured over-the-year declines. Five casinos (four along the Ohio River) were hit by a double-digit percentage decline in win, the most in the state since February 2018. Indiana Grand posted a record April high for the Shelbyville property (and has posted successive April gains since 2014), but the lowest April totals this century were seen at Blue Chip Casino, Rising Star Casino • Resort, and Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg. While five properties saw March win (and April 2018 win) top $20 million, only two did so in April 2019.

Year-to-date Indiana casino win stands at $731 million through April, off by 3.15% (- $23.8 million) compared to the same four months of 2019. Win has eroded on a year-to-date basis at nine of the 13 properties. Just four have seen their respective fortunes improve: Indiana Grand, Blue Chip Casino, Majestic Star Casino II, and French Lick Resort • Casino.

The five Lake Michigan commercial casinos brought in April win of $78.15 million, the lowest for the region in any April since 2000, and representing a year-over-year decline of 7.78% (- $6.59 million). The entire Chicagoland market was down by 6.6%, and the Illinois side was up by 1.6% itself, so Indiana fared worse than its Illinois counterparts. The largest over-the-year decline in the region occurred at Ameristar Casino East Chicago, whether you measure by percentage or actual dollar. Slot volume was largely lower across the market (down by about 5.5% in Chicagoland). While table drop was marginally up, there were a lot of lucky table players across the northern tier in April.

The six southern tier casinos managed win of $61.73 million, the weakest result for this region in any April since 1999, when there were two fewer casinos operating. Regional win plummeted from prior year performance by 10.41% (- $7.17 million). The largest year-over-year percentage decline in the state occurred at Rising Star Casino • Resort (for the property, this was its largest one-year decline since February 2015; Rising Star has recorded win of less than $4 million in three of the first four months of 2019). The largest over-the-year decline in the state as measured in actual dollars took place at Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana (constituting the property's steepest April-to-April decline since 2011). A relatively low table hold was a factor in this result (although it was largely flat on a year-over-year basis). The biggest driver of the over-the-year April 19.01% (- $ 3,145,664) decline at HCSI is found on the slot side of the business – and a chunk of this is due to the continued competitive pressures with the new Derby City Gaming facility across the Ohio River in Louisville.

The two racinos combined for record-high April win of $42.997 million, a year-over-year boost of 3.10% ($1.29 million). Both racinos posted year-over-year improvement (this was the first such gain at Harrah's Hoosier Park so far in 2019). Indiana Grand paced the state in year-over-year growth for the second month in a row and stands as the only property where year-to-date win has improved by greater than five percent.

Statewide slot win fell to the lowest April level since 2003 at $155.29 million, plummeting from the prior year by 5.47% (-$8.99 million). That's the second-steepest real dollar decline over the past three years and the steepest April-to-April contraction since 2014. After win per slot per day reached the highest level this decade in March, April sees win per slot per day slip back down to the more pedestrian territory of $286, even with fewer machines on casino floors. The slot payback percentage averaged 90.466%, a new April record trough as casinos continue to tighten the payouts. One exception: Blue Chip Casino, which effectively offered players the loosest slots in the state (along with Rising Star) for the first time since January 2018 (when the Four Winds Casino South Bend opened nearby) - and the lowest payout percentage, 89.88% at Majestic Star Casino II, was the highest state low payout for any month since February 2017. Players risked $1.6289 billion at the slots - the lowest in any April since 1998 when there were five fewer properties. Coin-in sank by $144 million compared to April 2018, the second-largest decline over the past four years. For the first time since 2014, coin-in has tumbled on a year-over-year basis in each of the first four months of the calendar year as the state now faces competition from the historical horse racing machines in Louisville as well as additional video gaming terminals along our western border with Illinois. Indiana properties offered up 18,115 slot machines as of the end of April - 370 fewer than were in play in April 2018. The statewide slot inventory has not increased in any April since 2010.

The 11 Hoosier casinos with traditional table games collected table win of $27.58 million in April, the weakest April performance in four years. Table win was down by 11.21% (-$3.48 million) compared to the same month last year, marking its most vertical April-to-April decline since 2010. Table win has experienced year-over-year slippage in each of the first four months of the calendar year, a phenomenon not seen since 2014 (the first January - April in which all four Ohio land-based casinos were open). Moreover, table win has declined for six successive months for the first time since 2016. The last time any Hoosier casino hit $10 million in monthly table win was October, and but this also occurred in April 2018. Win per table per day declined less rapidly than overall table win. At $1,383, win per table per day fell by 6.9% compared to $1,486 in April 2018. Players could pick from 665 table games active across all properties as of the end of April, the paltriest selection available in any month since 2008, when the Hammond and Lawrenceburg properties had not yet transitioned to their current gaming platforms. The table hold percentage ended April at 20.40%, the third consecutive month under 20.5%, a phenomenon not seen since 2016. This constitutes the lowest table hold percentage in any April since 2011. Players anted up $135.23 million on table games, off by 3.53% (- $4.94 million) compared to April 2018, which represents the steepest April decline since 2013.

Caesars Entertainment Corporation captured just under $93 million from its four properties in April, representing 50.82% of statewide win, the largest state share since the merger. Cumulatively, the two Horseshoe-branded properties report that year-to-date win has declined by eight percent, or just over $17 million, but Caesars is the only corporate combo to grow market share in successive months since February. Horseshoe Casino Hammond also posts the highest single-property state share (18.15%) since it led the state last October with an 18.85% revenue share. Penn National Gaming, Inc. accrued an April state market share of 17.58% on win of $32 million. January - April win for the two Penn National properties is off from the same point last year by approximately five percent (- $6.8 million). Boyd Gaming Corporation recorded an 11.52% April share of overall state revenue on win of $21 million. Through the first four months of 2019, Boyd has collected win of $84 million, sinking from last year's January - April performance by 1.3% (- $1 million). Spectacle Entertainment, LLC accounted for a state market share of 7.62% in April with April revenues of $13.93 million. Spectacle has essentially treaded water so far this year, as year-to-date win of $52 million is down from the same four months in 2018 by just $67,000.

Illinois garnered April revenues of $114.76 million from its 10 casinos - the lowest April total since 1999. Illinois also added to its purse a new all-time April high of $144.77 million from Video Gaming Terminals. This marks the second month this year in which Illinois VGT revenue alone has trailed Indiana casino win by less than $40 million. Combined, the Land of Lincoln reaped just under $260 million in April from the fruits of gaming. Illinois has brought in more than $200 million from casinos and VGTs in every month since July 2016 - Indiana has done so only three times in that span (each of the three months of March) from its casinos and racinos. The spread between Illinois and Indiana revenues was up to $76.65 million - in favor of the Illini - during April, a new all-time record.

Ohio amassed $70.58 million in April receipts from its four casinos and another $89.64 million from its racinos - both figures represent year-over-year declines (- 2.4% for casinos and - 0.1% for the racinos). All told, Ohio brought in just over $160 million from gaming, down slightly (- 1.1%) from $162 million a year ago. JACK Cincinnati Casino, the land-based casino in downtown Cincinnati that has led the Indiana properties in the local market, saw April revenue of $16.8 million, down from $17.5 million in April 2018. Table game revenue rose by about $100,000, but slots were down by about $800,000 over the year. By comparison, the strongest Hoosier casino in the Cincinnati market, Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg, posted April win of just $13.73 million, down from $13.97 million in April 2018. Two of the three Indiana casinos in the Cincinnati market saw double-digit over-the-year percentage declines.

Hoosier Lottery

- In the coming months, you should expect IGT Indiana, LLC to present an action plan to the State Lottery Commission of Indiana for online lottery and rapid-selection monitor games . . . something we've been telling you to steel yourself for over the past 18 months or so.

□ IGT recently completed a comprehensive evaluation of the viability of monitor games and is in the process of wrapping up a similar study of online or interactive lottery – what the industry refers to as iLottery. The potential new games and platforms could significantly increase revenue and profit for IGT and the Hoosier Lottery as the partners approach the half-way point of their 15-year Integrated Services Agreement (and the Hoosier Lottery marks its 30th anniversary in October).

□ The forthcoming action plan will cover both iLottery and monitor games and should be presented to the Commission for consideration during the upcoming fiscal year once the iLottery study is complete. The action plan is expected to address timelines, technology requirements, game types, prize structure and payouts, legal and regulatory issues, capital investment, marketing, and staffing needs. The expansion plans could likely be accomplished without legislative approval . . . which would avoid some of the same uncomfortable debate as you saw this Spring on the House floor about mobile sports wagering (though some lawmakers might find this more problematic because it would actually be the State conducting the activity, and not just a casino or vendor authorized by the State).

□ Monitor games are offered as often as every three minutes, seven days a week and include not only Keno – which we told you was definitely on the radar screen – but also bingo and computer-simulated sporting events. Monitors are typically placed in social environments like bars and restaurants where players place their bets and then watch the outcome unfold in real time on a screen. In this way, monitor games offer the Hoosier Lottery the opportunity to expand outside of traditional retailer channels. Monitor games also diversify and expand the player base. Compared to the profile of other lottery products, Keno consumers are more likely to be younger and male. IGT also offers an iKeno product that lets consumers play Keno from their smartphones. The potential benefits to bars and restaurants include increased foot traffic, higher food and beverage sales, and keeping patrons in their establishment for longer periods of time.

□ An iLottery platform would allow players to play the equivalent of digital scratch-off tickets (“eInstants”) and make online purchases of traditional draw games like Powerball and Hoosier Lotto. Internet wagering would broaden the Lottery’s reach to young adults.

□ Estimates we’ve seen suggest that once fully implemented in Indiana, Keno could annually generate $450 million in sales and $100 million in profit. Internet wagering on Hoosier Lottery games could annually generate $100 million in sales and $25 million in profit.

● The Kentucky Lottery retains the Washington, D.C. law firm of Akin Gump Strauss Hauer & Feld to lobby Congress to “Support ability of state lotteries to continue to operate under the Wire Act.”

● Through the first 10 months of Fiscal Year 2019, the Hoosier Lottery achieved sales of $1.12 billion, up by $51.1 million (4.8%) over the same point in the prior fiscal year and topping the budget by $39.9 million (3.7%). Indiana reached the $1 billion sales mark in March – the earliest the Lottery has ever reached 10 figures.

□ Players spent just under $807 million on scratch-off tickets from July 2018 through April 2019, up by $21.4 million (2.7%) over the same point in Fiscal Year 2018 but down by $10.3 million (- 1.3%) compared to the budget. As we’ve been telling you, scratch-off sales at the $1 and $2 price points have been steadily declining for many years, despite the introduction of monthly second-chance promotions. Sales of the big jackpot draw games (Powerball, Mega Millions, and Hoosier Lotto) came in at a shade over $200 million on a fiscal year-to-date basis, a gain of $24.2 million (13.7%) over the same period in the prior fiscal year, and ahead of budget by $42.6 million (26.9%). As we wrote at this time last year, the Hoosier Lottery and IGT expected a decline in Powerball sales in FY 2019, but actual results have outperformed expectations. Powerball sales of $83 million for the 10-month period are down by $12.2 million (-12.8%) from the same point in FY 2018, yet are $6.3 million (8.3%) greater than budget. Mega Millions sales of $68 million are $28.6 million (72.6%) ahead of the same point in FY 18 and $28.0 million (70.2%) ahead of where the Lottery expected to be, aided by the October jackpot of more than $1.5 billion. Hoosier Lotto sales of just under $50 million at the 10-month mark are $7.8 million (18.5%) better than this point in FY 2018 and $8.2 million (19.9%) better than budget. Fast Play, launched in FY 2015, had been seeing dwindling sales, but IGT Indiana has engineered a turnaround this year, with the product line generating $12.0 million in sales thus far in FY 2019, up by $2.4 million (24.5%) compared to the same point in FY 18, and beating expectations by $1.7 million (16.3%). Combined revenue from the Daily 3 and Daily 4 games of just under $64 million represents an improvement of $5 million (8.5%) from the same July-April stretch in FY 2018, and an increase over budget of $6 million (10%).

□ Cash4Life will expand to a daily draw beginning July 2, which may help reinvigorate a game that has seen fiscal year-to-date sales erode by 17% compared to the same 10 months in FY 2018.

● The State Lottery Commission of Indiana at its May 21 meeting approved the Fiscal Year 2020 business plan for IGT Indiana. The plan anticipates achieving Provider Net Income of $312 million in FY 2020. The latest forecast shows FY 2019 results on track for $323 million, meaning income in the upcoming fiscal year is expected to decline. The FY 2020 budget expects sales of $1.323 billion, which is about $4.5 million below where sales are forecasted to end up for FY 19. The FY 2020 budget envisions scratch-off sales of $988.6 million and draw game sales of $334.4 million – maintaining a ratio of 75/25. FY 2020 scratch-off sales are anticipated to grow by about 2.5% over forecasted FY 2019 sales of $966 million, while draw game sales are budgeted to decline by about eight percent from forecasted FY 19 levels of $364 million. Mega Millions is on track to end FY 19 with $75 million in sales, yet the FY 2020 budget plans for sales to tumble by some 30% to $52 million, perhaps recognizing the high number of top 10 jackpot sales for that game over the past 10 months. Mega Millions sales for FY 2019 through April 30 are running 73% higher than at the same point last year, and are also tracking 70% higher than projections. The business plan calls for launching 45 new scratch-off games, down from 58 in FY 18 and 50 in FY 19. The Incentive Net Income threshold grows from $305 million in FY 2019 to $310 million in FY 2020. With PNI budgeted at $312 million, the FY 2020 business plan assumes that the private manager will collect a $1 million incentive bonus. The amount that IGT Indiana must deliver to avoid paying a shortfall penalty remains at $300 million.

□ Look for IGT and the Hoosier Lottery to launch a new game in March 2020 called Cash Pop. Officials describe it as essentially a “Pick One” game where players choose one number. The new daily game is expected to contribute about $4 million in sales in FY 20. IGT will also launch the first-ever $20 Fast Play ticket, building on the price-point progression strategy that has proven successful for scratch-off tickets.

□ The upcoming fiscal year will also see the Hoosier Lottery celebrate its 30th anniversary in October. No word yet as to whether the Lottery will reprise the “I’m so Excited” Poynter Sisters theme that kicked off the debut three decades ago.

□ Notably, the Lottery will expand its self-service footprint to Walmart during FY 2020, with about 80 machines deployed at Walmart stores across Indiana during the coming fiscal year. Look for some 20 stores to have two machines, and the rest of the stores will each have one. Another enhancement in the works involving key retailers will be adding the capability for consumers to purchase lottery tickets from regular check-out lanes rather than having to make an additional stop at a separate service counter or instant ticket vending machine.

● About one month after the Indiana Supreme Court voted unanimously to deny transfer in Parsley, II v. Indiana, No. 18A-CR-72, the strange odyssey we’ve chronicled for you over the past few years involving Jackie Harold Parsley, II and the extended Parsley clan in a case involving fraud perpetrated on the Hoosier Lottery, the Supremes also voted unanimously to deny transfer to Ashlee Parsley in Parsley v. Indiana, No. 18A-CR-221. She had appealed her convictions for false passing of a lottery ticket, theft, five counts of money laundering, and perjury. While she largely just questioned whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain her convictions, the Indiana Court of Appeals found in an unpublished December opinion that “evidence of probative value was presented from which the jury as the trier of fact could determine that Ashlee passed the winning lottery ticket with intent to defraud the Hoosier Lottery, knowingly exerted unauthorized control over the currency of the Hoosier Lottery, knowingly possessed or transferred the proceeds of the theft, and made a false statement on her claim form.”

● In March, we were first to tell you about a lawsuit filed by South Bend-based upstart start-up Vice Lotteries in U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana, Curtis v. Hill, No. 3:19-cv-00073-JD-MGG, in part seeking a declaratory judgment allowing Vice to prepare for and conduct its “equitable gambling” for the benefit of the public. Vice Lotteries is trying to break into the lottery business nationally with an “equitable gambling” model under which every dollar wagered will be returned as prize money . . . and started by seeking to overturn the Hoosier Lottery’s Hoosier monopoly status.

□ While there has been no recent action in the Indiana case, we can tell you that a federal court in Michigan has scheduled a June 6 hearing on a lawsuit that Vice Lotteries filed there, with charges similar to those which it levied in Indiana, where Vice contends that “The State violates its sovereignty by offering and engaging in quid pro quo bargains for exemptions from its laws in exchange for payment to the Hoosier Lottery”; violates Vice’s due process and equal protection rights by barring competition to protect “monopoly profits”; and violates Vice’s free speech rights by criminalizing certain of its prep work to compete with the Hoosier Lottery.

□ And, we’ve learned, a third such lawsuit will be filed early this month in federal court in New York, making the same general claims against the state lottery in the Empire State.

● Silver Express in Indianapolis maintains the lottery sales lead for an eighth consecutive month, and continues its remarkable run of not having been lower than first or second statewide since a third-place finish way back in November 2015. But a new face that showed up in second place in March – MCR Short Stop in Portage – stays in that slot in April, maintaining its highest place in the rankings since we started monitoring retailer sales in detail back in 2013. Troy Foods Inc. in Indianapolis, which had placed first or second in each month since it transitioned from Buck’s Market ownership in the mid-July 2018 buyout (and it had largely been on the podium with Silver Express for years before the change), dropped to third place in February and has remained there since. Silver Express had held the top spot statewide during a strong run from December 2015 through October 2017 and again from January through April. Troy had jumped from 10th to first in August following the July ownership flip. The Troy Foods predecessor, Buck’s, had finished second in March 2018. K & D Marathon in Hammond moved up to fourth place in March after three consecutive months in fifth but slips back even further, down to ninth place. Indianapolis now has posted three consecutive months without a win-place showing. Until February, the last time that happened was in July 2018. Before that, the last time Indianapolis failed to post a win-place showing was back in December 2017.

Top 10 Hoosier Lottery Retailers - March 2019 Sales Rank

Apr. 19 18	Mar	Feb	Jan	Dec	Nov	Oct
1 (1) Silver Express - Indianapolis	1	1	1	1	1	1
2 (7) MCR Short Stop - Portage	2	4	6	8	4	6

9 (4) K & D Marathon - Hammond	4	5	5	5	3	3
10 (-) Munster Citgo - Munster	8	—	—	—	—	—

□ Grand Food Junction in Fort Wayne, which ended February in second place statewide, its highest showing since we began tracking retailers in detail in 2013, fell all the way to seventh place in March, about on par with its sixth-place March 2018 performance, but grew in April to fourth. The Hen in Terre Haute dropped off the top 10 list in March after a brief (February) reappearance, but it is back, and ranks eight in April, displacing Jerry’s Burger Dairy in Fort Wayne, which had returned to the ladder in March in 10th place after a lengthy absence. The eighth-place March finisher, Munster Citgo, was among the top 10 retailers in the state for the first time that month, and though it slips to 19th, it remains among the leaders.

□ Only four different counties are represented among the top 10 retailers for a second straight month, down from six in February and seven in January, and remaining at the smallest cadre of counties earning top 10 honors that we can recall. Four retailers continue to be found in Marion County. Allen County returned to the multiple outlet list in February after dropping off in January, placing three on the list in March, but that drops to two in April with Lake County adding a third and one retailer from Porter County. After the top three December retailers hailed from Marion County – a phenomenon we had not seen since August – that slipped to the top two spots in January, and first and third in February and again in March.

● The May 31 Mega Millions jackpot climbed to $441 million, 20th largest overall, eighth-largest in the game's history, and only the 10th time in the game's history in which its jackpot has topped the $400 million mark – with four of those instances falling just within the past calendar year. This is the largest Mega Millions jackpot available since a January 1, 2019 $437 million winner.

□ The record prize for Mega Millions, $1.537 billion, was claimed last October, so the game has strongly contributed to a good fiscal year for the Hoosier Lottery.

● The Hoosier Lotto jackpot for Saturday, June 1, grew to $38.6 million, a $300,000 jump over the previous jackpot. The draw on Wednesday, March 6 had marked the first time in more than seven years (since February 18, 2012) that the Hoosier Lotto jackpot topped $30 million, a key psychological number for casual players, but this jackpot is now climbing slowly toward record territory . . . and the next big psychological milestone – a $40 million pot – is just weeks away, barring a winner.

□ The jackpot growth of $1.6 million seen in the three draw periods beginning with the draw last Halloween has not been matched since then, and typically has been about one-half as much.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot continues to reign as the largest up for grabs since the matrix was revised in May 2014, topping the $25.5 million jackpot of October 14, 2017. This jackpot is the largest available in Indiana in almost 12 years (having topped the $34.50 million jackpot hit on February 18, 2012 and a similar-sized jackpot that was won on October 30, 2010), but still significantly lags the record $54.5 million collected on November 7, 2007. Second place is a closer target: $42.0 million (won on June 5, 1999). The current jackpot has been growing since February 10, 2018, so it has now gone unclaimed for almost 16 months.

□ When the jackpot exceeded $35 million, internet users saw a ramping up of web ads promoting the new bottom line, but those ads seemed to have backed off since.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot ranked as the nation's fourth-largest domestic jackpot from the $24.2 million December 19 draw until January 2, trailing the two multistate draw games and California's SuperLotto Plus . . . but after the California jackpot was hit, the Hoosier Lotto jackpot was third domestically, and the top non-multistate game from January 24 until the draw dated April 10. That's when the Golden State game posted a $34 million jackpot compared to Indiana's $33.7 million stake - illustrating the power of $1 million increments in each draw, sometimes five times as much as Indiana was offering each time out. For the June 1 draw, the California jackpot hit $49.0 million to Indiana's $38.6 million.

● Shelby County has landed more economic development investment - $645 million - in the past seven months than during any comparable period in the county in living memory . . . and that's even before what we expect will be as much as $100 million or so in expansion of Indiana Grand Racing & Casino to accommodate live table games, and perhaps double that for a potential new hotel that - if constructed - would not be a low-budget property given the Caesars Entertainment Corporation vision for Indiana Grand to become a destination venue, and one which can be tied into sporting events and concerts in Indianapolis for VIPs and top-tier Caesars Rewards patrons.

□ The additional local outside investment is also paying dividends for Indiana Grand. A new ethanol plant being built - POET Biorefining Shelbyville - helped the city build out a new $2.5 million water line that should help ensure that water service to Indiana Grand is not interrupted again as the property experienced in March due to a water main break.

IN Horse Racing & Racinos

● Caesars Entertainment Corporation launches its new Empire of Hope program, designed to help raise awareness and funding for the care of horses after their racing careers are over. Developed with support from accredited racehorse aftercare programs, Empire of Hope will directly assist efforts to relocate, rehabilitate, and repurpose retired horses. "Empire of Hope is a direct reflection of the appreciation and pride we have for the horses that participate in Caesars' racing program," explains Rick Moore, the veteran vice president and general manager of racing at Harrah's Hoosier Park. "Our equine athletes are the stars of our sport and we want to ensure that when they retire, they are placed in productive and loving environments to live out a long and healthy life."

□ Horses that compete at the Caesars racing properties range in age from two through 14; they retire on their 15th birthday, and the cost to relocate, rehabilitate, and repurpose these equine athletes can run as high as several thousand dollars per horse. Through Empire of Hope, Caesars will provide funding and support to accredited non-profit racehorse aftercare organizations, including Thoroughbred Aftercare Alliance and Standardbred Transition Alliance.

□ Empire of Hope will be launched at four of the Caesars racing properties: HP and Indiana Grand in Indiana, as well as Harrah's Louisiana Downs in Bossier City, Louisiana, and Harrah's Philadelphia. Tasked with a goal to raise $30,000, Empire of Hope activities will range from food and drink specials to entertainment and promotional activities. Each property has designed numerous ways to accept donations and raise funds during the weekend of Saturday, July 20 and Sunday, July 21.

Donut dynamic growth in whole

New population data shows recent trends continue, North Lake down

For a second consecutive year, Whitestown (Boone County) and Westfield (Hamilton County) top the list of Indiana's fastest-growing communities among those with a population of at least 5,000 residents, according to estimates released by the U.S. Census Bureau and analyzed by the Indiana Business Research Center (IBRC) at Indiana University's Kelley School of Business.

The two Indianapolis-area suburbs both grew by roughly 5.2%, marking the eighth straight year in which Whitestown takes home the title of the state's fastest-growing locale. Aided by major investments in the logistics industry (Amazon and others), Whitestown's population has almost tripled over this span, from 3,132 in 2010 to 8,627 in 2018. Effective community planning and development efforts have enticed people to reside there, as the town has avoided many of the problems that rapid topsy-turvy development could cause. Westfield has seen strong growth based in part from ancillary development surrounding its Grand Park youth sports complex that is now also home to the training camp of the Indianapolis Colts.

Other fast-growing communities identified by IBRC demographers include the Town of St. John in Lake County (4.9% growth in 2018 as residents move south within the county), as well as Avon (4.4%) and Plainfield (4.3%) in Hendricks County, also benefiting from investments by the logistics industry.

In all, 17 of the state's 20 fastest-growing communities are found in either the Indianapolis donut area or the Indiana portion of the Chicago metro area, particularly in south Lake County. Outside these areas, Westville in LaPorte County (2.4%), Auburn in DeKalb County (1.7%) and Goshen in Elkhart County (1.7%) set the pace for the state in 2018.

In terms of numeric change, Indiana's two largest cities posted the state's most sizeable gains, with Indianapolis adding 5,235 residents in 2018, and Fort Wayne growing its population by 2,178 people. A trio of Hamilton County communities – Westfield (2,046 increase) Fishers (up by 1,679) and Carmel (adding 1,521 residents) – round out the state's top five largest gains.

The top 10 cities in terms of 2018 population are led by Indianapolis – the nation's 17th-largest city in 2018, settling in just behind Charlotte, North Carolina (872,498), and ahead of Seattle, Washington (744,955). Fort Wayne's population ranks as the 77th largest city in the United States. A majority (12) of Indiana's 20 largest cities posted a population gain in 2018.

Rank	City	2018 Population	Growth/Loss vs. 2017
(1)	Indianapolis	867,125	5,235
(2)	Fort Wayne	267,633	2,178
(3)	Evansville	117,963	(- 325)
(4)	South Bend	101,860	(- 108)
(5)	Carmel	93,510	1,521
(6)	Fishers	93,362	1,679
(7)	Bloomington	84,981	85
(8)	Hammond	75,795	(- 623)
(9)	Gary	75,282	(- 599)

Lottery, IGT working on big e-changes

This could never have happened just four years ago, but our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, tells readers to expect IGT Indiana, LLC to present an action plan to the State Lottery Commission of Indiana for online or interactive lottery – what the industry refers to as iLottery – and rapid-selection monitor games.

Monitor games are offered as often as every three minutes, seven days a week and include not only Keno, but also bingo and computer-simulated sporting events at bars and restaurants where players place their bets and then watch the outcome unfold in real time on a screen. iLottery platforms allow players to play the equivalent of digital scratch-off tickets and make online purchases of traditional draw games like Powerball.

IGT has completed a comprehensive evaluation of the viability of monitor games and is in the process of wrapping up a similar study of online options. Expansion would open huge long-term growth potential. The action plan will cover both iLottery and monitor games, and should be presented to the Commission for consideration during FY 2020 once the iLottery study is complete. The action plan is expected to address timelines, tech requirements, game types, prize structure and payouts, legal/regulatory issues, capital investment, marketing, and staffing needs.

The new numbers show that most Hoosiers live in cities or towns, according to Matt Kinghorn, IBRC's senior demographic analyst.

Kinghorn finds that just over one-third of the state's population lived in a city with a population of at least 50,000 in 2018, while 20% of Hoosiers lived in an incorporated place of between 10,000 and 50,000 residents, and another 12% lived in a city or town with fewer than 10,000 residents.

In all, two-thirds of Indiana's 6.67 million residents in 2018 lived in incorporated places, while the remaining 2.2 million Hoosier residents lived in unincorporated areas. Indiana's cities and towns as a group accounted for 79% of the state's total population growth from 2017 to 2018.

Even as several of the state's fastest growing communities are found on the Indiana side of Chicagoland, the same area is also home to two of the state's most rapidly shrinking metros, as the cities of Hammond, Gary, and East Chicago have each declined in population in every year since the 2010 Census.

On a countywide basis, of the 17 counties with population of at least 100,000 residents, declines occurred in 2018 in Lake, Delaware, Vanderburgh, and Vigo counties. Of the 19 counties with fewer than 20,000 residents, a majority actually grew compared to 2017. The eight that shrank were Fountain, Vermillion, Tipton, Newton, Pulaski, Blackford, Union, and Ohio counties.

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

- The Hill reports that "Greg Pence's congressional campaign spent almost $45,000 at Trump properties in both 2018 and 2019, more than any other member of Congress. This year, Pence's campaign paid for a reception at the hotel in early January, just as he was being sworn in to office. It also spent more than $4,400 in lodging expenses in February and March. 'The Trump Hotel is convenient and [the] level of service is great. We plan to do more events there in the future,' said Kyle Robertson, Pence's campaign spokesman. Pence now has an apartment in Washington where he stays when Congress is in session." Robertson, of course formerly worked for Rep. Pence's brother.

IN Legislative Races . . .

- The Indiana House Democratic Caucus wastes no time in seeking to raise cash based on the pair of Indiana abortion case rulings made by the Supreme Court of the United States on Tuesday . . . also likely previewing what may be their top 2020 campaign theme.

□ Rep. Sue Errington (D) writes that "women's rights are under attack by Republican controlled State Legislatures. Just today, the Supreme Court decided not to rule on parts of HB 1337, an extreme bill that attacks women's rights and was signed into law in 2016 by then Governor Mike Pence. The far-right Republican State Legislature continues to waste tax-payers money by passing unconstitutional laws that get overturned in the courts. We should trust women to make their own choices about their own bodies, not politicians. We know that the only way to stop the Republican anti-women agenda is to elect more common sense Democrats to the State House."

- The Indiana Republican Party will convene a caucus to fill the vacancy in HD 93 created by the pending resignation of Rep. David Frizzell (R), effective May 31, 2019. The caucus will be held at 6:30 p.m. on Tuesday, June 4, at the Perry Township Government Center in Indianapolis. The vote advantage should be to Marion County (we count 27 eligible precinct committee people from Marion County and 17 from Johnson County), but Johnson County has shown that it can remain united and there may be more Indianapolis candidates to split the vote.

□ Former Orr Administration communications advisor Dollyne Pettingill Sherman (R) has registered an exploratory committee for an HD 93 bid. Dr. Phil Borst (R), a former Indianapolis City-County Council member, and the chair of the Indiana Horse Racing Commission, is her campaign chair. Sherman has been a close campaign advisor to U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) and has honchoed Indiana Society of Chicago annual dinner activities for the past several years . . . Shawn Gardner (R), executive vice president at Eleven Fifty Academy in Fishers is also looking to make the race. He's a retired Army Ranger with lots of overseas service, Indiana National Guard administrative experience (and is former president of the President of the National Guard Association of Indiana), and a master's degree from Northwestern University . . . look for Megan Dugan (R) to also cast her hat into the ring. She was unsuccessful in a caucus bid last November to take over the Indianapolis City-County Council District 23 seat vacated by Scott Kreider (R), and won by Dant Advocacy lobbyist Danielle Coulter (R) . . . added to the mix is Joey Mulinaro (R), a Roncalli and UIndy alum who is digital content manager for 1070-AM The Fan, a podcast, and video personality, and co-host of the Jersey Johnny Show every Sunday on The Fan. He's tight with veterans organizations . . . Melinda Griesemer (R) is another Johnson County candidate . . . and we hear the names of Jim Sullivan (R) - who seems to be picking up a chunk of support - and Robert Turner (R) as well.

IN the Presidential Race . . .

- South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) is prepping a major cash push to end the second quarter on a bang, seeking to remain a top-tier candidate on that metric and showing that he has continued traction after his meteoric rise (or burst). POLITICO says he is pushing his deep-pocket supporters "to juice his campaign's fundraising with a new bundling program Members at different levels of the program pledge to raise anywhere from $25,000 to $250,000 for Buttigieg over the course of the primary campaign and receive special perks, including briefings with the candidate and senior campaign staff" . . . only the two white guys in their late 70s lead Mayor Pete (albeit by substantial margins and there is a substantial drop off to his third place tie with U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA)) among Democratic primary voters in Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina, and Nevada, according to the latest Morning Consult Political Intelligence report, based on its 16,000+ interviews with registered voters in late May. Buttigieg numbers are up by one percentage point. He is the second choice of 28% of Biden voters; 18% of Harris backers, and 14% of Warren supporters . . . Mayor Pete schedules a June 3 (Monday evening) MSNBC town hall even hosted by Chris Matthews . . . Sen. Warren will be in Fort Wayne Wednesday night for her own MSNBC town hall event, following stop in Elkhart.

IN Political News . . .

- LaPorte County Democratic Party Chair Jim Kimmel resigned from his post after 2½ years.

● The Starke County Republican Party selects Dave Kesvornas, the sole candidate, as their new party chair during a caucus Tuesday, following the resignation of Brenda Stanojevic.

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) adds his name to the list of 21 Senate cosponsors for the “STOP Surprise Medical Bills Act” authored by U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) and five other members of the Bipartisan Senate Working Group on surprise medical billing.

● Inside Defense reports that the House Committee on Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense, chaired by U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky (D), is proposing to spend $85 million to improve hypersonics research . . . and U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) led an effort by the rest of the Indiana delegation to “elevate the role of academic research in tackling hypersonic weapons by establishing a university consortium to support U.S. military efforts to expedite testing, evaluation and acquisition. A new “Hypersonics Capability Development” line-item in the budget would “charge a university consortium with supporting DOD efforts to expedite testing, evaluation, and acquisition of hypersonic weapons systems, and to coordinate current and future research, development, test, and evaluation programs across the Department of Defense.” The trade publication notes that “The proposed university consortium provision was spearheaded by an Indiana delegation led by Rep. Jim Banks,” and their letter to Rep. Visclosky asserted that “America needs efficient and effective coordination of government, industry and academic resources to identify, research and mature technologies for America’s hypersonic systems portfolio.” The Banks “provision called for not only a university consortium but also a Joint Hypersonics Transition Office, which the draft appropriations bill does not mention. ‘We believe the operational priority and technical complexity of hypersonics requires a dedicated organization with the institutional knowledge and expertise to coordinate Defense Wide hypersonic technology maturation and development to transition more common and affordable technologies, materials and architectures to the services,’ the lawmakers argued in [their] letter. The Indiana lawmakers are eyeing research at Purdue University and Notre Dame University which are home to two of the nation’s three Quiet Mach 6 wind tunnels.”

□ Rep. Banks told Inside Defense, “It is my sense that to elevate the importance of hypersonics, a Joint Hypersonics Technology Office would help solve the issue and create more urgency than what exists currently. Furthermore, because of the university partnership, allowing DOD to select a university to manage a consortium of other universities doing hypersonic research is right in Purdue University’s wheelhouse. So, that would be part of this effort as well. With Notre Dame nearby and Purdue, with Indiana University and Crane [Naval Surface Warfare Center] you have a unique set up in our state that doesn’t exist anywhere else in the country.” The publication notes that “Crane Naval Surface Warfare Center is supporting the Navy’s Strategic Systems Program office, which this fall is slated to assume long-term custody of the Conventional Strike Program – the marquee hypersonic strike technology development effort – from the Office of the Secretary of Defense. The Navy and Air Force have tapped Purdue and Notre Dame to develop a next generation of high-mach-number wind tunnels. Dan DeLaurentis, director of the Institute for Global Security and Defense Innovation at Purdue University, said the two schools have inked an agreement that calls for researchers from the two schools to collaborate in support of building a Mach 8 wind tunnel at Purdue in two to three years followed by a Mach 10 wind tunnel a year or two later. ‘This is not a construction project, this is a research project,’ said DeLaurentis. ‘It is unknown how to properly design and what are the features necessary to make these very finely tuned instruments work and achieve that quiet capability at the higher mach numbers.’ This summer, senior Pentagon officials involved in the many dimensions of the U.S. military’s hypersonic technology development effort are headed to Indiana for a three-day conference at Purdue University sponsored by the National Defense Industrial Association The July 31 to Aug. 2 conference will include one day of unclassified meetings followed by two days of classified events.”

● U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) poses this question of the week to his constituents: “Do you support encouraging small businesses to offer retirement savings programs to their employees?”

● U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) joins U.S. Rep. Brendan Boyle (D-PA) to introduce the “Animal Freedom from Testing, Experimentation and Research (AFTER) Act.” The bipartisan bill would direct all federal agencies to develop and maintain a policy allowing for the adoption or other non-laboratory placement of tens of thousands of dogs, cats, primates, rabbits, and other regulated animals no longer needed for research in federal labs. “Animals should always be treated humanely, including when they are used in taxpayer-funded laboratory research,” Rep. Walorski says. “When these animals are no longer needed for testing, federal agencies should have a plan in place to safely and humanely relocate them. The bipartisan AFTER Act will ensure agencies make good faith efforts to relocate animals to loving homes, rescues, or reputable sanctuaries, such as the primate sanctuary located in Indiana’s 2nd District.” The Peaceable Primate Sanctuary, a non-profit refuge for more than 30 baboons and other primates retired from biomedical research, is located in Winamac. Rep. Walorski has championed efforts to reduce what she deems as unnecessary government testing on dogs and other animals. She recently helped introduce the “PUPPERS Act” (H.R. 1155) to end certain taxpayer-funded U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs experiments on dogs.

IN State Circles . . .

- The Indiana State Fair Commission proposes a new rule “to prohibit certain activities at the fairgrounds and to provide for enforcement, including eviction and exclusion,” and, if we’re reading it properly, it seems to bar use of those ubiquitous scooters.

- The Supreme Court of the United States will not make Indiana the test case on abortion rights, and makes it less likely that it will find a reason soon (at least in a presidential election year) to overturn its abortion rights ruling in Roe v. Wade. What may have been surprising to all sides was that the Indiana law – and probably any other – will not be on the docket during a volatile 2020 election year . . . and both pro-life and pro-choice forces walk away with at least a partial win.

□ In a summary reversal – a procedure in which the justices bypass full briefing and oral argument on the merits – the Court finally took up – and disposed of – Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-483. The initial Indiana case up for appeal from the Seventh Circuit was before the Court for the 15th time in conference for decision on a grant of a writ of certiorari, more appearances than any other case on the SCOTUS conference docket this year – and perhaps ever. This case involved a challenge to provisions of the Pence-era HEA 1337-2016, a law that would: (1) require health-care facilities to dispose of fetal remains in the same manner as other human remains, i.e., by burial or cremation; and (2) prohibit abortions motivated solely by the race, sex, or disability of the fetus and require physicians to inform patients of the prohibition.

□ The Supreme Court sided with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit on part of its intermediate appellate ruling, but not on the other. Pro-life advocates were gratified with the Court (on a presumed 7-2 vote in a per curiam ruling with justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Sonia Sotomayor dissenting) upholding the requirement that clinics bury or cremate the remains of a fetus as they would any other human remains, finding that the requirement did not infringe upon a woman’s right to choose to terminate her pregnancy. The Court observed that Planned Parenthood of Indiana/Kentucky and counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana never contended that the Indiana law would impose an “undue burden” on a woman’s right to have an abortion, so the “rational basis” came into play, and all the State needed to do was to show that the requirement was rationally related to a legitimate governmental interest. While the Seventh Circuit found that the law failed to overcome even this minimally deferential test, the Supreme Court determined that government does indeed have an interest in seeing that fetal remains are properly disposed, and the law was rationally related to that interest, “even if it is not perfectly tailored to that end.”

□ Pro-choice advocates, however, came away with the win on the more important matter. The Supreme Court upheld the Seventh Circuit’s “non-discrimination” ruling that invalidated the law banning abortions based on the race or gender of the fetus, or a diagnosis of disability – “eugenic abortions,” in the State’s vernacular. This concept was a key subject of Justice Clarence Thomas’ 20-page solo concurrence, 15 pages of which dealt with eugenics (five times as long as the per curiam opinion itself). The 2-1 Seventh Circuit panel ruling had found that the “non-discrimination” provisions “clearly violate well-established Supreme Court precedent and are therefore unconstitutional,” and the Seventh Circuit, sitting en banc, had split 4-4 on a request for reconsideration.

□ The justices threaded a very fine needle (as seen by Justice Ginsburg’s brief dissent in which she suggested her majority colleagues had applied the wrong test in the fetal remains component; “This case implicates the right of a woman to choose to have an abortion before viability and to obtain it without undue interference from the state,” she wrote), and seems to indicate a reluctance by even the socially conservative majority to re-litigate Roe v. Wade, despite a ruling earlier in the month that cast a blow to the doctrine of stare decisis, and seemed to indicate the Court’s willingness to back off from long-held precedent. Upholding the Seventh Circuit decision on the substantive abortion ban would seem to cast doubt on the Court being amenable to the more far-reaching “fetal heartbeat” laws, but as Justice Thomas forewarns, “The Court’s decision to allow further percolation should not be interpreted as agreement” with the Seventh Circuit majority, and “Although the Court declines to wade into these issues today, we cannot avoid them forever.”

□ Justice Sotomayor indicated that she would have denied the State’s request for certiorari in its entirety and would thus have allowed the Seventh Circuit ruling striking down both provisions of the Indiana law to stand.

□ From the majority ruling: “This case, as litigated ... does not implicate our cases applying the undue burden test to abortion regulations,” and “Our opinion expresses no view on the merits of those challenges. Our opinion likewise expresses no view on the merits of the second question presented, i.e., whether Indiana may prohibit the knowing provision of sex-, race-, and disability- selective abortions by abortion providers. Only the Seventh Circuit has thus far addressed this kind of law. We follow our ordinary practice of denying petitions insofar as they raise legal issues that have not been considered by additional Courts of Appeals.”

□ Left in limbo by the Supremes: Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-1019, the appeal of a constitutional challenge to the requirement of ultrasound as part of informed consent at least 18 hours before an abortion (also added by HEA 1337-2016, which Indiana Right to Life refers to as the Dignity for the Unborn Law). This particular case has already been on the docket at three successive May conferences of the justices, and was presumably to be relisted for May 30, but SCOTUSblog reports Thursday the case is “now held,” and is not on that conference docket.

□ We’re also waiting for action by Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana now that the State of Indiana has filed its response to the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana in Bernard, M.D., v. Indiv. Members of the Indiana Medical Licensing Bd., et al., No. 1:19-cv- 1660-SEB-DML. This is the challenge to HEA 1211-2019, a law banning dismemberment abortions (which those who support availability of the second trimester procedure label by the medical term “dilation & evacuation”). Since the initial ACLU motion sought a preliminary injunction against the law that would prevent it from its planned July 1 implementation, a ruling should be imminent.

- The Department of Child Services seeks a vendor to provide organizational design services for DCS Child Welfare. The services will be in support of DCS’ plan to replace the current child welfare information and case management system, Management Gateway for Indiana’s Kids (MaGIK), with a Comprehensive Child Welfare Information System (CCWIS) compliant solution.

□ The vendor selected for this contract may not bid on the planned CCWIS Design, Development, and Implementation (DDI) RFP.

● The State is in the field searching for a vendor (or vendors) to satisfy the State's need for "Marketing, Public Relations, Advertising and Media Buy Services" for all state agencies. The Indiana Department of Administration seeks to establish a vendor pool from which state agencies may draw upon for the development and execution of new marketing and public relations campaigns; the enhancement of established marketing and public relations campaigns; intricate web design; graphic design; social media; and planning and execution of advertising services.

□ Look for the services to be deployed on an as-needed basis largely in furtherance of public health (like Healthy Indiana Plan enrollment) and safety issues, tourism programs, and Next Level Jobs registrants.

□ In the aggregate, the State typically spends approximately $14 million annually on such services. Approximately one-third of this figure consists of federal funding. The Asher Agency of Fort Wayne was awarded the last such contract, about a decade ago, but the number of allowable extensions has passed, so the contract is being re-bid by the State.

● Several Republican attorneys general nationally issued news releases touting an agreement reached in the nation's first-ever multistate federal lawsuit involving a Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) data breach, but not Indiana's OAG, despite being a party to the case, and filing a recent high-profile lawsuit against Equifax over a data breach accompanied by strong publicity . . . and being the lead plaintiff for the states in State of Indiana, et al. v. Medical Informatics Engineering, Inc., et al., No. 3:18-cv-00969-RLM-MGG, filed in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana in South Bend by Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) in December.

□ The 16-state agreement comes following a lawsuit filed in December 2018 in Indiana against Medical Informatics Engineering, Inc. (MIE) of Fort Wayne, a web-based electronic health records exchange. MIE pays $900,000 to the 16 states (Indiana's share is $174,745.29) and a $100,000 fine to the Office for Civil Rights (OCR) of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, and agreed to take corrective action to settle potential HIPAA violations that includes a complete, enterprise-wide risk analysis. In July 2015, MIE filed a breach report with OCR following discovery that hackers used a compromised user ID and password to infiltrate one of MIE's servers containing names, mailing addresses, usernames, passwords and electronic protected health information (ePHI) of approximately 3.9 million people. According to OCR's investigation, MIE did not conduct a comprehensive risk analysis prior to the breach, and the hackers exploited several vulnerabilities at MIE at the time of the data breach, including poor password and security management protocols. HIPAA rules require entities to perform an accurate and thorough assessment of the potential risks and vulnerabilities to the confidentiality, integrity, and availability of an entity's ePHI.

● The Indiana Supreme Court schedules oral argument for June 28 in State v. Timbs, No. 27S04-1702-MI-00070. Should this caption sound familiar, it's because this is the big national case involving excessive fines via forfeiture that is now back to Indiana for final resolution.

□ The State filed a civil action seeking forfeiture of a $42,000 Land Rover owned by Tyson Timbs, who was convicted of dealing in a controlled substance - about $225 worth - and conspiracy to commit theft. The State alleged Timbs had used the vehicle to transport heroin. The Grant County Superior Court entered judgment for Timbs (who was represented by the Institute for Justice), finding forfeiture of the Land Rover - purchased with proceeds of a life insurance policy for his late father - would constitute an excessive fine under the Eighth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The Court of Appeals affirmed the denial of forfeiture. State v. Timbs, 62 N.E.3d 472 (Ind. Ct. App. 2016), vacated. The Indiana Supreme Court reversed, holding the Supreme Court of the United States had never enforced the Excessive Fines Clause against the states, and opting not to do so in this matter. State v. Timbs, 84 N.E.3d 1179 (Ind. 2017), vacated. The Court also held the State had proven its entitlement to forfeiture under the Indiana statute authorizing the State to seize a vehicle used to transport a controlled substance for the purpose of engaging in illegal drug trafficking. The Supreme Court of the United States granted certiorari and reversed (following a flood of amicus curiae briefs from business groups concerned about excessive fines being applied to them going forward), holding the Eighth Amendment's Excessive Fines Clause is applicable to the states under the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause. Timbs v. Indiana, 139 S.Ct. 682 (2019). The U.S. Supreme Court remanded the case back to the Indiana Supreme Court for further proceedings consistent with its opinion.

□ Meanwhile, the Supremes in April held oral argument in a different drug dog-alert case, Hodges v. State, No. 18A-MI-00078. After a drug-detecting K9 officer alerted on a package Michael Hodges was shipping to California, a police detective obtained a search warrant, and discovered almost $61,000 in cash in the package. After the cash was removed from the package and hidden in a clean room, the K9 again alerted to the odor of controlled substances. The State seized the cash and the Marion County Superior Court issued an order permitting it to be turned over to the federal government for forfeiture proceedings. The Court of Appeals reversed, following its opinion in Bowman v. State, 81 N.E.3d 1127 (Ind. Ct. App. 2017), modified on denial of reh'g, trans. denied, cert. denied, to conclude that the seizure was not supported by probable cause. Hodges v. State, 114 N.E.3d 525 (Ind. Ct. App. 2018), vacated.

□ The Supreme Court granted a petition to transfer and assumed jurisdiction over the case, which could presumably overturn Bowman (the similar asset forfeiture case which we covered for you closely, and which the Office of the Attorney General unsuccessfully sought review by the Supreme Court of the United States).

□ And there's yet another twist to this asset forfeiture/drug search litany. A May 23 ruling in Lewis v. Putnam Co. Sheriff's Dept., No. 18A-MI-01869, a Court of Appeals panel led by Judge John Baker – the same judge who authored the Bowman opinion – unanimously agreed that the Putnam County Sheriff's Department must pay back more than $77,000 in cash seized from an Arizona man, Alvin Lewis, after he was pulled over as part of a routine traffic stop in February 2018. Here, the sheriff's deputy told Lewis he would merely get a warning but, because of some inconsistent answers provided by Lewis, the deputy decided to conduct a dog sniff of Lewis's vehicle. After the dog alerted, the deputy searched Lewis's vehicle and found more than $77,000 in cash – and two digital scales. Lewis denied that the money was his. No criminal charges were filed, but the State seized the cash and filed a motion to turn the money over to the federal government, which the trial court granted. Lewis appealed, arguing that the search was unlawful and that, even if the search was lawful, the seizure of the cash was unlawful because the State failed to show a nexus between the cash and any crime.

□ “In this case,” writes Judge Baker, “there is no evidence whatsoever that a crime occurred. No drugs were found. The State did not bother to test the scales or the cash for residue, so no drug residue was found. No drug paraphernalia was found. The State insisted at oral argument that while it is ‘unclear what the crime is,’ there must have been a crime committed in the context of the possession of this much cash. We think this argument goes several steps too far. The plain language of the statute requires the State to prove that the money is directly related to some sort of criminal activity. Here, there is a complete dearth of evidence in that regard.”

□ Finding that the seizure of the cash was unlawful and that the trial court erred by granting the motion for turnover, the veteran Court of Appeals panel reversed and remanded the case, with an interesting explicit instruction and some chastisement: “Unfortunately, Lewis's money was prematurely turned over to the federal government, which is now in possession of it. Given the unusual circumstances of this case, especially the fact that there is no evidence whatsoever that a crime was committed, we do not believe that it is fair to require Lewis to undertake the process of retrieving his money from the federal government. Therefore, we reverse and remand with instructions that the State reimburse Lewis instantly; the State may then choose to try to recoup that money from the federal government.” A Baker footnote in the Bowman case proved important, and he added another one here: “We strongly encourage law enforcement officers to abide by state law with respect to forfeiture and turnover proceedings.”

● On May 23 in Tanoos v. State, No. 19A-CR-1086, the bribery case involving a former long-time Vigo County School Corporation superintendent we told you about last week on our front page, Chief Deputy Attorney General Aaron Negangard filed a request for withdrawal of the appearance of Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) as counsel of record for the State in this criminal appeal because “the Office of the Attorney General has identified a potential conflict of interest with the Attorney General continuing as counsel of record.

This is because Attorney General Hill, in his personal capacity, has retained the law firm that also represents the Defendant in this matter. That retainer is for representation related to a matter that is wholly unrelated to the instant case, yet this fact counsels the withdrawal of Attorney General Hill's appearance to safeguard the State's interest in being represented by conflict-free counsel.” Jim Voyles is an attorney for General Hill in his defense against legal misconduct charges pending before the Indiana Supreme Court. Coincidentally, Voyles' co-counsel in the Hill disciplinary matter is Donald Lundberg, the contract ethics counsel to the Hill OAG.

□ In our front-page story last week, we told you how the brief filed by Voyles, raises questions about gubernatorial conduct with respect to his acceptance of private aircraft flights from a casino operator under what Voyles contend are the same standards applied to General Hill.

□ Chief Deputy Negangard has entered his appearance in the Tanoos matter, and has been designated the counsel of record in lieu of the Attorney General – together with any other deputy attorney general with an appearance in this matter.

● With the miles of off-road vehicle trails on approximately 1,400 acres of former surface and underground coal mine land at Redbird State Recreation Area closed to the public for construction, renovation, and upgrades from March 11 to early Summer 2019, you can't help but notice the increase in severe off-road vehicle incidents across the state in recent weeks involving people of assorted ages. While most appear to have been in largely rural areas responded to by Department of Natural Resources conservation officers, some have also occurred in suburban venues.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) joined a bipartisan cadre of 46 other attorneys general across the country in a letter under the imprimatur of the National Association of Attorneys General asking Congress – for a third time since 2013 – to amend the Communications Decency Act in order to better enable state and local authorities to protect citizens online and take appropriate action against criminal acts. The Communication Decency Act of 1996 (CDA) was designed to encourage the growth of the internet by promoting free expression, particularly on online message boards. The Act was intended to allow companies that sponsor message boards to remain immune to repercussions from inappropriate posts, but, due to a misinterpretation of Section 230 of the Act, some federal court opinions have interpreted it so broadly that individuals and services that knowingly aid and profit from illegal activity have evaded prosecution, the AGs explain. “We must do our best to protect our citizens, enforce the law and penalize violators,” General Hill said. “Congress must hold internet service providers accountable.” CDA Section 230 expressly exempts prosecution of federal crimes from the safe harbor, but “addressing criminal activity cannot be relegated to federal enforcement alone simply because the activity occurs online,” the letter states. “Attorneys General must be allowed to address these crimes themselves and fulfill our primary mandate to protect our citizens and enforce their rights.”

● In an order issued Tuesday, the Indiana Supreme Court sets the final hearing in the disciplinary matter involving Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) for October 21 - 25 in the Supreme Court Conference Room. A final pre-hearing conference will be convened on October 16 (3:00 p.m.; location to be announced).

□ Pre-hearing briefs will be due on or before seven days prior to the final hearing date. Witness and exhibit lists must be exchanged on or before September 6. Hearing Officer Myra Selby, who, more than just about any other hearing officer ever appointed, is operating with the full faith and credit of the entire Court, cautions the parties that “Motions to Dismiss or dilatory motions are not permitted. Any other motions, if any, are to be filed by October 4, 2019.”

● The Indiana Board of Licensure for Professional Geologists will hold a public hearing June 7 on a proposed rule increasing fees for licensing and renewals. The application fee will more than double – increase from $70 to $160 – but include the first three years of fees for the new licensee. The three-year renewal fee will also increase by a factor of 2½ times from $60 to $150. The Board asserts that “This increase is needed for Indiana LPG program solvency. The program is self-sustaining and with no increase, there will be insufficient funds to continue the program past fiscal year 2022.”

● The Indiana Department of Revenue slates its 2019 Annual Public Hearing for Tuesday, June 18 at 10:00 a.m. in the Indiana Government Center - South, Conference Room C.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) joined a bipartisan group of 52 state and territorial attorneys general under the aegis of the National Association of Attorneys General in urging the U.S. Department of Education (USDOE) to automatically forgive the student loans of veterans who became totally and permanently disabled in connection with their military service.

□ The letter calls on U.S. Secretary of Education Betsy DeVos to develop a process to automatically discharge the student loans of veterans determined by the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs to be eligible for such relief. While the automatic discharge process is in development, the letter proposes that USDOE halt debt collection efforts targeting disabled veterans and clear their credit reports of any negative reporting related to their student loans. “The men and women who have risked their lives to serve our country deserve the best care because of their service,” General Hill said. “If a veteran is no longer able to pay their student loans due to a disability obtained while in service, they should under no circumstance be required to pay back student loans.” Last year, USDOE identified more than 42,000 veterans as eligible for student loan relief due to a service-related total and permanent disability. Fewer than 9,000 of those veterans had applied to have their loans discharged by April 2018 and more than 25,000 had student loans in default. The letter explains that an automatic discharge process that gives individual veterans an opportunity to opt out for personal reasons “would eliminate unnecessary paperwork burdens and ensure that all eligible disabled veterans can receive a discharge.”

● Speaking back home to 18WJTS in Jasper, Senate Majority Floor Leader Mark Messmer (R) explains how HEA 1010-219, the new state law that eliminates state taxation on military pensions, came to be after late-session uncertainty. “We were down to the last week in those Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday morning meetings with the governor (and the) House and Senate,” said Sen. Messmer. “My Senate budget guy was the one fighting it. Finally, I pushed my own budget guy enough to get him to concede on that. Otherwise it would be two more years, and it’s still not done.”

● Indiana is not particularly well-prepared to respond to a public health emergency, but even though we remain below average in national preparedness rankings released this month, we have improved our status over the past two years. The National Health Security Preparedness Index, first assembled in 2013 under the aegis of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and now compiled annually as a collaborative effort involving more than 30 organizations funded by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, measures state readiness to respond to large-scale public health disasters, including severe weather, terrorism and disease outbreaks.

□ The index finds Indiana’s overall preparedness level at 6.3 for 2018, a 3.3% increase from 2013, but significantly below the national average of 6.7 (out of a possible 10). Our 2017 score was 6.2. Among our neighboring states, only Kentucky (6.7) meets the national average. Illinois (6.6) and Michigan (6.5) fare better than Indiana, but we outperform Ohio’s 6.0 level. Indiana’s largest improvement occurred in the Health Security Surveillance domain, which increased by 13.6% between 2013-18. Health security levels in 2018 declined in two domains, with the largest decline (- 2.5%) occurring in the area of Community Planning & Engagement. Health security levels in 2018 significantly exceeded the national average in one domain: Health Security Surveillance. Health security levels in 2018 were significantly below the national average in four domains: Community Planning & Engagement, Incident & Information Management, Healthcare Delivery, and Countermeasure Management. The state’s highest health security level in 2018 came in the domain of Health Security Surveillance with a value of 9.2, while the lowest health security level for Indiana in 2018 was found in Community Planning & Engagement with a value of 3.9.

IN the Economy

● Wondering why Howard County jumped to first place in unemployment rate statewide in April after largely being in good shape with respect to unemployment – save another anomalous first place finish within the last year? Seems that the timing of a pair of temporary (one-week) planned line-change layoffs at a local Chrysler transmission plant fell smack dab in the middle of the timeframe in which the Bureau of Labor Statistics calculates unemployment for the month, so there is no special issue of concern for Howard County or Kokomo.

● A new economic impact study by John Dunham & Associates finds that the beer industry contributes $5.5 billion annually to Indiana’s economy – and supports 35,844 jobs in the state. Jointly commissioned by the National Beer Wholesalers Association and the Beer Institute, the study shows that the 35,844 jobs “impacted by” the beer industry in Indiana account for $1.5 billion each year in wages and benefits. The industry also generates $680 million annually in business and personal ($490,254,500) and consumption ($190,147,400) taxes.

● A new report from the U.S. Department of Agriculture finds that honey production in Indiana during 2018 was only 322,000 pounds, down by 23% from 2017 production figures (even as honey prices rose by 14¢ per pound over the year and global honey prices are at their highest levels in years). Indiana’s ~ 7,000 honey-producing colonies generated an average of 46 pounds in 2018 vs. 52 pounds in the prior year.

● Following three consecutive months of decline in the adjustable Indiana gas tax that ran through February, the rate now grows for a fourth consecutive month – and while the rate of growth is down from the 2.3¢ April-to-May increase, the bottom line of 16.1¢ per gallon is the highest rate going back to November. And while the rate of increase slowed over the month, the rate of increase has now grown by at least a penny for three consecutive months for the first time since 2016. While we noted earlier in the year that the tax in each of the first four months of 2019 was lower than it was during any month in 2018, that has taken a turn, and the May and June rates are higher than the corresponding months in 2018 as we head into the Summer driving season. Since a close look at the numbers also suggests that the taxes during the first quarter (and initial four months of a calendar year) are typically a shade lower than they tend to be throughout the final three quarters of a given calendar year, what we said a month back about Hoosiers needing to brace themselves for an expensive year holds true.

□ The average tax for the first six months of 2019 was 13.07¢ vs 14.16¢ for the same January - June period in 2018, and just about spot-on with the 2015 six-month numbers. The first-half figures in the past five years really don't offer much in the way of guidance.

January - June Average Tax	2019	2018	2017	2016	2015
	13.1¢	14.2¢	12.4¢	10.1¢	13.0¢
Month	2019	2018	2017	2016	2015
January	12.0¢	13.6¢	11.6¢	10.0¢	15.2¢
February	11.0¢	14.0¢	13.1¢	10.0¢	10.9¢
March	11.4¢	13.8¢	11.7¢	8.0¢	11.8¢
April	12.8¢	13.3¢	12.4¢	9.5¢	12.9¢
May	15.1¢	14.4¢	12.9¢	10.9¢	13.1¢
June	16.1¢	15.9¢	12.9¢	12.3¢	14.3¢
July		16.7¢	12.8¢	14.1¢	15.8¢
August		16.2¢	11.9¢	12.5¢	15.9¢
September		16.1¢	12.5¢	11.3¢	14.1¢
October		15.8¢	13.4¢	12.0¢	14.1¢
November		16.1¢	12.8¢	12.2¢	13.4¢
December		14.4¢	14.3¢	11.4¢	12.2¢

□ For the period July 1, 2019 to June 30, 2020, the special fuel license tax bumps up by two cents to 49¢ per special fuel gallon and the gasoline license tax grows to 30¢ per gallon. Both grow by the highest amount under the statutory cap.

● The Indiana Finance Authority heads to market June 4 with $81,275,000 in State Revolving Fund (SRF) Program Bonds, Series 2019C (Green Bonds) and $18,570,000 in State Revolving Fund Program Bonds, Series 2019D (AMT) (Green Bonds). Maturities for both are 2023 - 2036. The Series D bonds are private activity bonds to finance water system improvements for the City of Greensburg.

□ Morgan Stanley is the lead manager with assistance from Wells Fargo Bank. Bank of New York Mellon Trust Company, N.A., is the trustee, and Ice Miller LLP is the bond counsel. Bingham Greenebaum Doll LLP is the SRF Program counsel and MWH Law Group LLP is disclosure co-counsel. PFM Financial Advisors LLP is municipal advisor for the SRF programs.

● New U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics numbers show that Tippecanoe County posted the nation's largest over-the-year wage gain in the fourth quarter of 2018 – a solid 15.1% hike in average weekly wages – largely attributable to significant growth in local high-tech industry hiring.

● #NoPlant19: Although the conventional prime planting “window” within which Hoosier farmers can maximize corn yields opens about April 20 and closes about May 10, continued wet fields meant that only one percent of the state's corn crop acreage had been planted as of April 21, according to U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) National Agricultural Statistics Service (NASS) estimates, and as of Race Day in Indianapolis, corn planting in Indiana was only 22% complete. We are tied with Ohio for the lowest percentage of corn acreage planted among the 18 states reviewed by USDA-NASS. Only 1.8 days were evaluated by USDA-NASS as being suitable for fieldwork by Hoosier farmers (versus six such days last year).

□ By comparison, Illinois had 35% of its corn in the ground and Iowa 76%, raising continued concerns about this year's corn crop given that these three states account for the bulk of the nation's corn crop. Across the past five years, Indiana's planting was typically 85% complete by Race Day, Illinois has been at 95%, and Iowa 96% complete.

□ At just 11% by May 26, Indiana also trails Illinois (14%) and Iowa (32%) in soybean planting completeness. We are well behind our 63% five-year average of planting.

● RE Journals reports on the first quarter 2019 Indianapolis multifamily report released by Berkadia which finds “residents have leased 3,271 apartment units in the Indianapolis area – much of these in the downtown – since March of 2018. That's a big increase from the 1,826 units absorbed during the preceding 12-month period. Builders are reacting to this demand, delivering 16,300 new apartment units in the Indianapolis metropolitan area since the beginning of 2013. Of this total, 2,790 have been added in the last four quarters. And that's just the start of the good news for this sector. Berkadia reported, too, that occupancy rose 40 basis points on a year-over-year basis, hitting 94 percent in March. The average effective apartment rent in March in the Indianapolis metropolitan area rose to $885 a month, up 4.1 percent from the same month a year earlier the Indianapolis multifamily market [is] on a hot streak that is showing no signs of cooling.”

● United Technologies Corporation, Pratt & Whitney Engines of Connecticut is awarded $201,915,947 for a modification to a Naval Air Systems Command contract for long-lead materials, parts, and components for Lot 14 F135 Propulsion systems for the F-35 Lightning II Joint Strike Fighter aircraft in support of the Air Force, Marine Corps, Navy, non-U.S. Department of Defense (non-U.S. DoD) participants; and Foreign Military Sales (FMS) customers. While two-thirds of the work will be performed in East Hartford, Connecticut, Indianapolis, is in line for next largest cut, 26.5%, to be completed at the end of the fiscal year . . . the Boeing Company is awarded $30,135,588 for a modification to a Naval Air Systems Command contract for Phase I design maturity, analysis and test planning for the Stand-off Land Attack Missile – Expanded Response (SLAM-ER) production line for the government of Saudi Arabia. In addition, this modification provides for the redesign of obsolete parts to replace obsolete, nearly obsolete or uneconomical parts to support SLAM-ER weapon system production and improve future sustainment. While almost 60% of the work will be performed in St. Louis, Indianapolis is in line for 13% of the work to be completed in July 2019 . . .

● EDM Americas of Indianapolis, a company that offers business process outsourcing and digital information lifecycle management solutions, plans to permanently lay off 88 workers by late July . . . a Woodcrest Manufacturing reorganization is expected to cost dozens of furniture manufacturing jobs in Peru.

● Magna Powertrain of America, an automotive parts and systems supplier, plans to invest $9.3 million to add new equipment in its 200,000 square-foot manufacturing MPT Muncie facility in Delaware County that will allow it to expand its drivetrain component operation. MAGNA Powertrain expects to create 50 new full-time jobs at an average wage above the county average for manufacturing, with the help of a 10-year business personal property tax abatement from the Delaware County Council . . . BNutty, a Portage-based producer and distributor of all-natural, artisanal peanut butter, is investing more than $1.9 million to expand its operations, leasing, renovating, and equipping a 16,000 square-foot food production center in the AmeriPlex at the Port business park in Portage, expecting to create up to 100 new jobs by 2021. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offers BNutty up to $500,000 in performance-based tax credits. The City of Portage approved additional incentives . . . General Motors Company plans to invest $24 million in its Fort Wayne pickup truck Assembly Plant, seeking to increase full-size truck production.

IN Transition

● Senate Senior Majority Fiscal Analyst David Reynolds, a former deputy director of the State Budget Agency and former city controller for Indianapolis, is stepping down at the end of July after effectively serving as the chief budget organizer in 2019. The Senate Majority Caucus is seeking to hire a successor for Reynolds to oversee the Senate Majority Caucus fiscal team, handle assorted analysis and research, and draft the Senate version of the state budget. Deadline for applying to Senate Majority Chief of Staff Jeff Papa is June 14, with an overlapping tenure anticipated to ease the transition.

□ Reynolds departure comes on the heels of Jason Dudich leaving as state budget director and Micah Vincent leaving his post at the helm of the Office of Management and Budget, but with the biennial budget just passed, that gives the new Senate Majority staffer and new budget director plenty of time to get up to speed (and incoming OMB chief Cris Johnston is an experienced budget hand as we told you last week). Assuming no change in administration nor new legislators at the table, the majority lawmakers who led the process in 2019 will not be rookies as they were this year.

● As we hinted last week, Capt. Dave Bursten, the long-time chief public information officer for the Indiana State Police, will be retiring from ISP, but not from state service. Bursten will move to the Department of Correction to head up that agency's communications functions.

□ As part of the post-Bursten shuffle, Sgt. Ronald Galaviz is promoted to the rank of First Sergeant within the Public Information Office, and he will serve as ISP's assistant chief PIO. Galaviz, a Michigan native, joined ISP in December 1993, and was assigned to the Fort Wayne Post. He patrolled Noble and LaGrange counties until June 2008, when he was promoted to the rank of sergeant and served as the Fort Wayne District PIO until this promotion.

● The Governor unveils the cadre of four local leaders he is appointing to the newly restructured Northern Indiana Commuter Transportation District board. The bipartisan group includes one official from each of the four counties the NICTD board serves, and will include Gary Mayor Karen Freeman Wilson (D) (Lake County); Porter County Commissioner Jeff Good (R); St. Joseph County Commissioner Andrew Kostielney (R); and Michigan City Mayor Ron Meer (D) (LaPorte County).

□ Indiana Department of Transportation Commissioner Joe McGuinness, a former mayor, will serve as the chair.

● Huntingburg Mayor Denny Spinner (R), president of Accelerate Indiana Municipalities, is appointed to serve on National League of Cities' (NLC) 2019 Transportation and Infrastructure Services federal advocacy committee. This committee has the lead responsibility for developing NLC's federal policy positions on issues involving transportation, including planning, funding, safety and security of public transit, streets and highways, aviation, railroads and ports.

● EMILY's List taps Ben Ray as senior director of campaign communications. The Kentucky native worked on the 202 Donnelly campaign and spent more time with the Indiana Democratic Party.

● CNN Business promotes former Indianapolis Star reporter Jill Disis to Asia editor. Disis, who covered breaking news, courts, politics, and city hall in Indianapolis, will be based in Hong Kong to oversee reporting on the United States - China trade and technology tiffs.

IN the Lobby

H.R. 1756, Preventing Credit Score Discrimination in Auto Insurance Act. Issues related to Flood Insurance. Issues related to Terrorism Risk Insurance Act (TRIA) reform."

● After passage of SEA 442-2019, the legislation authored by Sen. Jon Ford (R) that authorizes the establishment of a carbon sequestration pilot project that will capture carbon dioxide at a proposed ammonia production facility in West Terre Haute and inject the carbon dioxide into underground strata and formations, Ice Miller Strategies LLC files a federal lobby registration to lobby Congress on behalf of Wabash Valley Resources LLC of Terre Haute, which is involved in "Carbon capture and sequestration," to lobby Congress on "Tax issues involving carbon capture and sequestration."

JOB CREATION STALLS: Employers tapped the brakes on hiring in May, signaling companies are taking a more cautious approach at a time of slowing global growth and trade tensions (Wall Street Journal). The economy added 75,000 jobs in May, marking the 104th straight month of gains, but pulling back from two months of solid hiring, the Labor Department said Friday. The jobless rate held steady at 3.6%, a near 50-year low. Overall, the labor market was on weaker footing than expected. Economists surveyed by The Wall Street Journal had forecast a gain of 180,000 new jobs and a 3.6% unemployment rate in May. Revised figures showed employers added fewer jobs than previously reported in April and March. Wages were up 3.1% on the year in May. Annual pay gains appear to be stabilizing in the low 3% range rather than accelerating in a tight labor market. Manufacturers added 3,000 workers to payrolls, continuing a weak streak for a sector most tied to trade tensions and slowing growth abroad.

PROGRESS IN MEXICAN TARIFF TALKS: The Trump administration has made significant progress in its border-security negotiations with Mexico, a senior White House official said, but the U.S. remained on track to impose tariffs on the country's imports next week (Wall Street Journal). Mexico "came to the table with a few things they wanted to do immediately to try to stem the flow of immigrants," this person said on Thursday, adding that the Trump administration is "encouraged by steps taken in the last few hours." The U.S. has called on Mexico to block more migrants at its southern border with Guatemala and to step up efforts against organized smuggling. It has also pressed Mexico to designate itself a "safe third country," which would mean people entering Mexico from Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador wouldn't be eligible to claim asylum in the U.S. Absent a deal, President Trump has threatened to impose escalating tariffs on Mexico. After a second round of talks at the State Department on Thursday evening, Foreign Minister Marcelo Ebrard said that his government was ready to deploy the country's newly created National Guard to the border with Guatemala. "We have explained that there are 6,000 men and that they will be deployed there," he told reporters. Talks will continue on Friday, Mr. Ebrard added.

PENCE 'ENCOURAGED' BY MEXICAN TALKS: U.S. and Mexican officials claim to be making progress as they labored for a second day to avert import tariffs. But President Donald Trump is still threatening to impose them as he tries to pressure Mexico into stemming the flow of Central American migrants across the United States' southern border (AP). Vice President Mike Pence, monitoring the talks from his travels in Pennsylvania, said Thursday the U.S. was "encouraged" by Mexico's latest proposals but that tariffs still were set to take effect on Monday. Pence added that it would be "for the president to decide" whether Mexico was doing enough to head off the tariffs. Pence said that, among other issues, negotiators had been discussing a potential agreement to make it difficult for those who enter Mexico from other countries to claim asylum in the U.S. Mexico has long resisted that request.

FAIR OAKS RELEASES RESPONSE VIDEO: Fair Oaks Farms released its own video response Wednesday following footage showing animal abuse at the company's operation. In it, the company pledges to improve protections for animals (Horton, Indiana Public Media). Activist organization Animal Recovery Mission (ARM) put out a video recorded by an investigator with the group who went undercover as an employee at Fair Oaks Farms. The images captured show workers abusing calves and using illegal drugs while on the job. In a video released by the company, co-founder Mike McCloskey shared his disappointment in failing to protect the animals on the farm that promotes sustainability. "The way that I have to look at this is that as hard as we try, you can always end up with bad people in your organization," said McCloskey in the video. "And this is what happened to us." To take preventative measures going forward, he says cameras will be installed in areas where employees and animals interact to monitor animal welfare. These videos will be seen by the public in a new exhibit on "The Dairy Adventure" tour in hopes of providing more transparency. "I will have in that exhibit all the training, all the practices, but also I will have the screens that are showing the videos from these cameras with a trained individual within that exhibit," McCloskey says.

SEN. HOLDMAN CALLS FAIR OAKS VIDEO 'POLITICAL': Video exposing animal abuse at a well-known northwestern Indiana dairy farm is politically motivated, said an Indiana lawmaker who drafted unsuccessful legislation in 2013 that would have barred undercover video filming at the state's agricultural operations (AP). A animal-abuse investigative group released disturbing footage Tuesday showing workers kicking and throwing young calves at the Fair Oaks Farm. Retailers subsequently pulled the farm's products from their shelves. State Sen. Travis Holdman, who sponsored the proposal in 2013, said it's too soon to say whether he'll refile the bill during the 2020 legislative session, The Times of Northwest Indiana reported. "Seeing as this is just a one-time incident that we're aware of, I don't think we need a knee-jerk reaction to do something legislatively necessarily," Holdman said. "I'm sure I'll be hearing from Farm Bureau folks about the incident and what they think needs to be done, if anything." Holdman's bill would have made it a misdemeanor crime to photograph or video record any agricultural or industrial activities without the property owner's written authorization. Legislators in at least 10 other states tried passing similar "ag-gag" laws, in part to discourage covert revelations of agricultural operations. But courts subsequently struck down several of those statutes as unconstitutional.

CHAMBER REPORT CARD SHOWS INDIANA REGRESSING: A new report from the Indiana Chamber of Commerce says the state is still seeing several challenges to improving its economic climate. The chamber Thursday released its biennial Indiana Vision 2025 Report Card and President and Chief Executive Officer Kevin Brinegar says Indiana did make improvements in many metrics, including business climate issues such as the tax, regulatory and legal environments, as well as K-12 education. However, the chamber says areas such as public health continue to get worse throughout the state (Inside Indiana Business). The results show Indiana's adult smoking rate went from 38th worst to 44th worst in the country, while the state's adult obesity levels went from 36th worst to 39th worst. In an interview with Inside INdiana Business, Brinegar said the health metrics are a key component for the state. "This is important because it impacts healthcare costs and it impacts the healthiness of our workforce," said Brinegar. "It is estimated that smoking in Indiana costs employers $6.2 billion a year in higher healthcare costs, absenteeism and loss of productivity." Brinegar adds another area of concern from the report is the lack of new business startups. Indiana fell from 44th to 47th in the nation for new business creation and Brinegar says while the state isn't creating new businesses as fast as other states, Indiana is creating new jobs at a quicker rate.

THE MATH OF IMPEACHMENT: 59 House Democrats and one House Republican now publicly support impeachment proceedings against President Trump, according to Axios' Zach Basu. Why it matters: The whip count surged in the aftermath of Robert Mueller's statement last week, but pro-impeachment Democrats still amount to only a quarter of the 235-member caucus. That figure is likely to stay well below the threshold necessary to launch impeachment in the House until the moment — if it ever comes — that Speaker Nancy Pelosi gives her blessing. Impeachment math: 13 of the 24 Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee, which would open the inquiry, publicly support impeachment. 21 are needed to refer an impeachment resolution to the House floor.

Of the eight Democrats that Axios identified as "influential" — the three top members of leadership and five committee chairs investigating Trump — only one publicly supports impeachment: Financial Services Chair Maxine Waters. Judiciary Committee Chair Jerrold Nadler has reportedly pushed privately to open an impeachment inquiry. None of the 17 Democrats running in "toss-up" districts in 2020 are pro-impeachment, according to the Cook Political Report. 41% of the public supported impeachment as of May 31, down from an all-time high of 47% in September, according to a CNN poll.

HPI PUBLISHING SCHEDULE: I'm a couple of time zones west and will be on South Dakota's Pine Ridge Reservation this weekend checking out the severe flooding from last winter. So next week's HPI Daily Wires will come later in the morning. There won't be a Sunday HPI Daily Wire. There will be a weekly edition next Thursday. Our regular publishing schedule will resume the weekly of June 17. Thanks for understanding and your patronage. - Brian A. Howey AUTOMAKERS URGE SHIFT ON EMISSION STANDARDS: The world's largest automakers warned President Trump on Thursday that one of his most sweeping deregulatory efforts — his plan to weaken tailpipe pollution standards — threatens to cut their profits and produce "untenable" instability in a crucial manufacturing sector (New York Times). In a letter signed by 17 companies including Ford, General Motors, Toyota and Volvo, the automakers asked Mr. Trump to go back to the negotiating table on the planned rollback of one of President Barack Obama's signature policies to fight climate change. The carmakers are addressing a crisis that is partly of their own making. They had sought some changes to the pollution standards early in the Trump presidency, but have since grown alarmed at the expanding scope of the administration's plan. Mr. Trump's new rule, which is expected to be made public this summer, would all but eliminate the Obama-era auto pollution regulations, essentially freezing mileage standards at about 37 miles per gallon for cars, down from a target of 54.5 miles per gallon by 2025. The policy makes it a near certainty that California and 13 other states will sue the administration while continuing to enforce their own, stricter rules — in effect, splitting the United States auto market in two.

MERRITT WON'T MARCH IN GAY PRIDE PARADE: Indianapolis Republican Mayoral candidate Jim Merritt—a state senator since 1991—on Thursday said he regretted his Senate vote for the Religious Freedom Restoration Act in 2015 and pledged to support the LGBTQ community if elected mayor (IBJ). Merritt, who sparked attention this week by announcing he would walk in Saturday's Indy Pride parade even though organizers said he wasn't welcome due to his Senate votes on LGBTQ issues, also said Thursday he has decided not to march in the parade. "This is Indy Pride's celebration and I do not wish to dampen it," he said. "I have come to realize the reality of discrimination, fear and prejudice that has plagued the LGBTQ+ community for far too long."

IU HIKES TUITION 2.5%: Indiana University is increasing tuition by 2.5% for in-state undergraduate students at all of its campuses each of the next two school years. IU's Board of Trustees approved the tuition plan Wednesday, while also increasing out-of-state undergraduate tuition by 3% on the Bloomington campus the coming two years. The Bloomington Herald-Times reports this year's IU in-state tuition and fees cost of $10,680 was less than seven of the 14 Big Ten schools. The IU increases come as Purdue University's current tuition of $9,992 has been largely frozen since 2013. But IU Board Chairman Michael Mirro says many factors are involved in tuition decisions, such as Purdue having more out-of-state students at its West Lafayette campus who are charged more than at IU's Bloomington campus.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: It is disturbing and disheartening to hear Speaker Nancy Pelosi talk of wishing to see President Trump "behind bars," just as it has been to hear Trump talk of jailing Hillary Clinton while his supporters chant "lock her up." In banana republics, leaders prosecute and jail their political opponents, but not in the United States. Unless we want to join the banana republics. - Brian A. Howey

Campaigns

BLACK CAUCUS BACKS MELTON FOR GOVERNOR: The Indiana Black Legislative Caucus PAC issued a statement of support for State Senator Eddie Melton and his gubernatorial exploratory committee (Howey Politics Indiana). Melton, who on Tuesday announced the formation of the Committee, has focused on listening to Hoosiers as he travels the state discussing teacher pay, raising the minimum wage, and providing access to quality affordable healthcare. "The Indiana Black Legislative Caucus PAC strongly supports Senator Melton as he launches his gubernatorial exploratory committee," said Caucus Chair Representative Robin Shackleford (HD-98, Indianapolis). "The Indiana Black Caucus PAC's mission is to work towards greater economic, educational and social opportunities for all residents of Indiana. Senator Melton is the embodiment of that effort. From his time as a social worker, serving the most vulnerable amongst us, to his legislative accomplishments of incentivizing job creation, and increasing educational funding, his thoughtful approach to bring all parties to the table to progress our shared goals, is a testament to his leadership. Leadership which Indiana sorely needs right now."

GOP TRAINING EVENT SET: We're now just one week from the deadline to RSVP for our full-day candidate training seminar, Battleground Indiana: Winning Indiana's Cities & Towns! RSVP now, and you'll have access to: Breakout sessions on important topics like building a campaign plan, using political data, recruiting volunteers, communicating with voters, and more; Panel discussions with Indiana Republican mayors and opportunities to ask questions; Training on the latest campaign technology for voter contact; An evening reception with Governor Eric Holcomb! This municipal election year, it's critical that our candidates have the skills necessary not just to compete in every corner of our state, but to WIN! The seminar -- designed with our 2019 Republican municipal candidates and campaigns in mind -- will be on Saturday, June 15, at the University of Indianapolis.

HOWE ELECTED TO VALPO COUNCIL: Holly Howe is now an at-large member of the city council after being selected by the local Republican Party caucus Thursday night (NWI Times). Howe was elected unanimously by the precinct committee members at the caucus. She was the only one who sought the seat of Trista Hudson, who stepped down last month. Howe will fill out the remaining six months of Hudson's term.

MAYOR PETE ADDRESS BLACK FORUM: Mayor Pete Buttigieg spoke to the DNC African American Leadership Summit in Atlanta on Thursday (Howey Politics Indiana). "In so many ways, in our lifetimes, we have seen how a rising tide does not in fact lift all boats. Not when some of those boats are still anchored to the ocean floor," Buttigieg said. "We live in neighborhoods that were intentionally segregated — as a matter of policy. We perpetuate a system of mass incarceration that systematically targets people of color. A healthcare system where bias can lead doctors to literally discount how much pain a black patient may be feeling. Economic opportunity is freedom. As we see in South Bend, diversely-owned businesses help build wealth not just for their owners, but also for their employees. So we have invested every way we know how—from a new entrepreneurship center in a historically black neighborhood to conducting a disparity study to support equitable distribution of opportunities from the city. And we ought to do that at the federal level too. Let's right historic wrongs, build wealth, and empower black entrepreneurs with the tools to compete and succeed. Because I am not black, it is twice as important that I show up with an agenda for black Americans that remedies racial injustices."

BUTTIGIEG TO SPEAK AT IU AUDITORIUM ON MONDAY: Pete Buttigieg will deliver remarks on foreign policy and national security at Indiana University Auditorium on Tuesday, June 11 at 11 a.m. Former Indiana Congressman Lee Hamilton, Distinguished Scholar with the Hamilton Lugar School of Global and International Studies, will introduce him (Howey Politics Indiana). The event is free and open to the public, however tickets are required for entrance. Tickets can be picked up in person only beginning at 1 p.m. on Monday, June 10 at the IU Auditorium Box Office. The line for tickets on Monday will be recognized at 12 p.m. There is a limit of one ticket per person. For questions, please call the IU Auditorium Box Office at (812) 855-1103.

BIDEN RESERVES ON HYDE AMENDMENT: In a dramatic reversal, Joe Biden told a DNC summit in Atlanta last night that he "no longer supports a ban on federal funding for abortions, known as the Hyde Amendment, ... after a day of sharp criticism from campaign rivals," the WashPost's Colby Itkowitz reports. "We've seen state after state ... passing extreme laws," Biden said. "[T]hese folks are going to stop at nothing to get rid of Roe. ... Circumstances have changed."

SANDERS CALLS FOR MINIMUM WAGE INCREASE: In a letter sent to Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) called for the Raise the Wage Act to be brought to the floor of the Senate for an immediate vote (Howey Politics Indiana). The bill, co-sponsored by 32 members of the Senate, would raise the minimum wage to $15 an hour by 2024 and index it to median wage growth thereafter. "Millions of Americans are sick and tired of working longer hours for lower wages while almost half of all new income goes to the top one percent," Sanders argued. "I ask that you allow the Senate to take up the Raise the Wage Act to immediately begin improving the lives of working Americans across the country." Sanders noted that corporations like Amazon and Disney had already conceded to popular pressure and now provide their workers with a minimum wage of $15 an hour. On Wednesday, the CEO of Walmart joined widespread calls for Congress to take action on raising the federal minimum wage, calling the current federal floor of $7.25 an hour "too low."

DNC CHANGEST DEBATE RULES: The Democratic Party announced Thursday that it would exclude specific polls from the qualification criteria for the first Democratic presidential debate in June, a change in the official rules that could exclude Montana Gov. Steve Bullock (Washington Post). The requirements raise yet more controversy for a debate process that Democratic National Committee Chairman Tom Perez once described as "open and transparent" but which has since fallen under intense criticism. Lesser-known candidates have said the rules are distorting the race by heightening the importance of certain campaign tactics and benefiting certain candidates, with one campaign adviser even threatening to organize rival unsanctioned debates this fall if too many candidates are excluded from the official proceedings. Some party members have also complained about being shut out of the process, which has been overseen by Perez, to qualify for events that are expected to be the highest-profile campaign gatherings yet.

YOUNG BILL SEEKS MEDICARE THERAPIES: U.S. Senators Todd Young (R-Ind.) and Ben Cardin (D-Md.) have introduced a budget-neutral measure that would provide Medicare beneficiaries more timely access to needed therapies (Howey Politics Indiana). The Medicare Home Health Flexibility Act of 2019 (S. 1725) breaks down barriers for seniors by allowing occupational therapists to perform the initial home health assessment in cases in which occupational therapy is ordered by the physician, along with speech language pathology and/or physical therapy services, and skilled nursing care is not required. In underserved areas where access to physical therapy or speech-language therapy providers is limited, the ability of occupational therapists to perform the initial and comprehensive assessments would prevent delays in home health care and increased costs to Medicare. "Ensuring the health of our seniors begins with timely care," said Senator Young. "I'm encouraged that the Medicare Home Health Flexibility Act will help the way we approach healthcare home services for patients in rural areas. Our bipartisan legislation would use Medicare to ensure our seniors are quickly and comprehensively assessed in their homes in order to receive proper treatment."

HOUSE LIKELY TO HOLD BARR, ROSS IN CONTEMPT: The Justice and Commerce departments denied an order from a House committee for more documents about the decision to add a citizenship question to the 2020 Census, all but ensuring that the House will hold Attorney General William P. Barr and Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross in contempt of Congress (Washington Post). In a letter to Oversight Committee Chairman Elijah E. Cummings (D-Md.) on Thursday, Assistant Attorney General Stephen Boyd said the agency had tried to be accommodating to the panel, and described as "premature" a vote on contempt over the department's refusal to comply with this demand. The Justice Department said that certain documents the Democrats subpoenaed are protected by attorney-client privilege and therefore cannot be released. Cummings had given the agency until 5 p.m. Thursday to produce them or he would schedule a vote to hold Barr in contempt.

AGRICULTURE: CAUTIOUS OPTIMISM ON PLANTING - Cautious optimism is the tone for upcoming planting opportunities around Indiana, but there are a few problems beginning to appear in forecast models. In the new planting forecast sponsored by the Indiana Corn and Indiana Soybean Checkoffs and First Farmers Bank and Trust, HAT chief meteorologist Ryan Martin says dry weather finishes the week and starts the weekend (Hoosier Ag Today). "Your Friday is looking dry in most areas, maybe a few scattered showers south of US 50," Martin says. "Saturday dry over a large part of the state with clouds increasing, but we're speeding up how fast the moisture gets into southern Indiana on Saturday now. The remains of this tropical wave that have come out of the western Gulf and up across the U.S. are wanting to surge northward a little bit farther, so I've got scattered showers afternoon and evening developing south and east of a line from Crawfordsville to Cincinnati, and there we could see upwards of a quarter of an inch."

AGRICULTURE: McCLOSKEY UNAWARE FAIR OAKS CALVES SOLD AS VEAL - Fair Oaks Farms founder Mike McCloskey says he was unaware calves were being sold to the veal industry, citing a lack of communication between the general manager in charge of livestock sales and himself (NWI Times). "It was not our practice in the past ... and (I) apologize for the unintended false claim made previously," McCloskey said in a statement to The Times. "Our bull calves will no longer go to veal."

EDUCATION: IU PURCHASES SUPER COMPUTER - Indiana University announced Friday it has purchased a new supercomputer—dubbed Big Red 200—to support advanced research in artificial intelligence, machine learning, data analytics, and scientific and medical research (IBJ). The $9.6 million computer built by Cray Inc. will give IU the nation's fastest university-owned supercomputer, which will let researchers on the school's campuses do complex, simultaneous calculations that are six times faster than the computer system it is replacing. How fast is Big Red 200? According to IU, it would take every person in Indiana more than 28 years—performing one calculation per second 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year—to perform the same number of calculations that Big Red 200 can do in just one second.

EPA: STATE GETS BROWNFIELD GRANTS -The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has awarded more than $4 million in funding to address brownfield sites multiple Indiana communities. The agency says the grants will aid underserved and economically-challenged communities in assessing and cleaning up abandoned industrial and commercial properties (Inside Indiana Business). Each of the 10 areas in Indiana received a minimum of $300,000 in funding. The recipients include: Fort Wayne - $455,625, Indianapolis - $600,000, Kokomo - $300,000, Lawrence - $300,000, Lawrenceburg - $300,000, Lebanon - $300,000, Michiana Area Council of Governments (Elkhart, Marshall, Kosciusko, & St. Joseph counties) - $600,000, Northwestern Indiana Regional Planning Commission (Gary, Hammond, & East Chicago) - $600,000, and Sullivan - $300,000.

BUSINESS: 3 INDIANA COMPANIES ON BEST WORK PLACE LIST - Three Indiana companies are included in Inc. magazine's list of the "Best Places to Work in 2019." The list was compiled from a survey of employees from nearly 2,000 businesses nationwide on topics including trust, management effectiveness and perks (Inside Indiana Business). The list includes 346 companies that received the best results from the survey. Bloomington-based Hanapin Marketing, Sharpen Technologies in Indianapolis, and Greenwood-based real estate firm The Garrett Companies are the Hoosier representatives.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP LASHES OUT AT PELOSI - President Donald Trump hit back at House Speaker Nancy Pelosi on Thursday in his first public comments after she reportedly said she wanted to see the President "in prison" instead of being impeached (CNN). In an interview with Fox News, in which Trump was asked about the comments reported by Politico, the President lashed out at the California Democrat, calling her a "nasty, vindictive, horrible person." Pelosi told Democrats pushing for an impeachment effort that rather than wanting to see Trump impeached, she wanted to see him "in prison," according to Politico. Ashley Etienne, a spokeswoman for Pelosi, said she could not confirm the comment. "I actually don't think she's a talented person," the President said. "I've tried to be nice to her because I would've liked to have gotten some deals done. She's incapable of doing deals."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP ALLOWS SAUDIS TO USE U.S. TECH ON BOMBS - When the Trump administration declared an emergency last month and fast-tracked the sale of more American arms to Saudi Arabia, it did more than anger members of Congress who opposed the sale on humanitarian grounds (New York Times). It also raised concerns that the Saudis could gain access to technology that would let them produce their own versions of American precision-guided bombs — weapons they have used in strikes on civilians since they began fighting a war in Yemen four years ago. The emergency authorization allows Raytheon Company, a top American defense firm, to team with the Saudis to build high-tech bomb parts in Saudi Arabia. That provision, which has not been previously reported, is part of a broad package of information the administration released this week to Congress.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - If the U.S. is going to levy the 5% tariff on Mexico come Monday, it has to issue a public statement today, sources tell us. President Donald Trump is slated to return from Ireland this afternoon, and will land at Andrews around 4:25 p.m.

MEDIA: SUNDAY TALK - CBS "Face the Nation": Sen. Roy Blunt (R-Mo.), Montana Gov. Steve Bullock, Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.). CNN "State of the Union": Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.). Panel: Scott Jennings, Jen Psaki, Bill Kristol and Aisha Moodie-Mills (guest host: Dana Bash). CNN "Inside Politics": Jonathan Martin, Julie Pace, Manu Raju and Annie

CITIES: JUDGE RULES IN SOUTH BEND PD TAPE - Henry Davis Jr. did not defame a group police officers involved in the police tapes controversy when he wrote a letter asking the Indiana Department of Justice to investigate potential racial biases, a St. Joseph Superior Court judge ruled (South Bend Tribune). In May 2014, Tim Corbett, Steve Richmond, Dave Wells and Brian Young filed a defamation lawsuit against Davis saying he damaged their reputations with his letter to the DOJ. In his request for summary judgment, Davis, who was representing the 2nd District on the South Bend Common Council at the time, said he sent the letter to the DOJ after many of his constituents expressed concern about how African Americans were being treated by police. Davis said it was his duty as a Common Council member to look into the concerns. The police tape controversy, the demotion and subsequent firing of South Bend's first African-American police chief, Darryl Boykins, and the death of an African-American man in police custody heightened the community's concerns, according to Davis. In July 2012, Michael Anderson died by choking while in police custody. Davis sent his letter to the DOJ the following month.

CITIES: INDY COUNCIL APPROVES $5 FOR ROAD REPAIRS - The city of Indianapolis plans to get a jump on $5 million in previously slated road and bridges projects due to an earlier-than-expected burst of funding from the state in the form of returned local income tax dollars (IBJ). The Indianapolis City-County Council's public works committee on Thursday unanimously approved a plan to spend about $8 million in returned local option income tax dollars in two ways: $5 million to start designing and bidding out previously approved projects planned for 2020 and spending about $2.8 million to abate lead and arsenic found in an Indianapolis public park. The spending proposal will have to be passed by the full council. Dan Parker, the city's director of public works, said the city was expecting to receive the money from the state, but it arrived earlier than anticipated. "This allows us to get ahead," Parker said. "In the past, money has been moved in January. Designing and bidding them in 2019, we'll be jumping in front of the line for access to contractors." That could allow the city to get a better deal on its planned projects, Parker said, which include repairing and repaving Keystone Avenue from 39th Street to 65th Street, and parts of Shadeland Avenue, Sherman Drive, and Harding Street. Funds will also go toward fixing a bridge in Geist and a bridge over Crooked Creek, among other projects.

CITIES: BENNETT ANNOUNCES NEW TERRE HAUTE PD BUILDING - It's been on Mayor Duke Bennett's to-do list since shortly after taking office in 2008 and this may finally be the year work begins on a new Terre Haute Police Department building (Taylor, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Redevelopment Director Steve Witt gave departmental commissioners a heads-up last week that a financing plan for the project will soon come before them. Witt said Wednesday he expects the mayor, or a representative, to make a presentation "in the next month or two." During a May 23 interview with the Tribune-Star on a variety of topics, Bennett said the city's bond counsel with the Ice Miller law firm was reviewing available options. "My goal is to start construction by the end of this ... season," he said, "and I think we're going to be able to get there." Bennett said early this week he had no further update. He later provided information on financing for the estimated $10 million, 30-thousand-square-foot project after his two opponents in the Nov. 5 election questioned whether the city can afford the project.

CITIES: SOUTH BEND TO GIVE DREWRY'S OWNER MORE TIME - The city will delay hiring a contractor to remove demolition debris from the former Drewry's brewery site to give the owner more time to clean it up, work that his contractor has been doing this week, the city's code enforcement director said (South Bend Tribune). The Board of Public Works had planned to open contractor bids at its meeting Tuesday, June 11, but on Thursday decided to remove the item from the agenda until at least July, said Tracy Skibins, code enforcement director. "We have been waiting for years for Mr. Durkee to take care of the property because we definitely don't want to spend the city's money doing it, we want the owner to be responsible," Skibins said. "Because he has not done that, we have had to fall back on step two, which is to have the city take care of it for him, which we never wanted to do in the first place."

CITIES: JEFFERSONVILLE PROJECTS MIRED IN LEGALIZE - A project that could play a key role in downtown Jeffersonville's revival remains in limbo, as a prominent developer seeks answers and a non-profit board mulls litigation (News & Tribune). At the center of the debate is corner property at Market and Spring streets, where Alan Muncy, president of arc, has agreed to transform a longstanding parking lot into a $3.5 million mixed-use development of apartments and retail. The sticking point is a May 20 vote by the Jeffersonville City Council that denied the issuance of an Urban Enterprise Zone tax credit for the project, which was part of a development agreement between arc and the Jeffersonville Urban Enterprise Association [JUEA], owners of the property. Muncy, who waived the clause in the agreement about the tax credit, moved forward on closing on the property on May 23. Less than a week later, the JUEA board, at a special meeting, approved a resolution to begin the process of filing a lawsuit to "set aside" the closing, believing it violated the terms of the development agreement.

JOB CREATION STALLS: Employers tapped the brakes on hiring in May, signaling companies are taking a more cautious approach at a time of slowing global growth and trade tensions (Wall Street Journal). The economy added 75,000 jobs in May, marking the 104th straight month of gains, but pulling back from two months of solid hiring, the Labor Department said Friday. The jobless rate held steady at 3.6%, a near 50-year low. Overall, the labor market was on weaker footing than expected. Economists surveyed by The Wall Street Journal had forecast a gain of 180,000 new jobs and a 3.6% unemployment rate in May. Revised figures showed employers added fewer jobs than previously reported in April and March. Wages were up 3.1% on the year in May. Annual pay gains appear to be stabilizing in the low 3% range rather than accelerating in a tight labor market. Manufacturers added 3,000 workers to payrolls, continuing a weak streak for a sector most tied to trade tensions and slowing growth abroad.

INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT

Boost granted for skills training

State ramps up efforts to up skill Hoosiers who lack a college credential

The Governor's Next Level Jobs Workforce Ready Grant program received a shot in the arm during the legislative session that ended in late April.

The Workforce Ready Grant scholarship program provides Hoosiers who have a high school diploma or its equivalent – but no college degree – with the opportunity to receive up to two years of free training in high-demand middle-skills occupations.

The most recent numbers show 5,760 Hoosiers have already completed training through the program since its introduction in 2017, and 15,280 Hoosiers have enrolled in a training program.

Beginning July 1, 2019, state lawmakers doubled funding for the last-dollar training grants from $2 million to $4 million annually.

The Indiana Commission for Higher Education issued an RFP in May for a new advertising, outreach, and digital marketing campaign to raise awareness of the up-skilling opportunity and recruit more participants. Lawmakers set aside $750,000 in the new state budget to pay for the advertising and marketing efforts for one year.

The RFP document identifies seven student populations to target (or re-target) for potential enrollment:

- Hoosiers who visited the NextLevelJobs.org online portal but did not submit their information for follow-up (about 350,000)
- Hoosiers who submitted their information to the online portal but have not enrolled in an eligible program (about 35,600)
- High school students on a graduation pathway that leads to less than a four- or two-year degree (about 36,000)
- High schoolers pursuing a Career & Technical Education pathway (about 25,000)
- High school graduates who have not enrolled in a postsecondary education or training program (about 28,016)
- Students who enrolled at a two- or four-year institution using state financial aid yet left without completing (10,000+)
- Students enrolled in institutions on a two- or four-year path who are facing dismissal for academic reasons (Unknown)

Meanwhile, other program changes enacted this session could give students additional choices.

House Enrolled Act 1002 -2019 allows all public and private institutions to participate as credit-bearing training providers upon receiving approval from the Commission for Higher Education. Program providers are currently limited to Ivy Tech Community College and Vincennes University.

The other key change we'll mention from HEA 1002-2019: Language added by Rep. Randy Frye (R) of Greensburg stipulates that the Commission for Higher Education must consider expanding the certificate programs eligible for Workforce Ready Grant funding to a sixth occupational area: public safety.

Pay issues Melton away?

Sen. Melton launches budding 2020 bid

State Sen. Eddie Melton (D) of Gary has formed an exploratory committee to run for Governor . . . and he made the announcement at the headquarters of the Gary Teachers Union, with teachers largely comprising the audience.

The former member of the State Board of Education introduced his fledgling candidacy with a call to improve teacher compensation, a message that found a receptive audience in the Gary teaching ranks, which haven't seen a pay raise in some 12 odd years.

He also took a swipe at the blue ribbon commission on teacher salary appointed by Gov. Eric Holcomb (R). "Behind-the-scenes negotiations are not how we should be solving our state's issues," said Sen. Melton.

He has formed a gubernatorial exploratory campaign committee, and is embarking upon a "statewide listening tour," explaining "This announcement is not about me seeking a higher office. This is a call to refocus on inclusive policies that reflect the voice of every Hoosier, not just a select few. This is about Indiana investing in a better future for ourselves and for our children."

The manager of federal government relations for NIPSCO, Melton, 38, was elected to the Senate in 2016. No Lake County resident has ever been elected governor.

- Career and technical education staff at the Indiana Department of Education will be absorbed by the Governor's Workforce Cabinet beginning July 1.

□ With the passage of House Enrolled Act 1002- 2019, the authority for federal Carl D. Perkins career and technical education funding transitions from the State Board of Education to the Governor's Workforce Cabinet. Historically, the State Board of Education has entered into a Memorandum of Understanding with IDOE to administer CTE funds, and IDOE employed staff for this purpose accordingly. Perkins dollars amount to about $50 million over the biennium.

□ The change in the lines of authority received virtually no legislative discussion during session, although your favorite education newsletter wrote about the idea at several milestones during the process. Like the changes to the teacher license renewal requirements that seemed to catch everyone off-guard, this too originated with the Governor's Workforce Cabinet.

□ Seven IDOE staff members will become employees of the Governor's Workforce Cabinet as a result of the transition. IDOE remains responsible for licensing and overseeing standards and course descriptions.

- More than 20,000 teachers (almost one-third of all Indiana teachers) have initiated a professional growth plan for license renewal as of June 2, in a mad stampede to beat the new law that kicks in July 1 requiring that 15 of the 90 experience points needed for renewal be related to labor market information or a work-based learning experience. One hour of participation in a professional development activity equals one point.

□ The Indiana Department of Education issued a memo and F.A.Q. in mid-May informing teachers that as long as they have one point entered into and saved in the state system by July 1, the new 15-point requirement will not apply until their next renewal.

□ HEA 1002-2019 names teacher externships as one option for attaining the 15 points. Teacher externships – or work-based learning for teachers – could consist of a group of teachers spending several days embedded at a business or other job site, or an individual teacher completing an intensive multi-week Summer work experience.

□ The report Externships and Beyond: Work-Based Learning for Teachers as a Promising Strategy for Increasing the Relevance of Secondary Education defines four key characteristics of a teacher externship: (1) They engage teachers in learning about the nature of the work environment; (2) They familiarize teachers with the academic, technical, and 21st century knowledge, skills, and dispositions required for success on the job; (3) They keep teachers abreast of current and emerging career opportunities; and (4) They expand teachers' knowledge of the education and training requirements required for different positions.

IN Administration . . .

- The Greater Clark County Schools is facing financial exigencies . . . and the new superintendent has received school board approval to bring on Thomas Keeley as a financial advisor to help sort things out. Keeley is currently assistant superintendent in the Beech Grove City Schools and an adjunct professor of public school finance at Indiana State University.

- The Lake County Board of Commissioners on Wednesday appropriated $80,000 for a contract between the Lake County Sheriff's Office and security consultant Vincent Balbo to "help police develop an active shooter response system for county schools, modeled in part on measures taken by Porter County in recent years," reports the Times of Northwest Indiana.

"Balbo, a former DEA agent, is currently the security director for East Chicago schools. Balbo's hiring is part of a broader effort by [Lake County Sheriff Oscar] Martinez to set up an integrated threat response system across all schools in Lake County. The sheriff's department intends to take advantage of a state law passed earlier this year that allows sheriffs and local school districts to apply for grants from the Indiana Secured School Fund to set up active event warning systems, Martinez said," as the Times explains.

IN Budgets & Finance . . .

- The Griffith Public Schools eliminates seven to 10 teaching positions and provides advance notice that courses in art and foreign language may be consolidated. "You have to have a certain number to run a class," Superintendent Michele Riise tells the Times of Northwest Indiana. "Fiscally, we can't have nine in a class for it to be run, because that's not using our dollars wisely and our staff wisely."

- The North Lawrence Community Schools declines to renew the employment of 23 instructional aides.

- The Marion Community Schools takes steps to refinance a loan, a move that could lower the tax rate by between one-half-cent and one cent.

IN Charter Schools . . .

- Scott Bess, head of the Purdue Polytechnic High School in Indianapolis, tells the Evansville Courier & Press that Purdue Polytechnic STEM High School will consider opportunities to replicate outside of Indianapolis – if invited, that is. "It's better for the community if it's a collaboration rather than being perceived as outsiders coming in. We never want to do that," said Bess. He says Purdue Poly's preference is to work with school corporations.

□ Evansville Vanderburgh School Corporation spokesman Jason Woebkenberg tells the paper that EVSC is not interested in sponsoring Purdue Polytechnic High School because Vanderburgh County already offers students an array of STEM-based education opportunities. EVSC has three STEM- based schools: New Tech Institute, Southern Indiana Career and Tech Center and Helfrich Park STEM Academy.

- Eric Lewis has been replaced as state director of Charter Schools USA by Misty Ndiritu, principal of Emmerich Manual High School. Assistant Principal Michael Wingert has been promoted to principal of Emmerich.

● Tindley Preparatory Academy and Tindley Collegiate Academy in Indianapolis will merge into one school and retain the Tindley Collegiate Academy name, forming a co-educational middle school.

□ “This consolidation enables us to direct as many dollars as possible into the classroom (rather than into facilities and overhead expenses) and keep salaries and wages competitive so that we retain our best teachers,” according to Tindley leadership.

IN Non-Public Schools . . .

● Joe Brettnacher becomes superintendent of Catholic schools for the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend. He most recently served as principal of Seccina Memorial High School in Indianapolis and also has held the posts of principal and president of Lafayette Central Catholic Junior/Senior High School in Lafayette, Rossville High School in Clinton County, and Marian High School in Mishawaka.

● Noblesville’s Riverview Health will serve as the exclusive orthopedics and sports medicine provider for University High School in Carmel beginning June 15.

□ Terms of the agreement mean that Riverview Health will provide University a full-time certified athletic trainer onsite and cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) and automated external defibrillator (AED) training for coaches and staff members. Under the supervision of a board-certified and fellowship-trained primary care sports medicine physician, Riverview Health will also provide comprehensive medical care, including ImPACT concussion testing and injury evaluation, to student athletes.

IN Programs & Curriculum . . .

● The Education Workforce Innovation Network (EWIN) at the Center of Excellence in Leadership of Learning (CELL) at the University of Indianapolis announces three new recipients of planning grants for coalition building and sector partnerships that engage entire communities in designing innovative education-workforce pathway models.

□ Ivy Tech Community College South Bend-Elkhart and Navistar will partner with Elkhart Plastics, Inc., Better World Books, the South Bend Community School Corporation, Elkhart Area Career Center, and the South Bend Regional Chamber to develop a K-14 Supply Chain Management and Logistics Pathway.

□ The Student Career Partners for Northeast Indiana includes the Northeast Indiana Regional Partnership, Region 8 Education Service Center, Fort Wayne Community Schools, Ivy Tech Northeast, Parkview Health, Junior Achievement, and the Olin B. and Desta Schwab Foundation. This partnership will use grant funds to create a career-ready pathway program that motivates and guides students through a process to develop individualized career road maps.

□ The River Forest Community Schools is spearheading a community partnership made up of 16 regional businesses, postsecondary institutions, organizations and agencies to implement an advanced manufacturing pathway. The group includes Praxair, Indiana Manufacturers Association, Calumet Area Industrial Commission, Northwest Indiana Forum, The City of Hobart Economic Development, Lake Shore Chamber of Commerce, Center of Workforce Innovations, Vincennes University, Ivy Tech Community College, Purdue University Northwest, Indiana University Northwest, U.S. Army, Neighbors’ Educational Opportunities, Via Marketing, World of Words and Innovations in Learning.

● Building on a strong partnership developed in the 2018-19 school year, Salesforce.org contributes $650,000 in grants to the Indianapolis Public Schools Education Foundation, in support of Indianapolis Public Schools, as part of the company’s commitment to investing in Future Ready programs.

□ This new grant will support three professional development pilot programs designed to increase principal effectiveness; improve new teachers’ transition to the classroom; and strengthen the support that district staff provides to individual schools – “ultimately driving better results for students,” Salesforce.org expects.

□ You may recall that last year, Salesforce.org kicked off its partnership with IPS, donating $500,000 to provide a specialized IT education pathway for 137 students and three new computer labs with take-home devices. The partnership also supported the district’s “3E’s strategy” to ensure all IPS students graduate on time and were prepared to enroll in a two- or four-year college or university, gain employment at a livable wage, or enlist in the armed services.

□ The tech company is IPS’ primary philanthropic partner.

● The State Board of Education at its June business meeting voted to endorse a Locally Created Graduation Pathway in Aviation Sheet Metal proposed by the M.S.D. of Decatur Township, AAR Corp, and the Vincennes University Aviation Training Center. Program graduates can move into the EAGLE Career Pathway Program to become an Aviation Maintenance Technician with Airframe and Powerplant certification.

● The 53 students in the 2019 graduating class of the Connersville High School Early College program racked up 2,072 college credits – an average of 39 college credits each, or the equivalent of more than one year of college.

● The Huntington County Community School Corporation contracts with Novae Corporation of Markle to provide a welding instructor qualified to teach welding courses for dual credit with Ivy Tech Community College. HCCSC will pay the instructor $22 per hour for four hours per day.

- Preschool fees will increase from $120 per week to $150 per week in the Huntington County Community School Corporation . . . although the increase won't be enough to eliminate the program's operating deficit. Preschool salary costs currently exceed revenues by more than $150,000. The district operates four preschool classrooms for ages 3-5. Of the 116 students enrolled last year, 64 were students with special needs, and 52 were typical students.

- The Madison-Grant United School Corporation will offer a STEM-focused preschool curriculum next year, a step toward its goal of becoming a true STEM district from preschool through 12th grade.

- EmployIndy and Indy Achieves are ramping up an online and radio advertising campaign ahead of the June 30 deadline for graduating eighth grade students to sign up for the 21st Century Scholars program. Indy Achieves set a goal that by the end of the 2018-2019 school year 100% of eligible Indianapolis 8th graders will be enrolled in 21st Century Scholars. In 2017, only 51% of the eligible 8th grade Marion County students were registered for the promise scholarship program.

IN Policy . . .

- The Gary Community School Corporation issued an apology after a special education teacher bestowed a "Most Annoying Male" trophy to an 11-year-old boy with autism during an end-of-the-year awards ceremony that went viral. The district said in a statement that "We acknowledge the potential impact that an experience like this could have on a child's mental well-being, self-esteem and overall level of comfortability in a learning environment going forward," and "We extend our deepest apologies to the impacted student, the family and anyone else who take offense to this unfortunate occurrence."

- The Evansville Vanderburgh School Corporation, M.S.D. of Warren Township, Muncie Community Schools, and East Allen County Schools plan to opt-in to the Community Eligibility Provision of the National School Lunch and School Breakfast Programs beginning with the 2019-2020 school year. By participating in CEP, the districts will serve free breakfast and free lunch to all students in the vast majority of their school buildings. They will no longer need to collect household applications to determine eligibility for school meal assistance . . . and will no longer have to worry about tracking unpaid meal charges. Twenty-nine Indiana school districts participated in CEP for some or all of their schools during the 2018-2019 school year.

- The M.S.D. of Warren Township implements a three-tier transportation schedule for the upcoming school year with new start and end times. The high school day will start five minutes earlier, running from 7:15 a.m.- 2:20 p.m.; elementary schools will start 35 minutes earlier at 8:05 a.m. and ending at 3:05 p.m.; and the intermediate/middle school will start 85 minutes later at 8:55 a.m. and get out at 3:55 p.m.

- The M.S.D. of Warren Township switches from a two-school model to a one-school model for grades 5-8. Currently, students spend two years in the intermediate academy and another two years at the middle school. Beginning in 2019-20, students will spend four years in the intermediate/middle school.

- The Logansport Community School Corporation adjusts school start times by 30 minutes for the 2019-2020 school year to allow teachers time for professional development.

- The Randolph Central School Corporation is proposing to push back school daily start times by 15 to 30 minutes beginning with the 2019-2020 school year to create more time for teacher collaboration.

IN Referenda . . .

- Scott County School District 1 receives school board approval to hire Lancer+Beebe for a $20 million renovation project that includes major elementary school updates and removing the indoor swimming pool at Austin High School. The Crothersville Times reports that voters should be able to decide on the project at a referendum in November. The district is considering applying for a Common School Fund loan to pay for the project.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- The Goshen Community Schools receives school board approval for a $55 million Guaranteed Maximum Price for Weigand Construction Company as the Construction Manager as Constructor (CMc) for the new Goshen Intermediate School and improvements to Goshen High School. Work will begin immediately. All of the add-ons bids for the high school were accepted, and all of the deduct alternate bids for the Intermediate School were rejected, meaning the maximum scope at both facilities will fit within the project budget.

- Exterior windows on all buildings in the Central Noble Community School Corporation are now coated with a layer of 3M shatterproof film to prevent glass from shattering.

- On May 23, the Center Grove Community School Corporation issued $29,270,000 in bond anticipation notes for certain renovations, expansions, upgrades, improvements, safety and security, and equipping projects. Stifel served as municipal advisor on this issuance. . . . on May 29, 2019, the North West Hendricks School Corporation issued $2,700,000 in General Obligation Bonds, with Stifel serving as municipal advisor.

- The Vigo County Community School Corporation is getting close to choosing an architectural firm to develop an eight-year facilities plan for the district.

- The North West Hendricks School Corporation will hold public hearings in June and July on the proposed 2020 Construction, Renovation, Efficiency, Safety, and Security Project for improvements throughout the district and a new multi-purpose facility.

- The May 23 tornadoes and thunderstorms that crossed Indiana caused sufficient damage to the Rochester High School track and football stadium that administrators are not optimistic that Barnhart Field can be repaired in time for the Fall football season., and the team may have to play all of its games off-site.

- A major athletic renovation approved by voters at referendum begins in August in the Anderson Community School Corporation. The project includes two baseball diamonds, two softball diamonds, two soccer fields, and 10 new tennis courts.

IN Transition . . .

- Democrat Gordon Hendry leaves his post on the State Board of Education after six years. His appointment was not set to expire until June 30, 2021. We reported last month that Steve Yager will be leaving the board when his term expires June 30, 2019. Hendry's replacement will be selected by Gov. Eric Holcomb (R), while Senate President Pro Tem Rod Bray (R) of Martinsville will pick Yager's successor.

- The new superintendent of the South Bend Community School Corporation adds three new positions to his cabinet, including a $125,000 per year executive director of public and governmental affairs, including hiring away Susan Guibert from her similar post as executive director of media relations and communications for the University of Chicago Booth School of Business.

□ Other new jobs include: Chief Equity and Multicultural Officer Nathan Boyd, who is the district's current director of African American student and parent services, and will be paid $119,000 for his new work responsibilities. Boyd's former post will be filled by Tessa Sutton, who leaves the Elkhart Community Schools after 12 years . . . Executive Director of Strategic Initiatives, Dashboards and Special Projects Rafi Nolan Abrahamian, who has spent the past four years with the Fort Wayne Community Schools, most recently as manager for research and evaluation, will be paid $110,000 in his new role.

- Superintendent John Hunter of the Union Township School Corporation in Valparaiso will be installed as president of the Indiana Association of Public School Superintendents for 2019-2020 on June 7. Superintendent Tracy Lorey of the Greater Jasper Consolidated School Corporation will serve as president-elect.

- Byron Ernest will chair the Education Dispute Resolution Working Group that will spend the next five months studying opportunities to revise the special education complaint and investigation requirements in order to reduce costs to school corporations and parents of students with disabilities. Recommendations are due to the General Assembly by November 1.

- Dr. Teresa L. Gremaux will leave her post as the superintendent of the North White School Corporation to join Manchester Community Schools as its new leader, finally plugging a multi-year gap in permanent leadership there.

- The new superintendent of the Huntington County Community School Corporation will be Charles (Chad) Daugherty. He has been serving as assistant superintendent for instruction since the 2016-17 school year and previously was principal of Huntington North High School. He's a former geography teacher and high school baseball coach.

- The new principal of Huntington North High School will be Rief Gilg, who had been serving as associate principal at DeKalb High School.

- Principal Lloyd Knight steps down from Thomas Carr Howe Community High School.

IN Government . . .

- The State Board of Education voted at its June business meeting to pump millions of additional federal school improvement dollars into the turnaround academies - the chronically low-performing schools that have been placed in state intervention. The turnaround academies will share a total of $6.8 million in federal school improvement grants to pay for special interventions during the 2018-2019 school year, such as longer school days and years, additional support staff, and extra professional development.

□ The State Board of Education currently oversees the performance of 18 turnaround academies: eight in Indianapolis, four in Evansville, three in Kokomo, two in South Bend, and one in Gary. Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R) voted against the school improvement grant (SIG) distribution plan. The Indiana Department of Education proposed allocating $5.4 million to the turnaround academies. IDOE and SBOE differed only on the amounts for Charter Schools USA (CSUSA) and Edison Learning Roosevelt. IDOE proposed $510,000 for CSUSA and $180,000 for Edison Roosevelt. SBOE proposed and approved $1.6 million for CSUSA and $430,000 for Roosevelt.

□ For the other turnaround academies, the amount of federal funding they're slated to receive each year is published in their previously approved intervention plans. Each school's five-year budget strategically decreases the amount of funding available over time to encourage districts to focus on sustainability by building their internal capacity. The variance in SIG funding between the different turnaround academies is because of the different point at which each school is in its intervention, said Ron Sandlin, director of school performance and transformation for SBOE. The Kokomo School Corporation is entering the first year of implementing a Transformation Zone, which explains its higher share of this year's school improvement funds.

□ CSUSA and Edison are entering their final year of school turnaround operations. The amounts that IDOE recommended for CSUSA and Edison mirrors the final year per-pupil expenditures in the budgets for the other turnaround academies. IDOE officials also pointed to the "C" letter grade attained by two of the three CSUSA schools as a factor in the recommendation for reduced funding. Even though the State Board did not accept the IDOE recommendations on CSUSA and Edison, the amount of funding that the two turnaround operators will receive in the coming school year still represents a decline of more than 25% compared to last year.

□ Sandlin said conversations with Edison Learning about Roosevelt College and Career Academy have been very frank. "Your reliance on these funds needs to dramatically reduce," is the message that Sandlin and staff have delivered to Roosevelt, he says. Roosevelt's SIG budget cuts the number of staff members supported by the grant in half. "This doesn't mean those staff go away," says Sandlin. "It just means you can't rely on this funding source anymore." For the South Bend Community School Corporation, which is entering its first school year with a Transformation Zone, Sandlin described 2019-2020 as both a planning and implementation year. "They have to plan and fly at the same time," he said.

- Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch (R) partners with the Indiana Youth Institute to invite rural communities to apply for the opportunity to launch a Promise Indiana initiative. Five communities will receive a wide array of capacity-building services from Indiana Youth Institute to develop a locally responsive collective engagement plan in preparation to become a Promise Indiana community.

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

- A parent was removed during the June 2 Pendleton Heights High School graduation after he was discovered to have brought a gun to the ceremony.

- The Chicago Tribune reports that Dr. Cheryl Pruitt, the dismissed former Gary Community School Corporation superintendent, now “has been suspended from her job at the Chicago Virtual Charter School pending an internal investigation, officials said Monday.” She continues to face theft charges in Indiana stemming from her Gary tenure.

- In U.S. v. Fennell, No. 18-1969, a unanimous panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit upholds the restitution requirement for Franklin Fennell stemming from his role in a Vigo County School Corporation kickback scheme, so the former VCSC administrator must repay $110,600 to the district.

IN Higher Education

IN General . . .

- Ralph O. Mueller resigns from his post as provost and vice chancellor of academic affairs at Purdue University Northwest, just as leadership prepares to make difficult choices about restructuring academic programs and departments in response to changes in the market. “The number of students pursuing college degrees in our geographic area is predicted to drop 15% between 2014 and 2029,” Chancellor Thomas Keon recently wrote. “It is essential that we examine what we are doing and when possible, modify to meet the demands of current and prospective students.”

- Purdue University Northwest students and faculty are not pleased with what they perceive to be broken promises related to the 2016 merger of the Hammond and Westville campuses.

□ PNW faculty are calling on campus leadership to impose a moratorium on canceling low-enrolled, non-elective courses offered on the Westville campus “until such time as the enrollment on the Westville campus is restored.” They also want the administration to redirect resources currently invested in under-utilized intra-campus bus service into enrollment growth initiatives for the Westville campus. In addition, faculty believe PUN should “make a promise to students that any student that starts a four-year degree at the Westville campus will be able to finish that degree on the Westville campus and will not have to take any classes or travel to the Hammond Campus.”

- Indiana University Northwest has the highest share of Latinx students of any public university in the state.

□ That revelation comes from the Hechinger Report, which published a lengthy story this month on how IUN is coping with the demographic transition. The school’s Latinx enrollment could reach 25% as soon as next year, which would qualify IUN as a Hispanic-Serving Institution, a designation by the U.S. Department of Education that unlocks access to additional federal grant revenue.

- For the second year in a row, the International Human Cadaver Prosecution Program at the Indiana University School of Medicine at Indiana University Northwest has been canceled, this time due to “unforeseeable logistical issues.”

□ The “world-renowned program” had been put on hiatus in Summer 2018 so that officials could reshape the curriculum, and IUN announced last August that the program would be back in 2019 in an expanded format with five full days of cadaver prosecution. The Times of Northwest Indiana reports, “The first seminar was scheduled to start Tuesday but, four days before, participants were notified, by email, that the program had been called off.”

- Indiana University Northwest underperforms its expected graduation rate by 13 percentage points, one of the 15 largest disparities in the country, according to an analysis by the New York Times and the Urban Institute. The gap at IU Southeast was also in the double digits. The authors calculated expected graduation rates based on the characteristics of a college’s students, including income, race, gender, age, and test scores. Students were counted as graduates so long as they received a bachelor’s degree within six years of starting college, even if they ultimately graduated from a different college. The analysis was limited to first-time, full-time students.

- Commissioner of Higher Education Teresa Lubbers has been named to the Commission on the Value of Postsecondary Education, a new 30-member panel convened by the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation to make recommendations on how to incorporate economic data on employment and earnings into the higher education value proposition. For a masterful assessment of value in higher education, look no further than Commissioner Lubbers’ own 2018 State of Higher Education address.

IN Tuition . . .

- Indiana State University plan to increase tuition by $89 per semester for full-time undergraduate residents for 2019-2020 and by $90 for 2020 - 2021 . . . but ISU administrators have not yet determined whether to impose a long-debated $75 per semester health and wellness fee.

- Ball State University will raise tuition and fees by 1.64% for 2019 - 2020, breaking the five-digit barrier with an increase from $9,896 in 2018-2019 to $10,058. Those tuition and fees, however, would remain the lowest among all institutions in the Mid-American Conference officials told a tuition hike hearing at which no students seemed to show up.

- The University of Southern Indiana hikes per-semester credit-hour tuition and fees from $258.96 to $264.19 for resident undergraduate students attending in 2019-2020. For 2020-2021, the rate would increase to $269.52.

- Indiana University recommends a 2.5% tuition and mandatory fee hike for each of the next two years for resident undergraduate students on all campuses, the highest increase in five years. As we told you last month, state support for IUB declines in the first year of the new state budget, and IU administrators fully briefed key legislative leaders before the move. IU officials emphasize that the current $10,680 in-state tuition and fees combination was lower than the rates charged by seven of the 14 Big Ten Conference schools.

□ Out-of-state undergraduate tuition will grow by a heftier 3.0% on the flagship campus over the same period.

IN Programs & Policy . . .

- Salesforce.org announces a $500,000 donation to Ivy Tech Community College in Central Indiana to use across two years to establish an Information Technology Career Development model that includes career coaching, soft-skill training, stackable credentials, tutoring, employer networking opportunities, and designated lab space.

□ Last year, Salesforce.org funded 25 internships to support Ivy Tech's IvyWorks, in partnership with Indy Women in Tech (IwiT), a program designed to help women who want to shift their careers, including stay-at-home mothers and women who want to increase skills and certifications in their current careers, earn a credential in Information Technology.

- Of the more than 20,000 degrees awarded across all Indiana University campuses this Spring, the most popular was bachelor of science in finance, awarded to 867 students.

- Indiana University and Purdue University each received $54 million from the Big Ten in Fiscal Year 2018, up from $25 million five years ago.

- Effective July 1, all 2,370 programs included in INTraining will be re-evaluated by the Department of Workforce Development using the updated Flame methodology. Some programs that are currently eligible to receive funding may be removed from the eligible provider training list. Each occupation is assigned a flame rating from one to five based on anticipated future demand and wages. Training programs must lead to an occupation rated as three or more flames in order to be eligible for the funding.

IN Gifts and Fundraising . . .

- The Indiana University golf course will be permanently named "The Pfau Course at Indiana University" in honor of a major gift by IU alumni Ned and Sue Pfau that has helped fund the redesign and reconstruction of the Bloomington golf course, including a new clubhouse and adjacent pavilion.

□ Construction on the course is complete, but a definite opening date has not been set.

- Butler University Trustee Bryan Brenner and his wife Elaine Brenner donate $250,000 toward construction of the new building for the Andre B. Lacy School of Business, which will officially open in August. In recognition of the gift, the Career Development Interview Suite in the new business building will be named the FirstPerson Interview Suite in honor of FirstPerson, Inc., the Indianapolis-based benefits and compensation consulting company founded and run by Mr. Brenner, a Bulldog alum.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- The University of Saint Francis last week officially opened its new Star Observation Deck, a multi-use outdoor learning place that is part of its science building addition. USF partnered with Star Bank on the project, which included a $120,000 contribution to the university.

IN Government . . .

- U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-MA) writes a letter to U.S. Secretary of Education Betsy DeVos expressing alarm at the Department's interest in using federal higher education programs to experiment with Income Share Agreements and warning that ISAs are fraught with "deceptive rhetoric and marketing."

□ The Warren letter blasts aspects of Purdue University's Back-a-Boiler ISA program, including the threshold for repayment and the stipulations around default. The Purdue program "requires no payment for those with earned incomes of less than $20,000. Yet, a student who makes just over that threshold could be required to pay 5% or more of her income toward the ISA - a precarious situation for anyone, particularly someone with children or other obligations like medical expenses. Moreover, the consequences of default in the 'Back-a-Boiler' ISA program belie the notion that their ISA is preferable to a federal student loan. According to Purdue's sample ISA contract, a borrower who defaults or attempts to exit their ISA early could be required to pay two and a half times the amount originally borrowed - in other words, the ISA conversion costs more than some of the most burdensome, predatory, and costly private student loans," according to the five-page letter from the presidential hopeful dated June 4.

- U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) teams with U.S. Sens. Kyrsten Sinema (D-AZ), Rick Scott (R-FL), and Chris Coons (D-DE) to introduce the "Student Loan Tax Elimination Act of 2019," which would eliminate origination fees from the federal student loan program. The bipartisan group of senators contend that origination fees "are a relic of the bank-based guaranteed student loan program, a program where the fees offset subsidies to lenders that no longer originate such loans." Student loan origination fees send $1.7 billion to the federal government annually. The average undergraduate student pays $294, and the average graduate student pays $1,174. "Student loan origination fees are nothing more than a hidden tax that burdens students," said Sen. Braun.

□ Origination fees under the Higher Education Act of 1965 are currently one percent for Direct Subsidized Loans and Direct Unsubsidized Loans and four percent for all Direct PLUS Loans for both parent borrowers and graduate and professional student borrowers.

IN Transition . . .

- Charlee Beasor from the Indiana Chamber of Commerce starts Monday as the new communications director for the Indiana Commission for Higher Education. She is the communications and PR manager for the Indiana Chamber and a former news reporter for the Hendricks County Flyer.

- Peter Linden, chancellor of the Michigan City campus of Ivy Tech Community College, is selected as the new provost of Kalamazoo Valley Community College. He starts July 8.

- Mark Bernhard, associate provost for outreach and engagement at the University of Southern Indiana, has been named vice provost for continuing education at North Carolina State University, effective August 26.

- John Norton Williams, outgoing dean of the Indiana University School of Dentistry, has been named interim president of Transylvania University in Kentucky, his undergraduate alma mater, starting August 15.

- Henry Smith, past president of Indiana Wesleyan University, has recently been elected to serve on the board of trustees of the Higher Learning Commission. Smith's term runs from September 1, 2019 through August 2023.

- Dr. Kevin J. Brown will begin work as Asbury University's 18th president July 1. Before joining the Kentucky institution as a professor in 2013, Brown earned his MBA from the University of Indianapolis.

- Kristi Deetz has been appointed to the dual role of senior director of advancement for Vincennes University and executive director of the Vincennes University Foundation. Deetz has most recently served as the Foundation's interim director . . . while also serving as senior director of external relations.

- Indiana University appoints Siân Mooney as dean of the Paul H. O'Neill School of Public and Environmental Affairs – the nation's top public administration school – pending formal approval by the IU Board of Trustees later this month.

- Dr. Mooney, who is currently Arizona State University's associate dean for interdisciplinary programs and initiatives at the Watts College of Public Service and Community Solutions and a professor in its School of Public Affairs, will succeed Dr. John D. Graham, who is stepping down after 11 years as dean to return to teaching and research.

- Erin Oliver leaves her position as director of the office of institutional equity and Title IX coordinator at Purdue University to join her alma mater as the University of Notre Dame's first assistant vice president for institutional equity.

- Purdue University names Karl Browning as vice president for information technology. Browning has more than 40 years of business experience, including as chief information officer for Golden Rule Insurance Company.

- He previously worked for the Daniels Administration as commissioner of the Indiana Department of Transportation and executive director of the Hoosier Lottery, both posts in which he was involved in lease and privatization deals.

- Purdue University Northwest names Lawrence O. Hamer as the next dean of the College of Business. Hamer comes to PNW following an extensive career at DePaul University in Chicago, where he joined the faculty in 1996. He received tenure in 2003 and was appointed Professor of Marketing in 2012. Hamer began his administrative career as associate dean of the College of Commerce. He went on to serve as co-director of the Integrated Marketing Education Program and, most recently, as DePaul's associate provost for Research and Integrity.

- Brandon Zollner is promoted to executive director of alumni relations at Rose-Hulman Institute of Technology after having spent the past six years as a member of Rose-Hulman's advancement team, serving as director of corporate and foundation relations and assistant director of the comprehensive Mission Driven Campaign for Rose-Hulman. He was chosen for the post following a national search.

- Zollner joined Rose-Hulman in 2013 after serving nine years in a variety of roles with the advancement team at Saint Louis University, his alma mater.

- Randy White retires from his post as vice president for student services at Trine University after returning to the university in a deanship after retiring from another job in 2005.

- Keirsten Eberts becomes assistant vice president for the College of Graduate and Professional Studies (CGPS) at Trine University. She has served as interim assistant vice president since October, when Trine shifted to its new centralized leadership model, and she has assembled a new curriculum coordination team to support the new TrineOnline delivery, and overseen the relocations of Trine's education centers in Indianapolis and Columbus, and Sturgis, Michigan.

- Trine University tabbed Cisco Ortiz as dean of students, effective June 1. He has chaired the Trine Department of Criminal Justice and has been a full-time faculty member since 2015.

- The alumni election for the Indiana University Board of Trustees features three-term incumbent MaryEllen (Kiley) Bishop of Carmel facing off against Brian Davidson of Chicago, a 2004 graduate of the Kelley School of Business who is running on a platform of tuition caps and allowing the athletic department to keep 100% of the proceeds from the Big Ten.

- The winner will serve during the search for IU's next president. President Michael McRobbie's contract ends in 2021.

Purdue finds farmers AGravated

Purdue/CME: "Ag Economy Barometer collapsed" in May

Ag producer sentiment dropped to its lowest level since October 2016, erasing all improvements recorded following the November 2016 election, according to the Purdue University/CME Group Ag Economy Barometer, based on a mid-month survey of 400 agricultural producers across the U.S.

The decline in the barometer was a result of considerable worsening of producers' perspectives on both current and future economic conditions compared to just one month earlier.

Citing a drop of 29% in the barometer since the start of this year, Purdue Ag Economic Prof. James Mintert, the barometer's principal investigator and director of Purdue University's Center for Commercial Agriculture explains that "Ag producers are telling us the agricultural economy weakened considerably this spring" and that points (29%)," and "Farmers are facing tough decisions in the midst of a wet planting season and a lot of uncertainty surrounding trade discussions." The survey results were in before the latest round of Midwestern storms and attendant flooding; the Wall Street Journal Wednesday reveals Indiana has the lowest share of corn acreage planted as of June 2 of any state.

The Large Farm Investment Index, which measures producers' attitudes toward making large investments in their farming operation, has also trended significantly lower since the beginning of 2019. In May, 81% of farmers stated it was a "bad time" to make "large farm investments," pushing the index down to the lowest point since its 2015 inception.

Farmers' optimism toward short- and long-term farmland values has also waned since early 2019, and the percentage of farmers that expect farmland values to decline over the course of the upcoming year jumped by almost one-third to 30% in May. Looking farther ahead, only 39% of producers expect farmland values to rise over the next five years, compared to 48% who expected rising values in the March survey.

Agricultural trade continues to be a source of concern for producers. For the past three months, producers were asked whether they expect the soybean trade dispute with China to be resolved by July 1 and whether they feel the resolution will benefit U.S. agriculture. When the question was first posed in March, 45% of respondents had expected the dispute to be resolved by July 1; but that number declined to 28% in April and fell further to 20% in May.

Regarding whether they ultimately expect a trade outcome favorable to U.S. agriculture, 77% said yes in March, a figure which declined to 71% in April, and fell further to 65% in May . . . and understand that these responses came before the Trump Administration discussion of a potential five percent tariff on Mexico, a key agricultural trading partner (although the responses also came before the U.S. Department of Agriculture made the announcement of a second round of trade disruption payments to producers.) "At this time, a majority of producers still expect a favorable outcome for agriculture to the trade dispute," said Purdue's Mintert, who also observes "that majority appears to be shrinking."

In the opening paragraph of April's release about the barometer, the Purdue team referred to the figures as a "drop," in the May release they characterized the numbers as having "plummeted," and the staid researchers chose the term "collapsed" to explain what had happened to the barometer's numbers between April and May.

New wave: IL winds blow

Our law sought to steel, prepare for this

Since everyone keeps asking . . . yes, perhaps Hoosier solons would have done something different had they known the details of the Illinois gaming bill that unexpectedly passed June 2, but even those in Illinois and Indiana whose business depends upon understanding the details were telling us as late as mid-week they were still learning crazy new details.

The bottom line: Illini lawmakers passed a big ol' mess of a bill that adds a new Chicago mega-casino; a pair of south suburban casinos; some other casinos outside the Indiana market, but also one on the Indiana border in Danville (that we thought the HEA 1015-2019 voodoo had vaporized); more slots for current casinos and video gaming terminal operators; sports wagering at casinos, certain sports venues, and mobile; slots at the tracks and some airports; and one new parimutuel horse racing track in the Chicago area. And, oh, yeah, Illinois also legalized marijuana, and we're, uh, a bit hazy about how that also fits into the picture.

Tough on us: the south suburban and Danville casinos; though details are lacking. More slots in general will hurt, but recall that the Indiana law was passed in large part because we expected Illinois and other neighbors to expand, and we wanted to make our industry as strong as possible, and we largely did so - uncharacteristically proactive.

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

● One June 27, House Republican Conference Chair Liz Cheney (R-WY) will make another fundraising foray into the Hoosier State, joining the National Republican Congressional Committee's recruiting domo, U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R), at Traders Point Creamery in Indianapolis for an event which will run between $75 and $5,000.

State Office Races . . .

● Sen. Eddie Melton (D) becomes the first credible Democrat to organize a gubernatorial exploratory committee. At the beginning of May, a Gary Crusader gossip column credited him with "shepherding the casino legislation and other bills through this year's session of the Indiana General Assembly," and the columnist wrote that Sen. "Melton's political star appears to be on the rise. Because of his success ... there's been talk of running Melton for governor next year. While Melton says he is flattered by the support and attention he is receiving, right now he is focused on getting other things done. That may be his plan, however, there may be others who have a bigger plan for him. If so, will he answer the call?" Well, apparently he has, because just a few weeks after that column, he told an audience of teachers, parents, and community members at the Gary Teachers Union that he was forming an exploratory panel and embarking upon a "statewide listening tour." "This announcement is not about me seeking a higher office," Sen. Melton, who was elected in 2016, said. "This is a call to refocus on inclusive policies that reflect the voice of every Hoosier, not just a select few. This is about Indiana investing in a better future for ourselves and for our children." The NIPSCO official from Gary spoke to teacher pay issues, and the need to capitalize on Indiana's economic opportunities and to create jobs across the state, and referenced the need to provide quality healthcare and restore trust in the state's Department of Veterans Affairs. "We can continue to be silenced or come together to be heard. We must make the investments required to innovate and shape our future - not let it leave us behind."

□ Look for Melton, deputy chair of the Indiana Democratic Party, to unveil a statewide travel schedule with stops where he says he will discuss and highlight the inaction of state leadership and opportunities for the future of Indiana - which may sound more like speaking than listening. Sen. Melton's kickoff in Gary contrasted with the 2016 gubernatorial announcement by Sen. Karen Tallian (D) of Porter County - in The Region, north of U.S. 30 and west of U.S. 31) . . . which came at the State House.

□ Sen. Melton made it clear at his kickoff that he enjoyed support from local teachers, but the former State Board of Education member understands the Gary education situation, with which he has been intimately involved at the legislative level over the past two sessions - is dramatically different than that across the state . . . and the education situation is a microcosm for Lake County issues vs. the rest of the state in general. The Indiana Black Legislative Caucus PAC issued a "statement of support" Thursday for Sen. Melton and his exploratory committee. If nominated, Sen. Melton would be the first person of color to run for governor as a major party candidate, but he would also be the first gubernatorial candidate of either party from Lake County in generations. That Lake County (and particularly Lake County Democrat) tag has traditionally been a tough one to overcome. While Lake County Demos may be nominated for geographic or racial balance, they have proven largely unelectable statewide.

□ Sen. Melton is also not the only African-American seriously eyeing a gubernatorial bid. Dr. Woody Myers (D), a former state health commissioner in the Orr Administration (as a 32-year-old wunderkind) who was a Bayh Administration holdover as well (you can count on one hand those who were asked to stay in their respective posts), is also said to be exploring a run. Dr. Myers lost his eight-way CD 07 2008 primary election bid to now-U.S. Rep. André Carson (D), earning 23.50% to 46.52% for Carson (fellow Harvard M.D. David Orentlicher (D) posted 20.40%, and another state lawmaker, then-Rep. Carolene Mays (D), was fourth with 7.68% of the vote). Dr. Myers spent in the eight figures in that race, including at least $800,000 of his own funds. He was blasted for being a carpetbagger, returning to the district after time out of state working for Ford Motor Company; and for being out of touch, reaping big bucks from service for Anthem/Wellpoint and other corporate clients, and looking down on the city from a Conrad condo. He left the state again after that race, but has returned sufficiently to maintain residency, even as his son, a corporate attorney turned assistant U.S. attorney, left the Hogsett OUSA five years ago for a similar post in Baltimore. Dr. Myers does not enjoy a great network outside the Circle City, and may have difficulty establishing his bona fides with rank-and-file Democrats absent state Demos making it clear he's their guy. He can raise money, perhaps pre-empt Republicans on health care, and has a strong record of bipartisanship and working between the board room and manufacturing facility floors - which may not be a plus in Indiana in the Trump era.

□ Rep. Karlee Macer (D) of Indianapolis has also been pushed into the 2020 spotlight, and her handlers are looking to position her as a gubernatorial candidate. Such an ascension brings to mind the ascension of then-Rep. Baron Hill (D) when an Indianapolis News Blue Streak edition front-page story about his U.S. Senate special election ambitions for 1990 elicited skepticism at first, but then grudging acceptance when others were unwilling to step up to challenge then-appointed U.S. Sen. Dan Coats (R). While Hill lost that first race, he over-performed expectations, and that led to his U.S. House service. Similarly, Macer is largely unknown outside the west side of Indianapolis, and as a member of the Democratic super-minority since her tenure began, like Sen. Melton, she doesn't have a lot to showcase in terms of legislative accomplishments. She has, however, been heavily identified with veterans' issues, and with the significant growth in the number and importance of Hoosier vets in the past decade, that is a constituency which is ripe to be tapped (recall how at least a decade ago we described in these pages the evolution in Indiana politics and government from one dominated by the American Legion and VFW to one in which few veterans were involved and military service was not effectively a requirement for ballot access). Rep. Macer will have to - quickly - establish an identity and stake out an issue area of her own, or she will be destined to play in a pool of potential candidates for lieutenant governor.

□ The five-county Tri-State Cornfield Conference will convene June 29 in Kendallville, and you can expect both Sen. Melton and Rep. Macer to be featured as the 2020 trudge toward the primary unofficially opens even before the Indiana Democratic Editorial Association convention in French Lick. What will be most interesting, however, is whether any other potential candidates emerge at the event . . . as well as those who might be willing to sign up for one of the down-ballot slots.

□ Speaking of LG, 2016 Democratic LG hopeful Christina Hale (D) is still being prodded by some to run for governor, but she is more likely to focus on a CD 05 congressional bid if she were to be on the 2020 ballot. 2012 and 2016 gubernatorial nominee John Gregg (D) – for whom the drapes in the Governor’s Residence were proverbially being measured before his opponent (and dynamics) changed in the late Summer of 2016 – is also being urged by some to run again, but he seems happy in his new role as a bipartisan purveyor of wisdom, and while the three leading presidential candidates may be in their 70s, Hoosier Democrats would probably be better served to offer a fresher slate of candidates than those in their 60s (Gregg and Dr. Myers would both be 65 headed into 2020; Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett (D) would be 63). Sen. Melton is 38; Rep. Macer is 48, and Demos – who have no bench – may be willing to sacrifice experience for “youth” and try to get some of their younger leaders some statewide electoral exposure in 2020 as an investment in the future. Former two-term Evansville mayor Jonathan Weinzapfel (D), a former state representative and current chancellor of Ivy Tech Community College Southwest, has been rumored as a gubernatorial candidate over the years (and his state political committee is still sitting on more than $425,000), but he seems to be more likely to run for attorney general than governor – if anything – in the coming cycle.

□ And – outside of generic gravitational pull – just why would any Democrat want to run for governor in 2020? He or she would face a tough row to hoe (and those rows are going to remain flooded for a while!). Even if there were to be a historical Hoosier backlash against the Trump-Pence 2020 ticket, Hoosiers seem to distinguish Governor Eric Holcomb (R) from the national Republicans for political purposes, and where he might lose some support from the Trump base, he may also pick up as much from marginal Democrats – and Demos in general seem to be largely satisfied with the governor they basically perceive as moderate (despite the occasional obligatory over-the-top political pronouncements from some leading Demos – who privately acknowledge they are pleased with his help in reining in some of the more socially conservative concepts and caucus conscripts). And in an indication that Hoosier Republicans aren’t looking to seize the lower ground in the battle, when Sen. Melton entered the fray, Indiana Republican Party Chair Kyle Hupfer responded not by denigrating Sen. Melton and his experiences, views, and accomplishments, but rather by welcoming him to the race and suggesting that on his listening tour he will learn that Hoosiers like Gov. Holcomb and what he has done for the State and people since taking office in 2017. That’s a far cry from the approach we’ve seen in past cycles (and what Hupfer and his team do when Demo presidential hopefuls hit the Hoosier State) – and a welcome one.

□ We’ll be watching to see how Chair Hupfer (and Gov. Holcomb) might choose to welcome, for example, Weinzapfel into the AG race!).

● The Team Holcomb JFC transfers $43,108.44 to the Eric Holcomb for Indiana committee, and the Team Holcomb PAC also transfers $20,239.83 to the Governor’s campaign committee on May 28 . . . the Old National Bank PAC makes a $10,000 May 31 contribution to the Lieutenant Governor’s Friends of Suzanne Crouch committee.

● The campaign committee of Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) receives a $20,000 May 24 contribution from the RAGA Action Fund (he is an officer of the Republican Attorneys General Association).

□ Team Hill also reaps $12,500 on the last day of May from radio talk show host John A. Catsimatidis, owner, president, and chairman and CEO of the largest grocery chain in Manhattan and who also owns oil refinery United Refining in Pennsylvania.

IN Legislative Races . . .

● Emerging on the first ballot in an HD 93 caucus vacancy election as your newest state representative is former Orr Administration press secretary Dollyne Pettingill Sherman (R), who wins her first elected office on her 64th birthday.

□ Rep. Sherman fills the vacancy created by the resignation of former Rep. David Frizzell (R), effective May 31. In a six-candidate, two-county field, Sherman emerged with 22 of 34 first ballot votes. In recent years (decades) it has been unusual to see any candidate elected on the first ballot in a contested local caucus vacancy selection process. She lives effectively on the county line, and her children attended both Center Grove Community School Corporation and M.S.D. Perry Township schools. She graduated from Southport High School before heading to Ball State University.

□ She joins a dwindling cadre of Orr/Mutz officials, but still has deep current GOP ties (she largely organized the early CD 05 campaign of now-U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R), and Supreme Court Justice Mark Massa was a young speech writer on her gubernatorial staff). And she also can turn to family for help in monitoring the I-69 expansion from Martinsville through her district to I-465; her husband was director of public works for the City of Indianapolis in the Ballard Administration (although neither may truly understand what the words “temporary,” “soon,” “trying,” “utility work,” and “possibly” will mean in this new construction context).

□ Rep. Sherman also becomes the 36th woman currently serving in the General Assembly, which Trevor Foughty of CapitolandWashington.com finds is a new record high.

- The Nisource Inc, PAC files its June federal monthly report which includes scores of Indiana contributions, including $10,000 to the Committee to Elect Brian Bosma on May 15 and $15,000 the next day to the Rodric D. Bray for State Senate committee, the personal campaign committees of the Republican legislative leaders.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

- Just when the May primary results suggested that you might have some variety in the Anderson mayoral race, Rob Jozwiak (L) jumps in for his fourth consecutive bid . . . in New Haven, New Haven High School Resource Officer Darren Peterson (D) is likely to fill the ballot vacancy for a run against Mayor Steve McMichael (R).

IN the Presidential Race . . .

- Former governor and U.S. Sen. Evan Bayh (D) discusses trade and presidential politics with Bloomberg's David Westin on Balance of Power Monday. He says that "pocketbook economic issues" will decide the 2020 election, and, when it comes to impeachment, "there's just nothing at the end of that road" given Republican control of the Senate and absent something like "the Nixon tapes."

□ Bayh labels impeachment "largely a symbolic gesture," and not one that would be viewed by voters as impacting what's important to their lives. However, "trade is a legitimate issue, especially for the Democratic base, and Bayh says that "includ[es] being pretty aggressive in doing something about it." He says the race will be decided on whether the economy continues to grow at a relatively robust rate, suggesting "if the trade practices slow down the economy enough that the average consumer, the average worker out there can feel it, then it becomes an issue, so trade is sort of a subset of how people feel about the broader economy."

□ Also critical for Ds: nominating a candidate not viewed as being so far out of the mainstream as to allowing the President to "caricature" him or her. Bayh notes that in a presidential race, there are only five or six states that matter, including Florida, Michigan, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin - "there may be a couple of others along the edges, but those are the core five." He explains how the nominating dynamic is different, and that while primary and caucus voters say electability is important, he is not sure people understand what it takes to be electable in those five states.

- South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) will be speaking on foreign policy and national security at the Indiana University Auditorium in Bloomington Tuesday morning, introduced by a former chair of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, former U.S. Rep. Lee Hamilton (D), who also was co-chair of the 9/11 Commission, adding his imprimatur.

IN Political News . . .

- Zotec Partners, the Carmel-based revenue cycle and practice management company focused on medical practices, opens a federal political action committee Thursday. Mark A. Isenberg, executive vice president of healthcare advocacy with Zotec will be the treasurer of Zotec Political Action Committee, and Zotec will receive help from Ronnie L. Miller of Barnes & Thornburg LLP's Federal Relations Practice Group in Washington, D.C.

□ We do not believe Zotec has yet opened a state PAC despite it having made at least one five-figure 2018 state campaign contribution, among others.

- Advance West Central Indiana, a new political action committee, files a registration with the Indiana Election Division, and we suspect it has something to do with the anticipated upcoming casino referendum. The group registered in late May, stating that its intent is "To assist West Central Indiana with community growth." John Collett, president of Wabash Valley Asphalt Company, LLC of Terre Haute - vice chair of the Terre Haute Chamber of Commerce board and chair of its advocacy committee - is the chair. Sara Smith, vice president of engineering at Sycamore Engineering in Terre Haute and first vice chair of the TH Chamber, is the treasurer; and Brian Kooistra, COO for Garmong Construction Services in Terre Haute and chair of the TH Chamber board of directors, is the custodian of records.

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

- U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) sends a letter to a fellow Hoosier, Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) Administrator Seema Verma, calling for CMS to provide state Medicaid programs the opportunity to utilize ridesharing services to help Medicaid recipients in underserved areas have greater access to medical care. "Medicaid has continued to provide medical care to millions of Americans for the last 54 years. However, despite its best intentions, this safety net program has not kept up with the many technological innovations in healthcare. Medicaid's rigid and outdated structure has limited states' innovative ability to better help individuals and families reach improved health outcomes. The non-emergency medical transportation (NEMT) benefit is one area where the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) and states can work together to better encourage the use of new technology already being used in the private sector," Sen. Young wrote in the letter . . . Sen. Young works with U.S. Sens. Marco Rubio (R-FL), and Roy Blunt (R-MO) to reintroduce the "Protect Our Disabled Heroes Act of 2019," a bill that would help protect disabled veterans from unethical and unfair practices in applying for Veterans Administration (VA) disability claims. Specifically, the legislation would protect disabled veterans from what the senators label as unethical fees charged by third party organizations in preparing and executing veterans disability claims, and also reinstate criminal penalties for individuals charging veterans unauthorized fees. "Charging unfair fees to take advantage of disabled veterans is truly appalling. As a Marine, I'm proud to cosponsor this bill, which would reinstate criminal penalties for these unethical, immoral acts and protect our disabled veterans. We must do all we can to protect those who have already sacrificed so much," said Sen. Young, pointing to the fact that independent veteran service organizations have assisted veterans in filing disability claims free of charge, while many veterans are unaware that such services should be provided at no cost and instead seek assistance through attorneys and organizations that charge a filing fee . . . Sen. Young joins a bipartisan coalition that includes U.S. Sens. Bob Menendez (D-NJ), Lindsey Graham (R-SC), Chris Murphy (D-CT), Rand Paul (R-KY), Patrick Leahy (D-VT), and Jack Reed (D-RI) in introducing 22 separate Joint Resolutions of Disapproval to protect and reaffirm Congress' role of approving arms sales to foreign governments. The Wednesday introductions come after U.S. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo declared an emergency May 24 to waive the congressional review process for 22 separate arms sales to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates - a total of $8.1

billion. Arguing there is an increased threat from Iran, the Trump Administration invoked authorities under the Arms Export Control Act that, in certain circumstances, grant the President exceptional emergency authority to waive the statutorily-required congressional review period for arms sales. Sen. Young and his fellow coalition members assert that the manner in which the Administration has moved forward with these sales is unprecedented and is at odds with longstanding practice and cooperation between the Congress and the executive branch that results in the approval of billions of dollars of arms sales annually. The Arms Export Control Act of 1976 provides the special procedures whereby lawmakers can introduce a privileged joint resolution of disapproval against a proposed arm sale. In the Senate, a resolution can be discharged from the committee of jurisdiction, forcing a vote on the Senate floor. "Congress has an essential oversight role in the decision to sell weapons and we must ensure proper procedures are in place in any weapons transfer," explains Senator Young. "In light of the ongoing humanitarian crisis in Yemen, we have an obligation to ensure the adequate guardrails are in place and that weapons transfers to Saudi Arabia & the United Arab Emirates do not exacerbate the conflict. Iran remains the world's leading state sponsor of terror, but the current threats that have been briefed to members of Congress do not justify taking this dramatic step. The aircraft carrier, USS Abraham Lincoln, is deployed to the Gulf and I am confident that the members of our military could respond if a threat were to arise."

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) teams with U.S. Sens. Kyrsten Sinema (D-AZ), Rick Scott (R-FL), and Chris Coons (D-DE) to introduce the "Student Loan Tax Elimination Act of 2019," legislation which would remove the "origination fee" that the senators say adds unnecessary debt to student borrowers' overall student loan costs. "Student loan origination fees are nothing more than a hidden tax that burdens students," said Sen. Braun. "This legislation is a step forward and offers one solution to addressing our broken higher education system that fails to put students first." The Higher Education Act of 1965, as amended, specifies a loan origination fee of one percent for all Direct Subsidized Loans and Direct Unsubsidized Loans, and a fee of four percent for all Direct PLUS Loans for both parent borrowers and graduate and professional student borrowers. Origination fees are adjusted annually. These fees send $1.7 billion annually to the federal government, and the average undergraduate student pays $294 in origination fees, and the average graduate student pays $1,174 . . . in a Tuesday Daily Caller op-ed, Sen. Braun calls for Congress "to back America's workers and approve Trump's trade deal." He calls NAFTA "woefully out of date," and "out of balance." He writes that "President Trump kept his promise to renegotiate NAFTA, signing the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA) in November 2018, but congressional Democrats are refusing to bring the USMCA for a vote, because it pains them to admit that President Trump is successfully delivering real results for our economy." Sen. Braun promises "USMCA will add $68.2 billion into our economy, support two million manufacturing jobs, and will create 176,000 new American jobs. For those working in the automotive industry - including thousands of Hoosiers here in Indiana - this means $34 billion in new automotive manufacturing investments and $23 billion in new annual purchases of Made-in-America automotive parts." He also points to increased access to Canada's dairy market under USMCA for our dairy farmers, and "Finally, small and medium-sized businesses will be able to participate in our global economy with more predictable and transparent rules." Sen. Braun contends that Back Home, "ratifying this agreement will result in higher wages for those already in the industry and more Hoosier jobs for individuals looking for good-paying opportunities. It's time for House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and her Democratic colleagues to put aside their partisan feud with President Trump and put our country first. House Democrats have spent decades fundraising against NAFTA, but now that they have an opportunity to replace it with a better agreement - one that includes a minimum wage for Mexican auto workers and provisions to protect American jobs from unfairly traded Chinese products - they refuse to debate it on the floor of the House." He continues, "Instead of complaining that President Trump is hurting farmers, the House should pass USMCA to relieve some of the pressure, solidifying new markets for American farmers, ranchers, and growers. As a Main Street entrepreneur who has created hundreds of American jobs, I applaud President Trump's action to rectify the longstanding inequities in our trade relationships that have hurt American workers. Now it's up to Congress to hold up our end of the deal and ratify the USMCA." On Wednesday, Sen. Braun made one of his regular FOX Business channel appearances on Varney & Co., and tells host Stuart Varney that "border security is more in peril than it's ever been, so President Trump's interest in using that as a negotiating tool made sense. Most of us were hoping that would be what it's for and that it would be resolved before they went in place." He adds, "I'm concerned if tariffs get put in place because the USMCA - that master agreement that is ready to go through - might be put in peril. President Trump has done a great job negotiating with the Chinese, Canadians, and Mexicans, and I think here he needed to make a statement that they're not helping out on border security, and I'm hoping the tariffs don't need to be used." He continues, "I'm a guy that believes in unfettered markets - keep government out of it - tariffs would be involvement, but I come from Main Street America - I think it's big business that is reflexively against tariffs." Sen. Braun concludes, "I think the President was right to use it as a tool as long as we wean ourselves from it like he said we'd do after we accomplish some of these goals."

● U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R) and Mike Braun (R) and the entire U.S. House delegation from Indiana introduces legislation to rename the (beheemoth) United States Post Office building at 456 North Meridian Street in Indianapolis - only slightly less an example of Brutalist architecture than the Mile Square's Minton-Capehart Federal Building - after former U.S. Sen. Richard G. Lugar (R).

□ “Senator Lugar leaves a legacy as an exemplar of wisdom, civility, and bipartisanship. Many years ago, I had the privilege of working on Senator Lugar’s staff, and I had a front row seat to history, watching a statesman at work. This is one small way we can ensure Senator Lugar’s legacy lives on,” said Sen. Young. “Senator Richard Lugar is a towering figure in Hoosier history and one of the greatest statesmen ever to serve in the U.S. Senate: it’s only fitting for us to rename the Indianapolis Post Officer after him,” said Sen. Braun.

□ “Senator Lugar’s distinguished career in public service and his statesmanship are an enduring source of pride and inspiration for Indianapolis – the city where he was born and raised, and served as Mayor. I’m proud to help preserve his legacy by honoring him in this way,” said U.S. Rep. André Carson (D), in whose district the facility sits.

● The 11-member Indiana congressional delegation sends a letter to Dr. George Sigounas, administrator of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Health Resources and Services Administration, seeking to improve access by Hoosiers to maternal and obstetrics care in rural communities by requesting Indiana’s participation in the Health Resources and Services Administration’s Rural Maternity and Obstetrics Management Strategies (RMOMS) Program. Participation in this pilot program would allow for increased resources to reduce infant mortality, improve birth outcomes, improve maternal and family health, improve child health, and reduce disparities in maternal, infant, and child health in Indiana’s rural communities. The Indiana State Department of Health, Indiana Hospital Association, and Indiana Rural Health Association are behind the effort to improve access to and continuity of maternal and obstetrics care in rural communities via RMOMS.

□ If selected for the pilot program, Indiana RMOMS would seek to develop a sustainable network approach to coordinate maternal and obstetrics care within a rural region; increase the delivery and access of preconception, pregnancy, labor and delivery, and postpartum services; seek to develop sustainable financing models for the provision of maternal and obstetrics care; and work to improve maternal and neonatal outcomes. The 11 solons explain, “The RMOMS program would provide a much needed boost to Indiana’s rural communities that experience health disparities and work to achieve efficiencies, expand access to and improve the quality of essential healthcare services.”

● A bipartisan, bicameral group of lawmakers on Tuesday introduced legislation to increase investment in affordable housing and provide more resources and stronger protections for at-risk groups.

□ Seeking to address the affordable housing and homelessness crisis, the “Affordable Housing Credit Improvement Act of 2019” was introduced by U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R), Maria Cantwell (D-WA) (an Indianapolis native), Johnny Isakson (R-GA), and Ron Wyden (D-OR), as well as by U.S. Reps. Jackie Walorski (R), Suzan DelBene (D-WA), Kenny Marchant (R-TX), and Don Beyer (D-VA).

□ “As I travel around Indiana,” Sen. Young notes, “one thing is clear: We need affordable housing now more than ever. If we strengthen the Low-Income Housing Tax Credit, we can improve life outcomes for Hoosiers from Gary to Jeffersonville and everyone in between, and that’s exactly what the Affordable Housing Credit Improvement Act does. Our bipartisan legislation would leverage the private sector to increase the stock of affordable housing for families in urban and rural communities and tackle the housing affordability crisis head on.”

□ “The Low Income Housing Tax Credit has proven to be a critical tool for spurring investment in affordable rental housing and providing stability for low-income Americans, including veterans, seniors, and those with special needs,” said Rep. Walorski. “By expanding and streamlining the affordable housing credit, this bipartisan bill will make an already successful program even more effective for communities across the country. I’m grateful to work across the aisle to modernize this important program so workers and families have a better opportunity to achieve the American Dream.”

□ From 2000 to 2017, the total number of Americans facing extreme housing unaffordability ballooned by more than 50% from 7 million to 10.7 million. In addition, there is a nationwide shortage of 7.4 million affordable rental homes, an increase from the 4.6 million gap in 2000. This legislation would expand and strengthen the Affordable Housing Tax Credit (also known as the Low Income Housing Tax Credit) to produce more units of affordable housing to close this gap and better serve a number of at-risk and underserved communities. Across the United States, the expanded Affordable Housing Tax Credit would produce roughly 1.9 million new affordable housing units over the next decade, an increase of over 550,000 more units than would be built without the legislation. The bill increases the total number of affordable housing units built by increasing the amount of credits allocated to each state by 50% over current levels, resulting in the production of more than 384,000 more affordable homes in the next 10 years than would otherwise be created; stabilizing the value of the 4% Affordable Housing Tax Credit – used for new construction that uses additional subsidies or the acquisition cost of existing buildings – to create more certainty for ongoing and new projects and increase affordable housing production by more than 66,000 units; and expanding and reforming “recycling” of multifamily housing bonds, allowing states to maximize the available resources of private activity bonds by recycling multifamily bonds for affordable housing, resulting in 100,000 additional affordable housing units. In addition to expanding the number of affordable homes built in the United States, the legislation makes a number of key reforms to strengthen the tax credit that creates veteran-specific housing options; better target extremely low-income populations; and boost affordable housing in Indian Country and rural communities.

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) was one of two House Committee on Armed Services members interviewed by Hallie Jackson on MSNBC at Normandy on the 75th anniversary of the D-Day invasion. The Afghanisthan veteran praised the messages of both the American and French presidents at the commemoration that day. Rep. Banks went out of his way to thank House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) for inviting every veteran serving in the House to be part of the delegation.

● U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) tells constituents that on Tuesday, the House Committee on Financial Services – on which he serves – held a hearing on “Promoting American Jobs: Reauthorization of the Export-Import Bank.” He explains that “The Export-Import (Ex-Im) Bank was established in 1934 to promote employment of United States workers and finance the export of U.S. goods and services. As the Financial Services Committee works to reauthorize the Export-Import Bank, we are also working on bipartisan reforms to give American companies a greater competitive edge with China. In 2016, Chinese export support totaled over $34 billion compared to our Export-Import Bank’s $200 million.” His Question of the Week: “Do you support reauthorizing the Export-Import Bank and continuing to promote United States workers across the globe?”

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) saw the House pass Tuesday – on a voice vote – bipartisan legislation that she co-authored with U.S. Rep. Anna Eshoo (D-CA) to strengthen the country's existing preparedness and response programs. The "Pandemic and All Hazards Preparedness and Advancing Innovation Act." PAHPA, S. 1379, now heads to the President's desk to be signed into law. "The Pandemic and All-Hazards Preparedness and Advancing Innovation Act is critically important legislation that works to make our nation better prepared for and able to keep Americans safer in response to natural disasters or biological, chemical, radiological or nuclear threats to our public health and national security," Rep. Brooks said. "I am proud this bipartisan legislation is now on its way to the President's desk to be signed into law because it will ensure our health care professionals are trained to respond to possible pandemic outbreaks, prioritize the further development of our national stockpile of vaccines, medical equipment and diagnostics, and establish new advisory groups focused on protecting vulnerable populations such as senior citizens and people with disabilities during public health threats and emergencies." On the WBAT 1400-AM Good Morning Grant County radio show Wednesday, she added that despite its national security and public health implications – and the fact that it was a reauthorization – it was "really hard to get it done; trust me – nothing is really simple here!" ... after voting Tuesday against H.R. 6, the "The Dream and Promise Act of 2019," a road map to citizenship measure for DREAMERS, Rep. Brooks said, "There is no question that our immigration system is in desperate need of repair, but as I have said before, we must find compassionate solutions that will fix our broken immigration system while prioritizing our nation's security. Unfortunately, H.R. 6 is not one of those solutions. I have supported in the past and will continue to support compassionate legislative solutions that provide DACA recipients, individuals who were brought to this country by no fault of their own and currently make positive contributions to the social and economic well-being of the United States, reassurance they will be able to continue living their lives as they always have." However, she explains, "H.R. 6 goes too far and under this bill, a much larger group of immigrants would be eligible for green cards and a special pathway to citizenship whether they entered the country legally or illegally, regardless of how old they are now, and whether or not they are DACA recipients. This bill would provide a fast-track path to green cards and citizenship to any immigrant who entered the U.S. under the age of 18 and who is present in the U.S. for four years prior to the date of enactment, which is unfair to every immigrant who has gone through the legal channels to obtain green cards or citizenship." She continues, "Furthermore, loopholes in this bill would allow individuals convicted of dangerous crimes, including gang members and violent criminals, to receive a green card. This bill dangerously prohibits the use of gang databases in order to deny green cards to gang members. These databases are essential in determining whether or not immigrants who are applying for residency and/or citizenship are members of gangs or violent criminals." Rep. Brooks concludes, "Disappointingly, H.R. 6 also neglects to address border security and fails to address our most pressing immigration issue – the crisis at our southern border. H.R. 6 is weak on border security and would make the immigration crisis our country is experiencing even worse. We need to work together to craft immigration solutions that both strengthen our borders and reform our immigration system while respecting the rule of law and compassionately upholding our values as a nation of immigrants."

● U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky (D) voted in the House Committee on Appropriations to approve the "Fiscal Year 2020 Transportation, Housing and Urban Development, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act" Tuesday that includes $350 million for the Consolidated Rail Infrastructure and Safety Improvements Program. This is $95 million more than the FY 2019 funding level, and $20 million more than the level proposed in the President's FY 2020 Budget Request. The program supports a variety of types of projects, including highway-grade crossing improvements and rail congestion reduction projects. The measure also includes $2.3 billion for the Capital Investment Grant program under the Federal Transit Administration. This is $800 million more than the level proposed in the President's Budget Request, and will provide what the appropriator describes as essential support for investments in transit projects across the United States, including the South Shore Rail Line. The report accompanying this legislation also includes language expressing concern with the increase railroad crossings blocked by trains and potential impacts of this to communities and safety, an issue on which Rep. Visclosky has assumed point. The report directs the Federal Railroad Administration to work with state and local agencies, law enforcement, railroads, and others to examine this problem, collect data, identify trends, and develop recommendations to reduce the number and frequency of blocked railroad crossing occurrences. Rep. Visclosky stated, "I am thankful that the House Appropriations Committee has taken action to recognize the perilous danger of blocked railroad crossings in communities across our nation. This issue is of the utmost importance to [NWI] communities with numerous railroad crossings, and I will continue to work to press the Administration to positively and actively address this issue" locally and nationally. He remains committed to backing transportation infrastructure investments, "including efforts to improve the safety and efficiency of railroad crossings and the expansion and recapitalization of the South Shore Rail Line."

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) releases a statement after voting against Tuesday H.R. 6, the "The Dream and Promise Act of 2019," a road map to citizenship for DREAMERS which his office labels as "an expensive, partisan show vote that does nothing to solve our broken immigration system." Contending that Democrats continued to play politics with border security and immigration reform, Dr. Bucshon explains, "With each passing month, the crisis along our southern border grows worse – with Customs and Border Protection apprehending an average of 4,500 people per day over the last month – and continues to threaten our national security. Criminals are taking advantage of our broken immigration system by using loopholes in our laws to traffic drugs and humans across the border. Now, instead of working in a bipartisan manner to stop the humanitarian crisis, secure our border and reform our immigration laws, Democrats have introduced a completely partisan bill that has no chance of passing the Senate or being signed into law by the President." He adds, "This flawed bill not only fails to address the actual crisis on our southern border, but it would exacerbate it by providing mass amnesty and incentivize even more illegal immigration. Instead of yet another messaging bill that is designed to maximize the political advantage for House Democrats and devoid of actual solutions, we need to work together to advance a serious solution to address the humanitarian crisis on our southern border. This pointless vote only serves to benefit the drug and human traffickers that put our communities and innocent people in danger, and prolong the drain on American taxpayer resources needed to deal with those who cross our southern border illegally."

● U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) speaks to the Columbus Republic, and the freshman congressman tells his hometown paper, “You hear different interpretations of the Mueller Report. I’ve moved on. In my heart, I know that the president and the campaign did not collude, and as far as obstruction, to me, it’s pretty clear Mueller didn’t recommend any charges be brought, and I think that was his responsibility.” The Republic reports that “While touring the congressional district recently, Pence said he got the sense that constituents are tired of the drama surrounding the report and possibility of impeachment. ‘Maybe we ought to be spending a little more time working on the USMCA (United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement) – the ‘New NAFTA’ agreement (regarding free trade between the countries) – and getting things done to benefit this country, instead of another two-and-a-half years more of chasing after the president. It seems to be the only thing Democrats want to get done. It’s obvious not all Democrats agree that they ought to impeach the president. They’re not even unified.”

IN State Circles . . .

● On May 31, the Whole Woman’s Health Alliance (WWHA) won an injunction from Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana allowing it to begin performing abortions in South Bend after it had twice been denied a state license through a convoluted state administrative process (over “reputable and responsible character” and disclosure issues) that seemingly had left neither proponents nor opponents satisfied. Her new ruling finds that the Indiana State Department of Health appeals panel which overturned (2-1) an administrative law judge recommendation that the clinic receive a license – on the clinic’s second try – still violated due process. Judge Barker concluded that “the state stands to lose little if an injunction is issued, but women in northern Indiana stand to lose a great deal if it is not.” In an unusual explanation, she wrote, “It can be difficult for federal judges and federal litigators, from our comfortable vantage points, to understand how completely the everyday life of another may be outside of her control – but we must try to understand it,” noting that many women across Northern Indiana may have limited means and accessibility to abortion. The “unavailability of abortion in South Bend imposes a substantial obstacle to its access,” the judge adds.

□ “Judge Barker’s decision to side with the abortion operators will put Hoosier women at risk and lead to the deaths of hundreds of unborn children,” said Indiana Right to Life President and CEO Mike Fichter. “We expect WWHA will now open without an abortion license, meaning Hoosiers have no way to know if they are complying with health and safety rules or not. Judge Barker’s decision is another example of a court trampling states’ rights when it comes to any measure that protects life.”

□ U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R), whose congressional district includes the facility, issued a statement saying “Every human life is precious and deserves our protection. The Indiana State Department of Health was right to deny the application of an abortion provider with a deeply troubling history to operate a clinic in South Bend. This outrageous ruling by a federal judge to allow the abortion clinic to open without a license puts the health of Hoosier women and the lives of unborn children at risk.”

□ Former chief judge Barker, Indiana’s first female federal court judge, was a Reagan appointee. He earlier had named her as U.S. Attorney.

● We’re waiting now for action by Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana given that argument was heard Monday in Bernard, M.D., v. Indiv. Members of the Indiana Medical Licensing Bd., et al., No. 1:19-cv-1660-SEB-DML. This is the challenge to HEA 1211-2019, a law banning dismemberment abortions (which those who support availability of the second trimester procedure label by the medical term “dilation & evacuation”). Since the initial American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana motion sought a preliminary injunction against the law that would prevent it from its planned July 1 implementation, a ruling should be imminent. Dr. Caitlin Bernard was the named plaintiff.

□ After Solicitor General Tom Fisher used some of the same descriptors as lawmakers had during the HB 1211 debate (suggesting, in part, that the State was looking to bar the heinous practice of “ripping a fetus limb from limb from the womb”), Judge Barker interrupted and asked OAG’s top litigator to direct his argument to the “lawsuit and not the politics I’m not going to let you load this up with a lot of language.” The StatehouseFile.com’s Emily Ketterer and Victoria Ratliff wrote about the hearing, explaining SG “Fisher argued that there are three safe alternative methods to performing a D&E procedure, including inducing labor to result in the birth of a nonviable fetus, injecting the fetus with Digoxin or potassium chloride to result in death or removing the umbilical cord, resulting in the fetus dying within a few minutes But Ken Falk, the legal director at the ACLU representing Bernard, said the procedures can be more painful, less reliable and more intrusive. He said induced labor can result in a two to three-day hospital visit enduring painful childbirth labor, and he argued many cannot financially afford that long of a hospital stay When questioning Fisher, Barker told him that the alternatives Fisher suggested are ‘hard positions to maintain,’ based on lack of medical evidence. She also said the uncertainty of the evidence behind the fetus feeling pain during D&E may not be considered a justifiable case for the law. Fisher argued that Bernard and the other OB-GYNs who performs second-trimester abortions already offer labor induction, but not currently as an alternative to a D&E procedure. He also said Bernard has time to learn how to give the fetal demise injections between now and July 1, to which [Judge] Barker responded by saying, ‘That’s your best argument?’

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) authors a FoxNews.com op-ed Thursday defending the new Indiana law prohibiting abortion based on an unborn child’s race, gender, or disability. “There is no escaping the hard truth that permitting abortion of the disabled not only denies equal human worth but also gradually eliminates the disabled from society,” he writes. “Iceland has reached a nearly 100 percent elimination rate for babies with Down syndrome, and the United States and other developed countries are not far behind.”

● As part of the Indiana Sustainability Development Program – resulting from a new partnership with the Environmental Resilience Institute, founded as part of the IU Prepared for Environmental Change Grand Challenge initiative – Indiana University students are working with local governments in Bloomington, Carmel, Columbus, Delaware County/Muncie, Evansville, Fort Wayne, Gary, Greencastle, Goshen, Michigan City, Oldenburg, Richmond and West Lafayette Indiana to complete community-scale greenhouse gas inventories. These inventories will provide data on topics such as the amount of energy consumed, the diversity of the energy supplied to their grid, and residents’ vehicle types and fuel usages.

□ Communities can use the data to set targets for reducing greenhouse gas emissions and develop a plan for achieving these goals. Students will analyze results to help host government units understand the data, a component of larger efforts to reduce emissions and adapt to changes impacting Hoosier localities.

● Assorted state entities with fraud prevention responsibilities team with several not-for profit entities with similar missions to formally form the Indiana Council Against Senior Exploitation (IN-CASE), with Secretary of State Connie Lawson (R) and her office taking the lead because of the work of the Office's Indiana Securities Division that protects Hoosier investors against securities fraud. "With IN-CASE, we saw an opportunity to amplify our efforts by teaming up with others who are equally committed to protecting our state's senior citizens," says Secretary Lawson. The IN-CASE mission: Empower Indiana communities to prevent and end senior exploitation and abuse through education, encouragement, and empowerment.

□ IN-CASE actually took shape some four years ago when the Indiana Association of Area Agencies on Aging (IAAAA) began hosting a networking group consisting of government agencies and organizations that serve older adults and/or have a mission to educate them and their caregivers on how to prevent all types of fraud. The Office of the Secretary of State and IAAAA are leading this endeavor in partnership with the FSSA Division of Aging, Office of the Attorney General, Better Business Bureau Serving Central Indiana, AARP Indiana, Indiana Legal Services, and other state, public, and private organizations. Recognizing the creation of IN-CASE, the Governor declares the week of June 9-15 as Indiana Elder Abuse Awareness Week, which culminates with World Elder Abuse Awareness Day on June 15.

● Dr. Scott J. Shackleford, an associate professor of business law and ethics at Indiana University's Kelley School of Business, chair of the IU-Bloomington Cybersecurity Program and director of the Ostrom Workshop Program on Cybersecurity and Internet Governance, takes to the pages of the Wall Street Journal Wednesday to call for the establishment of "a public-private body to investigate and prevent assaults on our information networks – a National Cybersecurity Safety Board." He envisions "a thorough forensic examination of large, sophisticated hacks and craft policy recommendations to guard against future breaches," focused on (1) attacks that affect large numbers of Americans; (2) ones that cause widespread damage; and (3) those that use novel and particularly dangerous techniques. "Once the fact-finding was wrapped up, the cyberteam would publish its findings and make recommendations to help guide the industry and other parties toward preventing similar lapses. Like the NTSB, the board wouldn't have the power to enforce changes. But, ideally, lawmakers and industry would regularly adopt their proposals, as they do now with the NTSB."

● Softheon, Inc. is chosen from a field of three (that included Public Consulting Group, Inc. and Equifax Workforce Solutions) for a $14,430,300 four-year contract to provide an Asset Verification System for Medicaid applicants and beneficiaries for the Family and Social Services Administration.

● Medical or recreation marijuana legalization may not be on the formal Summer study agenda for Hoosier lawmakers, but just like Rep. Jim Lucas (R) undertook his own – serious – review of state legalization policies last Summer, some may only have to travel a few miles (about as long as it takes to empty a small bag of Doritos) later this year to see how things are working next door in Illinois after the Land of Lincoln last week legalized recreational marijuana use and sales for adults.

□ While the issue isn't formally the subject of a charge of the Legislative Council to any particular panel, continued expansion of marijuana availability in our neighboring states may mean that someone could bring it up as part of a Criminal Code reform discussion or talk about lowering medical care costs.

□ The organic bill also included a provision expunging criminal records for those convicted of possession of small amounts of marijuana, effectively an extension of the "Check the Box" legislation that was shepherded through the General Assembly here a few years ago via a unique coalition of social conservative and liberal lawmakers, aimed in large part, at reducing African American unemployment in Indiana. Illinois' governor sold it, in part, as "the most equity-centric approach in the nation" – and had his office lined with posters his administration had produced touting that approach when the bill passed. "We legalized adult-use cannabis, creating the most equity-centric system in this nation which will right historic wrongs and reinvest in the communities that have suffered the most because of the War on Drugs," Gov. J.B. Pritzker (D-IL) tweeted. "This will have a transformational impact on our state, creating opportunity in the communities that need it most and giving so many a second chance," Gov. Pritzker exclaimed in a statement his office released. Watch for that equity argument to lead the way, and the medical advantages to also be touted, especially after medical product stores have quickly filled up abandoned strip malls statewide.

□ Despite the June 12 return of Dead & Company for their annual concert at Ruoff Home Mortgage Music Center (still Deer Creek to the real Deadheads), don't expect any move to legalize those magic mushrooms (or change local public health standards for those cheese sandwiches).

● In Common Cause Indiana v. Marion Co. Election Bd., No. 18-2735, a panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit ruled on a technical point in ridding the court system of a case regarding the legal paradigm governing Marion County's voting scheme after changes were made to the system – but only after the State of Indiana submitted its opening appellate brief.

□ The manner of dismissal, however, hung up the parties, and after oral argument, the Seventh Circuit panel explained, "In short, Indiana asks us to vacate the Decree, while joint appellees ask us to remand to the district court with instructions to vacate. Though the result they seek differs slightly, in essence, they seek the same relief: a vacatur of the Consent Decree. Indeed, at oral argument, the Board's counsel recognized that "whether the district court is ordered to vacate the Consent Decree or this Court vacates the Consent Decree on its own ... makes no practical difference." Because "both sides ultimately agree that the Decree should no longer be in effect, we have no need to address whether the district court had authority to enter the Decree. And we need not remand the case to the district court for vacatur. Given our authority to vacate district court judgments – including consent decrees – we can and should vacate the Decree ourselves Accordingly, we VACATE the Consent Decree and REMAND to the district court with instructions to dismiss the case."

□ In a release touting the outcome, the Office of Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) explains that the Seventh Circuit "vacated a consent decree contested by Attorney General Curtis Hill because it resulted from a federal district court's encroachment upon the rightful authority of the State of Indiana," and after "the district court said it would not vacate the consent decree ... General Hill pressed the state's appeal. On June 3, the Seventh Circuit ruled that the consent decree should, indeed, be vacated. 'From the very beginning of this case, we have agreed wholeheartedly that we must as a matter of civic duty ensure that as many people as possible are able to participate in free and fair elections,' Attorney General Hill said. 'At the same time, we must safeguard the proper balance between state and federal authority. To this end, we are certainly pleased the court of appeals has vacated a consent decree through which a federal court improperly sought to override state authority.'"

IN the Economy

- The U.S. Chamber of Commerce releases an analysis of the state-by-state impact of new tariffs on Mexico. Indiana ranks 13th nationally, a consequence of importing $4.5 billion of goods. A five percent tariff would cost Hoosiers and Hoosier businesses in the neighborhood of $226 million.

□ Indiana Chamber of Commerce President and CEO Kevin Brinegar issues a scathing statement about possible presidential implementation of United States tariffs on goods imported from Mexico. Brinegar says, "Using economic threats against our neighbor and one of our country's largest trading partners to compensate for unfulfilled promises by the administration and Congress on immigration is an irrational - and extremely damaging - concept. Indiana businesses and consumers will once again be the innocent victims through paying what amounts to tax increases. Nearly one-sixth of the $4.5 billion of Mexican products imported into our state in 2018 came in the important auto parts sector. If implemented, a likely retaliation of tariffs on American products will further impact Hoosiers and damage our economy."

- What you may not have read in the national and local stories about the animal abuse at Fair Oaks Farms under criminal investigation: What the fallout might be for Indiana's largest agri-biz tourism attraction ... how Marriott, which just opened a custom Fairfield Inn farm-themed property on-site, may react ... whether other Hoosier dairy producers can step in to fill production needs for store chains (such as Jewel-Osco) given the closures when Walmart opened its own processing facility in Northeastern Indiana ... how this may impact the end of April gubernatorial appointment of Fair Oaks co-founder Mike McCloskey to the Indiana Economic Development Corporation board of directors (and Fair Oaks involvement in other Indiana State Department of Agriculture Activities) ... whether the fact that this was an undercover video investigation spurs a change in state law to bar such activity or strengthens legislative resolve to keep such prohibitions off the books (recall 2013 legislation sought to outlaw such videos at animal operations; will it return in 2020?) ... and will McCloskey family campaign contributions be shunned going forward (they tend to contribute to the party in power - Ds early this century; Rs in the last 15 or so years).

- For the first time in what seems like at least a full year, Indiana shows up in the U.S. Department of Labor's Unemployment Insurance Weekly Claims report, despite our neighboring states appearing on a regular basis, sometimes in a positive and sometimes in a negative context. This appearance by Indiana is a positive: Only Ohio (- 3,273) and three other states demonstrated a larger decrease in initial UI claims for the week ending May 25 (over the prior week) than Indiana's 104. At the same time that Ohio enjoyed the nation's largest decrease, however, Michigan (2,537) led the 50 states and Washington, D.C. with the largest over-the-week increase in initial UI claims.

- The North Lawrence Community School Corporation expects to trim almost 25 instructional aides in the next school year - as well as a handful of teachers on temporary contracts - as the district looks to cut expenses ... the Plymouth Community School Corporation will not fill six open teaching jobs for the 2019-2020 school year.

- Hoosier Racing Tire plans a $3 million investment to boost production of a new hot-selling motocross tire manufacturing line in Plymouth by a factor of 10, looking to increase plant space by 75,000 square-feet and adding as many as 40 new employees. The long-time local manufacturer seeks designation of the facility as within an Economic Revitalization Area, and also asks the Plymouth City Council for a real property and business property tax abatement ... FedEx Corporation plans to invest $9 million to lease and equip a large section of a new 630,000 square-foot spec building in the AmeriPlex Indianapolis industrial park near the Indianapolis International Airport to serve as a new location for its FedEx Supply Chain, Inc. division, reports Alex Brown of Inside Indiana Business. FedEx looks to staff the facility with 225 full-time workers by 2021 with an average wage of slightly higher than $16 per hour, as well as many additional permanent part-time and temporary seasonal jobs. FedEx seeks a five-year property tax abatement from the City of Indianapolis ... EFP Corporation, an Elkhart-based manufacturer and converter of expanded foam protective packaging, plans to expand and invest more than $2.1 million to lease a 100,000 square-foot shell building and establish its fourth manufacturing facility in Evansville's Vanderburgh Industrial Park, expecting to create almost 30 new jobs by the end of 2021. EFP plans to invest almost $4.5 million in production equipment to design, mold, and fabricate expanded foam products serving the consumer protective packaging, thermal temperature assurance, recreational vehicle, and building and construction markets. The company plans to be operational in the new facility by November 2019. EFP says that it chose Vanderburgh County as a central location to serve customers accessed by the I-69 and I-64 corridor, and within four or five hours of Evansville. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offered EFP Corporation up to $125,000 in performance-based tax credits. The Vanderburgh County Council will consider additional incentives, likely to include a six-year property tax abatement ... Michigan City Paper Box Company in Michigan City plans to invest $478,800 in new equipment with the help of a five-year business personal; property tax abatement from the Michigan City City Council, allowing it to add a handful of new jobs ... Norton Packaging in Hamlet plans to invest $2.27 million in a 40,000 square-foot expansion of its current facility (technically owned by the Starke County Economic Development Foundation) that will mean some 20 new jobs, and could also lead to purchase of the building from the Foundation over a five-year period.

IN Transition

- Don't be surprised if the Senate Majority senior fiscal analyst post is offered to a current top-notch state agency administrator with lots of Second Floor fiscal experience.

□ David Reynolds, who left that post as director of fiscal policy for the Senate Majority Caucus, will join Bill Sheldrake's Policy Analytics, LLC as senior vice president, likely in July. With all of the Indiana and Illinois changes in gaming policy, look for Sheldrake's 15-year-old firm to find itself enmeshed in lots of local fiscal analyses of casino-related matters. Sheldrake himself led the Indiana Fiscal Policy Institute for more than eight years, and during his decade-tenure with the State Budget Agency he was Indiana's chief revenue forecaster, head of tax analysis, and deputy budget director.

● David Powell will step down from his role as executive director of the Indiana Prosecuting Attorneys Council on October 3 (and officially retire November 1) after leading IPAC for more than eight years. He joined IPAC after some 20 years as Greene County prosecutor.

□ Chris Naylor, IPAC's long-time assistant executive director and a former elected prosecutor and deputy prosecutor for Jefferson and Switzerland counties, will succeed him. Naylor also served as the Indiana Securities Commissioner from 2006 to 2013, a post from which he led the nationally praised state investigation of Central Indiana money manager Marcus Schrenker, and that of the Indiana State Teachers Association for selling unregistered securities.

● Democrat Gordon Hendry leaves his post on the State Board of Education after six years, leaving behind big shoes to fill on virtual charter school oversight. His departure follows that of Steve Yager, as reported last month by our sister Hannah newsletter INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT, adding to the SBOE churn.

● The Department of Child Services moves Erin Bognar into the newly created post of assistant general counsel of training and support, in which she will work to improve DCS attorney training and recruitment for the agency's litigation department (a recommendation made by the Child Welfare Policy and Practice Group's 2018 report). Bognar will oversee the development and implementation of the DCS attorney training curriculum as well as advance a strategic recruitment and retention plan to reduce turnover in the department. She will also develop a legal intern program seeking to attract law school grads with DCS experience into full-time posts. Bognar previously served as the agency's chief counsel of legal affairs.

● Abigail Campbell leaves her post as a press secretary for the House Republican Caucus, which she has held since 2017 (managing external press for representatives in Southeastern Indiana), to join the Indiana Builders Association (IBA) as the association's communications director. Look for Campbell to coordinate the public relations and communications programs for the association. She will also serve as the managing editor of IBA's five major news publications and manage IBA membership recruitment and retention, and association events.

● The Kentucky Cabinet for Health and Family Services (CHFS), home to most of the Commonwealth's human services and health care programs, adds former Hoosier David Wu to the team as director of process improvement and business innovation. Wu will focus on identifying ways to streamline operations and improve timeliness of processes across all CHFS agencies and departments. He most recently served as chief operating officer and director of government transformation and deputy chief operating officer for then-Gov. Bruce Rauner (R-IL) after service as a policy director for former Gov. Mitch Daniels (R). He also was policy director for then-Indianapolis Mayor Greg Ballard (R) and vice president of the Central Indiana Corporate Partnership.

□ Another Hoosier joins the Bevin Administration CHFS. Jordan Rowe signs on as director of strategic communications, a position previously focused on Kentucky Health that now will be expanded to provide focused policy content on current CHFS programs and initiatives to legislators, media, community partners, and the general public. Rowe has experience as a news anchor and reporter, news director, and digital content producer and comes to CHFS from a position as news anchor and reporter for WIKY-FM in Evansville.

● Reps. Ethan Manning (R) and Shane Lindauer (R) are among 37 lawmakers nationally chosen from 10 other Midwestern states and four Canadian provinces to participate in the Council of State Governments' 25th annual Bowhay Institute for Legislative Leadership Development, August 9-13. The 2019 program will be held in partnership with the Center for the Study of Governance and Politics at the University of Minnesota's Humphrey School of Public Affairs. In addition to curriculum designed to develop leadership skills, the program analyzes a variety of public policy issues, including the economy, trade and health care policy.

● Will Baskin-Gerwitz, who served as the communications director for the unsuccessful 2018 Donnelly U.S. Senate re-election campaign, joins the administration of New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio (D-NY) as a deputy press secretary. Expect him to focus on education, the Office of Special Enforcement, and other issues.

IN the Lobby

● Barnes & Thornburg LLP files a federal lobby registration on behalf of Philadelphia-based Theia Group, Inc., a company in the "Technology and aerospace" business (reportedly stealth technology and satellites) to "Assist client with government relations activities related to technology and aerospace issues."

● Just as Massachusetts-based AquaBounty Technologies, Inc. receives federal approval to raise the first genetically modified animal (Atlantic salmon) cleared for human consumption (at the former Bell Fish Company facility in Albany), it retains Sidley Austin LLP, which files a federal lobby registration to "Educate and seek assistance from congressional offices and Administration officials on issues related to genetically engineered foods." Commercial production of AquaAdvantage salmon began in Indiana early this month.

● The new superintendent of the South Bend Community School Corporation adds three new positions to his cabinet, including a $125,000 per year executive director of public and governmental affairs, hiring away Susan Guibert from her similar post as executive director of media relations and communications for the University of Chicago Booth School of Business.

FEC CHAIR SAYS TRUMP ACCEPTING FOREIGN ASSISTANCE 'ILLEGAL': Federal Election Commission (FEC) Chairwoman Ellen Weintraub said Thursday it is illegal to accept foreign assistance during elections after President Trump publicly suggested he would accept foreign intelligence on opponents. "I would not have thought that I needed to say this," Weintraub tweeted Thursday with her statement (The Hill). "Let me make something 100 percent clear to the American public and anyone running for public office: It is illegal for any person to solicit, accept, or receive anything of value from a foreign national in connection with a U.S. election," Weintraub said. In an interview with ABC News Wednesday, Trump suggested he would accept dirt on an opponent offered by a foreign country. Doubling down on why that's unconstitutional, Weintraub said "this is not a novel concept," adding that "our Founding Fathers sounded the alarm about 'foreign Interference, Intrigue, and Influence.' " "They knew that when foreign governments seek to influence American politics, it is always to advance their own interests, not America's," she said.

TRUMP CAMPAIGN SAYS IT WILL WEIGH INFO ON 'CASE BY CASE' BASIS: The top spokesperson for President Trump's 2020 reelection bid said the campaign would handle offers of information on opponents from foreign entities on a "case by case basis." Kayleigh McEnany, the campaign's national press secretary, said on CBS News's "Red & Blue" Thursday that the campaign will follow Trump's lead when it comes to handling potential offers (The Hill). "The president's directive, as he said, [it's] a case by case basis. He said he would likely do both: Listen to what they have to say, but also report it to the FBI," McEnany said. McEnany's comments come after Trump said in an interview with ABC News on Wednesday that he would "maybe" call the FBI should a foreign operative offer him dirt on a political opponent.

TRUMP DRAWS BIPARTISAN FIRE ON FOREIGN 'DIRT': Democrats and Republicans joined together on Thursday to condemn President Trump for saying that he would still accept campaign help from Russia or other foreign governments, but disagreed on whether new legislation was required (New York Times). In an interview broadcast on Wednesday night, Mr. Trump rejected his own F.B.I. director's recommendation that candidates call the authorities if foreign governments seek to influence American elections, saying he would gladly take incriminating information about a campaign opponent from adversaries like Russia. Democrats said Mr. Trump seemed to be inviting the help of Russia and other foreign powers as he campaigns for re-election in 2020. "Yesterday, the president gave us, once again, evidence that he does not know right from wrong," Speaker Nancy Pelosi told reporters. She added, "I believe that he's been involved in a criminal cover-up." In the Senate, Republicans on Thursday rejected an attempt by Senator Mark Warner of Virginia, the top Democrat on the Intelligence Committee, to pass a bill by unanimous consent that would require candidates to report any attempts by foreign nationals to donate or coordinate with their campaign by offering assistance. But Republicans agreed that Mr. Trump was wrong to express willingness to take help from Russia. "If a public official is approached by a foreign government offering anything of value, the answer is no — whether it be money, opposition research," Senator Lindsey Graham, Republican of South Carolina and a close ally of the president, told reporters. "The right answer is no."

TRUMP SMASHES FBI EFFORTS TO THWART FOREIGN INTERFERENCE: Nearly two years ago, FBI Director Chris Wray set up an office tasked solely with stopping the type of Russian interference efforts that infected the 2016 campaign. On Wednesday night, President Donald Trump undercut the whole operation in a matter of seconds (Politico). In an ABC News interview, the president first proclaimed he would have no problem accepting dirt on his opponents from a foreign power, then said Wray was "wrong" to suggest the FBI needs to know about such offers. The comments, according to interviews with nearly a dozen law enforcement veterans, have undone months of work, essentially inviting foreign spies to meddle with 2020 presidential campaigns and demoralizing the agents trying to stop them. And it has backed Wray into a corner, they added, putting him in a position where he might have to either publicly chastise the president and risk getting fired, or resign in protest. America's enemies will see Trump's comments and likely "come out of the woodwork like never before to try to influence the president," said longtime FBI veteran Frank Figliuzzi, who served as the bureau's assistant director for counterintelligence until 2012. "And it's going to be more difficult to defend against because they'll try harder than ever to mask their attempts."

PENCE TRIES TO SHORE UP GOP ON TRADE: A group of Pennsylvania manufacturers surrounded Vice President Mike Pence as he offered his standard greeting from President Donald Trump. The response was underwhelming. "When I told him I was in the Keystone State, I think he sounded just a little bit jealous," the vice president said to a few audible groans and tepid applause (AP). But when Pence turned to his assignment for the trip last week to York, Pennsylvania—selling the administration's new trade deal with Mexico and Canada—the group warmed up. By the time he got to the part about calling on Congress to pass the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement, his audience cheered him on. Pence is on a quiet mission to advance the administration's top legislative priority for the year—the troubled trade deal—and, with it, just maybe hold together the fraying Republican coalition. As Trump wages a trade war with China and threats of another with Mexico, Pence has been traveling the country trying to build support for a free-trade deal. While his boss promotes the power of tariffs, Pence has been in places like Eau Claire, Wisconsin, and Lebanon, Indiana, speaking about the benefits of lowering them.

The vice president isn't just trying to boost support for the trade agreement, which the administration wants passed this summer. He's also trying to hold together a Republican Party deeply divided over Trump's trade wars.

INDIANA LOSES OUT ON USDA BID: Indiana will not be the new home to two research agencies within the U.S. Department of Agriculture that are relocating outside of Washington, D.C., after coming up short as a top-three finalist (Erdody, IBJ). The USDA announced Thursday that it had selected the Kansas City region for the new location for its Economic Research Service and the National Institute of Food and Agriculture after being offered more than $26 million in incentives from state and local governments. The offices are expected to bring nearly 550 jobs to the region. Indiana's pitch for the offices—submitted by Purdue University, the Indiana Economic Development Corp. and Gov. Eric Holcomb's administration—was one of 136 received by the USDA last year from 35 states. In May, Indiana was named one of three finalists for the agencies along with the Greater Kansas City Region in Kansas and Missouri, and the Research Triangle in North Carolina.

INDIANA SMOKING RATES AMONG HIGHEST IN U.S.: More than one in five Indiana adults smoke cigarettes, one of the highest rates in the nation, while the number of youths using vaping products remains a concern for anti-smoking advocates (Hurt, Statehouse File). The percent of high school students using e-cigarettes in 2016, the last year for which data is available, is double what it was in 2012—10.5%, but down from 15.1% in 2014, according to the Indiana Department of Health. Despite the numbers, the Indiana General Assembly in the 2019 session took no action on measures aimed at reducing rates of tobacco use and vaping, including higher taxes and raising the smoking age from 18 to 21. Vaping products will be studied this summer by lawmakers. With no immediate action in the Indiana House or Senate to raise the smoking age, Sen. Todd Young, R-Indiana, is moving at the national level. He has taken the first steps to join other lawmakers from across the country to push bipartisan legislation that would raise the legal age to buy tobacco products from age 18 to 21 on a federal level. "Most of these are good kids that don't understand how powerful these vaping or e-cigarette devices can be," Young said in a press conference in South Bend in late May. "We need to protect them, and that's what this T21 legislation does."

POMPEO BLAMES IRAN FOR TANKER ATTACKS: The Trump administration has concluded that Iran is responsible for attacks Thursday on two tankers in the Gulf of Oman, Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said, calling them the latest in a series of hostile actions in the region toward the interests of the U.S. and its allies (Wall Street Journal). The incidents sent oil prices sharply higher, reigniting fears of trade disruptions in the Strait of Hormuz, through which over a third of the world's seaborne crude oil is shipped. Brent crude, the international benchmark for crude prices, rose as much as 4% before losing some of those gains. The attacks appeared to use relatively sophisticated weapons, according to early assessments, and came within roughly 45 minutes of each other in the Gulf of Oman, where four tankers were attacked last month in an incident the U.S. blamed on Iran. Iran has denied responsibility for any of the attacks, including Thursday's. Mr. Pompeo said the latest U.S. assessment is based on "intelligence, the weapons used, the level of expertise needed to execute the operation, recent similar Iranian attacks on shipping, and the fact that no proxy group operating in the area has the resources and proficiency to act with such a high degree of sophistication."

FEDERAL WATCHDOG URGES CONWAY FIRING: A government watchdog recommended that top White House adviser Kellyanne Conway be removed from her post, citing repeated alleged violations of a rule that prohibits political activity by executive-branch staff (Wall Street Journal). In a statement Thursday, the Office of Special Counsel—which isn't affiliated with former special counsel Robert Mueller's Russia investigation—described Ms. Conway as a "repeat offender" of the Hatch Act for attacking Democratic presidential candidates while speaking in her official capacity as a White House adviser. "Ms. Conway's violations, if left unpunished, would send a message to all federal employees that they need not abide by the Hatch Act's restrictions. Her actions thus erode the principal foundation of our democratic system—the rule of law," the letter said. The office recommends to President Trump that he remove Ms. Conway from her post. In response, the White House rejected the recommendation, calling the actions against Ms. Conway "deeply flawed and violate her constitutional rights to free speech and due process."

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: The Trump campaign says it will weigh information from foreign sources on a "case by case basis." The FEC chair says doing so would be "illegal." And Fox News analyst Judge Andrew Napolitano said President Trump is "prepared to commit a felony to get reelected." Folks, these are astounding developments and indicators that Trump's legal exposure will not likely end with the Mueller report. It appears he is prepared to do anything to stay in office after 2020. Whew. - Brian A. Howey

MERRITT COMMENTS ON HOUSE RAZINGS: State Sen. Jim Merritt on Thursday called Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett's initiative to renovate, transform or demolish 2,000 homes in the city a "fraud" after a news report found issues with the numbers claimed by the Hogsett administration (Colombo, IBJ). Merritt, a Republican running against Hogsett in this year's mayoral election, accused Hogsett of "purposely inflating" the number of properties it had "improved" by including luxury apartment units or homes that received minimal maintenance. Standing in front of a blighted home at 1230 S. Talbott St., Merritt said the mayor had "failed the residents of Indianapolis." "The reason why I said it's fraud is it's misrepresenting the facts, it's misleading, to improve their image, burnishing their image rather than banishing blight," Merritt said. "He and his administration have misled the public."

Presidential 2020

BUTTIGIEG ASKED ABOUT HIS 'BIG IDEA': South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg was asked by NBC's Harry Smith what his "big idea" is (Howey Politics Indiana). Buttigieg said he wants same day voter registration nationwide, wants to grant statehood to...Washington, D.C., and he says the electoral college has outlived its usefulness. "Twice in my young lifetime, I've seen the American people overruled by the electoral college. It's time for that to go because it's undemocratic. But at the end of the day, I think most Americans, of any party, ought to be able to get on board with the idea that one person, one vote, counting equally, is the fairest way to choose our president. America over time has grown more democratic, and I think that's a good thing, but it's not a one way street. Sometimes we've taken steps backwards, and I'm afraid we are living through one of those periods. It's becoming harder to vote and harder to make sure that your vote counts."

3 MISS DEM DEBATE CUT: The governor of Montana, a Massachusetts congressman and the mayor of a midsize Florida city failed to qualify for the first presidential primary debates of the 2020 cycle, the Democratic National Committee announced Thursday (Washington Post). The only three major candidates to miss the cut are Montana Gov. Steve Bullock, Rep. Seth Moulton (Mass.) and Miramar, Fla., Mayor Wayne Messam.

BUTTIGIEG, BETO PUSH AGE ISSUE: Some of the younger candidates in the crowded Democratic presidential primary are suggesting that the early front-runner, 76-year-old Joe Biden, is too entrenched in the past (AP). Former Texas Rep. Beto O'Rourke, 46, and Pete Buttigieg, the 37-year-old mayor of South Bend, have stepped up questions this week about whether Biden really provides new perspectives for the direction of the country after the 2020 election. "We cannot return to the past," O'Rourke told MSNBC on Thursday. That echoes Buttigieg, who seemed to refer to Biden during a lengthy speech Tuesday designed to bolster his foreign policy credentials. "Democrats can no more turn the clock back to the 1990s than Republicans can return us to the 1950s," he said. "And we should not try." Buttigieg was just shy of his eighth birthday when the 1990s began. When Biden announced his first run for president in June 1987, he was 5.

SANDERS CALLS FOR GENERIC DRUG PROBE: Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), Ranking Member of the Senate Budget Committee, and Rep. Elijah E. Cummings (D-Md.), Chairman of the House Committee on Oversight and Reform, wrote to Attorney General William Barr to urge him to investigate 20 generic drug manufacturers for allegedly engaging in an unprecedented, multi-billion-dollar price-fixing conspiracy in violation of federal antitrust law (Howey Politics Indiana). "It is sick and disgraceful that generic pharmaceutical executives, who should be making medicines affordable for the American people, were instead busy coordinating a cover-up scheme to hide the truth about their price-fixing conspiracy when we asked about their skyrocketing prices," Sanders said. "In my view, their 'polite f-u' letters designed to obstruct our investigation were clearly illegal. The Department of Justice must hold these bad actors accountable to the fullest extent of the law."

NAPOLITANO SAYS TRUMP WOULD COMMIT FELONY ON FOREIGN DATA: Fox News legal analyst Andrew Napolitano warned Thursday that President Trump would be committing a felony if he accepted damaging information from a foreign power for an election (The Hill). Asked for his reaction to Trump's comments, Napolitano said on Fox News's "Shepard Smith Reporting" that Trump's remarks showed the president is "prepared to commit a felony to get reelected. That was my reaction and it was not a happy one," Napolitano. "I was not happy to hear it. I thought he shot himself in the foot politically. I wish he hadn't said it, but he did. There's no wiggle room with respect to dirt, with respect to opposition research because the Federal Election Commission has already decided in other cases that that is a thing of value," he said, adding that it "comes from a statute which prohibits receipt of money or a thing of value from a foreign national. Whether the person is working for a foreign government or not." "So what the president said he would do to [ABC News's] George Stephanopoulos would be felonious," Smith responded. "Correct," Napolitano replied. "He would be committing a felony and the person giving it to him, if that person was ever here and subject to our jurisdiction, would be committing a felony as well."

ANITA HILL SAYS SHE COULD VOTE FOR BIDEN: Anita Hill, the law professor who accused Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment during his 1991 confirmation hearing, said Joe Biden's overseeing of the hearing does not "disqualify" him for the presidency (CBS News). Asked if she would consider voting for him, Hill replied during a Thursday interview with NBC News' Andrea Mitchell, "Of course I could."

DERSHOWITZ BACKS BIDEN: Alan Dershowitz, the Harvard Law professor emeritus renowned, as of late, for his legal defenses of President Donald Trump throughout the special counsel investigation, said Thursday that he would support Joe Biden in 2020 in a matchup with the current president (Mediaite). Dershowitz, appearing on the SiriusXM radio show of Mediaite founder Dan Abrams, spoke at length about the investigation into Trump and his campaign's ties to Russia, and said he will vote in 2020 based on the entirety of Trump's record. "You're not going to vote for Donald Trump, are you?" Abrams asked in response. "It depends who runs against him," Dershowitz said. "I'm a strong supporter of Joe Biden," Dershowitz said. "I like Joe Biden. I've liked him for a long time and I could enthusiastically support Joe Biden."

Congress

YOUNG VISITS TORNADO TORN PENDLETON: He came to see areas impacted by the Memorial Day storm. He left impacted by the people of Pendleton. U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R-Ind.) was in Pendleton on Friday, June 7, to meet with local emergency management officials at Town Hall and visit areas affected by the EF2 tornado (Pendleton Times-Post). Young viewed a six-minute video, produced by South Madison Community Foundation, showing tornado damage along with comments from residents. Next came a 40-minute meeting with Pendleton town leaders, American Red Cross and first responders. Following the meeting, Young surveyed some of the local landscape, touring the west side of town and Falls Park, viewing some of the areas hit hardest by the storm. He spent nearly two hours in town. On Wednesday, June 5, Young's regional director, Monica Bowles Kozlowski, conducted mobile office hours for two hours at American Legion Post 117 in Pendleton, helping constituents who need help or whom have experienced troubles with federal agencies. "It has been inspiring," Young said of how the town has reacted to the devastation. "I think it's a model for the rest of the country, but this is what Hoosiers do. They step up and they help out neighbors when they need it. Clearly that has happened in this case. That's inspiring to me. I know it has inspired others."

YOUNG, BRAUN SEEK CHICAGO DRY DOCK FUNDS: U.S. Senators Todd Young (R-Ind.), Mike Braun (R-Ind.), Tammy Duckworth (D-Ill.), and Dick Durbin (D-Ill.), and Representatives Trey Hollingsworth (R-Ind.-09) and Pete Visclosky (D-Ind.-01) announced that TPG Chicago Dry Dock LLC will receive a $1.2 million Maritime Administration Small Shipyard Grant from the U.S. Department of Transportation (Howey Politics Indiana). This grant will aid in the construction of the largest dry dock in the Lower Lake Michigan region. In May, the Senators and Representatives wrote a letter to MARAD Administrator Mark H. Buzby in support of TPG Chicago Dry Dock's construction project, which highlighted the substantial economic impact for the Great Lakes and U.S. Inland Waterways. "TPG Chicago Dry Dock's construction of the largest dry dock in the Lower Lake Michigan area is a necessary project for job creation, workforce training, and the commercial waterways system," said Senator Young. "The new dry dock will not only expand repair services to larger vessels in the Lake Michigan region, but it will position the TPG Chicago Dry Dock facility to offer unburdened access to both the Great Lakes and U.S. Inland Waterways markets in Northwest Indiana." "Funding for this dry dock construction project is a big win for Hoosiers in northwest Indiana thanks to efforts on both sides of Lake Michigan and both sides of the aisle from Senator Young, Senator Duckworth, Senator Durbin, Representative Visclosky, and Representative Hollingsworth," said Senator Braun.

BANKS CALLS FOR NON-DEFENSE SPENDING CUTS: U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R-IN) proposed an amendment cutting all nondefense, discretionary spending by 14 percent in the Democrat majority's appropriations package. The amendment is the second of its kind offered by Banks on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives (Howey Politics Indiana). Said Rep. Banks, "Cutting 14 cents on every dollar is the first step in reining government spending to begin tackling our $22 trillion debt. As a father with three young daughters, I find it reprehensible to saddle their generation, and their children's generation, with crippling debt just because we lacked fiscal discipline to address Washington's spending problem ourselves. As Chairman of the Republican Study Committee Task Force on Budget and Spending, I was proud to lead the effort to produce a budget that would balance in six years and cut over $12.6 trillion in spending. To date, this is the only budget proposed in this Congress. Hoosiers across Indiana work hard to balance their checkbook, and I will fight tirelessly to make sure the government lives up to their example."

CARSON HAS RUSSIA QUESTIONS: When President Trump's son and associates agreed to meet with the Russians in June 2016, the Russians were able to open a door to have access to the administration, said experts who answered questions from Indiana's Rep. Andre' Carson, in a House Intelligence Committee hearing (WIBC). "The son of a U.S. presidential candidate agreed to accept assistance from a foreign adversary to undermine his father's political opponent," said Carson, before asking questions of Robert Anderson, former FBI agent and expert in anti-espionage, Andrew McCarthy, former federal prosecutor and expert in counter-terrorism, and Stephanie Douglas, also a former FBI agent in the Security division. "What counter-intelligence risks does this set of facts pose?" asked Carson. "I think it's the ability to get access to the administration. That's where it starts," said Anderson. "You're talking to people that are around the president or potential president of the United States."

DEMS INCREDULOUS OVER TRUMP REMARKS: "Atrocious." "Unbelievable." "Wildly ridiculous." "Unpatriotic." House Democrats left a Thursday caucus meeting aghast at President Donald Trump's comments that he'd consider accepting election assistance from a foreign government. But even that statement wasn't enough to move a majority of Democrats off the sidelines and closer to supporting impeachment (Politico). Interviews with nearly two dozen lawmakers on Thursday laid bare a new sense of exasperation at Trump's comments — at times, literally throwing their hands in the air — at what they saw as blatant defiance of U.S. democratic principles. Still, most lawmakers, including senior members of Democratic leadership, said it did not change the calculus on launching impeachment proceedings. "It doesn't move me any closer to anything," House Majority Whip James Clyburn (D-S.C.) said. "We'll find out from our committees. They're doing the work."

REPUBLICANS BLAST TRUMP: "Accepting the work product of a foreign government or the effort of a foreign government to try and influence an election of one candidate or another? It simply strikes at the heart of our democracy," Sen. Mitt Romney (R-Utah) said in an interview (Politico). "It's wrong. It's antithetical to our democratic principles." "I was just surprised he wouldn't say he would immediately turn it over to FBI or DOJ," added Sen. James Lankford (R-Okla.), a leading proponent of election security legislation. "There are going to be international conversations all the time. There's no way to avoid that ... but the natural thing is to be able to turn it over" Several senators up for reelection vowed to call the FBI immediately if they received such information. "You have to report it to authorities. Generally speaking, it's a part of, in the case of like Russia, it's an effort to disrupt our elections," said Sen. Thom Tillis (R-N.C.), who is up for reelection and working to stay close to Trump amid a primary challenge. "My first call would be to the FBI, my second call would be somebody to corroborate the information." Cory Gardner (R-Colo.), one of the most vulnerable senators in the 2020 cycle, said foreign opposition "should be turned over to the FBI, plain and simple." And Sen. Joni Ernst, another incumbent on the ballot next year, also put daylight between her and Trump. "I would not trust information coming from another country. I wouldn't do it," the Iowa Republican said. "I can't speak for him, but I wouldn't want it. I'd definitely alert the authorities."

State

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB REACTS TO USDA SITING ANNOUNCEMENT - Governor Eric J. Holcomb offered the following regarding the United States Department of Agriculture headquarter agencies relocation announcement (Howey Politics Indiana): "I am extremely proud of Indiana's efforts to pursue USDA's headquarter divisions. Our economic development teams worked around the clock with key partners to create a superior proposal and coordinated our efforts with leaders throughout the state. Indiana landing in the USDA's top three showed the nation that once again Indiana is an ideal destination and thriving community for agriculture. We will continue positioning ourselves for further growth and momentum, ensuring we are the very best place to live, work and play."

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB SIGNS SEA1 - Senate Enrolled Act 1, authored by State Sen. Erin Houchin (R-Salem) was ceremonially signed into law today by Gov. Eric Holcomb. SEA 1 is a comprehensive Department of Child Services (DCS) bill aimed at improving support and assistance for vulnerable Hoosier children in the welfare system and their families (Howey Politics Indiana). "As a former DCS caseworker, I understand the importance of providing efficient services to vulnerable children across our state," Houchin said. "Maintaining as much stability and familiarity as we can for children and ensuring their best interests are considered in every step of the process is critically important to ensure they have the best outcomes possible in difficult situations." SEA 1 requires DCS to consider the best interest of the child when making decisions regarding home placement, termination of parental rights, and adoption proceedings. It also requires DCS to attempt to identify all adult relatives of a child at the time out-of-home placement is recommended, and in subsequent months – with the aim of keeping children in the most family-like setting possible. It also creates a 24-hour contact line for Family Case Managers to assist with finding family members and for placement options. Furthermore, SEA 1 improves rights for foster parents by providing them with greater participation in courtroom proceedings and allowing them to advocate on behalf of children in their care.

GOVERNOR: BOSMA COMMENTS ON HOLCOMB BILL SIGNINGS - House Speaker Brian C. Bosma (R-Indianapolis) reacted to Gov. Eric Holcomb ceremonially signing several House Republican priority bills into law today, including House Enrolled Acts 1003, 1006, 1008 and 1009 (Howey Politics Indiana): "This session, House Republicans delivered on our promise to strengthen our state's commitment to educators and students. Along with providing a historic increase in education funding, we made significant progress to ensure more of those dollars flow directly to teachers with the passage of House Enrolled Act 1003. We also took important steps to provide educators with more career advancement opportunities and give much-needed support to new teachers. After a top-to-bottom review of Indiana's Department of Child Services, House and Senate lawmakers worked with Governor Holcomb to enact much-needed reforms to improve how we care for the state's most vulnerable children. The job is not complete, but significant headway has been made with the passage of House Enrolled Act 1006 and the administrative improvements directed by the Governor."

STATEHOUSE: HILL SIGNS ON TO 16-STATE HEALTH COALITION - Attorney General Curtis Hill has joined a 16-state coalition supporting a Trump administration policy enabling self-employed people and those working for small businesses to participate in Association Health Plans (AHPs). Following an executive order by President Trump, the U.S. Department of Labor finalized the AHP rule in the summer of 2018 (Howey Politics Indiana). AHPs provide access to quality, affordable health coverage to segments of the population that otherwise find it difficult to obtain such coverage. Earlier this year, however, a federal district court stated that aspects of the Department of Labor's rule were unlawful. This month, Attorney General Hill joined 13 other attorneys general and two governors expressing disagreement with that decision in an amicus brief filed with a federal appellate court in Washington D.C. "The Department of Labor has followed the law in its efforts to promote affordability, choice, freedom and quality healthcare," Attorney General Hill said. "The district court's finding to the contrary should be reversed."

EDUCATION: BSU RAISES TUITION - Ball State University is raising its tuition by a smaller amount than it suggested it might last week (Indiana Public Media). But a new fee for online classes could raise that cost significantly for some students. Ball State University officials proposed a 1.64 percent tuition increase at a public hearing last week, which was just under the non-binding recommendation from the Indiana Commission for Higher Education. But on Wednesday afternoon, the Board of Trustees approved an increase of 1.25 percent for next year and 1.24 percent for the 2020-21 school year. University President Geoff Mearns says all universities go through a balancing act when setting tuition. "Our objective is to balance access and affordability on the one hand – and we've demonstrated that commitment – with a high quality educational experience that produces high graduation rates and successful outcomes professionally for our students after they graduate." Next year, base tuition and fees for a Hoosier resident Ball State undergraduate – that's without room and board and books – will cost $10,020. That's about $900 less than attending Indiana University-Bloomington.

EDUCATION: BSU HONORS ESTOPINAL - Ball State University has named its architecture school for a trustee who died in a plane crash in November (AP). The College of Architecture and Planning will carry the name of R. Wayne Estopinal, a Jeffersonville architect. The Star Press says the decision was made during a special meeting Wednesday. Rick Hall, chairman of Ball State's board of trustees, says Estopinal "gave his life while serving" the university. He was traveling to an alumni event in Chicago when his plane crashed after takeoff at Clark Regional Airport in southern Indiana. Two other people also died.

HEALTH: INDIANA MAKES PROGRESS ON DISABILITIES - Indiana has made progress on a large majority of recommendations to better support the roughly 100,000 Hoosiers with intellectual and developmental disabilities (Indiana Public Media). That was the assessment at Thursday's meeting of a task force charged with monitoring the state's progress. The intellectual and developmental disabilities task force last year created 34 recommendations for the state. And its members say there's been progress on all but eight of them. Task force member Christine Dahlberg is executive director of the Governor's Council for People with Disabilities. She says the eight share a common theme. "Each one of them either mentions some kind of tax policy or additional funding," Dahlberg says. That includes offering tax incentives for employers and better wages for those who support people with disabilities.

INDOT: I-65 RAMP CLOSURES IN BOONE COUNTY - The Indiana Department of Transportation announces upcoming ramp closures on I-65 will begin on or after Monday, June 17 in Boone County. Below is the following schedule for resurfacing the ramps at Exit 130, weather permitting. I-65 northbound exit ramp to Whitestown Parkway Monday, June 17 from 8 p.m. to 5 p.m. June 18. Whitestown Parkway entrance ramp to I-65 northbound Tuesday, June 18 from 5 p.m. to 4 p.m. June 19. I-65 southbound exit ramp to Whitestown Parkway Wednesday, June 19 from 6 p.m. to 4 p.m. June 20. Whitestown Parkway entrance ramp to I-65 southbound Thursday, June 20 from 7 p.m. to 5 a.m. June 21. This project was awarded to Rieth-Riley Construction for $13.8 million. This project also included resurfacing I-65 from one and one half miles south of State Road 39 to just north of I-865.

MEDIA: LAKESHORE PUBLIC MEDIA GETS TRANSMITTER - Lakeshore Public Media has returned to broadcasting at full power. The station has completed installation and certification of its new digital transmitter, restoring Lakeshore PBS broadcast service to the Chicago and Northwest Indiana market (McLaughlin, Inside Indiana Business). A storm initially damaged the transmitter in July of 2018, however after testing and repeated attempts to repair the existing system following the storm, the station accepted that the 15-year-old transmitter was damaged beyond repair. Lakeshore PBS then moved forward with purchasing a new transmitter. Over the last six months, Lakeshore PBS has invested nearly $400,000 in equipment and repairs, removing the old transmitter and purchasing a new solid-state transmitter. "We are proud to announce a resumption of full broadcast service," said James Muhammad, President and chief executive officer of Lakeshore Public Media, in a news release. "It has been an ordeal but we are now back, and we should be better than ever."

WHITE HOUSE: SARAH SANDERS LEAVING WHITE HOUSE - White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders, whose fierce loyalty to President Donald Trump and clashes with reporters defined her tenure, is stepping down at the end of the month (Politico). The president announced her departure on Twitter Thursday afternoon. Trump said she would be returning to her home state of Arkansas, adding that he hoped she would decide to run for governor. "She is a very special person with extraordinary talents, who has done an incredible job!" Trump wrote on Twitter. "I hope she decides to run for Governor of Arkansas — she would be fantastic. Sarah, thank you for a job well done!" Speaking to reporters in her office on Thursday, Sanders did not rule out a run for governor, something that her associates have been buzzing about for months. "I learned a long time ago never to rule anything out," she said. Sanders' father, Mike Huckabee, was governor of the state from 1996 to 2007.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP IN DAMAGE CONTROL MODE - President Donald Trump and his senior advisers moved quickly on Thursday to downplay and muddle his explosive assertion that he might not report to the FBI offers of election help from a foreign entity (Politico). As Trump's Democratic opponents eviscerated him and one of his leading Republican supporters called his comments a "mistake," the president tried to recast his remarks, drawing a misleading comparison between accepting dirt from a foreign agent and his recent conversations with Queen Elizabeth and other world leaders. "I meet and talk to 'foreign governments' every day. I just met with the Queen of England (U.K.), the Prince of Wales, the P.M. of the United Kingdom, the P.M. of Ireland, the President of France and the President of Poland. We talked about 'Everything!'" Trump wrote on Twitter across a pair of tweets, correcting an initial misspelling of Wales. "Should I immediately call the FBI about these calls and meetings? How ridiculous! I would never be trusted again."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will have lunch with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo at 12:30 p.m. in the private dining room of the White House. He will meet with Education Secretary Betsy DeVos at 1:45 p.m. in the Oval Office. Trump will then deliver remarks in the Rose Garden at 3:30 p.m. on expanding health care options.

CITIES: MAYOR WINNECKE EXPRESSES THANKS AFTER FATHER DIES - Evansville Mayor Lloyd Winnecke extended thanks to those who offered condolences after the passing of his father, Ralph (Howey Politics Indiana). "The Winnecke family would like to thank you for your prayers, kindness and support over the passing of Ralph Winnecke," Mayor Winnecke said. "Through this difficult time we are reminded why we love this community and our friends and supporters who sent countless messages of support. From the many doctors and caregivers to the friends who stopped by to see Ralph we are forever grateful."

CITIES: TERRE HAUTE CONVENTION CENTER BIDS LOWER - Bids opened Thursday for construction of a new downtown Terre Haute Convention Center appear to be below an overall project estimate (Greninger, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Thirty-eight companies bid on 17 categories of construction work for the convention center. The low bids tallied more than $29.5 million, while high bids were more than $32 million, according to a Tribune-Star review of the bids. The project was estimated to cost $32.5 million with bond and acquisition costs. "While this is probably the end of your effort, this is the beginning of our effort," Steve Bauer, vice president of construction services for the Nations Group told company representatives at the bid opening held at the Vigo County Annex. Nations Group serves as the project manager.

CITIES: MIDDLETON FD CONSIDERS TOWNSHIP MERGER - In an effort to make sure there are adequate finances for the Middletown Fire Department, an effort has started to consolidate the town with Fall Creek Township (Anderson Herald-Bulletin). A meeting is set for 5 p.m. Monday at the Middletown Municipal Building for residents to obtain information. The 2010 census showed Middletown with a population of 2,322 and Fall Creek Township's population at 4,612. Steve Thompson, Fall Creek Township trustee, said discussions have begun to consolidate the township and Middletown governmental unit to better serve local residents. Thompson said currently the township and town share the costs equally for the operation of the Middletown Fire Department.

Judge nixes FTW pay-to-play ban

State law preemption law found largely across the board in new ruling

In Witwer, et al., v. City of Fort Wayne, No. 02D03-1904-MI-000318, Allen County Superior Court 3 Judge Jennifer L. DeGroote grants the family owners of a construction company an injunction barring the City of Fort Wayne from enforcing its so-called "Pay to Play" ordinance, which survived a veto by Fort Wayne Mayor Tom Henry (D), who had cited likely litigation among the reasons for his action last year in disapproving the measure sent to him by the Republican-majority Fort Wayne City Council.

As Judge DeGroote explained, "The 2018 Ordinance purports to address a potential 'pay to play' problem in Fort Wayne. Specifically, Council was concerned there is the perception among the public that individuals and businesses are conferring or promising to confer property in the form of campaign contributions upon public officials and candidates for office with the intent to control the awarding of professional service contracts. Council also determined that a need exists to maintain public confidence in the awarding of public contracts."

As ultimately enacted, the 2018 ordinance effectively serves to bar any entity - defined to include its officers, as well as other partners and principals who have more than a 10% ownership interest, and even some family members of covered classes - from bidding on a city contract after making a contribution of more than $2,000 to the campaign of an individual with responsibility for awarding city contracts.

The judge largely found that the field which the ordinance sought to regulate was effectively preempted by state law.

Indeed, just about the only aspect of the ordinance which she did not take issue with was its operation under I.C. § 36-1 -3-8(a)(8) of the Home Rule Act, because it did not impose a criminal penalty nor duplicate state law violations for campaign finance, bribery, or ghost employment laws.

However, Judge DeGroote ruled, the ordinance violates I.C. § 36-1 -3-8(a)(12) of the Home Rule Act, finding it an impermissible attempt to regulate the conduct of an election. She takes a broad view that "The power to conduct an election means the power to direct or take part in the operation or management of an election and activities related to an election." The ordinance "places limits on campaign contributions," and "Campaign contributions are a part of campaign finance. Campaign finance regulation is included as conduct of an election."

She further finds that the ordinance is also preempted by I.C. § 36-1 -3-8(a)(7) of the Home Rule Act, judging it to be an impermissible attempt by a local government to regulate conduct that is regulated by a state agency. That section of the law bars a local government from "regulating conduct that is regulated by a state agency, except as expressly granted by statute."

"Campaign finance, including contributions, are regulated by the Indiana Election Commission, a state agency," Judge DeGroote concludes, adding that a 32-year-old ruling from the Indiana Court of Appeals makes it clear that "There is no statutory authority for a municipality to regulate conduct related to campaign financing, including contributions."

That Lake County jinx

Statewide Demos just don't win . . .

Pro tip from your favorite newsletter: you may want to think twice about running for statewide office if you're from Lake County - and especially if you're a Democrat.

The last Lake County Democrat elected statewide (we ignored clerk of the courts and appellate judges) that we could identify was union organizer Charles F. Fleming of Hammond, elected secretary of state in 1948 - albeit after 12 years teaching at North Central High School in Indianapolis.

Indeed, secretary of state was also the office to which the most recent Lake Countian of any party was elected: Todd Rokita (R) of Munster first in 2002 (while some might argue that his years of law school and state service in Indianapolis overcame that youthful handicap, Region Rats - who proudly proclaim that appellation, see "219 Day" - consider it a lifetime designation).

And Hebron's Steve Carter (R) (who may have also been thought of as a Hamilton County guy by then), was first elected attorney general in 2000. Intriguingly, Carter won a race against a Lake County incumbent AG, Karen Freeman-Wilson (D), who had been appointed AG in the middle of a term.

The judge adds that the 2018 ordinance is preempted as an attempt to regulate campaign contributions, an area, which she finds, the state already occupies.

“The field of election law, including campaign finance and campaign contributions, is fully occupied by existing state law. Authority, granted by the Indiana General Assembly, over local government elections and campaign finance has been vested in county election boards,” she observes. “Additionally, state agencies such as the Indiana Election Commission and the Indiana Election Division of the Office of the Secretary of State regulate elections. No powers over election matters have been vested in municipalities.”

As Judge DeGroote sees it, “The 2018 Ordinance is an attempt to regulate campaign contributions, an area where the State of Indiana already occupies the field as seen in I.C. § 3-9-2-4(7) and, therefore, it is preempted under Indiana law.”

She explains that “While Fort Wayne is not precluded from adopting an ordinance to regulate the purchasing of professional services, the 2018 Ordinance goes too far as it includes extensive language related to limitations on the ability to contract for professional services tied to campaign contributions. The 2018 Ordinance, when taken as a whole, intertwines the City’s ability to regulate purchasing of professional services with its inability to regulate campaign finance. It is not proper for the Court to conduct a balancing act to determine how much the regulation of purchasing professional services might offset the regulation of campaign finance under the 2018 Ordinance. Fort Wayne’s involvement in the regulation of campaign finance is not slightly preempted by state law and something to be disregarded. The preemption either exists or does not exist,” the judge sternly observes.

Issues in the ordinance related to public contracting were also found problematic in a September Attorney General Official Opinion (that your favorite newsletter was first to tell you about). The official OAG conclusion: “The State of Indiana has enacted statutes regulating elections and political contributions, and municipalities do not have the authority to regulate in this area. The State has also set out the requirements for municipal contracts and purchasing. The Ordinance at issue here imposes additional requirements for the City that exceed the Council’s authority under the Indiana Home Rule Act. Accordingly, these additional requirements are invalid. In addition, the Ordinance imposes restrictions on political speech that likely violate the First Amendment by limiting the contributions on the part of those desiring to do business with public entities.”

While the City “attempted to address legitimate concerns regarding quid pro quo exchanges or pay to play arrangements that tie contracts for professional services to contributions made to elected government officials who have authority to influence the awards of such business,” the judge concludes that “efforts by Fort Wayne, as well-intentioned as they may be, to address such practices in the 2018 Ordinance is not permitted under current Indiana law as no such authority has been extended to municipalities.”

While the ruling was on a Motion for Preliminary Injunction, the judge “concludes that Defendant City of Fort Wayne is permanently enjoined from enforcing the 2018 Ordinance”

The Witwers were represented by Mark GiaQuinta, brother of House Democratic Leader Phil GiaQuinta, and a former local school board president.

The current city council president, Dr. John Crawford (R), was the leading force behind the ordinance, and he lost his May mayoral primary. You shouldn’t expect an appeal. The judge’s clear and definitive order enjoins operation of the ordinance in its entirety and is consistent with the OAG opinion. The council isn’t a separate party; the City was defendant through the executive branch per the norm in municipal cases.

Federal Office Races . . .

- U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) reveals Friday a.m. that she will not seek re-election at the end of her fourth term in 2020, confirming rumors of the past several years that she personally did not want to serve into the next decade, despite national GOP pressure to do so. Todd? Luke? Mel? A Demo? Stay tuned!

- In a USA TODAY exclusive by Hoosier Maureen Groppe (with contributions from another former Hoosier expatriate, John Fritze, who once covered the State House for the Indianapolis Star), readers learn that the campaign of U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) filed an amended federal campaign finance report just hours after being pressed by the paper that changed the designation of expenses topping $7,600 in campaign funds “on lodging at the Trump International Hotel in the first few months after his election in November to ‘fundraising event costs’ lawmakers are supposed to pay for their own housing in Washington. After USA TODAY asked about the expenses included on his Federal Election Commission disclosure reports, Pence’s spokesman, Kyle Robertson, declined to say whether the Indiana Republican stayed at the hotel before getting an apartment in Washington,” but “Hours after USA TODAY pressed for more detail on the nature of the lodging expenses,” the amended report appeared, even though the Pence campaign had “separately reported more than $15,000 in catering and reception costs at Trump’s hotel in December and January.”

□ According to Groppe, Robertson, who has also run campaigns for Rep. Pence’s younger brother, “said the expenses initially reported as ‘lodging’ were ‘all fundraising event costs’ but he declined to offer specifics. Robertson also wouldn’t say if any of the costs went toward hotel stays by Pence or others on the night of a fundraiser. ‘In order to avoid confusion here from hostile reporters, the FEC report will be amended to change the description from ‘lodging’ to ‘fundraising event costs,’ Robertson said before the updated reports were filed. In all, Pence spent more than $43,000 at Trump hotels in Washington and New York since Jan. 1, 2018, including nearly $23,000 since the Nov. 6 election. The costs initially described as ‘lodging’ were among those expenditures.”

The only other Lake County Democrat we could find being elected statewide (we stopped around the depression for lieutenant governors and didn’t venture into the 1800s for governor, though it didn’t even become a county of its own until 1837) was Peter Hein (D) of Crown Point, elected state treasurer in 1934.

Other statewide elected officials from Lake County for which color pictures should still exist: John P. Gallagher (R) as state auditor in 1966, and Theodore L. Sendak (R) of Crown Point as attorney general in 1968, 1972, and 1976.

- Ginger Myers, co-founder of Coteau Grove Farms in Louisiana, a major thoroughbred breeding operation, contributes $10,000 to the campaign committee of Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) on June 6. She and her husband also co-founded LHC Group, a post-acute healthcare company providing home health, hospice, personal care, and facility-based services.

IN Legislative Races . . .

- The same week as Rep. Dollyne Sherman (R) took office in HD 93, Andy Wayne Miller (D) of the south side of Indianapolis opens a campaign committee for a 2020 run for the seat.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

- According to the Logansport Pharos-Tribune, "Two members of Logansport's City Council - one a lifelong Democrat, the other a lifelong Republican - are teaming up to challenge incumbent Democratic mayor Dave Kitchell in this year's general election councilman at-large Terry Doran announced that he will run as an independent candidate for mayor, joining Republican Chris Martin in challenging Kitchell. Doran's running mate is Ward 5 councilwoman Teresa Popejoy - the only Republican in an otherwise Democratic administration. Popejoy has served on City Council since 2012, including serving as the Finance Committee chair for the entire duration and as council president from January 2016 to January 2019. Doran also announced that his campaign's chairperson will be former mayor and Eel Township trustee Mike Fincher. Fincher served two terms as mayor and one as Eel Township trustee, losing his reelection bid by just 26 votes to Republican Mark Strong in 2018. He is also a former street commissioner, director of the Cass County Solid Waste Management District and City Council member. Doran's treasurer will be current Clerk Treasurer Stacy Cox, who is not seeking reelection."

- Hamilton County Democrats - who had at least hoped to serve up a mayoral challenge in Carmel - will see the 2019 election pass without Democrats running for mayor in any of the four cities in Hamilton County.

- Derek Camp signs on as field director and Alex Wulpi will be communications director for the re-election campaign of Fort Wayne Mayor Tom Henry (D).

IN the Presidential Race . . .

- Former U.S. Sen. Evan Bayh (D) was spotted at a fundraiser for the presidential campaign of former vice president Joe Biden (D) in Georgetown last week. Former U.S. Sen. Birch Bayh (D) told your favorite newsletter in 2008 that he had been the only sitting U.S. senator to travel to Delaware to campaign for challenger Biden in his ultimately successful 1972 campaign (but Biden beat out the younger Bayh for the veep nod in 2008).

- South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) has NBC News conveniently point out his "big accomplishment that he never mentions on the campaign trail," that he "crafted a unique way to lend a hand to the city's undocumented immigrants" with a 2016 program to issue "community resident" cards to undocumented immigrants in South Bend. "The result was an innovative, first-of-its-kind governmentally endorsed, privately run program - one Buttigieg could tout on the presidential primary campaign trail where Latinos are a key voting group As a result, undocumented immigrants in South Bend are now able to partake in many routine aspects of daily life. And they can do so without fear that their names or immigration status might end up in the hands of authorities or anti-immigrant groups. That's because La Casa, as a private organization, isn't bound by requests for public records the way the city might be if it were running the program But despite having developed a novel approach to benefit a community in need, Buttigieg doesn't mention it at campaign events as part of his South Bend record of accomplishments.

And the program isn't promoted on his campaign website, nor given a word in his memoir Why? 'Well, it's certainly something we're proud of. I could probably talk about it more,' Buttigieg told NBC News. 'It's probably an undervalued approach. And one more example where you have a national challenge, where, if the city steps up, you can really make an impact' with (a tieless) former U.S. Rep. Lee Hamilton (D), 88, a foreign policy establishment domo dating back to the mid-1960s at his side (and flanked by 10 large American flags), Mayor Pete delivered a major foreign policy/national security speech before a friendly audience at the Indiana University Auditorium in Bloomington. NBC's Josh Lederman capsulizes things for "Morning Score": "Buttigieg's argument is rooted in the notion that for too long, Democrats have ceded national security to Republicans, Lederman says. The candidate wants to wind down U.S. wars, including pulling troops from Afghanistan, and elevate 'climate disruption' as a national security issue rather than domestic policy. What's Buttigieg's goal? To shine a spotlight on his service as an Afghanistan War veteran and intelligence officer, offering a contrast with Trump. Buttigieg has accused the president of faking a disability to dodge the Vietnam War draft." Mayor Buttigieg also blamed the President for increasing tensions with Iran, and failing to appropriately address the increasing threat posed by China. POLITICO's Elena Schneider reports Mayor "Buttigieg has already built a foreign policy brain trust, which includes more than 100 experts, largely working in a volunteer capacity. The group is led by Doug Wilson, who served as the assistant secretary of Defense for public affairs during the Obama administration," and we were first to tell you how he has assembled a bipartisan cadre of fellow Rhodes Scholars across the globe as an unofficial kitchen cabinet ... did Mayor Pete's foreign policy speech Tuesday - which seemingly slammed fellow Democrats as well as Republicans - drive enough of a wedge between him and former vice president Joe Biden (D) so as to mean that he can't (or won't) run as the Biden veep candidate if Biden continues to lead the field, and

IN Federal Circles . . .

- U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) has teamed with U.S. Sen. Chris Murphy (D-CT), and the two "are taking steps toward blocking the administration's plan to sell weapons to Saudis without going through Congress," POLITICO's "Morning Defense" reported Monday. The two members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations "are using a provision in the Foreign Assistance Act to request a report from the administration on Saudi Arabia's human rights record, which could eventually trigger a vote to halt billions in arms sales which Secretary of State Mike Pompeo is moving forward despite congressional opposition. A State Department spokesperson declined to comment on the specific Murphy-Young plan, but cited the dangers of holding off on weapons shipments. 'Delaying these shipments could cause degraded systems and a lack of necessary parts and maintenance concerns for our key partners, during a time of increasing regional volatility,' the spokesperson said." A few hours after the Morning Defense story, Sen. Young announced that he would introduce a privileged resolution Monday to begin the process of forcing a vote on arm sales and other security assistance to Saudi Arabia. He said the resolution comes after Secretary Pompeo declared an emergency last month to sell arms to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates totaling $8.1 billion without congressional approval. He also said that the resolution would serve as a check on presidential power and reassert the congressional role in setting U.S. foreign policy. The measure draws upon Section 502B(c) of the Foreign Assistance Act, which allows Congress to vote to request information on a particular country's human rights practices within 30 days. After receipt of this report, Congress can then vote on terminating or restricting security assistance. This allows for a forced vote on any aspect of U.S. security assistance to Saudi Arabia, which could include broad categories of future arms sales in addition to the 22 specific sales notified last month. Upon introduction of this resolution, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has 10 days to put the request for information before the Committee for consideration. Otherwise, Sens. Young and Murphy can force a floor vote on the motion to discharge from the panel. "Our arms sales to Saudi Arabia demand Congressional oversight. This bipartisan resolution simply asks the Secretary of State to report on some basic questions before moving forward with them. The ongoing humanitarian crisis and complicated security environment in Yemen requires our sustained attention and we cannot permit U.S. military equipment to worsen the situation on the ground. I look forward to working with my colleagues to swiftly pass this resolution," said Sen. Young . . . Sen. Young joins a bipartisan coalition of largely veteran senators to introduce legislation to shine a light on efforts by foreign interests to influence American policy and public opinion. The "Foreign Agents Disclosure and Registration Enhancement Act of 2019" would provide mechanisms to better enforce existing law aimed at ensuring public awareness of lobbying campaigns pushed by foreign powers. The bill is led by U.S. Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-IA) and also cosponsored by U.S. Sens. Dianne Feinstein (D-CA), John Cornyn (R-TX), Jeanne Shaheen (D-NH), and Marco Rubio (R-FL). "This legislation aims to strengthen rules to ensure individuals working on behalf of foreign entities report their activities. Doing so gives the FBI more tools to protect our national security interests and will ensure greater transparency," notes Sen. Young. The existing law has only been used in 15 criminal prosecutions – seven of which stemmed from Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation. The proposed measure would strengthen current law by providing the U.S. Department of Justice with more tools – including Civil Investigative Demand authority – to investigate possible violations and increasing criminal fines and establishing new civil penalties for those who should or fail to properly register as a foreign agent. The bill would also require DOJ to develop and implement a comprehensive enforcement strategy improves advisory opinion transparency and require the Government Accountability Office to study whether and to what extent the Lobbying Disclosure Act exemption is being misused or abused to conceal foreign lobbying activity. GAO would also produce a report on the effectiveness of these amendments . . . on Tuesday, Sen. Young and U.S. Sens. Angus King (I-ME) and Maria Cantwell (D-WA), along with a group of 13 bipartisan senators, reintroduced the "Task Force on the Impact of the Affordable Housing Crisis Act," which aims to better understand and respond to America's housing affordability crisis by creating a bipartisan housing task force. The task force would evaluate and quantify the impact of housing costs on other government programs, and provide recommendations to Congress on how to increase affordable housing options in order to improve life outcomes. "I've seen firsthand in Indiana how a lack of affordable housing has negative and lasting consequences. The inability to access safe and affordable homes leaves Hoosier families with fewer dollars to spend on important expenses like health care and groceries. As part of my Fair Shot Agenda, I've made solving this crisis a top priority," said Sen. Young. "Our bipartisan bill would assemble a group of experts to better understand the housing affordability crisis so that we can take legislative action and end the cycle of poverty for millions of struggling Americans" . . . Sen. Young joins U.S. Sens. Bill Cassidy (R-LA) and Michael Bennet (D-CO) on Tuesday to reintroduce the "Waterway LNG Parity Act." This bill would require excise taxes on liquefied natural gas (LNG) for marine transportation on inland waterways be levied at a rate consistent with energy output relative to diesel and gasoline. "The Waterway LNG Parity Act is a market-based fix for how we tax liquefied natural gas," explains Sen. Young. "The bill levels the playing field for this important alternative fuel source which represents a growing sector of our economy." The bill authors observe that while it takes about 1.7 gallons of LNG to provide the same amount of energy as a gallon of diesel, fuel usage is taxed on volume, so LNG usage would be taxed 50¢ for the same amount of energy contained in a gallon of diesel fuel that is only taxed at 29 cents. Natural gas is cleaner and more efficient than gasoline and diesel respectively, yet under the current federal tax code disincentivizes its use. This legislation would change the inland waterways financing rate to provide equal treatment within the federal tax code . . . Sen. Young pairs up with U.S. Sen. Ben Cardin (D-MD) to introduce a budget-neutral measure that would provide Medicare beneficiaries more timely access to needed therapies. The “Medicare Home Health Flexibility Act of 2019” would break down barriers for seniors by allowing occupational therapists to perform the initial home health assessment in cases in which occupational therapy is ordered by the physician, along with speech language pathology and/or physical therapy services, and skilled nursing care is not required. In underserved areas where access to physical therapy or speech-language therapy providers is limited, the ability of occupational therapists to perform the initial and comprehensive assessments would prevent delays in home health care and increased costs to Medicare. “Ensuring the health of our seniors begins with timely care,” said Sen. Young of the bipartisan S. 1725. “I’m encouraged that the Medicare Home Health Flexibility Act will help the way we approach healthcare home services for patients in rural areas. Our bipartisan legislation would use Medicare to ensure our seniors are quickly and comprehensively assessed in their homes in order to receive proper treatment” . . . Sen. Young spoke Tuesday at a Senate Republican leadership gaggle about the difficulties Indiana farmers are facing this planting season and urged the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) to act quickly to finalize guidance to apply for payments for crop and livestock losses in 2018 and 2019 due to severe weather. “This is a difficult time right now for a lot of our nation’s farmers, particularly those who hail from my home state of Indiana,” he explained. “Adverse weather conditions have complicated the planting season. In fact, so many Hoosier farmers can’t get their crops into the ground. As of last week, only 31% of corn crop was able to find its way into the ground as compared to 67% nationally,” he added. Congress passed a disaster aid bill, which was signed into law by the President earlier this month. The package includes $3 billion for agriculture programs and contains provisions specifically related to livestock and crop losses. Sen. Young says that farm country is waiting for clarification from USDA on the application process and eligibility requirements as farmers make tough decisions about planting this season . . . Sen. Young coalesces with U.S. Sens. Catherine Cortez Masto (D-NV), Tim Scott (R-SC), Tina Smith (D-MN), and Kevin Cramer (R-ND) to introduce legislation promoting manufactured housing as part of the solution to America’s affordable housing crisis. The bipartisan “HUD Manufactured Housing Modernization Act of 2019” would ensure that the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) supports state and local governments that wish to include manufactured housing as an affordable housing solution when applying for federal funding. “Solving the housing affordability crisis for Hoosiers of all income levels is going to require bold and innovative changes to our nation’s housing policies,” says Sen. Young. “With over 2.5 million Hoosiers already living in manufactured homes – and with Hoosier workers leading the way in construction of manufactured housing – I know it’s time to put greater emphasis on manufactured housing as a housing affordability solution” . . . Sen. Young tells the Wall Street Journal Friday he wants the Trump Administration to follow the normal review process after the late week attacks on two oil tankers in the Gulf of Oman. “No one has presented to me arguments indicating that the United States military or our regional partners don’t have the assets to respond to this sufficiently,” he said. “If the administration is making that argument, they need to come over to Congress and make it to us.”

● U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R) and Mike Braun (R) team up with U.S. Sens. Dick Durbin (D-IL) and Tammy Duckworth (D-IL) on the Senate side, and U.S. Reps Larry Bucshon (R) and John Shimkus (R-IL) to introduce the “Restore the Harmony Way Bridge Act,” legislation that the House of Representatives passed by unanimous consent in the 115th Congress, when it was cosponsored by every member of the Indiana and Illinois delegations. The historic Parker truss span bridge was permanently closed in 2012 due to structural integrity issues. The federal law that led to the bridge’s construction in 1930 has also prevented it from being refurbished and reopened by the states of Indiana and Illinois. S. 1833 and H.R. 3245) would convey the bridge between New Harmony and White County, Illinois from a federal commission to the New Harmony River Bridge Authority (Illinois Bridge Authority) and the New Harmony and Wabash River Bridge Authority (Indiana Bridge Authority) and repeal the 1941 federal statute, removing the problematic conditions.

□ “I’m proud to join my colleagues in introducing this bipartisan, bicameral legislation which will grant certainty to the New Harmony community,” said Sen. Young. “Passage of this bill would allow Posey county, along with its neighboring communities, to dictate the future of this important, historic landmark.” “The Harmony Way Bridge is one of southern Indiana’s lost treasures, and I’m proud to pitch in to the great work Reps. Bucshon and Shimkus have done on both sides of the Wabash to help get this piece of Hoosier history back up and running,” adds Sen. Braun. “I am optimistic that this legislation will pass both chambers of Congress and finally breath life back into the New Harmony Bridge that extends from Indiana to Illinois across the Wabash River,” Dr. Bucshon asserts. “The Restore the Harmony Way Bridge Act will convey the Harmony Way Bridge to both the Indiana and Illinois Bridge Authorities – allowing the states to have management over the Harmony Way Bridge and write the next chapter for this historic bridge.”

● U.S. Rep. Jim Baird (R) was one of nine House members last week adding their co-sponsorship to the “Local Radio Freedom Act (LRFA),” a resolution opposing “any new performance fee, tax, royalty, or other charge” on local broadcast radio stations. The measure, which opposes any potential legislation that imposes new performance royalties on broadcast radio stations for music airplay, now has 175 cosponsors in the House and 22 in the Senate.

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) applauds the inclusion of language from H.R. 2060, the “Ensuring a Secure Afghanistan Act,” in the Fiscal Year 2020 “National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA).” The language specifies a list of requirements that the Taliban must meet before U.S. troop levels may safely fall below 10,000 in Afghanistan. Said Rep. Banks, “The inclusion of important language pertaining to the war in Afghanistan in the House Armed Services Committee’s Chairman’s Mark, is a great step in uncovering Taliban ambitions throughout the diplomatic negotiations. As we determine funding levels of our military, it is critical that any allocation of resources reflects our military’s priorities. As negotiations with the Taliban continue it’s critical to shed light on the Taliban’s refused allegiance to the Government of Afghanistan, affiliations with terrorist groups, and our commitment to the rights of women before any deal is made. With the ongoing ISIS-K and al-Qaeda threats, we cannot afford to take a step backward. Funding our efforts in Afghanistan, and the brave men and women who serve there, should not be beholden to a short-sighted deal struck with dishonest Taliban brokers. I applaud my colleagues for addressing this concern by including this language in the legislation” . . . Rep. Banks Thursday expressed concern following the House Committee on Armed Services’ passage of the “Fiscal Year 2020 National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA),” the legislative vehicle that authorizes funding levels and priorities for our nation’s military. The NDAA passed through committee on a party-line vote of 33-24. Said Rep. Banks, “While this year’s NDAA included a number of priorities that are important to Indiana, I am disappointed my Democrat colleagues chose to break with years of traditional, bipartisan collaboration to instead politicize this process in unprecedented fashion in an effort to score cheap political points. This process is far from over, and while I voted no on reporting the NDAA out of committee, I will continue to engage my colleagues in both chambers of Congress – and in both parties – to ensure our national security priorities are met despite the polarization of the process.” The legislation includes many initiatives championed by Rep. Banks, including and Indiana-focused university hypersonics consortium to support basic and applied research; protection of our universities from foreign entities, including governments, corporations, nonprofit and for-profit organizations, and any subsidiary or affiliate of such an entity, that pose a threat of espionage, to prevent the spread of sensitive information to nations like China, Russia, Iran, and North Korea; a call for a larger, long-term force structure based upon a Five Ocean Navy Strategy; new educational options for military dependents; military spouse license reciprocity; and upgrades for military electronic health records . . . Rep. Banks proposed an amendment Thursday cutting all non-defense, discretionary spending by 14% in the Democratic Labor, Health and Human Services and Education Division appropriations package. The amendment is the second of its kind offered by Banks on the floor of the House, and though it was unsuccessful, it garnered backing from 150 members. He explains, “Cutting 14¢ on every dollar is the first step in reining government spending to begin tackling our $22 trillion debt. As a father with three young daughters, I find it reprehensible to saddle their generation, and their children’s generation, with crippling debt just because we lacked fiscal discipline to address Washington’s spending problem ourselves. As Chairman of the Republican Study Committee Task Force on Budget and Spending, I was proud to lead the effort to produce a budget that would balance in six years and cut over $12.6 trillion in spending. To date, this is the only budget proposed in this Congress. Hoosiers across Indiana work hard to balance their checkbook, and I will fight tirelessly to make sure the government lives up to their example.” The 14% percent cuts proposed by Rep. Banks, when applied to all non-discretionary accounts, would bring non-defense discretionary spending below the FY 2020 cap set by the Budget Control Act. A vote on the his amendment to the State and Foreign Operations Division is scheduled this week. Look for him to continue to offer the same amendment to all non-defense discretionary accounts as the appropriations process moves forward.

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) votes against what he labels as the “President Harassment Resolution” Tuesday, the measure that allows the House Committee on the Judiciary to pursue a civil lawsuit to enforce subpoenas issued to Attorney General William Barr and former White House Counsel Donald McGahn and petitions for disclosure of grand jury information. H.Res. 430 also allows other House committees to initiate civil proceedings in federal court as long as it is approved by the Bipartisan Legal Advisory Group – a group of five lawmakers, three leaders from the majority and two leaders from the minority. Rep. Bucshon calls this an attempt by House Democrats to use legally untested authority to circumvent normal order and sue without exercising all existing options to acquire desired information. “House Democrats are completely neglecting their oath of office – refusing to legislate on behalf of the American people – and are now voting to give themselves unprecedented authority to circumvent the entire House of Representatives. While the House is a majority-driven institution, regular order is designed to ensure that that the minority can be heard and respected. The President Harassment Resolution is designed to deliberately circumvent regular order to shut out and silence the minority and remove any sort of check on the ability of House Democrats to sue the Administration,” Rep. Bucshon asserts. “The complete obsession by House Democrats to impeach President Trump – which this resolution is solely designed to help enable – above any other priority is self-serving, politically motivated, and unbecoming of their duties to their constituents.”

● U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R), a member of the House Committee on Ways and Means, joins forces with U.S. Rep. Harley Rouda (D-CA) to introduce H.R. 3078, the “Expanding Access to Retirement Savings for Caregivers Act.” Their bipartisan bill would allow individuals that took at least one year out of the workforce to care for a family member, without receiving an earned income, to make catch-up contributions to their 401(k) plans, individual retirement accounts, and other eligible retirement accounts in years prior to age 50. “Hardworking Americans who take time away from the workforce to care for a loved one often face difficulties saving enough for retirement,” Rep. Walorski says. “Women in the workforce are especially at risk because they are more likely to put their jobs on hold to become full-time family caregivers. This bipartisan bill will help them set aside the retirement savings they need once they return to work by allowing them to start catch-up contributions to their retirement accounts sooner.” Under current law, only employees aged 50 and older are eligible to utilize catch-up contributions to make additional deposits to their eligible accounts. Although using catch-up contributions can be an important mechanism for many Americans to expand their retirement savings, it can still not be sufficient for those who take time out of the workforce to care for family members and can miss opportunities to save for their retirement for multiple years. They find that this disparity predominantly impacts women, since women are more likely to take more time to act as family caregivers full-time.

- U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) took to the floor of the House Tuesday to urge Congress to continue its efforts to help lower prescription drug prices. The House has previously passed legislation aimed at this goal: H.R. 987 – the “Strengthening Health Care and Lowering Prescription Drug Costs Act,” and H.R. 1503 – the “Orange Book Transparency Act of 2019,” and Rep. Carson told colleagues that he looks forward to Senate action soon on this priority.

- U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) asks constituents in CD 09 his question of the week, following this set-up: “The House Judiciary Committee launched a bipartisan investigation into whether big tech companies, including Google and Facebook, have engaged in anti-competitive behavior. The investigation will include a look into data privacy, policing of speech, and big tech’s effect on the news media landscape.” His query: “Do you support a Congressional review of big tech companies’ effect on competition and consumers?”

IN State Circles . . .

- Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) handles voice over –sans credit – for what appear to be public service announcements for OAG programs that we heard running more than once last week on the WIBC 93.1-FM Tony Katz Show in Indianapolis.

- On Monday, the first business day after Senior U.S. District Court Judge Sarah Evans Barker denied the State’s motion for a stay of her May 31 preliminary injunction allowing the Texas-based Whole Woman’s Health Alliance to open “an unlicensed pill-only abortion clinic in South Bend” – over the objections of the Indiana State Department of Health – Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) asked the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit to intervene and “to stop the immediate opening of an unlicensed abortion clinic . . . providing chemical abortions despite lacking the required license from the Indiana State Department of Health,” as his office frames it in a news release. Whole Woman’s Health Alliance, et al., v. Hill, et al., No. 19-2051.

□ “The district court has declared that something as ordinary and fundamental as state licensing – which the state does for everything from nursing homes to daycares – can be invalidated in the name of the right to abortion,” General Hill explains in language that parallels the State’s motion. “This ruling turns the right to abortion into a cudgel against state licensing laws that the Supreme Court long ago declared to be perfectly valid.” ISDH has denied Whole Woman’s Health a license after the entity failed to provide such requested information as documentation about the safety record of affiliated clinics in other states. “The preliminary injunction threatens irreparable harm to Indiana women because it allows Whole Woman’s Health to open an unlicensed and unregulated abortion clinic,” the AG continues. “Indiana has no way of ensuring that an unlicensed abortion clinic is complying with its other requirements or to ensure that patients are being given safe and proper care.”

□ Directly contradicting Judge Barker’s ruling (she wrote that “Defendants have failed to make a strong showing that they are likely to succeed on the merits of their appeal”), Solicitor General Tom Fisher’s brief on behalf of the State asserts that “It is very likely to be reversed on appeal, and because (1) South Bend has been without an abortion provider for several years, and (2) Plaintiffs have identified no one from South Bend who during that time was unable to obtain an abortion, the equities favor a stay of the injunction to preserve the status quo during the State’s appeal.”

□ General Hill also observes that a licensed abortion clinic already operates west of South Bend in Merrillville. “The whole point of professional licensing regulation is to protect consumers from suffering injury,” Hill said. “The risk of harm to women by allowing unlicensed clinics to dispense chemical abortions outweighs any speculative burdens faced by Whole Woman’s Health or women who must otherwise travel a mere 65 miles for an abortion.”

- Left in limbo by the Supremes: Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-1019, the appeal of a constitutional challenge to the requirement of ultrasound as part of informed consent at least 18 hours before an abortion (also added by HEA 1337-2016, which Indiana Right to Life refers to as the Dignity for the Unborn Law). This particular case has already been on the docket at three successive May conferences of the justices, but has now been held and has not been on the agenda for at least two more conferences.

□ On July 9, at 10:00 a.m., at the Indiana State Department of Health offices in Indianapolis, ISDH will hold a public hearing to amend 410 IAC 26 to make the rules applicable only to abortion clinics providing surgical abortions; to update and add definitions; and to update license application and license renewal requirements, plan of correction requirements, license survey requirements, the content of medical records, employee training requirements, anesthesia service requirements, patient care requirements, other service requirements, physical plant requirements, and documents incorporated by reference. The rules would also add informed consent brochure requirements. In addition to removing outdated references and making technical corrections, one definition would be repealed.

□ Also on the agenda for the ISDH hearing: adding 410 IAC 26.5, a new article to regulate abortion clinics performing drug-induced abortions.

- Three decades after then-Rep. Dick Worden (R) brought fame to the General Assembly by appearing on such national television talk shows as those hosted by Phil Donahue; Sally Jessy Raphael; Morton Downey, Jr.; and Oprah Winfrey to tout his bill that would allow certain men convicted of sex crimes the option to be castrated rather than serve jail time, Alabama Gov. Kay Ivey (R-AL) signed a bill requiring men convicted of sex offenses against those under the age of 13 to undergo “chemical castration” as a condition of parole.

- As the State Personnel Department issues a Request for Proposals for a vendor that can satisfy the State’s need for a flexible spending account (FSA) plan administrator, it reveals that the State is exploring adding Transportation FSA and Health Reimbursement Accounts (HRA). Currently the State offers a medical FSA, Limited Purpose Medical FSA, and Dependent Care FSA.

- QuoteWizd, a LendingTree company, and an online insurance marketplaces, releases a new report compiled from Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) data, and finds that Indiana trails only Oklahoma and Kentucky in the prevalence of current e-cigarette users and vaping.

- Despite what we’re hearing is strong public support from officials representing communities east of S.R. 49 (Valparaiso) to the Ohio State line, the Indiana Department of Transportation is showing little interest in upgrading U.S. 30 to freeway standards – a major undertaking.

- The Indiana Department of Transportation is “temporarily suspending operations at Rieth-Riley’s La Porte asphalt plant following a harsh INDOT audit,” reports the Michigan City News-Dispatch. “INDOT representatives found several instances of poor record-keeping at the facility’s laboratory, including a lack of documentation on what corrective actions employees took when asphalt mixes fell outside INDOT guidelines during testing, [and] could allow work to resume at the La Porte plant later this summer or as late as next January,” even as the company works to bring the facility into compliance with INDOT mandates. Rieth-Riley is using product from its South Bend and Valparaiso plants to meet local needs.

- Greenwood and Noblesville have had to mill and repave brand new roundabouts due to failed paving materials; the original contractors for those two jobs picked up the bill.

- In an unrelated action, represented by Frost Brown Todd LLC, Rieth-Riley last week filed suit in Marion County Superior Court, Civil Division 1 against Janssen & Spaans Engineering, Inc., (JSE) alleging that “As a result of JSE’s design errors and omissions” on the design-build State Street Redevelopment roadway project for the City of West Lafayette, Indiana and Purdue University, Rieth-Riley “incurred extensive and significant additional costs to complete the Project,” which it pegs at “at least $2,183,146.00 of additional costs arising from JSE’s performance of its design services on Sections 1 and 2,” and “at least an additional $897,220.01 of costs arising from Sections 3 and 6B through 6E, $45,463.11 for lighting and signal rework, and approximately $311,000.00 for achieving compliance with the Technical Provisions Section 10.1.1.h.” Rieth-Riley further contends that it “is also entitled to reasonable mark up to cover its extended project management, overhead and expenses of 9% on top of the damages set forth above, investigation and expert expenses to date of more than $300,000.00, and attorneys’ fees and costs.” Rieth-Riley Construction Co, Inc. v. Janssen & Spaans Engineering, Inc., No. 49D01-1906-PL-023468.

- We’ve been keeping you informed about the Indiana Department of Transportation’s planned drone program, and when a potential vendor for services INDOT is seeking asked questions about whether the current major INDOT contract is meant to focus more on waiver training and implementation of unmanned aerial systems (UAS) for INDOT purposes (such as infrastructure inspection) or “a larger vision of building out a statewide UAS program for commercialized use of unmanned systems throughout Indiana, INDOT explains last week that the agency “is looking for near term line of sight utilization, training, and implementation of a UAS program to fit applicable business cases in the agency.” Long term goals – including “Beyond the Visual Line of Sight” (BVLOS) programs – “fit a larger vision after the program is implemented.”

- Eyebrows are raising again about municipal nepotism issues after Anderson police officer Adam Watters was hit with Level 6 Felony charges of Residential Entry, Official Misconduct of a Public Servant, Criminal Confinement and Strangulation. In addition to a misdemeanor charge of Domestic Battery, Watters was also charged with misdemeanor Intimidation after an Indiana State Police investigation. While the ISP news releases about the charges didn’t mention it, state law enforcement was called in because Watters is the son of Anderson Police Chief Tony Watters. Late last year, Anderson’s assistant city attorney resigned after he was arrested on suspicion of drunken driving, the third alcohol-related arrest for Evan Broderick, the son of Anderson Mayor Thomas Broderick, Jr. (D) – in addition to an out-of-state arrest on suspicion of misdemeanor battery.

- The Anderson Herald Bulletin also cryptically reported last year that “A Marion County Superior Court in 2013 expunged and sealed (the younger) Broderick’s criminal records.”

- In Toomey v. Indiana (sic) Department of Corrections (sic), No. 49C01-1501-PL-003142 Judge Sheryl Lynch of the Marion County Circuit Court comes down hard on the Indiana Department of Correction for its failure to comply with a request for “public records containing basic information regarding the drugs it maintains to carry out executions by lethal injection.”

- After largely being turned down, the requestor, A. Katherine Toomey, received backing from both the Office of the Public Access Counselor and Judge Lynch, but the Department remained recalcitrant, and, as Judge Lynch notes, complicated things by a final-day insertion of pharmaceutical secrecy language in HEA 1001-2017, the 2017 budget bill. “If the Department had not gone to the General Assembly without knowledge to Toomey or the Court to get a retroactive statute to essentially vacate this Court’s Order for Summary Judgment dated October 24, 2016 in favor of Toomey and file an improper appeal to the Indiana Court of Appeals and the Indiana Supreme Court to prolong the Attorney Fee hearing, then Toomey would not have needed to file its pleading to force the public disclosure of e-mails and legislative materials.” She continued, “The Department in its actions going to the General Assembly to successfully obtain a retroactive statute without advising the Court and Toomey after the Court issued its Summary Judgment Order October 24, 2016 in favor of Toomey, and filing an improper appeal... was egregious.” After reviewing an email colloquy between officials at DOC and the Governor’s Office which made it clear that the budget bill language would obviate the requests and related litigation, Judge Lynch awarded Toomey $538,343.72 in attorney fees (but turned down her request for pre-judgment interest on the attorney fees in the amount of $56,617.32).

- The Indiana Health Coverage Programs (IHCP) is in the process of amending its policy for enrolling providers in certain areas that are currently designated out-of-state, and with this policy change, enrolling providers in some of these areas will soon be designated as in-state providers, allowing more seamless coverage. The in-state designation will be amended to consider the parameters of the metropolitan statistical areas (MSAs) of major cities within and bordering Indiana. Providers with service locations in certain out-of-state counties will be considered in-state for IHCP enrollment purposes, because the counties are located within the MSA of the cities listed.

- All currently enrolled IHCP providers located in these counties will have their enrollments automatically reclassified as in-state providers. Newly enrolling IHCP providers in these counties will automatically be enrolled as in-state providers. This in-state status will allow providers to follow guidelines and processes for enrollment and prior authorization (PA) transactions with the IHCP as though they were located in Indiana. However, the in-state status will not affect billing and reimbursement for services. Claims for providers located outside Indiana will be processed as out-of-state.

- Newly enrolling providers that are located out-of-state, and not in one of the select counties, will be afforded an opportunity to request in-state status when applying for IHCP enrollment. During the initial IHCP enrollment process, providers may assert one of the following circumstances to support their request to be designated as an in-state provider:

(1) Enrollment increases access to medically necessary services in areas where the distance to an in-state provider would subject a member, or a member's family, to significant financial hardship or create an unnecessary significant burden on a member; (2) Enrollment allows a member to retain a primary medical provider, or to obtain specialty services from a provider (such as centers for excellence) when the same care may not be available from an in-state provider, or would place a significant hardship on a member due to the geographic location of the in-state specialty care provider; (3) Transportation to an appropriate in-state provider would cause significant undue expense or hardship on a member or the office; or (4) Enrollment addresses an emergency health crisis.

● In J.A.W. v. Evansville Vanderburgh School Corp., No. 3:18-cv-00037-WTL-MPB, Judge William T. Lawrence of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana holds that the Evansville Vanderburgh School Corporation (EVSC) violated both the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution and Title IX of the Education Amendments Act of 1972, 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a) when EVSC refused to allow the student to use the male restrooms, the restrooms consistent with his gender identity. The American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana sued the EVSC in February 2018, on behalf of the student, diagnosed with gender dysphoria and under a physician's care (and taking hormone therapy) who was denied the ability to use these restrooms and faced discipline if he attempted to do so. Judge Lawrence also observed that further that "J.A.W. has pointed to evidence that stands unrefuted that EVSC's practice could not be stated without referencing sex and that the practice treated transgender students like J.A.W. differently."

IN the Economy

● Expect to hear before month's end about yet another extension of the $8 million purchase agreement between the Ports of Indiana and Tanners Creek Development for the prospective fourth Indiana port site, the former power plant in Lawrenceburg, as significant environmental issues at the property (we warned you) continue to be addressed.

● The General Fund counted $1.140 billion in collections during May, exceeding expectations by $82.5 million (7.8%), and the good news doesn't end there. When measured on a fiscal year-to-date basis, revenues are running slightly ahead of forecast by $181.4 million (1.3%). The forecast was most recently updated on April 17, 2019. Higher than expected collections from sales and use, and individual income and corporate taxes combined to drive revenues above both current year estimates and prior year actual collections both on a monthly and fiscal year-to-date basis. State tax collections were up 20% over estimates and by more than three percent from May 2018 in Ohio, and General Fund receipts jumped by almost 21% in Kentucky in May (boosted by sales and cigarette tax hikes that produced large increases in the Bluegrass State). Overall fiscal year collections through May in Indiana are running $156.6 million (1.1%) north of the numbers upon which the current biennial budget was predicated (thanks largely to significant September and April overperformance).

□ Total revenue dropped in May from the historic collections we saw in April (the largest individual income tax collections in any month in state history), but May exceeded its revenue estimates by almost double the percentage difference (7.8%) compared to April (4.1%). State tax collections vaulted over May 2018 by $74.5 million (6.8%). With one month to go on the fiscal year calendar, fiscal year-to-date general fund tax collections have grown compared to the same 11 months in Fiscal Year 2018 by $707.1 million (5.0%).

□ Sales taxes added $671.7 million to the General Fund, exceeding the estimates produced just one month earlier by $20.5 million (3.2%) and growing over May 2018 by $41.8 million (6.6%). Sales taxes outperformed the new forecast after three consecutive months in which the category fell south of predictions. Fiscal year-to-date sales taxes have outperformed the same period in FY 18 by $256.7 million (3.7%), perhaps in part due to greater emphasis on the new state law taxing a wider range of online sales.

□ Individual income collections for May totaled $373 million, surpassing the monthly estimate by $36.7 million (10.9%) and improving marginally vs. the strong May 2018 performance by $1.2 million (0.3%). Year-to-date individual income tax collections out-perform the same 11 months in the prior fiscal year by $117.0 million (2.2%).

□ Corporate taxes of $18.8 million beat the monthly estimate by $28.4 million (293.5%) and stand in stark contrast to last year's net shortfall of $16.1 million in May, a positive difference of $34.8 million (216.8%). Fiscal year-to-date corporate tax collections remain well ahead of the pace in the prior fiscal year, running ahead by $242.9 million (58.6%). According to the State Budget Agency, corporate tax refunds were lower – and tax payments were also higher – than last year.

□ Gaming contributed $48 million in tax revenue to the General Fund during May, lower than May 2018 by $1.1 million. Gaming taxes represent 4.2% of total General Fund collections for the month. On a year-to-date basis, both the riverboat and the racino wagering taxes continue to out-perform the same 11 months in the prior fiscal year by a double-digit percentage.

- In a key Hoosier economic metric, the RV Industry Association's April survey of manufacturers finds that total RV shipments ended the month with 40,243 wholesale shipments, a decrease of 15.2% from the 47,442 units shipped in April 2018. Towable RVs, led by conventional travel trailers, totaled 35,718 units for the month, a decrease of 13.7% compared to then prior April's total of 41,411 units. Motorhomes finished the month with 4,525 units, down by 25.0% compared to the April 2018 total of 6,031 units.

□ For the first four months of 2019, RV shipments have reached only 140,219 units, down by 24.0% from the 184,528 units at this same January-April point last year. The first four months of 2018 all showed improvements over the prior year. July 2018 was the last month in which RV shipments exceeded those of the same month in the previous year.

- Rolls-Royce Corporation of Indianapolis is awarded an $8,622,670 modification to a Naval Sea Systems Command contract for procurement of 10 MT7 marine turbine installation parts kit shipsets for the Landing Craft, Air Cushion (LCAC) 100 Class craft. Work will be performed in Indianapolis, and is expected to be completed by January 2021 . . . Raytheon Company is awarded a $234,640,402 Naval Air Systems Command contract for the low-rate initial production of 23 Joint Precision Approach and Landing Systems. In addition, this contract procures three production and installation engineering development model unit upgrade kits, engineering change proposals, and associated data. Ten percent of the work will be performed in Indianapolis, and is expected to be completed in August 2023 . . . CSRA LLC, of Falls Church, Virginia, is awarded a $24,249,327 modification for a previously awarded Marine Corps Systems Command contract to continue information support services for software development and maintenance of business mission area systems largely for personnel and financial accounting systems to support the mission of the Department of Defense. Indianapolis is in line for 20% of the work, which is expected to be completed by May 14, 2020.

- Northeast Indiana is watching warily a proposed all-stock merger of equals between Raytheon Company - a defense contractor that is one of Fort Wayne's largest private employers - and United Technologies Corporation, which has shuttered some Huntington-area Carrier Corporation and related facilities in recent years (remember the 2016 presidential election?) as the two companies seek to become one of the world's largest aerospace and defense companies next year in the form of Raytheon Technologies Corporation.

□ On CNBC's Squawk Box Monday morning, the President seemed to indicate some trepidation to host Joe Kernen over the merger prospect. "When I hear they're merging, does that take away more competition? It becomes one big, fat, beautiful company, but I have to negotiate, meaning the United States has to buy things and does that make it less competitive because it's so already non-competitive." But shortly thereafter, also on CNBC, Raytheon CEO Tom Kennedy and UTC CEO Greg Hayes tried to tamp down any competition issues. "Once [President Trump] understands the benefits of this merger in terms of what it's going to do to reduce costs to the government, what it's going to do to improve technology of the U.S. and its defense profile and what it's going to do for jobs in this country, I think he's going to be supportive, as he has been for both of our companies over his administration," Hayes said. Kennedy added, "We are complementary. We are not competitive. I don't remember the last time we competed with them."

- Ball State University eliminates 25 positions, among other cost-savings efforts, to save $4.5 million and end Fiscal Year 2019 in the black . . . the U.S. Department of Agriculture reveals that it will transfer hundreds of federal research jobs at the National Institute of Food and Agriculture and the Economic Research Service from Washington, D.C. to the Missouri-Kansas metro area in the Kansas City region. Indiana had been one of three finalists for the move.

- The German-based Marbach Group, a manufacturer of die-cutting and thermoforming tools for almost a century, plans to invest $3 million to expand into Michigan City in the former Haskell Building, expecting to create some 30 new jobs at wages between $15 and $20 per hour with help from a property tax abatement from the Michigan City City Council . . . Indiana Wheel Corporation (IWC), a startup manufacturing joint venture led by China-based Jingu Company Limited (Jingu), and specializing in the production and distribution of steel wheels, plans to invest almost $23 million to purchase, renovate, and equip a 300,000 square-foot production facility in Plymouth. The new facility, which will undergo immediate on-site infrastructure improvements, will feature more than $14.5 million of state-of-the-art, specially designed equipment to support IWC's manufacturing operations for the trailer and recreational vehicle (RV) industries. The new Marshall County operations are expected to create more than 115 new jobs over the next few years. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offers IWC up to $1.2 million in performance-based tax credits. The Plymouth Common Council approved additional property tax abatement last week . . . Brotherhood Mutual Insurance Company, an insurer of Christian ministries, a century-old Hoosier company specializing in property and casualty insurance for churches, Christian schools and related ministries, plans today to invest $25.5 million to add 88,000 square feet of meeting and office space to its Fort Wayne headquarters, expecting to create up to 100 new jobs by the end of 2022, and eventually potentially add as many as 300 new employees. IEDC offers Brotherhood Mutual up to $925,000 in performance-based tax credits. Northeast Indiana Works will provide hiring and training assistance. The Fort Wayne City Council approved additional real and business personal property tax abatements . . . Turkey-based Mikropor America, an air and gas compressor filter supplier, plans to invest $400,000 in a new Michigan City facility, allowing it to expand from its current 75,000 square feet plant to 175,000 square feet, expecting to create 10 new jobs.

IN Transition

- Jasper County Commissioner Kendell Culp (R), vice president of the Indiana Farm Bureau, is appointed to serve on the U.S. Department of Agriculture Agricultural Technical Advisory Committee for Trade in Grains, Feed, Oilseeds and Planting Seeds for a term that expires June 14, 2023. Culp raises corn, soybeans, and beef cattle, and has an independent hog finishing operation with his parents, wife, and son near Rensselaer.

- The newly established 15-member 21st Century Energy Policy Development Task Force, a panel that will seek to identify strategies that will advance Indiana's energy policies for the future.

□ House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) appoints House Committee on Utilities, Energy and Telecommunications Chair Ed Soliday (R) as co-chair and State Rep. Ethan Manning (R) as a member. Workers' comp claims hold steady

Costs remain stable – and low – since 2013 reforms trimmed claim costs

Since the implementation of reforms to Indiana's workers' compensation system six years ago in HEA 1320-2013, the average total cost per workers' compensation claim in Indiana has remained stable, according to an updated analysis undertaken by the Workers Compensation Research Institute (WCRI), an independent, not-for-profit research entity.

The WCRI study, CompScope™ Benchmarks for Indiana, 19th Edition, details the impact of the 2013 changes in the Indiana workers' compensation system that addressed the key issues of high hospital costs and the state's low maximum statutory benefit, factors which drive higher than typical medical payments and lower indemnity benefits per claim in Indiana. The changes included institution of a new hospital fee schedule that took effect on July 1, 2014, as well as increases in indemnity benefits in three yearly increments beginning in 2014. The WCRI study also compares the performance of workers' compensation systems in Indiana to 17 other states.

In 2015, indemnity benefits per claim in Indiana were 34% lower than typical in other states, and benefit delivery expenses were 21% lower than typical. WCRI researchers attribute this in part to Indiana having the lowest percentage of cases with more than one week off work (15%), and a shorter duration of temporary disability (a 12-week average), compared to the 18-state median. According to the report, indemnity benefits per claim grew between three percent and six percent from 2014 to 2015 depending on claim maturity, while total benefits per claim increased by almost 10% from 2015 to 2016 for 12-month claims – and by more than 11% for 24-month claims.

The income benefit provisions of the 2013 law are identified as key factors in the indemnity growth. The statutory weekly benefit increased by a total of 20% from 2014 to 2016 (from $650 before enactment in 2014 to $780 in 2016), permanent partial impairment per degree of impairment benefits increased by 16% to 25% (with a higher percentage for lower categories), and the maximum compensation payable increased from $325,000 to $390,000. The increases in maximum statutory benefit moved Indiana closer in line with the statewide average weekly wage (SAWW), a metric used in most states to set benefits. Indiana's maximum benefit now sits at 92% of SAWW after the yearly incremental increases from 2014 through 2016, up from 82% of SAWW in 2013.

A decrease in medical payments per claim from 2014 to 2015 was largely credited to the new hospital fee schedule, with reimbursement set at 200% of Medicare. Medical payments decreased by five percent to 11% in that time period for claims at 12, 24, and 36 months of experience; however, medical payments per claim increased for claims at 12 and 24 months of experience from 2015 to 2016 and remain higher than typical compared to other states (33-35% higher than the 18-state median).

While overall medical expenses grew, hospital outpatient payments per claim decreased by almost 15% per year from 2013-14 to 2016-17, driven down by the hospital fee schedule, shifting Indiana close to the median for combined inpatient and outpatient hospital payments per claim. The higher overall costs were associated with payments for non-hospital services that grew on the order of 6.5 percent.

To Catch (Scratch?) a Thief

Fusion Center gets Lottery misdemeanor

The work of the Indiana Intelligence Fusion Center has always been shrouded in mystery to most Hoosiers outside law enforcement.

The Center's professed mission "is to collect, evaluate, analyze, and disseminate information and intelligence data regarding criminal and terrorist activity in the State of Indiana while following Fair Information Practices to ensure the rights and privacy of citizens."

Along those lines, our sister Hannah News Service newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, includes an interesting nugget this week.

A probable cause affidavit filed in Jasper County Superior Court 1 reveals that a Jasper County Sheriff's Office investigation of a single Hoosier Lottery scratch-off ticket allegedly being cashed twice led to convenience store surveillance video and pictures emailed to area detectives, where local law enforcement in a neighboring county "submitted the information to the Indiana Fusion Center and they received a possible lead. Based on facial recognition it showed that the suspect was [the person who ended up being charged]," and whose vehicle "matches the vehicle in the images from the gas station surveillance," according to the probable cause filing.

The increasing costs and higher than typical average can be correlated to features of the Workers Comp System, including the fact that reimbursement for professional services and Ambulatory Surgery Centers (ASCs) are not regulated through a fee schedule. The costs of these services (already among the highest of the compared states) have been on the rise. Payments related to surgery facilities and surgeon's fees comprise almost one-third of total medical payments in Indiana, and the percentage of claims with facility payments are higher than typical in Indiana for both ASCs and hospital outpatient departments, according to the WCRI report.

While individual metrics were heavily affected by changes stemming from the change in the law, total costs per claim remained fairly stable from 2012 to 2017 (less than a 2.0% increase per year) due to offsetting factors, thus masking the individual changes brought about by the statute.

Among the study's other findings:

- The time from injury through indemnity payment including the average total costs per claim is $38,400 in Indiana, with more than seven days of lost time, eight percent lower than the 18-state median for 36 months experience.
- The average indemnity benefits per claim represent a 20% increase since 2013 after having grown by only four percent from 2014 to 2015 and 11% from 2015 to 2016.
- The average medical payments per claim decreased by 12% from 2014 to 2015 - and then increased in subsequent years due to various factors.
- The duration of temporary disability for Indiana was 12 weeks on average vs. the median of 16.5 weeks.

WCRI analyzed workers' comp claims with experience through 2018 for injuries up to and including 2017. WCRI compared Indiana with workers' compensation systems in 17 other states and found Indiana WC costs to be largely typical of those in the other states studied.

The bottom line: Before passage of HEA 1320-2013, Indiana experienced lower than typical indemnity costs and higher than typical medical costs. Changes brought about by the 2013 law produced higher indemnity costs because of the increased benefits provisions, but lower hospital costs due to the hospital fee schedule, while overall medical costs increased due to offsetting features (non-hospital services cost increases) of the Workers Comp System.

Medical payments per claim remained higher in Indiana and indemnity benefits per claim remained lower in Indiana when compared with most of other states WCRI studied.

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

- In our magnum opus on the CD 05 race to succeed retiring U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R), we passed along what we had heard from others who told us that in conversations with Sen. Victoria Spartz (R) they left with the impression that she would not be a candidate. However, her political team emphasizes that no final decision has yet been made by Sen. Spartz about the freshman senator from Noblesville's candidacy.

□ We're now told that she was not inclined to run "due to her major initiatives [that] needed to be done at the state level," but that "Due to a lot of inquiries from the 5th District, her extensive expertise on fiscal issues much needed at the federal level, and her understanding that education, fiscal and healthcare reforms she is working on at the state level will not happen unless we fix broken federal systems, she is going to consider this office and will make her final decision after the 4th of July."

State Office Races . . .

- If you're not attending the Norman Dale Basketball Camp on July 13, the place to be is Knightstown. The anticipated re-election announcement for Governor Eric Holcomb (R): Hoosier Gym, home court of the Hickory Huskers from Hoosiers. No doubt his biggest brag: Shooting hoops in all 92 counties (Jimmy Chitwood would be jealous; Dennis Hopper would be oblivious).

- Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch (R) transfers what state Republicans say is "an historic $1 million" from her campaign account into the Eric Holcomb for Indiana gubernatorial campaign account. She announced this transfer at a June 25 Team Holcomb fundraising event that separately raised another $1 million in a single night . . . Friends of Suzanne Crouch received a $10,000 contribution June 19 from the Indiana Multi-Family Housing Political Action Committee.

- Zionsville attorney John Westercamp (R) of Bose McKinney & Evans LLP made official on Thursday his bid for the Republican nomination for attorney general. He made stops in Indianapolis (where he was introduced by Rep. Mike Speedy (R)), Elkhart, Fort Wayne and Evansville, and hopes to be able to use his work on RFRA to peel away some social conservatives from embattled Attorney General Curtis Hill (R). In his announcement, Westercamp sounded more like Hill than predecessors Carter and Zoeller when he declared that our liberty is under fire from "courts that care less about the rule of law and more about acting as a super-legislative body, or the left's ambition to legislate radical socialist policies."

IN the Presidential Race . . .

- Even as Nikki Haley (R) 2020 vice presidential talk heats up (including from the Wall Street Journal editorial staff), the President says that he is "100%" behind Vice President Mike Pence (R) as his 2020 running mate (after seemingly hesitating to endorse the VP as a 2024 successor).

- South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) was "knocked off course, balance, and message," Josh Lederman of MSNBC reported from South Bend following a recent police shooting in his city that amplified quiet local discontent over the fact that the police force did not come close to mirroring the color of the community - a situation which has become more acute in the seven years of Buttigieg leadership. Remember several months ago when we questioned how long it would be before the national media looked past the lustre and started digging into the police department issues which had plagued his administration seemingly from the start? And for Mayor Pete, this couldn't have come at a worse time for his nascent campaign - just as he was beginning to make headway with African American voters (particularly in South Carolina, where he had to miss the politissential Clyburn Fish fry), and taking his attention away from preparation for the Thursday debate (and raising questions about whether he should have skipped it to stay home and calm his community, which was taking advantage of the national attention to hold his feet to the fire)

... Mayor Pete caught some national flak for a series of intellectual responses over the week that came from the McKinsey & Company side of his brain, and not more emotional responses from his heart. That the local Fraternal Order of Police publicly rebuked him also didn't help. But we've been telling you all along that Democrats could end up with a Now and Next Biden-Buttigieg 2020 ticket, and the yin and yang of the two men on exhibit during June plays into this. Mayor Pete was criticized for leading with his brain and not his heart on this, while the former vice president was hurt by his leading with his heart and emotional side on the racism comments, and not thinking enough about his comment would be received ... Team Pete designates Anthony Mercurio as "the National Investment Director at Pete for America," labeling the arm making the ask the "Investment" team instead of the "Finance" or "Fundraising" team ... the police shooting issue and high-profile town hall forum far overshadowed the Buttigieg city response to a pair of EF-2 tornadoes that caused serious damage in the local community on Sunday, June 23; we saw no national coverage of that aspect of Mayor Pete's role as chief executive ...

IN Political News ...

● We told you not to expect an appeal of Witwer, et al., v. City of Fort Wayne, No. 02D03-1904-MI-000318, the case in which Allen County Superior Court 3 Judge Jennifer L. DeGroote issued an injunction barring the City of Fort Wayne from enforcing its so-called "Pay to Play" ordinance, which survived a veto by Fort Wayne Mayor Tom Henry (D). The Fort Wayne Journal Gazette reported Wednesday that the Henry Administration "is unlikely to appeal a court ruling that struck down a controversial ordinance limiting campaign contributions from city contractors, City Council Attorney Joe Bonahoom wrote in a memo to the council president. A mayoral spokesman agreed with Bonahoom's assessment."

● The difference between the Supreme Court of the United States and the Indiana Supreme Court on redistricting:

□ In Ruche v. Common Cause, 588 U. S. ____ (2019), the Supreme Court of the United States holds that partisan gerrymandering claims present political questions beyond the reach of the federal courts. The syllabus explains that "federal courts are neither equipped nor authorized to apportion political power as a matter of fairness. It is not even clear what fairness looks like in this context perhaps it should be measured by adherence to 'traditional' districting criteria. Deciding among those different visions of fairness poses basic questions that are political, not legal. There are no legal standards discernible in the Constitution for making such judgments. And it is only after determining how to define fairness that one can even begin to answer the determinative question: 'How much is too much?' The fact that the Court can adjudicate one-person, one-vote claims does not mean that partisan gerrymandering claims are justiciable."

□ As Justice Elena Kagan begins her dissent, joined by three other justices, "For the first time ever, this Court refuses to remedy a constitutional violation because it thinks the task beyond judicial capabilities."

□ Contrast Thursday's SCOTUS punt with the per curiam opinion of the Indiana Supreme Court in Peterson v. Borst, 786 N.E.2d 668 (Ind. 2003). The Court, with three justices appointed by Democratic governors and two, including the chief justice, appointed by Republican governors, accepted jurisdiction of an appeal involving how the Indianapolis-Marion County City-County Council districts had been drawn, ultimately approved by a 16-13 partisan vote of an en banc Marion County Superior Court. Recognizing the civic importance of the matter and time was of the essence - the transfer petition was filed in mid-February and the primary election was coming up on May 6 - the Supremes bypassed the Indiana Court of Appeals, held oral argument, and issued a ruling, which included a new Supreme Court-drawn map - within a five-week window, issuing the ruling and map on March 19, 2003.

□ From the groundbreaking per curiam Indiana opinion: "Based on the unchallenged principle of judicial independence and neutrality, we hold that in resolving partisan redistricting disputes, Indiana judges must consider only the factors required by applicable federal and State law. We conclude that this was the intent of the legislature in providing both the criteria for district boundaries and the dispute resolution mechanism that it did. Whatever role politics may legitimately play in the decisions and maneuverings of the legislative and executive branches, if those branches cannot reach a political resolution and the dispute spills over into an Indiana court, the resolution must be judicial, not political. Thus, Indiana judges may not consider the partisan political consequences of redistricting plans because this is not among the constitutional and statutory factors that inform a judicial decision." They dared to tread 16 years ago where the Supreme Court majority did not on Thursday.

● Kate Schroder (D), vice president of essential medicines at Clinton Health Access Initiative, Inc. in Cincinnati becomes the first announced opponent to U.S. Rep. Steve Chabot (R-OH), a 12-term incumbent. Schroder spent almost two years as a legislative correspondent for then-U.S. Sen. Evan Bayh (D) early in his first term in the U.S. Senate.

● Littoral Combat Ship 17, the future USS Indianapolis, completes acceptance trials in Lake Michigan. This is the ship's final significant milestone before delivery to the U.S. Navy this year.

□ LCS 17 is the ninth Freedom-variant LCS designed and built by a Lockheed Martin-led industry team. The trials included a full-power run, maneuverability testing, and surface and air detect-to-engage demonstrations of the ship's combat system. Major systems and features were demonstrated, including aviation support, small boat launch handling, and recovery and machinery control and automation.

● From the Republican National Committee's Trump Administration vetting documents obtained by Axios: "Seema Verma, who Trump appointed as the Administrator of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, had this paragraph near the top of her vetting form: 'Verma was simultaneously advising Indiana ($3.5 million in contracts) on issues impacting how it would spend Medicaid funds while she was also being paid by a client that received Medicaid funds. Ethics experts have called the arrangement a conflict of interest that potentially put Indiana taxpayers at risk.' " Verma earned a presidential shout-out on live television, front-and-center on the stage with the President at an executive order signing ceremony Monday.

□ The vetting docs also contained some significant errors, such as this on Dr. Jerome Adams, now the U.S. surgeon general: "Adams[]" position as the Indiana State Health Commissioner meant he oversaw Indiana's expansion of Medicaid under Obamacare."

□ There were also mistakes in the RNC work for the White House covering former U.S. Sen. Dan Coats (R), now director of national intelligence. Some simple (and important) biographical information is extracted from Encyclopedia Britannica, and it gets his dates of Senate service wrong. His "red flags" centered on criticism of Donald Trump (R) and lobbying during his Senate services interregnum.

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R), a member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, secures a commitment from Committee Chair Jim Risch (R-ID) to hold a hearing on the Authorization for the Use of Military Force (AUMF) regarding the U.S. military taking action against Iran. Because Sen. Risch has agreed to hold the hearing, Sen. Young said that he would not support the amendment proposed by U.S. Sens. Tom Udall (D-NM) and Tim Kaine (D-VA) that would jeopardize passage of the annual military funding bill debated by the Senate last week. "I share the concern of many of my colleagues about the role Congress must play in authorizing the use of military force. Rather than derailing the NDAA process and jeopardizing the many important provisions contained in it, I've requested that we have this conversation in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Chairman Risch has agreed. I will continue working closely with Chairman Risch and committee to staff to ensure this hearing is scheduled immediately," said Sen. Young. "As I have said repeatedly, we must stand firm on our maximum pressure campaign on Iran, the world's leading state sponsor of terror, while also ensuring Congress fulfills its constitutionally mandated role to authorize the use of force." As we've been telling you, Sen. Young has advocated for a new AUMF since coming to the Senate in January 2017. On Tuesday, at the Senate Republican leadership gaggle, Sen. Young outlined his support for the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA), the annual military funding bill that he says is critical to national security and provides service members the funding they need to defend our country. "We must guarantee our warfighters have unparalleled and overwhelming capabilities to deter or respond to global threats. That's why it is vital that we continue to modernize our military with advanced capabilities such as hypersonic systems, invest in the latest generation fighter jets, and increase the Navy's fleet strength. I agree with President Trump: Our brave service members should have all the resources necessary to ensure they never have to enter a fair fight. At the same time, Congress must also address the true driver of our national debt - runaway, automatic entitlement spending - which is crowding Congress' ability to perform its most important responsibility - provide for our national defense," said Sen. Young. . . . Sen. Young also teams up with Sen. Risch to introduce the "Small Business Investment Improvement Act of 2019," legislation to create oversight of the Small Business Administration's Small Business Investment Company (SBIC) program and facilitate more early stage capital to Indiana's small businesses. S. 1975 is cosponsored by a bipartisan coalition that includes U.S. Sens. Mike Crapo (R-ID), Tammy Duckworth (D-IL), Cory Booker (D-NJ), and Shelley Moore Capito (R-WV). Under current law, the SBIC program lacks statutory timelines for processing applications, which has caused uncertainty for funds applying to participate in the program and small businesses seeking investor capital. This legislation would direct SBA to approve or decline applicants within specific reasonable timelines and require Federal Bureau of Investigation background checks on all applicants before they can participate. "The SBIC program has invested more than $451 million dollars in 135 Hoosier small businesses over the last 10 years. Delays in the application process are preventing these numbers from being even higher," said Sen. Young. "This commonsense legislation will streamline the application process, improve oversight, and ensure that the SBIC program is running as efficiently as possible so that Indiana small businesses can continue to grow" . . . Sen. Young decides to co-sponsor the "Never Forget the Heroes: Permanent Authorization of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund Act." S. 546 would permanently reauthorize the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund which supports 9/11 survivors and first responders who have experienced health issues following the 2001 terrorist attacks. "The survivors, first responders, and families who lost loved ones on September 11th continue to feel the devastating effects of that horrific day and we have an obligation to support them," said Sen. Young. "There's no question, these American heroes need to receive the full compensation they are due."

● U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R) and Mike Braun (R) are joined by U.S. Sens. Jon Tester (D-MT), and Sherrod Brown (D-OH) in introducing a bipartisan Senate resolution celebrating the Indianapolis-based American Legion's 100-year anniversary of serving veterans of the Armed Forces, their families, and communities. The resolution would designate August 23 - 29 as "American Legion Week" to coincide with the Legion's 100th Anniversary convention in the Circle City. "For 100 years, the American Legion has advocated for our veterans. As an American Legion member myself, I can attest to the important work the Legion does to improve the lives of veterans across America. That's why I was proud to help create the American Legion 100th Anniversary commemorative coin, and it's why I'm proud to help introduce a resolution celebrating this milestone," said Sen. Young. "The American Legion has been a cornerstone of American life from the local to the federal level since the beginning, and serves as a constant reminder of the enormous contributions America's armed service members have made to enrich our nation during and after their military service," adds Sen. Braun. "Indiana is proud to be home for the American Legion, and I'm proud to congratulate them on 100 years of service."

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) scored a presidential name-check on live television at a White House signing ceremony for a presidential executive order on prescription drug-pricing transparency Monday. After the event, he said “President Trump is taking decisive action to bring transparency to negotiated hospital rates, which will reduce surprise medical bills and lower the cost of the healthcare. This executive order compliments solutions I’ve offered to ensure patients know what they’re paying for and hold the healthcare industry accountable, which is a win for all Americans.”

● The entire Indiana congressional delegation (with the exception of U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R)), sent a late June letter to U.S. Department of Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue urging swift action to help mitigate the immediate and long-term effects of planting hardship on producers in Indiana. The letter explained that “Indiana is experiencing the worst planting progress levels for corn and soybeans in recorded history,” and urged Secretary Perdue “to expeditiously finalize guidance related to the Additional Supplemental Appropriations for Disaster Relief Act of 2019 recently passed by Congress and signed into law by President Trump” that will “mitigate the immediate and long-term effects of planting hardship in Indiana.”

□ The Hoosier lawmakers also point out “The recent disaster bill includes language that allows prevented planting payments under crop insurance to not exceed 90% and provides additional authority to compensate producers on the higher of the projected price or harvest price. As the USDA finalizes program eligibility and application guidance,” the Hoosiers tell USDA they “strongly encourage consideration of Indiana’s prolonged exposure to rains that have prevented farmers from planting, and will inevitably result in a shortened growing season with decreased yields. We also encourage the USDA to consider using existing authorities to adjust prevented planting deadline dates, adjust the 1% per day penalty for coverage, or other avenues that will alleviate Hoosier farmers’ burden in dealing with detrimental effects from adverse weather.”

● U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R) and Ron Wyden (D-OR), joined by U.S. Reps. Joe Neguse (D-CO), Don Beyer (D-VA), and Jackie Walorski (R), introduce bipartisan bicameral legislation to protect the 30-year affordability commitment of housing financed by the Low-Income Housing Tax Credit (Housing Credit). Currently, Housing Credit properties are subject to a minimum 30-year affordability period. Under current law, owners may pursue a Qualified Contract, which often results in the ability for properties to convert to market rate after just 15 years. The “Save Affordable Housing Act” would prevent the premature loss of affordable housing and ensure that Housing Credit properties remain affordable for at least 30 years, as Congress intended, fulfilling the program’s commitment to serve low-income Americans. “I recently helped introduce legislation that will strengthen the Low-Income Housing Tax Credit, which empowers the private sector to increase the supply of affordable housing,” and this is “an additional step to strengthen this program,” said Sen. Young. “I look forward to working with all stakeholders to provide more safe and affordable housing options for Hoosiers.” “The Low Income Housing Tax Credit has proven to be a critical tool for spurring investment in affordable rental housing and providing stability for low-income Americans, including veterans, seniors, and those with special needs,” adds Rep. Walorski. “By maintaining the availability of affordable rental units, this bipartisan bill will ensure the program continues to give workers and families a better opportunity to achieve the American Dream.”

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) and U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) are the latest Hoosiers to add their name to the list of 181 co-sponsors in the House and 23 in the Senate for the Local Radio Freedom Act (LRFA), which signals opposition to any potential legislation that imposes new performance royalties on broadcast radio stations for music air play.

● A bipartisan rider to the FY 2020 Commerce-Justice-Science spending bill to specifically prohibit the U.S. Department of Justice from using funds to prevent states, Washington, D.C., and U.S. territories from implementing their adult-use and medical marijuana programs was approved by the House 267-165. U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) was one of 41 House Republicans who voted for the bipartisan amendment, joining U.S. Reps. André Carson (D) and Pete Visclosky (D), while Indiana’s other six Republicans were among the 15 House Republicans who opposed the amendment.

● U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) successfully offered a floor amendment to the “Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2020” that would increase funding for the rural broadband Distance Learning and Telemedicine Grant Program by $25 million. The Pence amendment is revenue-neutral, offset against an equal decrease in the Office of the Chief Information Officer Fund. Even though the amendment prevailed by voice vote, Rep. Pence demanded a recorded vote, which showed the amendment passing 425 - 6, with unanimous support from the Indiana delegation. “I am grateful for the support of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to help close the digital divide in rural America,” Rep. Pence said. “Without access to broadband, entire communities can be left behind, and I am proud to have gotten something done to increase rural broadband access.”

● U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) serves up his question of the week for constituents, explaining, “following recent suspected Iranian attacks on two foreign oil tankers, Iranian forces shot down a U.S. military surveillance drone. In response, President Trump issued new financial sanctions on Iran which will ‘deny the Supreme Leader and the Supreme Leader’s Office, and those closely affiliated with him and the office, access to key financial resources and support.” His query: “Do you support increased financial sanctions as a response to Iran’s latest action?” Listed answers: Yes, I support increased sanctions as a response; No, I support military action; No, these sanctions will only increase tensions between US and Iran; I don’t know; and Other (share your thoughts).

● U.S. Rep. André Carson (D), a senior member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, released this statement following the President's announcement that he is issuing new economic sanctions on Iran. "President Trump's strategy towards Iran has been aimless, impetuous, and downright dangerous. His actions are devoid of tactical coherence and have created enormous unrest in the global community. I believe it's critical to protect Americans. But this must be done through a careful plan that prioritizes peace and human lives above all else, not reckless brinksmanship. Most importantly, the President must get Congressional approval for any military action against Iran, or any other nation. A decision of this gravity should not be made by one person, but by the people's representatives who understand war's lasting mark on our respective communities" . . . after voting for H.R. 3401, the $4.5 billion emergency border supplemental appropriations bill to address the humanitarian situation at the U.S. southern border, Rep. Carson said, "Like most Americans, I am heartbroken by the situation at our southern border, a grave humanitarian crisis that is being exacerbated by this Administration's cruel and reckless policies and its inhumane treatment of migrants. Hoosiers abide by the timeless virtue of kindness towards our fellow human beings. What is happening at the hands of federal agencies, which includes the suffering of innocent children in our nation's care, is a shame, and far from Hoosier and American values. Such abusive practices must stop. Lives are at stake, and so is the moral conscience of America. I am proud to vote for the House's life-saving legislation that helps put an end to the needless cruelty at our southern border and affirms the dignity of every human. I urge my colleagues in the Senate to swiftly pass the bill before more people are irreparably harmed. But this is only a start. Congress must pass comprehensive, common-sense and compassionate immigration reform that prevents this crisis from ever happening again. We can't wait another moment."

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) applauds the President's executive order to increase transparency of negotiations he says play a factor in the cost of health care for consumers in an effort to increase price transparency and drive down costs for Americans. Dr. Bucshon said Monday that "Patients need readily available and clear information on how much their hospital stay or doctor visit will cost so they can make the best decisions for themselves and their families. President Trump's executive order is an important step to increase transparency in health care. As a physician, I am pleased that we are moving in a direction that allows consumers to better understand the cost of care they are receiving earlier in the process. By driving down the actual cost of care we can provide better access and higher quality care to more Americans" . . . after voting Thursday in support of H.R. 3401, the Senate amended version of the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations for Humanitarian Assistance and Security at the Southern Border to aid efforts at the Southern border, Rep. Bucshon said, "The crisis along our Southern border has been spiraling out of control for months but Democrats are just now acknowledging it as a crisis. President Trump asked for funding to deal with this crisis 58 days ago, and House Democrats finally realized something had to be done. The deteriorating conditions, understaffing, and overcrowded facilities could have been addressed and likely avoided if Democrats had listened to Border Patrol experts and the President when he called for funding to secure the border. This last minute vote to provide supplemental emergency funding could have been avoided, however, I support this measure that provides much needed financial assistance and allows our agencies along the border to do their jobs."

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) saw the President on Monday sign into law the Pandemic and All Hazards Preparedness and Advancing Innovation Act (PAHPA) that she authored with U.S. Rep. Anna G. Eshoo (D-CA) to strengthen the country's existing preparedness and response programs. Rep. Brooks says that PAHPA will ensure the nation is better prepared to respond to a wide range of public health emergencies, whether man-made or a result of a natural disaster or infectious disease. "People across the country expect the federal government to be prepared to keep them safe during times of natural disasters or biological, chemical, radiological or nuclear threats to our public health and national security," notes Rep. Brooks. "The reality is, these kinds of threats are not just hypothetical. Threats such as Ebola, smallpox or the pandemic influenza can devastate communities, whether occurring naturally or manufactured into weapons of mass destruction by nation states or terrorist organizations. Now that PAHPA has been signed into law, we are one step closer to a safer and more secure future. PAHPA is a critically important bipartisan tool that bolsters America's response to the growing threats to our public health security and is the product of years of collaboration from medical and public health preparedness and response stakeholders" . . . Rep. Brooks provided the following statement after voting in support of what her office described as "humanitarian aid for our southern border": "Providing urgently needed relief for the thousands upon thousands of migrant families and unaccompanied children at our southern border as well as our federal agents who are working to care for these individuals is something every Republican and Democrat should support. I am proud that today, Congress is showing the American people we can work together in a bipartisan way to address the ongoing humanitarian crisis at our southern border."

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) issued a statement Wednesday about an amendment supported by U.S. Reps. Ro Khanna (D-CA), and Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY), and what his office describes as "anti-Trump progressives in the House" to limit the Commander-in-Chief's ability to respond to attacks against American interests by the Islamic Republic of Iran. Said Rep. Banks, "As the Ayatollah saber rattles, President Trump has shown remarkable strength, embodying Theodore Roosevelt's 'Speak softly and carry a big stick' adage. Unfortunately, some of my colleagues would like to take the 'stick' out of the Commander-in-Chief's hands. This unconstitutional amendment is woefully misguided, putting our national security at serious risk and I urge all of my colleagues to oppose it."

IN State Circles . . .

● Due to several scheduling conflicts for the team overseeing the Indiana Department of Transportation's forthcoming Request for Proposals for the Unmanned Aerial System (drone) Implementation, this high-profile RFP that we've been telling you about is now being moved by INDOT from a planned July 9 advertisement to August 13.

● Just as things seemed to be calming down at – and with – the Department of Child Services under the steady leadership of Terri Stigdon and her expanding new team, Indiana Disability Rights, the New York-based child advocacy group A Better Childhood, and the Kirkland & Ellis law firm files suit in U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana in Evansville, alleging in an 81-page complaint that the state of Indiana (DCS) is failing in its duty to protect the 22,000+ children in the child welfare system.

□ The purported class action lawsuit, Ashley W. et al., v. Holcomb, et al., No. 3:19-cv-129, filed on behalf of nine Hoosier children, ages 3 to 16, alleges that the State consistently fails to protect children under its supervision by placing them in inappropriate, unstable, or overly restrictive settings; failing to provide necessary support services and medical care; failing to provide meaningful case management, delaying or denying services and providing minimal oversight; and allowing children to languish in foster care for years before they are either reunited with their primary caretakers, adopted, or age out of the system. The complaint also contends that the medical, mental health, and physical needs of Hoosier children in foster care are not being met because of irregular DCS assessments and the lack of sufficient and accessible resources.

□ Of particular interest is not that the plaintiffs contend the problematic nature of the foster care system have been well-known and glossed over for many years, but that the much-touted reforms implemented after the Alabama-based Child Welfare Policy and Practice Group recommendations were made one year ago have not resulted in substantive change, and Hoosier children continue to suffer from emotional and physical trauma as a result.

□ House Democratic Leader Phil GiaQuinta (D) said after the suit was filed that it demonstrates “the need for lawmakers to have constant vigilance over the care of at-risk children. While the Holcomb Administration has seemed more committed than previous governors to correcting the errors that have plagued DCS for years, today’s announcement shows that we cannot afford to pay anything but the closest attention to what is going on at this agency.” He adds that this is why Rep. Ryan Hatfield (D) offered an amendment to the 2019 session “compelling DCS to meet legally-defined caseload standards. House Republicans defeated that amendment, and promised vigilance in making sure that DCS would be held accountable.” Rep. GiaQuinta believes the complaint “shows that vigilance should be mandated, not just promised. There is a vehicle for holding DCS accountable. It is called the Commission on Improving the Status of Children in Indiana, which has a Child Services Oversight Committee that reviews the work of DCS. It would appear that today’s announcement provides something for those groups to study in the months to come. Frankly, DCS hasn’t earned the right to be given a break in enacting the reforms it so desperately needs. When it comes to protecting the lives of children, we cannot afford to be lenient.” “This might just be the wake-up call Republican leadership needed to assure we make major changes for the protection of our state’s children,” adds Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D).

● On July 22, the Bureau of Motor Vehicles will hold a public hearing on a proposed rule concerning recently controversial procedures to streamline the process for amending an individual’s gender on a driver’s license or identification card and ensure uniformity in the records maintained by BMV and the Indiana State Department of Health.

□ The proposed rule change is intended to create a more consistent process and will also make minor nonsubstantive amendments to bring further clarity to the rule.

● The Indiana Supreme Court weighs in again in the decade-long fight over the $1.3 billion failed Daniels Administration-era state welfare intake modernization project. Int’l Bus. Machines Corp. v. State ex rel. the Indiana Family & Social Services Admin., No. 19S-PL-19.

□ As Justice Steven David writes for the Court, “This case comes before our Court for the second time and arises out of a contract entered into between the State of Indiana, acting on behalf of the Family and Social Services Administration, and International Business Machines, Corp. to modernize and improve Indiana’s welfare eligibility system. We previously determined that IBM materially breached the contract and remanded the matter to the trial court to determine damages and appropriate offsets. After the submission of evidence and a full-day hearing, the trial court issued detailed findings and conclusions. It determined that damages to the State resulting from the breach totaled $128 million and that IBM was entitled to offsets in the amount of $49,510,795, resulting in a final judgment of $78,178,109 to the State. Both parties appealed, raising various issues. Today we address one of the issues raised: whether IBM is entitled to post-judgment interest on its $49.5 million damages award running from the date of the original judgment in 2012 or running from the judgment on remand. Finding that the original 2012 judgment was not ‘final,’ we hold that the post-judgment interest due to IBM runs from the judgment on remand. We summarily affirm the Court of Appeals on all other issues and affirm the trial court on all issues.” The 3-1 Court ruling saw Chief Justice Loretta Rush and Justice Christopher Goff concur. Justice Geoffrey Slaughter concurred in part and dissented in part with a separate opinion. Justice Mark Massa, who was a gubernatorial general counsel during part of the drama, did not participate.

□ The bottom line is that while the Supremes uphold Marion County Superior Court Judge Heather Welch (who handled the case after issues arose with the original trial court judge and awarded the State $128 million in damages, offset, however, against equipment costs for IBM) and an Indiana Court of Appeals panel on the award of $78 million in damages to the State from IBM after then Gov. Mitch Daniels (R) summarily canceled the mega-contract, IBM is entitled to post-judgment interest on its own $49.5 million damages award running from the 2017 judgment on remand. The State had sought a greater damages award; IBM had contended it should have been lower.

□ So if we’ve done the math right, the $78 million figure is the net amount of damages the State was to receive. That will be offset by about $4 million the State owes to IBM in interest on its own judgment . . . but if the Supremes had accepted IBM’s contention that it was entitled to an additional five years of interest, IBM would have been able to offset the judgment by another $14.5 million.

□ Justice Slaughter injects an interesting practical note of sorts at the end of his opinion, in which he supports the lower interest amount, but contends that the majority applied the wrong legal standard to the breach of contract claim and thus awarded too high a judgment. More intriguingly, Justice Slaughter observes that “though the Court’s summary affirmance benefits the State in the short term, the longer-term consequence of our ruling for the State’s future procurement efforts may not be so favorable. It will come as little surprise if prospective vendors respond to today’s ruling in one of two ways. Either they will not do business with the State at all, thus reducing the supply of those willing to contract with the State. Or they will include a risk premium in their contracts to cover the unknown costs of fulfilling obligations beyond what they agreed to. Either way, the State and its taxpayers may soon learn that the future cost of obtaining third-party services will be higher – perhaps appreciably so – than otherwise. The magnitude of the increased cost may not be knowable, but it is a cost nonetheless.”

● Effective July 1, the Indiana Health Coverage Programs (IHCP) will modify the coverage of certain mental health services – crisis intervention, intensive outpatient treatment (IOT), and peer recovery services. For service on or after July 1, IOT and peer recovery services will no longer be restricted to members eligible for the Medicaid Rehabilitation Option (MRO) benefit plan; in addition, all three services will no longer be carved out of managed care.

□ Crisis intervention – short-term emergency behavioral health service, 24 hours per day, 7 days per week – is available to all members, and does not require prior authorization. Crisis intervention should be limited to occasions when a member suffers an acute episode, despite the provision of other community behavioral health services, and intervention should be member-centered and delivered on an individual basis. quick-turnaround documentation (between one and four hours, depending) is required.

□ Intensive outpatient treatment – a treatment program that operates at least three hours per day, at least three days per week – is planned and organized with mental and behavioral health professionals and clinicians providing multiple treatment service components for rehabilitation of alcohol and other drug abuse or dependence in a group setting. IOT includes individual and family therapy, group therapy, skills training, medication training and support, peer recovery services, care coordination, and counseling. IHCP requires the provision of at least 120 minutes of therapeutic interventions per three-hour session. Only specified providers are authorized to deliver IOT and the services require prior authorization. IOT includes the following components: individual/family therapy, group therapy, skills training, medication training and support, peer recovery services, and care coordination – and must be offered as a distinct service with a licensed professional responsible for the overall management of the clinical program. IOT is available to members of all ages. The child rate referenced in Tables 1 and 2 is applied to members who are younger than 21 years of age.

□ Peer recovery services – peer support or peer counseling services – are individual, face-to-face services that provide structured, scheduled activities that promote socialization, recovery, self-advocacy, development of natural supports, and maintenance of community living skills. Peer recovery services must be delivered by individuals certified in peer recovery services per the Department of Mental Health and Addiction (DMHA) training and competency standards for a certified recovery specialist (CRS). Individuals providing peer recovery services must be under the supervision of a licensed professional, and peer recovery services are available without prior authorization up to 365 hours per rolling calendar year. additional units may be authorized via the prior authorization process. A new rate reimbursement schedule is set forth by state officials.

● Facing what they label as an “insulin cost crisis,” Minnesota’s legislative leaders and governor saw their efforts to devise an emergency funding package fail in the final hours of their 2019 legislative session, but all seem to indicate that an “Emergency Insulin Act,” will be enacted during an imminent special session. The DFL-majority House version of the measure would require insulin manufacturers to fund emergency assistance; the Republican-majority Senate sought to have the state foot the bill, but compromise seems likely this Summer – even as the parties work toward a more comprehensive 2020 session solution to address growth in pharmaceutical costs.

□ Don’t be surprised to see an insulin-assistance package introduced in the Indiana General Assembly modeled on a successful Minnesota model next year, perhaps authored by Rep. Vanessa Summers (D) . . . and it will be interesting to see if it is dropped into the hopper with Eli Lilly and Company already on board.

● Our sister Hannah News Service newsletter, INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT, identifies an issue you need to monitor during the 2020 session and legislative campaigns. “In a development likely to amplify debate over – if not actual support for – prohibiting private schools that discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation from participating in the school voucher program, Brebeuf Jesuit College Preparatory School in Indianapolis will no longer be recognized as a Catholic institution by the Archdiocese of Indianapolis,” writes everyone’s favorite education newsletter. “This comes after leadership of the prestigious Indianapolis private school – which boasts a distinguished corps of alumni – defied the Archbishop.” As school officials explain, “Brebeuf Jesuit has respectfully declined the Archdiocese’s insistence and directive that we dismiss a highly capable and qualified teacher due to the teacher being a spouse within a civilly-recognized same-sex marriage.”

□ And our tipoff became even more prophetic when the following weekend generated the news that Cathedral High School became the third high-profile Indianapolis Catholic high school in the LGBT spotlight (Roncalli led the way) after the administration made what it labeled as the “agonizing decision” to “separate” a teacher – like the one at Brebeuf – who was in a legally recognized same-sex marriage. Unlike Brebeuf, Cathedral acceded to the Archdiocese of Indianapolis, which, school administrators write, “made it clear that Cathedral’s continued employment of a teacher in a public, same-sex marriage would result in our forfeiting our Catholic identity due to our employment of an individual living in contradiction to Catholic teaching on marriage.”

□ House Democrats emailed a fundraising appeal on Wednesday explaining that “Last year, Roncalli High School received $1.6 million in state voucher dollars and Cathedral High School received nearly $1.2 million. That is why, this past session, House Democrats introduced an amendment stating schools that choose to discriminate against their LGBT staffers are not eligible to receive these state funds. Not surprisingly, our amendment failed when only one Republican vote for it. If we are going to stand up and support our LGBT community, we need to elect more Democrats to the Indiana Statehouse. For that reason, I am asking you to please contribute to help us fight for all Hoosiers.”

□ Potentially interesting to watch: whether the Indiana Department of Education (and outgoing Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R) – who tweeted her frustration with teacher mandates and low pay Friday a.m.) line up on the same side of this issue as the Governor.

● Good news (we think!) for taxpayers: The Department of Local Government Finance is seeking a vendor for development and implementation of a web application that will allow personal property tax filing to occur electronically throughout the State of Indiana.

● KeyBank National Association is selected over U.S. Bank National Association, the sole other bidder, to begin contract negotiations for implementation of Unemployment Insurance Benefit Payment Distribution services for the Department of Workforce Development.

● The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit schedules oral argument for July 11 on the State of Indiana's request case for an immediate stay that would stop the operation of an unlicensed abortion clinic in South Bend until the appeal can be fully resolved, Whole Woman's Health Alliance, et al., v. Hill, et al., No. 19-2051. On May 31, Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana granted a preliminary injunction allowing the Whole Woman's Health Alliance to open a facility that the Attorney General's Office asserts would offer "chemical abortions despite lacking the required license from the Indiana State Department of Health." On June 2, the Office of the Attorney General appealed the injunction to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, concurrently filing a motion with Judge Barker seeking an immediate stay that would have prevented the unlicensed clinic from opening until the State's appeal could be considered. On June 7, Judge Barker denied the motion for a stay - prompting OAG on June 10 to seek the intervention of the U.S. Court of Appeals in the form of a stay.

□ On June 21, not only did the appellate court, in a per curiam order, schedule oral argument, but it found Judge Barker's "injunction as written is overbroad, as it purports to deal with the operation of Indiana's licensing scheme as a whole. All abortion clinics - those providing medical abortions, surgical abortions, and both - are subject to this licensing scheme, and it applies state-wide. Yet the lawsuit brought by plaintiff Whole Woman's Health Alliance (WWHA) concerns only the clinic that WWHA wishes to open in South Bend, Indiana, and only the provision of medical abortions in that clinic. Pending the resolution of the state's motion, therefore, we are taking the immediate step of narrowing the injunction to one against only the inclusion of facilities that provide medical abortions, as provided by Ind. Code § 16-18-2-1.5(a)(2), and only with respect to the proposed clinic in South Bend. That responds to the state's valid argument that it has valid public health and safety interests in the operation of clinics that it must be permitted to pursue. As so narrowed, the district court's preliminary injunction will remain in effect pending the oral argument on this motion and the court's decision on the question whether to continue the modified preliminary injunction."

□ The Court of Appeals also told the parties that in addition to any other matters they choose to raise, they were invited to address the following points:

- Whether the sort of information the state is demanding is excessive and not reasonably related to its licensing decision.
- Whether the distinction between the use of medication to induce abortions and the use of the identical medication to treat miscarriages violates either the Equal Protection clause or the Due Process Clause of the federal Constitution.
- Whether the state has any burden to justify measures that prohibit one method of abortion while leaving others available.

□ "The Court of Appeals' decision to schedule oral argument shows that it is taking seriously our concerns about the safety of patients who seek abortion at an unlicensed clinic," Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) said. "Dispensing medication that curbs progesterone and causes uterine contractions is serious business, and whether states may require licensing of clinics that do so is a nationally important issue. We appreciate the court's diligence in reviewing this matter."

● Last week we told you about the Indiana Department of Environmental Management approving an air-quality permit for the proposed Riverview Energy direct coal-hydrogenation plant in Dale (and yards locally are heavily populated with signs opposing the plant). Since then, some local environmentalists and Democrats, led by Dubois County Democratic Party Chair Mike Kendall, a former Democratic state senator known for his championing of environmental and ethics issues during his sole term, have filed a series of complaints with the Public Access Counselor seeking response to public records requests filed with four local lawmakers, IDEM, the Indiana Economic Development Corporation, the Lincolnland Economic Development Corporation, and the City of Huntingburg seeking documents specifically related to Riverview Energy's plans for treatment and disposition of industrial wastewater, particularly that expected to be discharged into feeders for Huntingburg's water supply.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) expressed his frustration and disappointment over a decidedly unfavorable 21-page Court of Appeals ruling that his office had spent a lot of legal and political capital on, State ex rel. Hill, v. Pfister, et al., No. 18A-PL-771, which was a not for publication ruling.

□ A unanimous intermediate appellate panel, led by Judge Elaine Brown, affirmed Lake County Circuit Court Judge Marissa McDermott (D) in her grant of summary judgment in favor of a pair of former officials of the School Town of Munster and Ohio Farmers Insurance Company, the district's insurer. The Attorney General had been quite outspoken in his pursuit of the former two Munster school administrators for the return of almost $700,000 in retirement pay to which he contended they were not entitled. The case turned on interpretation of the statute of limitations. Judge McDermott - whose husband, Hammond Mayor Tom McDermott (D) has frequently tangled politically with AG Hill - had ruled the five-year statute of limitations for recapture of the cash had passed, while General Hill contended that the period for seeking repayment began when the State Board of Accounts issued a special audit of the Munster schools after the district reported "suspected misappropriation" to SBOA.

□ The appellate panel agreed with Judge McDermott's findings (in her 35-page ruling) that the funds were paid out over some 13 years pursuant to 27 employment contracts the district entered into beginning in 1998. "The record reveals that various members of the Board signed each contract," and school financial officials signed accounts payable vouchers each year from 2003 to 2014. "From 2000 until 2004, from 2006 until 2007, and from 2009 until 2013, the Board allowed payments to [the two] and examined and approved the relevant Account Payable Voucher Registers - which included the Accounts Payable Vouchers, documents noting the specific amount and salary percentage of the annuity contributions to [their] accounts, and copies of the checks made to them. We also observe that the SBOA conducted six regular biennial audit examinations of the School Town during this period," writes Judge Brown for the appellate court in finding the claims "are barred by the statute of limitations."

□ On WJOB 1230-AM in Hammond Wednesday, General Hill made it clear to host Jim Dedelow that he vehemently disagreed with the conclusions of the unanimous intermediate appellate panel, and would make a decision by week's end as to what course of action to pursue in continuing to pursue what he sees as justice for taxpayers and appropriate authority for the State Board of Accounts. Expect OAG to seek a rehearing, and failing that, transfer to the Supreme Court.

- Under the auspices of the National Association of Attorneys General, a bipartisan coalition of 43 attorneys general – including Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) – submit comments to the Federal Trade Commission regarding consumer privacy, data security, antitrust enforcement, and technology platform businesses.

□ The submission by the AGs explains that “The market for consumer data presents new issues,” and that the market value of data and privacy are important considerations. Privacy is also said to be a critical aspect of competition in technology platform markets. The AGs also contend that the “massive scale of data collected by dominant firms creates network effects and barriers to entry,” and in the digital era, “non-price aspects of competition merit renewed antitrust attention” and non-price effects should be “a staple of merger analysis” in technology platform markets as dominant platforms may leverage data advantages to target rivals.

□ The AGs urge the FTC to require prior approval or prior notice for future acquisitions in technology platform markets, and to afford greater consideration of non-price and network effects in assessing mergers in those markets, noting that nascent competitors may be acquired by dominant firms in technology platform markets, but these acquisitions are often not reportable under Hart-Scott-Rodino market competition reviews. They also note suggest that legislation addressing transparency in the collection and sale of data “could facilitate an efficient and competitive market.”

- United Collection Bureau, Inc. is selected from a field of eight prospective vendors to begin contract negotiations for the implementing of Revenue Collection Services for the Department of Revenue. The estimated four-year contract value is $22.88 million, but there is technically no cost to the State because the amount is paid to the contractor by the delinquent taxpayers. United Collection Bureau commits to subcontracting 8.0% of the total contract value to Bucher + Christian Consulting, Inc. dba BCforward (MBE); 4.0% to Guidesoft, Inc. dba Knowledge Services (WBE) 4.0% to RepuCare, Inc. (WBE), 3.0% to REDCOM Public Relations (VBE), and 3.0% to Vespa Group, LLC (VBE).

□ The evaluation team received proposals from seven other applicants for the work: AllianceOne Receivables Management, Inc.; CBE Group, Inc.; GC Services Limited Partnership; Harris & Harris, Ltd.; I.C. System, Inc.; Premiere Credit of North America, LLC; and Verliance, Inc.

- The appellate courts continue to make the State of Indiana more LGBT-friendly, with a pair of Not for Publication rulings this month overturning trial court rulings, a move that will ensure transgender individuals can keep confidential court records regarding their name and gender marker change under Indiana Administrative Rule 9 (you shouldn’t be surprised to see at least one, if not both, of these rulings changed to a For Publication ruling).

□ Judge John Baker, the longest-serving member on the current court, authored both opinions, In the Matter of the Name Change of M.E.B., M.E.B., 19A-MI-118, a case arising from the Orange County Circuit Court, and In the Matter of the Name Change of K.H., 18A-MH-3077, a case that began in Hamilton County Circuit Court. Judges Ted Najam (appointed 1992) and Margret Robb (appointed 1998) rounded out the experienced appellate panel. All three were appointed by Democratic governors.

□ The K.H. matter, involving a transgender woman who sought to change her name and gender marker, was relatively straightforward. She filed requests to waive publication and seal the record pursuant to Indiana Administrative Rule 9. The trial court directed her to publish notice of the Rule 9 hearing in a newspaper and to notify the attorney general. While the trial court did not require her to include her name, it required her to include her cause number, date and time of hearing, and the fact that she desired to change her name from a traditionally male name to a traditionally female one. The appellate panel found those directives were erroneous, and that the record supports K.H.’s Administrative Rule 9 requests.

□ “Neither the statute nor Administrative Rule 9 provides for alternative forms of public notice – including notice by publication,” Judge Baker wrote for the panel.

□ In a footnote (we’re omitting citations), the panel adds, “Although we find the publication requirement in this case as a whole to be erroneous, we note that the trial court’s astonishing demand that K.H. include in the published notice the fact that she ‘desires to change [her] own name from a name commonly used by males to a name more commonly used by females,’ is plainly an attempt at an end-run around the legislature. There is no statute or rule requiring that an individual seeking a gender marker change publish notice of that intent. Had the trial court truly only wanted her to notify the public that she intended to change her name, there would have been no need to require the gender specific language in the notice.”

□ Judge Baker then writes, “It is apparent that the trial court intended to force K.H. to signal implicitly to the world that she seeks to change her gender. In so doing, it exceeded its authority. There is no statute or rule requiring that an individual seeking a gender marker change publish notice of that intent. Had the trial court truly only wanted her to notify the public that she intended to change her name, there would have been no need to require the gender specific language in the notice. It is apparent that the trial court intended to force K.H. to signal implicitly to the world that she seeks to change her gender.”

□ In the Orange County case, “the fact that M.B. didn’t provide evidence that she, herself, or other citizens of Indiana have been a target of violence is of no moment. The goal of Rule 9 is proactive; it seeks to prevent harm. To force petitioners to wait until they have already experienced that harm would vitiate the purpose of the rule. Rather than focus on the evidence that M.B. did not provide, the trial court should have focused on the evidence she did provide.” Regardless, Judge Baker, in a footnote finds that “M.B. did provide evidence of a specific act of violence to a transgender person in Indiana,” and “She also provided evidence of a specific act of discrimination that she has faced as a result of her gender identity.” She had told the trial court that “(p)ublishing a notice tells people that I am trans and inviting them to the hearing would give power to the community to dictate my life.” Judge Baker continues for the unanimous court, “We find that this evidence readily supports M.B.’s argument that, if she had to publish notice of her name change petition and maintain a publicly open case file, she would be at significant risk of substantial harm. The trial court erred in ruling otherwise.”

□ Judge Baker then adds, “we are compelled to address the trial court’s conclusion that M.B. could not be “outed” because of the way she presents in person. This subjective assessment is not an element of an Administrative Rule 9 petition, nor should it be. Appearance is in the eye of the beholder, and regardless of the trial court’s own opinions about how men and women ‘should’ look, M.B. has the right to appear as she desires while maintaining public confidentiality about her gender identity. This was a wholly improper reason to deny M.B.’s petition. The trial court should have granted M.B.’s Administrative Rule 9 petition to waive publication of notice of her name change and to seal her case record.”

□ The Court of Appeals ruling also admonishes Orange County Circuit Court Judge Steven L. Owen. “Throughout its order, the trial court fails or refuses to use M.B.’s preferred pronoun. The order is also permeated with derision for M.B. We would hope that the trial courts of this state would show far greater respect (as well as objectivity and impartiality) to all litigants appearing before them. ‘Transgender’ is one word, with no hyphen.” That’s about as harsh a rebuke of a trial court judge as we can recall seeing in many years.

□ Intriguingly, 12 years ago, a panel that included judges Baker and Robb (who both served as chief judges of the Court of Appeals) indicated considerable empathy for a gay plaintiff – and rebuke for the homophobic parents of his gay partner – in a case in which the plaintiff’s partner suffered an incapacitating stroke after 25 years as what the court described as “life partners.” While Judge Baker and the panel kept stretching to find a way to accommodate the plaintiff in the guardian at litem and visitation case arising from Hamilton County, it could not find that the “trial court did not abuse its discretion,” despite, for example, “overwhelming evidence in the record establishing that it is in Patrick’s best interest to continue to have contact with Brett, his life partner of twenty-five years,” and “Given the [parents]’ lack of support of their son’s personal life through the years and given his mother’s astonishing statement that she would rather that he never recover than see him return to his relationship with Brett, we are extraordinarily skeptical that the [parents] are able to take care of Patrick’s emotional needs We are confronted here with the heartbreaking fracture of a family. Brett and Patrick have spent twenty-five years together as life partners – longer than Patrick lived at home with his parents – and their future life together has been destroyed by Patrick’s tragic medical condition and by the [parents]’ unwillingness to accept their son’s lifestyle.” Judge Baker seemed frustrated as he wrote that “we are compelled to affirm the trial court’s order” on guardianship.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) was the only state attorney general joining federal authorities at a Chicago press conference Tuesday announcing a national robocalling sweep organized by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC). In “Operation Call it Quits,” the FTC and its law enforcement partners announced 94 actions targeting operations around the country, with many states, including Indiana, serving as partners. “Every year, our office gets more consumer complaints about unwanted robocalls than just about any other issue,” General Hill explains. “At best, these calls represent a nuisance for families just wanting to enjoy peace and privacy without needless disturbances interrupting their routines. At worst, they represent scams that successfully steal people’s identities or hard-earned money. In Indiana, we are quite serious about stopping illegal robocalls, and our alliances with such partners as the FTC are valuable assets in this mission.”

□ At the press conference, General Hill also discussed his office’s recent civil complaint against American Health Services, a Maryland company and two individuals after receiving dozens of consumer complaints about a pitch for various insurance products. In the complaint, the Office of the Attorney General alleges that these individuals and their company violated three Indiana statutes, and they could face up to $1.17 million in civil penalties, plus fees and costs. “These are the kinds of actions we must continue to take against violators of laws intended to protect consumers,” Attorney General Hill said. “We will never stem the tide of illegal robocalling until we prove we have the resolve and wherewithal to make offenders pay.”

● The Indiana Department of Transportation selects American Structurepoint, Inc., and Beam, Longest and Neff for a $4.5 million contract to design and manage the construction of a third travel lane on I-65 from the S.R. 56 interchange in Scottsburg to about two miles south of Henryville near Memphis Road. The project would widen this 12-mile stretch of I-65 to six lanes and would replace the existing bridges over Caney Creek and Blue Lick Creek built in 1958 (and reconstructed in 1989). The estimated $145 million project should be let in May 2023.

□ INDOT also issues a Request for Information seeking industry expertise on how the implementation of a part-time shoulder running on the heavily traversed Borman Expressway (I-80/I-94) might improve the overall performance of traffic operations. INDOT is interested in learning more about the potential value of pursuing travel on inside and/or outside shoulders for high-volume freeways such as I-80/I-94, as well as achieving a clearer understanding of the technical engineering involved, project development process, and generalized variations in design and time-of-day operations.

□ The RFI concedes the eight-lane Lake County roadway “is approaching carrying capacity” and that “travel reliability is weak (predictable travel time)” and “incidents (e.g., crashes, disabled vehicles) are frequent and highly disruptive to traffic flow for extended periods of time” INDOT seeks to build its understanding of hard shoulder-running to prepare for what may lead in the near future to a Request for Proposals for cost-effective countermeasures to be implemented for the Borman within the next three to five years.

● Governor Eric Holcomb (R) tells Dan Carden of the Times of Northwest Indiana that he “is not pleased that Illinois has chosen to join Michigan, and nine other states, in legalizing recreational marijuana use, since federal law continues to classify the drug as a prohibited controlled substance. ‘I’m not convinced that legalization will lead anyone to the promised land,’ Holcomb said. ‘I’ve asked the federal government to enforce the law as it is, and I’ve let them know that we’re a law-and-order state.’ ” But some of the concerns of Dr. Adams, a former Indiana state health commissioner, are not shared by Governor Holcomb, who “said he has no problem with legitimate medical research into the potential health benefits of marijuana. ‘We’d be happy to be a partner in that effort so that we are looking at facts, not just trying to run to some honey hole for cash,’ he said. But Holcomb warned that so long as marijuana remains banned under federal law, Indiana will continue enforcing its statutes restricting marijuana possession, including for motorists traveling from Illinois and Michigan through Indiana ‘I have spoken to [Indiana State Police] Superintendent Doug Carter about this very issue,’ Holcomb said. ‘He’s confident that we have the resources that we need on all of our borders.’ ”

□ U.S. Surgeon General Jerome Adams, speaks with STAT's Morning Rounds about marijuana legalization: "I'm very concerned at how fast and how far we're going into marijuana," he said, adding, "There is no such as thing as medical marijuana. There are over 100 components in marijuana that may be medicinal, but we need to push for more research." On flat-out legalization, Indiana's former state health commissioner adds, "Folks are thinking of the marijuana of Woodstock. They're not thinking about kids using Shatter [a marijuana concentrate] and vaping it and getting 85-90% THC. There [are] some very real health concerns and the problem is a lot of them you're not going to see 'til years down the road."

□ Asked about Philadelphia potentially becoming home to the nation's first supervised injection site and whether that's a good way to deal with the opioid crisis, Dr. Adams tells STAT, "We need more naloxone. We need more syringe service programs. We need more [medication assisted treatment]. And so before we go and stack on something else that's controversial and unproven in that environment, let's make sure we maxed out or at least reached reasonable levels of these other things that are evidence-based."

● Duke Energy's new Integrated Resource Plan (IRP) – a road map showing how the company plans to meet customers' energy needs using a diverse mix of power generation resources – includes some updated plans for the retirement of coal generation facilities. In 2018, close to 90% of the power Duke produced in Indiana was coal-fired. Since 2005 in Indiana, Duke says it has decreased sulfur dioxide emissions by 95%, nitrogen oxide emissions by 63%, and carbon emissions by 21 percent. Given new carbon-emission regulations, a consumer desire for cleaner power options, and the declining cost of renewable power. Duke says it has focused on diversifying its power generation, and accelerating the retirement dates for some coal-fired units and adding more natural gas and renewable energy to our supplies (with the caveat that these are not final decisions to retire units or add new power generation to the system).

□ Duke expects to add 1,240 megawatts of cleaner burning natural gas, 700 megawatts of wind energy, and 1,650 megawatts of solar power by 2037, while continuing to operate some coal-fired generation units for almost two decades under a graduated retirement plan. The Sierra Club says the coal-dependent utility needs to "reconsider" the schedule, contending that "Duke is still burning too much coal for too long, and those gas plants should never be built." The Sierra Club also encourages Duke to "take advantage of current tax incentives for wind and solar" energy generation. The 20-year IRP submitted by the company to the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission – next to be updated in 2022 – offers an overview of projected 2018-2037 generation plans:

Cayuga Station – Vermillion County (Two coal-fired units)

Unit 1 – 500 MW Advancing retirement from 2035 to 2028
9 remaining years of operation

Unit 2 – 495 MW Advancing retirement from 2037 to 2028
9 remaining years of operation

Proposed replacement: 1,240MW CC natural gas-fired plant

Gibson Station – Gibson County (Five coal-fired units)

Unit 1 – 630 MW Advancing retirement from 2041 to 2038
19 remaining years of operation

Unit 2 – 630 MW Advancing retirement from 2040 to 2038
19 remaining years of operation

Unit 3 – 630 MW Advancing retirement from 2043 to 2034
15 remaining years of operation

Unit 4 – 622 MW Advancing retirement from 2044 to 2026
7 remaining years of operation

Unit 5 – 620 MW Advancing retirement from 2047 to 2034
15 remaining years of operation

Gallagher Station – Floyd County (Two coal-fired units)

Unit 2 – 140 MW Previously announced retirement date – 2022

Unit 4 – 140 MW Previously announced retirement date – 2022

Edwardsport Station – Knox County (Coal-to-gas plant)

595 MW No change in 2045 retirement date

Noblesville Station – Hamilton County (Natural gas-fired CC plant)

300 MW Advancing retirement date from 2038 to 2034

15 remaining years of operation

□ Unclear: What effect – if any – a trio of new regulations promulgated June 19 by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (scheduled to become effective 30 days from issuance) granting states greater latitude to determine their projected energy resource mixes might have on the Duke IRP as well as others pending before the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission. The rules could give utilities new reasons to invest in certain plant modifications as well as reassessing the projected life spans of facilities. Consultants advising utilities nationally tell them to ready themselves for possible state-by-state changes to policies defining what constitutes "clean" energy and related reliability. The implementation timeline for the rules, however, is likely to be delayed by litigation from several states and environmental organizations.

□ The first rule repeals the Obama Administration's 2015 Clean Power Plan (CPP). The second, the Affordable Clean Energy (ACE) rule, effectively supplants CPP and allows states to develop their own individual standards of performance for greenhouse gas emissions from existing coal-fired electric utility generating units within their purview. The third rule finalizes ACE implementation regulations and certain future Clean Air Act emission guidelines.

IN the Economy

● A new study by the Economic Innovation Group (EIG) finds that manufacturing job growth has increased by a modest amount nationally during the past two years, while the gains have shown disparities across regions, with the most strength in the western states and northeast posting the weakest numbers. While many Midwestern states experienced sizable net increases in manufacturing jobs from December 2016 to December 2018, they still added jobs at a lower rate than the nation as a whole. Despite the increases in automation and productivity, the EIG researchers find that assuming current trends continue, it would take more than two decades for manufacturing employment to return to their 2000 levels. Here is how Indiana has fared over the last biennium compared to our surrounding states:

Manufacturing Growth Rate, December 2016 to December 2018

Michigan	4.7%
Indiana	3.5%
Illinois	3.4%
Ohio	2.9%
Kentucky	1.2%

□ At 130%, Nevada leads the nation in the rate of increase in manufacturing jobs versus 2000, one of five states topping 100% growth, while the 36% growth in the District of Columbia is the lowest nationally. Indiana leads our neighboring states, albeit by a slim margin over Kentucky.

2018 Manufacturing Jobs Share of 2000 Manufacturing Jobs

	Change in Manufacturing Jobs vs. 2000
Indiana	82%
Kentucky	81%
Michigan	70%
Ohio	68%
Illinois	67%

● The Governor convened leaders from the state's agriculture sectors for a session in his office to receive an update on the unprecedented weather conditions that have impacted farms and other agriculture businesses statewide. Representatives from Indiana Corn & Soybean, the Indiana Farm Service Agency, Agribusiness Council of Indiana, Indiana Pork, Purdue College of Agriculture and others joined Governor Holcomb for the meeting. "The unprecedented weather and extreme field conditions have put Indiana farmers in a very trying situation," Gov. Holcomb said. "The relentless rainfall has prevented many acres from being planted and in some cases farmers have not been able to plant at all. This not only affects crop producers but those involved in animal production and the businesses that supply them."

● As we recently told you to expect, the State has extended its option to decide if it will purchase land near Lawrenceburg that could be the site of the state's fourth port. The Ports of Indiana entered into an agreement in September 2017 to purchase up to 725 acres of land that was formerly the American Electric Power plant along Tanners Creek and the Ohio River. That option was set to expire June 30. The option has been extended by six months to enable the seller, Tanners Creek Development, LLC, to complete its environmental remediation plan for the site and submit it to the Indiana Department of Environmental Management. If the Ports of Indiana decides to move forward, the total cost for the land and equipment would be approximately $8 million.

● For the first time since February, the adjustable Indiana gas tax, declines from the prior month, and does so by a meaningful one-half cent. This decline follows four consecutive months of over-the-month increases. The new rate is 15.6¢ per gallon for July, and while it is higher than any month during the first quarter, it is lower than the rate in July 2018. While we noted earlier in the year that the tax in each of the first four months of 2019 was lower than it was during any month in 2018, that took a turn in May and June, but returned to the lower-than-prior-year status in July.

January	12.0¢	13.6¢	11.6¢	10.0¢	15.2¢
February	11.0¢	14.0¢	13.1¢	10.0¢	10.9¢
March	11.4¢	13.8¢	11.7¢	8.0¢	11.8¢
April	12.8¢	13.3¢	12.4¢	9.5¢	12.9¢
May	15.1¢	14.4¢	12.9¢	10.9¢	13.1¢
June	16.1¢	15.9¢	12.9¢	12.3¢	14.3¢
July	15.6¢	16.7¢	12.8¢	14.1¢	15.8¢
August		16.2¢	11.9¢	12.5¢	15.9¢
September		16.1¢	12.5¢	11.3¢	14.1¢
October		15.8¢	13.4¢	12.0¢	14.1¢
November		16.1¢	12.8¢	12.2¢	13.4¢
December		14.4¢	14.3¢	11.4¢	12.2¢

□ A major June 21 explosion and lingering fire at the Philadelphia Energy Solutions oil refinery, the largest refinery on the East Coast, was expected to quickly drive gas prices higher, however, with futures prices immediately climbing by the highest amount in more than three months.

● Radial, which will soon begin operations at a new 690,700 square-foot distribution center for some of the world's largest brands and retailers in Brownsburg "plans to initially hire 20 management and 25 hourly positions," and "will then hire an additional 150 full-time jobs by the end of the summer," reports WTHR-TV in Indianapolis, which adds that the company also plans "to hire up to 2,000 employees during certain times of the year."

IN Transition

● Krista Rivera will leave her post as assistant director of state relations and policy analysis for Indiana University become the new senior fiscal analyst for the Senate Majority Caucus. Rivera worked from 2017-18 as director of legislative affairs for the Department of Revenue, and served as the Senate Majority fiscal analyst for six legislative sessions (2011-17), and also worked for the Senate Majority Caucus as a legislative assistant, Borst Fellow, and intern.

● Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) appoints Perry Township Schools Superintendent Pat Mapes to the State Board of Education.

● The Governor makes one new appointment to the Indiana Commission for Higher Education. Dr. Trent Engberts of Evansville, an associate professor at the University of Southern Indiana, will join as the faculty member of the commission and serve until June 30, 2021. The Governor also made three reappointments to the ICHE board, and will serve until June 30, 2023: former state revenue commissioner Mike Alley of Indianapolis, chairman and owner of Patriot Investments, LLC; Michael "Jud" Fisher of Muncie, president and COO of Ball Brothers Foundation; and Alfonso Vidal of Newburgh, president of Vidal Plastics.

IN the Lobby

● Cass County Prosecutor Lisa Swaim (R) is the new chair of the Indiana Prosecuting Attorneys Council (IPAC) Board of Directors for 2019-2020. Her husband is Sen. Randy Head (R).

s). NEW TRUMP PRESS SEC 'BRAWLS' WITH NORTH KOREANS: The new White House press secretary, Stephanie Grisham, got into a scuffle with North Korean officials on Sunday during a chaotic scene outside a meeting room where US President Donald Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un talked privately (CNN). A source at the scene said Grisham got in "an all out brawl" with North Korean officials as American and North Korean reporters were hustled in to view the summit. SCHUMER BLINDSIDES PELOSI ON BORDER BILL: House Speaker Nancy Pelosi told her colleagues in a private meeting Thursday that she thought she had a deal this week with her longtime ally, Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Instead, Pelosi (D-Calif.) said, she was blindsided (Washington Post). PENTAGON STUDY SAYS RUSS INFLUENCE GROWING WORLDWIDE: The U.S. is ill-equipped to counter the increasingly brazen political warfare Russia is waging to undermine democracies, the Pentagon and independent strategists warn in a detailed assessment that happens to echo much bipartisan criticism of President Donald Trump's approach to Moscow (Politico). IMPACTS AFTER 5 YEARS OF LEGAL MARIJUANA IN COLORADO: Colorado's first-in-the-nation experiment has reshaped health, politics, rural culture and criminal justice in surprising ways that often defy both the worst warnings of critics and blue-sky rhetoric of the marijuana industry, giving a glimpse of what the future may hold as more and more states adopt and debate full legalization (New York Times). HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: It may have been more than a photo op that any thing substantive, but it's good that President Trump and North Korean despot Kim Jong Un are meeting again. HARRIS SURGES IN POST-DEBATE MORNING CONSULT POLL; PETE FADES: Morning Consult surveyed 2,407 Democratic primary voters immediately following the first Democratic primary debate and Joe Biden topped the list with 33% (Howey Politics Indiana). Biden was followed by Sen. Bernie Sanders at 19%, Sen. Kamala Harris and Sen. Elizabeth Warren tied at 12% while South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg declined to 6%. Harris is the clear winner from the first debate: She moves into third place with 12% of the vote share, picking up 6 points since last week. Biden takes a hit: Biden dropped by 5 points, but still maintains a 14 lead over Sanders, who's support remained steady.

CLARK COUNTY JUDGE INDICTED, SUSPENDED AFTER SHOOTING: Clark County Judge Andrew Adams was suspended with pay Friday following a grand jury indictment related to a shooting in Indianapolis in May (Depompei, News & Tribune). Adams and Clark County Judge Brad Jacobs were shot during an altercation with two men in downtown Indianapolis on May 1. On Friday, Marion County Prosecutor Terry Curry announced that Adams is charged with multiple counts of battery, including felonies, and one count of disorderly conduct. The two men, Brandon Kaiser and Alfredo Vazquez, have also been indicted. According to a news release from the Indiana Supreme Court, the Indiana Commission on Judicial Qualifications filed a notice of criminal charges and a request for Adams to be suspended with pay immediately upon learning of the indictment. Soon after, the Indiana Supreme Court issued an order formally suspending Adams with pay. The suspension will continue until further notice. Temporary judges have been appointed to hear cases in Clark Circuit 1 (Adams' court) and Clark Circuit 2 (Jacobs' court). The appointed judges remain on the bench. In the judicial commission's request to suspend Adams, the commission asked that the suspension to continue "pending further order of this Court or final determination of any disciplinary proceeding that may hereafter result from the criminal charges." Disciplinary cases are typically initiated by the receipt of a written, verified complaint, but the judicial commission can initiate proceedings on its own, according to its website. If a complaint is deemed founded, an inquiry begins. If the inquiry indicates that misconduct occurred, the commission can proceed to an investigation, which would remain confidential. The investigation could lead to a public admonition or public charges. If charges are filed, the proceedings, which could include either a settlement agreement or a hearing, become public. A hearing can result in sanctions, including a public reprimand, suspension without pay or disbarment.

MACER UNREADY TO COMMIT TO GOV RACE: Karlee Macer might be on next year's ballot as a Democratic candidate for Indiana governor. The state representative, who represents Indianapolis's west side, wouldn't say Saturday as she traveled to the Tri-State Cornfield Conference at the Noble County Fairgrounds in Kendallville. "I'm not at a place where I'm fully ready to commit," she said during a phone interview (Slater, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Macer might be forgiven for her reluctance to make it official. Her only son got married in May, and her only daughter is getting married Aug. 3 in Chicago. As Macer put it, there's a lot going on in her family this summer. "I'm on the biggest mom high in my life," she added. Even so, the three-term state representative found time to attend the Cornfield Conference as a special guest. Democratic Party organizations in Noble, DeKalb, Kosciusko, Whitley and LaGrange counties hosted the event designed to fire up Democrats before the 2020 elections.

JUDGE BLOCKS INDIANA ABORTION LAW: A federal judge blocked an Indiana law that would ban a second-trimester abortion procedure on Friday, just days before the law was set to come into force (Davies, AP). The order putting the Indiana law on hold was released hours after the U.S. Supreme Court declined to revive a similar law in Alabama that sought to ban dilation and evacuation abortions. The law passed by Indiana's Republican-dominated Legislature this spring calls the procedure "dismemberment abortion." It was set to become effective on July 1. The American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana sued on behalf of two doctors who perform dilation and evacuation abortions. Under the law, a doctor who performs the procedure could face a felony charge, punishable by up to six years in prison. Indiana's attorneys maintained the state had a valid role in limiting types of abortion procedures, citing a 2007 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that upheld a federal law banning the method. ACLU attorneys argued that the ban would put a "substantial and unwarranted burden on women's ability to obtain second-trimester, pre-viability abortions." In granting the preliminary injunction that blocked the law, U.S. District Judge Sarah Evans Barker wrote that it "prohibits physicians from utilizing the most common, safest, often most cost effective, and best understood method of second trimester abortion, requiring them instead to resort to alternatives that are medically riskier, more costly, less reliable, and in some instances simply unavailable, while accomplishing little more than expressing hostility towards the constitutionally fundamental right of women to control their own reproductive lives."

SOUTH BEND GRAPPLES WITH PD DIVERSITY: Twice in the past week, South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg publicly acknowledged his administration failed to change the lopsided racial makeup of the city's police force, as he confronts fallout over the fatal shooting of a black man by a white officer (Sheckler, South Bend Tribune). The issue has followed Buttigieg to the national stage as he runs for president. During Thursday's Democratic primary debate, MSNBC's Rachel Maddow asked the mayor why the police department has not hired more black officers during his two terms. "Because," Buttigieg replied, "I couldn't get it done." At a tense town-hall meeting last week, Buttigieg took responsibility for the failure, though he said it wasn't for lack of trying. "I promise you," he said, "we have tried everything we can think of." What Buttigieg hasn't detailed yet is how city leaders plan to address the police department's diversity problem going forward. The lack of minorities among the city's sworn police officers is a long-standing problem, and one that has vexed departments around the country. Yet data show the disparity has worsened during Buttigieg's nearly eight years in office. And now, the city is confronting the issue again amid public frustration over the shooting death of 54-year-old Eric Logan on Father's Day.

TRUMP, PUTIN YUK IT UP OVER U.S. ELECTION ASSAULT: Smiling together on a global stage, Donald Trump and Vladimir Putin cheerfully dismissed Russian interference in U.S. elections, shared their contempt for the world's news media and generally flaunted their personal bond Friday (AP). That was one day after the Russian leader praised the president of the United States for his nationalist world views and vigorously declared the days of the West's liberals are dying if not already dead. For some time, Trump has defied the once-entrenched Republican distrust if not outright hatred of the powerful nation at the heart of the former Soviet Union. But Friday's joint appearance seemed to go even further. As the two leaders sat down for their first meeting in nearly a year, a reporter asked Trump if he would warn Putin not to meddle in America's upcoming 2020 election. "Of course," the president replied. Then he turned to Putin and facetiously said, "Don't meddle in the election." He playfully repeated the request while pointing at Putin, who laughed.

TRUMP MEETS KIM AT DMZ, ENTERS NORTH KOREA: President Trump today became the first U.S. commander-in-chief to step onto the North Korean side of the Demilitarized Zone — the heavily guarded neutral strip dividing the Korean Peninsula between freedom and totalitarianism (Axios). Trump heartily shook hands with Kim Jong-un and patted the North Korean dictator on the back during a last-minute encounter that followed a presidential trip to Japan and South Korea. "Big moment. Big progress," Trump said after crossing the line at 2:50 a.m. ET. Why it matters: The West for decades has seen the North Korean side of the DMZ, a vestige of the Cold War, as enemy territory. The encounter reflects Trump's instinct for stagecraft and spontaneous diplomacy. The setting: "There isn't much demilitarized about it," per AP. "A minefield laced with barbed wire, it's guarded by combat-ready troops on both sides and has been the site of numerous, sometimes deadly gun battles and skirmishes." The context: The pen pals had a pair of high-profile summits before today's hour-long meeting. But they have not struck an enforceable deal for North Korean denuclearization. Speaking to U.S. reporters after saying goodbye to Kim, Trump trumpeted progress they have made over the past two and a half years: "You don't report it accurately, but that's OK. Someday history will record it accurately."

NEW TRUMP PRESS SEC 'BRAWLS' WITH NORTH KOREANS: The new White House press secretary, Stephanie Grisham, got into a scuffle with North Korean officials on Sunday during a chaotic scene outside a meeting room where US President Donald Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un talked privately (CNN). A source at the scene said Grisham got in "an all out brawl" with North Korean officials as American and North Korean reporters were hustled in to view the summit. Grisham was bruised a bit in the scuffle, the source added. Grisham could be seen after the episode directing reporters outside the building in which Kim and Trump met, and she was later seen looking no worse for wear as she accompanied the President at the DMZ.

SCHUMER BLINDSIDES PELOSI ON BORDER BILL: House Speaker Nancy Pelosi told her colleagues in a private meeting Thursday that she thought she had a deal this week with her longtime ally, Senate Minority Leader Charles E. Schumer: She would ensure passage of a more liberal border funding bill in the House, and he would back her up by persuading Democratic senators to fight for it. Instead, Pelosi (D-Calif.) said, she was blindsided (Washington Post). Nearly all Senate Democrats voted for a Republican-backed bill that kneecapped the House and marked the most embarrassing defeat for Pelosi in the six months since Democrats took over the chamber. "Schumer destroyed all our leverage on Wednesday by not being able to hold his people," said a senior House Democratic aide. Schumer (D-N.Y.), meanwhile, believed Pelosi failed to deliver on a deal of her own. After House moderates revolted Thursday, Democrats had to discard a plan to send the bill back to the Senate before an end-of-month deadline.

PENTAGON STUDY SAYS RUSS INFLUENCE GROWING WORLDWIDE: The U.S. is ill-equipped to counter the increasingly brazen political warfare Russia is waging to undermine democracies, the Pentagon and independent strategists warn in a detailed assessment that happens to echo much bipartisan criticism of President Donald Trump's approach to Moscow (Politico). The more than 150-page white paper, prepared for the Joint Chiefs of Staff and shared with POLITICO, says the U.S. is still underestimating the scope of Russia's aggression, which includes the use of propaganda and disinformation to sway public opinion across Europe, Central Asia, Africa and Latin America. The study also points to the dangers of a growing alignment between Russia and China, which share a fear of the United States' international alliances and an affinity for "authoritarian stability." "Russia is attacking Western institutions in ways more shrewd and strategically discreet than many realize," said Natalia Arno, president of the Free Russia Foundation, an anti-Putin Washington think tank that recently completed its own study of Russian efforts to undermine the West. "The attacks may seem more subtle and craftier, but they are every bit as destructive as governments are influenced, laws are changed, legal decisions are undermined, law enforcement is thwarted and military intervention is disguised."

IMPACTS AFTER 5 YEARS OF LEGAL MARIJUANA IN COLORADO: Colorado's first-in-the-nation experiment has reshaped health, politics, rural culture and criminal justice in surprising ways that often defy both the worst warnings of critics and blue-sky rhetoric of the marijuana industry, giving a glimpse of what the future may hold as more and more states adopt and debate full legalization (New York Times). Since recreational sales began in 2014, more people here are visiting emergency rooms for marijuana-related problems, and hospitals report higher rates of mental-health cases tied to marijuana. At the same time, thousands of others make uneventful stops at dispensaries every day, like the hiking guide in the college town of Boulder who now keeps a few marijuana gummies in a locked bag to help her relax before bed. Some families rattled by their children's marijuana problems have moved, seeking refuge in less permissive states. But over all, state surveys do not show an increase in young people smoking pot. And while low-level marijuana charges have plummeted, the racial divide in drug arrests has persisted. State numbers show that African-Americans in Colorado were still being arrested on marijuana charges at nearly twice the rate of white people. "You don't see drug-addled people roaming the streets, but we haven't created a utopia," said Jonathan Singer, who was one of just two state legislators who endorsed the Colorado ballot measure that made it legal for adults 21 and over to buy, consume and grow recreational marijuana.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: It may have been more than a photo op that any thing substantive, but it's good that President Trump and North Korean despot Kim Jong Un are meeting again. It's a vastly better prospect than the saber rattling the two engaged in 2017. - Brian A. Howey

Campaigns

MACER, MELTON MAKE CORNFIELD PITCH: Election Day 2020 is still 17 months away, but two Democrats exploring running for the state's highest office made one of their first pitches during an event Saturday in Kendallville (Garbasz, KPC News). State Sen. Eddie Melton, D-Gary, and Rep. Karlee Macer, D-Indianapolis, both were attending the Tri-State Cornfield Conference, an event for northeast Indiana Democrats offering training and guidance for community organizing ahead of the 2020 election year. Both state lawmakers have recently announced they are exploring runs to challenge Indiana Republican Gov. Eric Holcomb next year. The event in Kendallville was one of the first public opportunities for both prospective candidates to talk about their backgrounds, the issues they see facing Indiana and what they would bring to Indiana's executive office. "I believe our moral compass is off and we need to right that ship. I think that OK is not enough, I would like to see us do better than just OK," Macer said. "I believe that we can do a better job of lifting up communities by giving them the tools and going out and helping them instead of letting them figure it out themselves." "When you have both the House and the Senate ... Indiana has a serious issue and concern when it comes down to representation," Melton said. "We don't live in a society where everyone lives and thinks the same way so I think it's imperative upon us as Democrats to challenge the status quo and the narrative being pushed out there."

'DRAFT HALE' FACEBOOK PAGE SURFACES: A "Draft Hale for Congress" Facebook page has appeared (Howey Politics Indiana). Former legislator Christina Hale is mulling a bid for the open 5th CD seat. "As she has proven throughout her career, Christina Hale has the experience and ability to lead. That's why we need her in Congress," the page says. Thus far, 2018 nominee Dee Thornton is the only Democrat who has signaled a candidacy, which she will kick off on July 15 in Westfield.

BUTTIGIEG TO MAKE 'HISTORIC' ANNOUNCEMENT: Democrat Pete Buttigieg is following up his first presidential debate with a fundraiser in New York with a group that has contributed millions of dollars to openly LGBT candidates (AP). LGBTQ Victory Fund President Annise Parker says she will join Buttigieg at a World Pride campaign event in Brooklyn on Friday "to make a historic special announcement." Parker said earlier this year the organization expected to endorse the gay mayor of South Bend, Indiana. An endorsement would provide immediate financial support ahead of Sunday's second-quarter fundraising deadline. Victory Fund invested $2 million in candidates in 2018. Other fundraisers Buttigieg planned this weekend in New York were canceled. He'll return Friday to South Bend, where he's been dealing with the fatal shooting of a black man by a white police officer.

SOUTH BEND REACTS TO BUTTIGIEG DEBATE: Thursday night, residents of South Bend gathered to watch their mayor on a national stage in the first Democratic presidential debate. The question on everyone's mind: if and how Pete Buttigieg would address the police shooting of Eric Logan (Indiana Public Media). In the basement of an upscale apartment building in downtown South Bend, Pete Buttigieg supporters were spooning out dip and microwaving food in preparation for a watch party. They even had cookies stamped with the campaign's official "Pete" logo. Josh Mandell organized the watch party. He says he hopes Mayor Pete could use the debate to increase his name recognition around the country. "I'm just looking for Pete to shine," Mandell says. "You know he's still fourth, fifth, third, depending on which poll you look at so I'm looking for him to make a strong showing." But Mandell also knew that Pete would get tough questions about the police shooting of Eric Logan almost two weeks before. "Pete's just going to have to go on record about all the things he's done with inclusion in South Bend and trying to diversify the police force and things like that," he says. Meanwhile, across town at the West Side Democratic Club, the inevitable question was also on Emily Dean's mind, too. "It is so hard to have a local discussion on a national stage like that," Dean says. "I think it's really, really difficult for him to address the intricacies of city governance and politics and what is and isn't possible for a mayor on a national stage in a 30-second sound byte."

Sunday Talk

KUDLOW WONDERS 'WHAT PLANET' DEMS ARE ON: President Trump's top economic adviser said on Sunday responded to Democratic presidential candidates questioning whether the U.S. economy is benefiting all Americans by saying he doesn't "understand what planet they're describing." "I just don't understand in general. I hear some of their policies, I hear some of their narratives. I don't understand what planet they're describing," Larry Kudlow told Chris Wallace on "Fox News Sunday". "The United State economy is booming," he added.

GRAHAM CALLS HARRIS 'FORCE TO BE RECKONED' WITH: Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) said Sen. Kamala Harris will be "a force to be reckoned with" following her performance in the first Democratic debate this week. "She's got game. She is very talented. She's very smart, and she'll be a force to be reckoned with," Graham said according to a video posted online Saturday by CBS's Face the Nation. Graham also said that former Vice President Joe Biden, who Harris criticized for his comments about working with segregationist senators, should "up his game." "The narrative is that maybe it's not his time and that he's not up to the task," he said, but added, "I think you'll underestimate Joe Biden at your own peril." "I think the next debate he's got to change the narrative," Graham said.

SANDERS BLASTS TRUMP/KIM 'PHOTO OP': Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), a 2020 White House hopeful, said on Sunday that he doesn't want talks between President Trump and North Korea leader Kim Jong to be merely a photo op. "I don't have a problem with him sitting down and negotiating with our adversaries, I don't want it to be a photo opportunity. We need real diplomacy," Sanders said on ABC's "This Week". Sanders said that while Trump is meeting with the North Korean leader, the president has "weakened the State Department." The senator also said the U.S. needs a "strong State Department to move forward diplomatically."

BOOKER SAYS BIDEN 'DIVIDING' COUNTRY: Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) said his opponent in the Democratic presidential primary former Vice President Joe Biden is further dividing the country and hurting some Americans with his rhetoric. "Right now, the vice president is not doing a good job at bringing folks together. In fact, he's causing – and I've heard this from people all around the country – he's causing a lot of frustration and even pain with his words," Booker said on NBC's "Meet the Press".

KLOBACHAR SKEPTICAL OF TRUMP/KIM MEETING: Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.), a 2020 White House hopeful, on Sunday sounded a skeptical tone about President Trump's historic meeting with Kim Jong Un on North Korean soil and said the president is taking an overly simplistic approach to diplomacy. "We want to see a denuclearization of the Korean peninsula, a reduction in these missiles but it's not as easy as just going and, you know, bringing a hot dish over the fence to the dictator next door," Klobuchar said on CNN's "State of the Union." "This is a ruthless dictator and when you go forward, you have to have clear focus and a clear mission and clear goals," she said.

CASTRO SAYS NO ONE WANTS OPEN BORDERS: Democratic presidential candidate Julián Castro said Sunday that while the U.S. can take in more immigrants, he does not want to allow an "unlimited" amount of asylum seekers into the country. "I agree with people that say, in theory, can't we take everyone who would like to be in the United States" he said on ABC's "This Week" while clarifying his immigration plan. "Nobody has called for that," he added. "I do believe, however, and put forward an immigration plan that would accept more people."

CASTRO SLAMS BIRTER COMMENTS BY TRUMP JR: Julián Castro on Sunday blasted Donald Trump Jr. as "a coward" for raising questions about the racial heritage of Sen. Kamala Harris (Calif.), a fellow 2020 Democratic presidential hopeful. The president's eldest son last Thursday retweeted and then deleted a post by Ali Alexander, a conservative media personality, claiming that Harris "comes from Jamaican Slave Owners" but is "not an American Black." "Is this true? Wow," Trump Jr. tweeted to his 3.65 million followers before later deleting it. Castro on Sunday called the move "disgusting" and said it "has no place in our politics." "You notice what he did, he tweeted it out and then he deleted it, like a coward, so he could say, 'That was just a mistake,' but he knows what he's doing. He's giving voice to these racist, you know, utterances about Sen. Harris," he said on CNN's "State of the Union."

CHAIRMAN PEREZ MAKES CONTRAST TO TRUMP: Days after a contentious debate that seemed to draw battle lines between many of the party's 2020 presidential candidates, Democratic National Committee (DNC) Chairman Tom Perez sought to instead draw a contrast between the entire field and President Trump. "Fox News Sunday" anchor Chris Wallace pushed Perez several times on questions about whether exchanges between Joe Biden and Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) regarding busing and other civil rights issues had weakened the former vice president, who is the party's front-runner for the nomination. "Voters will have to look at the totality of the vice president's record and every other candidate's record. The good news is the difference between us and this president is night and day on these issues of civil rights," Perez said. "The Party of Lincoln used to be the party of civil rights and the Party of Lincoln is dead. It's the Democratic Party that's fighting to make sure everybody has the opportunity to realize the American dream."

CLAPPER DENIES OBAMA SOUGHT SUMMIT WITH KIM: Former Director of National Intelligence James Clapper on Sunday disputed President Trump's claim that North Korean leader Kim Jong Un refused a meeting with Barrack Obama when he was president. A puzzled look came over Clapper's face during an interview on CNN's "State of the Union" when he saw a clip of Trump claiming that "President Obama wanted to meet and Chairman Kim would not meet with him." "The Obama administration was begging for a meeting. They were begging for meetings constantly and Chairman Kim would not meet with him," Trump added during a news conference earlier Sunday with South Korean President Moon Jae-in. Clapper flatly denied that claim. "In all the deliberations that I participated in on North Korea during the Obama administration, I can recall no instance whatever where President Obama ever indicated any interest whatsoever in meeting with Chairman Kim," Clapper said. "It's news to me."

General Assembly

NEW LAWS TAKE EFFECT MONDAY: Lawmakers targeted revenge porn, school bus safety and more with dozens of laws that go into effect Monday (Kelly, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). A few special statutes were effective immediately, but the majority of bills the legislature approved in the 2019 session become operative this week. A few highlights:

School bus safety: After a 2018 crash in Rochester that killed three children, legislators passed a bill that stiffens penalties for Indiana drivers who recklessly pass school buses when the stop arm is out. If someone is injured or killed, the crime will be a felony instead of a misdemeanor. The bill also gives schools a way to pay for cameras on school buses. "The lives of Hoosier children are sacred, and everyone needs to make sure they are paying attention to their surroundings when on the road," said Sen. Randy Head, R-Logansport. "I am hopeful this legislation would help prevent similar accidents from occurring in the future." He wrote Senate Bill 2, which also allows school boards to seek reimbursement from the county council for the cost of cameras mounted on the stop arm. A provision allowing a third party to install cameras and collect fines was removed.

Revenge porn: Two bills made it through the legislature dealing with revenge porn, the intimate or pornographic images distributed by one person to harm another. While the people in the photos may have given permission for the photos to be created, they did not agree to making them public. Sen. Aaron Freeman, R-Indianapolis, brought Senate Bill 243 for the third year in a row. As a former prosecutor and now a private attorney, he has seen firsthand cases where a spouse or significant other releases – or threatens to release – naked photos or videos to hurt or embarrass the other. Under the new law, it would be a misdemeanor for a first offense and rise to a felony for a second offense. A second bill, Senate Bill 192, also allows someone to sue civilly and receive monetary damages.

Animal cruelty: House Bill 1615 updates Indiana's animal cruelty statutes to crack down on people who choose to harm animals. "The goal of this legislation is to create better protections for Hoosier animals and people," said Rep. Ryan Hatfield, D-Evansville. He said FBI profilers have found murderers often start out by torturing and killing animals. "There is a direct link between people who abuse animals and people who abuse other people. When we strengthen animal cruelty crimes to protect animals, we also protect fellow Hoosiers," Hatfield said. The bill originally raised sentences, but the Senate was worried the punishments weren't proportional to crimes with human victims. So instead the bill clarifies abuse.

Tourism: Indiana's tourism efforts are getting a reboot. House Bill 1115 creates the quasi-governmental Indiana Destination Development Corp., moving tourism duties to the new entity instead of the traditional state tourism office. Quasi-governmental agencies must follow some state laws and rules, but generally have more autonomy and flexibility than regular state offices. Other examples include the Indiana State Lottery Commission, Indiana Economic Development Corp. and the Indiana Housing and Community Development Authority. The new agency will be run by a seven-member board including the governor (or designee), head of the Economic Development Corp. and five people from the tourism industry. Rep. Mike Karickhoff, R-Kokomo, said by having members of hotel, restaurant and other groups on the board and more involved with the direction of the agency he hopes they will also invest private dollars into the tourism efforts.

Teacher pay: The state budget increases student tuition support by $539 million over the next two years, and makes a total of $753 million in new education funding available to Indiana schools (Carden, NWI Times). But decisions on whether to put that money toward teacher pay raises, as opposed to other needs, were left up to local school district leaders. (House Enrolled Act 1001)

Gaming: Gary's Majestic Star casinos are authorized to relocate from their Lake Michigan dock. One is allowed to move to a land-based site, likely adjacent to the Borman Expressway. A new casino also is permitted in Terre Haute, and Hoosier adults will be able to place bets on sporting events, including from mobile devices, possibly as soon as Sept. 1. (HEA 1015)

Bias crimes: It is an aggravating factor, for which a judge can impose more than the advisory prison term, if a crime is committed "with bias due to the victim's or the group's real or perceived characteristic, trait, belief, practice, association or other attribute the court chooses to consider." (Senate Enrolled Act 198)

Data center: Sales and business personal property tax incentives are available to enable the $40 million, 105,000-square-foot Digital Crossroads of America Data Center at the site of the former State Line Generating Plant in Hammond to grow into a $200 million campus with 400,000 square feet of lake-cooled data storage. (HEA 1405).

Flood prevention: A reconstituted Kankakee River Basin and Yellow River Basin Development Commission will have $3 million a year, starting in 2021, to spend on flood-control projects. The money would be generated by a new annual fee imposed on eight Northwest Indiana counties. The counties have the option of passing those fees along to owners of property located in the river basins. (HEA 1270)

State superintendent: A governor-appointed secretary of education will lead the Indiana Department of Education starting in 2021, instead of an elected state superintendent of public instruction. (HEA 1005)

Porter County elections: Porter County election administration is reorganized on a bipartisan basis to prevent a repeat of last year's general election chaos that saw missing poll workers, nonexistent absentee ballot deliveries and no vote tallies for days after the polls closed. (HEA 1217)

Church guns: Any person legally authorized to carry a firearm may possess it in a church or religious building that's connected to a school, so long as the religious institution permits guns within its facilities. Similarly, a gun owner can bring his or her weapon into a school building when it's being used by a house of worship that allows guns. (HEA 1284)

Griffith: The town of Griffith gains an extra year, until November 2020, to complete its voter-approved exit from Calumet Township, by joining either North Township or St. John Township in Lake County. (HEA 1177)

Golf alcohol: Beer, wine and liquor, instead of only beer, can be sold from the back of golf carts roving across the links at public and private golf courses that hold the required alcohol sale permits. (HEA 1518)

Conscience protection: Nurses, pharmacists and physician assistants gain the same right as physicians, hospital employees and health clinic staffers to opt out of providing abortion care, including the provision of an abortion-inducing drug, if they have an ethical, moral or religious objection to abortion. (SEA 201)

Citizenship test: All Indiana high schools must administer to students, as part of the mandatory U.S. government course, the naturalization test that's typically taken by immigrants hoping to become American citizens. (SEA 132)

Exonerated inmates: A wrongfully incarcerated person can receive $50,000 for each year the person spent in the Indiana Department of Correction or a county jail for a conviction that was vacated based on actual innocence of the crime. (HEA 1150)

Critical infrastructure: New felony crimes and a fine of up to $100,000 are established for damaging, trespassing upon or conspiring to harm facilities broadly defined as Indiana's "critical infrastructure," including steel mills and oil refineries. (SEA 471)

Pregnancy drug use: Medical providers are required to use a standard verbal screening tool to assess all pregnant women for substance use disorder throughout their pregnancies. Women found to be addicted to drugs must either be treated by the provider or referred elsewhere for drug abuse treatment. (HEA 1007)

Sex offenders: Individuals classified as "sexually violent predators" or "offenders against children" are barred from working as child-care providers, respite-care providers or at an adult day-care centers, as well as prohibited from living in home in which child-care services are provided. (SEA 258)

Newborn testing: Krabbe disease, Pompe disease and Hurler syndrome, starting July 1, 2020, are added to the 12 medical disorders for which Indiana infants are required to be tested as soon as possible following birth. (SEA 41)

Drugs: Drug crimes committed within 100 feet of a drug treatment center, any location where drug recovery or support group meetings are held or inside a penal or juvenile detention facility can be enhanced one felony level by prosecutors, with a corresponding increase in potential prison time. (SEA 110, SEA 198)

Water infrastructure: A new water infrastructure assistance fund is permitted to leverage $20 million in state revenue to make loans and grants available to water utilities for new pipes, mains or leak controls. With timely repayments, the fund ultimately could produce more than $2 billion in water system fixes over 20 years. (HEA 1406)

Child services: The caseload limit for family case managers at the Department of Child Services is changed to: 12 initial assessments; 12 families receiving in-home services; or 13 children with out-of-home placements. DCS also gets two hours to respond to a child in imminent danger of serious bodily harm, instead of the prior, often unattainable, one-hour response mandate. (HEA 1006)

Opioids: Any prescription drug that contains, or is derived from, opium must include a notice on the prescription label that the drug is an opioid. (SEA 133)

Fire districts: Local fire protection district boards are permitted to pay their trustees up to $100 a meeting, instead of a maximum of $20, in the hope of enticing more residents to serve. (SEA 156)

Veterans aid: Eligible Indiana Department of Veterans Affairs employees must request Military Family Relief Fund emergency financial assistance through the Indiana Veterans Affairs Commission, instead of from the agency's director. (HEA 1257)

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB MAKES APPOINTMENTS — Gov. Eric J. Holcomb today announced several new appointments and reappointments to various state higher education boards and commissions (Howey Politics Indiana).

Ball State University Board of Trustees: The Governor made two new appointments to the board: Rebeca Mena (Muncie), a junior majoring in chemistry and Spanish at Ball State University, will join as the student member of the board and will serve until June 30, 2021. Henry O. Hall (Fort Wayne), president of Skytech Products Group, will join as an alumni member of the board and will serve until Dec. 31, 2022.

Indiana Commission for Higher Education: The Governor made one new appointment to the board: Dr. Trent Engberts (Evansville), associate professor at the University of Southern Indiana, will join as the faculty member of the commission and will serve until June 30, 2021. The Governor also made three reappointments to the board, who will serve until June 30, 2023: Mike Alley (Indianapolis), chairman and owner of Patriot Investments, LLC, will continue his service on the commission. Michael "Jud" Fisher (Muncie), president and COO of Ball Brothers Foundation, will continue his service on the commission. Alfonso Vidal (Newburgh), president of Vidal Plastics, will continue his service on the commission.

Indiana State University Board of Trustees: The Governor made two new appointments to the board: Casey J. Phillips (Greenfield), a junior majoring in supply chain management and marketing at Indiana State University, will join as the student member of the board and will serve until June 30, 2021. Robert E. Casey, Jr. (Indianapolis), chief security officer with Eli Lilly & Company, will join as an alumni member of the board and will serve until June 30, 2023. The Governor also made two reappointments to the board, who will serve until June 30, 2023: Kathy Cabello (Indianapolis), owner of Cabello Associates, will continue her service on the board. Kimberly O. Smith (Indianapolis), president and CEO of Indiana Farmers Mutual Insurance Company, will continue her service on the board.

Indiana University Board of Trustees: The Governor made one new appointment to the board: Molly C. Connor (Columbus), a second year law student at the Indiana University Robert H. McKinney School of Law, will join as the student member of the board and will serve until June 30, 2021. The Governor also made three reappointments to the board, who will serve until June 30, 2022: William "Quinn" Buckner (Bloomington), vice president of communications for Pacers Sports & Entertainment, will continue his service on the board. James T. Morris (Indianapolis), vice chairman of Pacers Sports & Entertainment, will continue his service on the board. Melanie Hart Walker (Bloomington), CEO of TASUS Corporation, will continue her service on the board.

Ivy Tech University State Board of Trustees: The Governor made five reappointments to the board, who will serve until June 30, 2022: Terry W. Anker (Carmel), chairman of The Anker Consulting Group, Inc., will continue his service on the board. Michael Dora (Rushville), state director of rural development for the USDA, will continue his service on the board. Larry Garatoni (Mishawaka), CEO of HQ Investments, will continue his service on the board. Paula Hughes-Schuh (Fort Wayne), CEO of YWCA Northeast Indiana, will continue her service on the board. Steve Schreckengast (Lafayette), president of Citation Homes, Inc., will continue his service on the board.

Purdue University Board of Trustees: The Governor made one new appointment to the board: Noah M. Scott (Leesburg), a junior majoring in industrial engineering technology and organizational leadership at Purdue University, will join as the student member of the board and will serve until July 1, 2021. The Governor also made two reappointments to the board, who will serve until July 1, 2022: Lawrence "Sonny" Beck (Atlanta), CEO of Beck's Superior Hybrids, Inc., will continue his service on the board. Don Thompson (Chicago, Illinois), CEO of Cleveland Avenue, will continue his service on the board.

University of Southern Indiana Board of Trustees: The Governor made two new appointments to the board: Josi Barscz (Huntington), a sophomore majoring in biochemistry at the University of Southern Indiana, will join as the student member of the board and will serve until June 30, 2021. Christina Ryan (Newburgh), CEO of The Women's Hospital, Deaconess Health System, Inc., will join the board and will serve until June 30, 2023. The Governor also made one reappointment to the board, who will serve until June 30, 2023: Jeffrey L. Knight (Evansville), executive vice president and chief legal counsel for Old National Bancorp, will continue his service on the board.

STATEHOUSE: HILL EXPECTED ABORTION LAW RULING - Indiana Attorney General Curtis Hill said in a statement he expected to appeal the federal court ruling on Indiana's abortion law (AP). "I continue to believe that Indiana has a compelling interest in protecting the value and dignity of fetal life by banning a particularly brutal and inhumane procedure," Hill said.

COURTS: SUPREMES RULE ON CIVIL FORFEITURE FUNDS - The Indiana Supreme Court says it's constitutional for police and prosecutors to keep some proceeds from civil forfeitures. But, only two justices agreed with the opinion in full. Indiana law allows police to seize property they suspect was involved in a crime, even if the person is never charged (Brosher, Indiana Public Media). In many cases, they eventually sell the property. The case challenges what happens with those proceeds. A group of taxpayers filed a lawsuit against several Marion County and Indianapolis officials that claimed they violated the Indiana Constitution by keeping some proceeds from civil forfeitures to offset their costs. The constitution says all fines and forfeitures should go to the Common School Fund. Justice Mark Massa wrote the majority opinion, which says the General Assembly can decide how and when forfeiture proceeds accrue to the Common School Fund. Justice Christopher Goff was the only other justice to agree with the full opinion. While Chief Justice Loretta Rush agreed that taxpayers had legal standing to bring the case and that the Constitution's language about the Common School Fund applies to civil forfeitures, she wrote a dissenting opinion on the constitutionality of the state's civil forfeiture statute. She says at least some civil forfeiture proceeds must go to the Common School Fund. "Here, the current statute's allocation scheme neither tracks offset costs nor increases the Fund," Rush writes. "Thus, the legislature overstepped a constitutional limit on its authority."

TRANSPORTATION: LAST AMTRAK TRAIN LEAVES INDY - The last Amtrak train from Indianapolis to Chicago left the station early Sunday morning (WTHR-TV). The rail service lost its funding, so for the first time in nearly 100 years, Hoosiers will not be able to take the train directly from the Circle City to the Windy City. Sunday morning's train had a special car for passengers wanting to enjoy one last ride. The last train leaving Chicago for Indy is set to arrive at Union Station just before midnight.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP TO ALLOW HUAWEI SALES - President Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping agreed to a cease-fire on trade that will remove some curbs on Huawei Technologies Co. buying high-tech equipment from the U.S., for the moment lifting one cloud over the global economy (Wall Street Journal). Under the cease-fire, the U.S. agreed to put off additional tariffs on Chinese goods indefinitely. In response, China will start buying large amounts of American farm products, Mr. Trump said. Until the two leaders sat down for an 80-minute lunch meeting Saturday on the sidelines of a Group of 20 meeting, the U.S. was poised to hit China with tariffs on the roughly $300 billion in goods that aren't currently covered by 25% tariffs. Afterward, Mr. Trump said the sides were ready to start talking again. "We're going to work with China on where we left off to see if we can make a deal," he said at a news conference. "I'm not rushed," he said, calling the talks "intricate."

CITIES: MUNCIE SAYS DELAWARE COUNTY SEWAGE PLAN POLLUTES - The Muncie Sanitary District is expected to spend upwards of $160 million by 2031 on a court-ordered plan to keep sewage out of the White River (Slabaugh, Muncie Star Press). Which is why MSD is keeping a wary eye on a Delaware County Regional Wastewater District (DCRWD) proposal to build a wastewater treatment plant that would discharge into Muncie Creek, which flows through Morningside Addition, the Whitely neighborhood and McCulloch Park into the White River. MSD and Mayor Dennis Tyler have vowed to fight any county wastewater treatment plant that would discharge into Muncie Creek, saying it would degrade the waterway. DCRWD, whose territory includes the rural/suburban Royerton, DeSoto and Country Village area, says it is considering building its own treatment plant because it can no longer afford MSD's constant rate increases. The county district owns its own sewer lines but pipes its sewage to MSD for treatment. "Ongoing rate increases assessed by MSD have negatively impacted the communities of Royerton and DeSoto by rendering sewer service unaffordable for the existing customer base," the county district's consultant, Commonwealth Engineers, said in a preliminary engineering report.

CITIES: JUDGE RULES FOR FORMER COLUMBUS MAYOR - A judge has ruled in favor of a former mayor of a southern Indiana city whose efforts to obtain public records ended up in court (Indiana Public Media). Former Columbus Mayor Kristen Brown sued in 2017 after she said the city's police department failed to comply with her request for information related to a 2016 crash involving law enforcement. Special Judge Richard Poynter ruled this month that Brown will get attorney's fees and court costs. The court says she was given "insufficient detail" about her request. Brown says they've "wasted so much taxpayer money" and attorney's fees are approaching $50,000. City of Columbus attorney Alan Whitted says the city hasn't decided whether to appeal.

CITIES: ANN DANCER FUNDING MISSES GOAL - The fund drive to upgrade the dancing electronic art on Mass Ave is still short of its goal as the campaign enters its final day (WIBC). The Indy Cultural Trail is about $80,000 short of a $260,000 goal to upgrade the software that keeps the minidress-wearing stick figure in motion. Executive director Karen Haley says several potential donors expressed interest but can't act until after the self-imposed Saturday deadline. She says the Cultural Trail will be reconnecting with them to finalize donations.

COUNTIES: PORTER PREPARES FOR ELECTION CHANGES - The Porter County election board is starting with a clean financial slate after the county council approved changes for the board's reform in July (Kwiatkowski, NWI Times). The council retooled the budget for the new Board of Elections and Voter Registration, replacing the old board and the office of voter registration. The only thing the council didn't approve was hiring two of the four requested positions for the new director and assistant director. "We're tabling two just so that we can understand further down the road if there is an issue where we need more staff," said Council Vice President Jeff Larson. "We weren't sure of what the productivity was in the office before the reforms." Clerk Jessica Bailey said she believed they needed four deputies to handle the workload, but she respected the council's decision because of problems with the previous board, which state officials said was negligent.

BUTTIGIEG TO POST $24.8M: Pete Buttigieg's presidential campaign announced a $24 million second quarter FEC haul (Howey Politics Indiana). "We just announced via email raising more than $24.8 million from more than 294,000 donors in the second quarter of 2019," said Chris Meagher, a campaign spokesman. "We have more than $22.6 million cash on hand. We more than doubled the amount of total individual donors to the campaign between Q1 and Q2. We had more than 230,000 new donors in Q2, bringing our total number of donors to more than 400,000. Our average contribution size for the cycle is $47.42. We have donors from all 57 states and territories." Campaign manager Mike Schmuhl said, "We officially launched our campaign just a couple of months ago, and since then, time and time again, Pete has proved why he is a top-tier candidate for the nomination. From town halls on MSNBC, CNN, and FOX News to last week's debate, he's shown the country what I've known for a long time: Pete is the best person to bring a new generation of leadership to Washington."

FREEMAN-WILSON COMMENTS ON BUTTIGIEG, SOUTH BEND PD: Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson said that every mayor must know their community so that they are prepared to handle a crisis, like a police shooting, before it happens. Freeman-Wilson leads the Criminal and Social Justice Committee of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, which met this weekend in Honolulu (Davis, WIBC). "We talked about the importance of how a mayor and police chief not only address the public when a crisis occurs, but prevent those crises," she said. Wilson said she believes Mayor Pete Buttigieg is doing his best after the incident in South Bend, where a black man, Eric Logan, was killed last week by a white police officer, but said in general that a mayor must be prepared. Buttigieg has taken criticism for how the situation was handled. He said in last week's presidential debate that his community is hurting and that "it's a mess". He also addressed the community at a town hall, where his relationship with the black community was called into question. "What are those things that we can do to train police officers?" asked Freeman-Wilson. "What are those things that we can do to strengthen the relationship between police and the community long before a crisis occurs?"

MYERS OPEN TO MEDICINAL MARIJUANA: When it comes to legalizing marijuana, one possible Democratic candidate for Governor says while he can support medicinal marijuana as well as decriminalization, he's not sold on recreational use (Abdul, WIBC). Former state health commissioner Dr. Woody Myers stated his position following an inquiry from Indy Politics. Myers is exploring a run for Governor. Two possible challengers for the Democratic nomination, State Sen. Eddie Melton and State Rep. Karlee Macer have come out and supported some form of legalization. Meanwhile, Governor Eric Holcomb supports studying the medical benefits of marijuana if it is ever legalized at the federal level. "While I favor appropriate medical use of products containing a known dosage of Tetrahydrocannabinol (THC), our medical community, legislature and policy makers should be thoughtful and should examine the experience of other states when considering new legislation and rulemaking," Myers said. "I do favor the decriminalization of the possession of THC containing products for personal use- our law-enforcement officials have higher priorities and there is great evidence nationally of disproportionate sentencing in disenfranchised populations. I am not convinced that full recreational legalization of THC containing products is a wise move in and for Indiana."

TRUMP BRINGS SHUNNED DICTATORS IN FROM THE COLD: It was a good few days to be an authoritarian leader. At the Group of 20 gathering in Japan, leaders who can find themselves shunned at such multilateral summits were the focus of U.S. President Donald Trump's attention, humor and respect across Friday and Saturday. Turkey's leader was a "tough cookie" and Saudi Arabia's crown prince a "friend" who has done a "spectacular job" (Bloomberg News). Trump said he had a "tremendous discussion" with Russia's Vladimir Putin. China's President Xi Jinping was "one of the great leaders in 200 years." Then on Sunday Trump became the first sitting president to set foot in North Korea, a day after he issued a surprise invite via Twitter for Kim Jong Un to meet him at the Demilitarized Zone, the heavily fortified border between the North and South. What was intended as a handshake and brief chat turned into an unscheduled summit of more than an hour. The encounters marked a welcome and long-sought return from the cold for the likes of Putin and Saudi Arabia's Mohammed bin Salman, who have otherwise been the target of sanctions, isolation and opprobrium from the U.S. government. All came away having gained from the exchange, whether something concrete like trade concessions or more nebulous, such as legitimacy and respect. "This G-20 meeting has been less about the largest economies of the world, and more about a few illiberal political economies that have influence on the largest economy of the world -- the U.S.," said Karen Young, a resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute. "Both Russia and Saudi Arabia have used the conference to demonstrate their ability to capture Trump's attention and praise."

BIDEN SAYS TRUMP 'CODDLING DICTATORS': Former Vice President Joe Biden's campaign accused President Trump of "coddling" dictators in his meetings with North Korea's Kim Jong Un, Russian President Vladimir Putin and Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan while overseas (CBS News). "President Trump's coddling of dictators at the expense of American national security and interests is one of the most dangerous ways he's diminishing us on the world stage and subverting our values as a nation," Biden campaign spokesman Andrew Bates said in a statement to CBS News. The president held a last-minute meeting with Kim in the Demilitarized Zone separating North and South Korea on Sunday, becoming the first sitting president to set foot on North Korean soil. His meeting with Kim came after the G20 summit in Japan, where he met with Putin and Erdogan.

HARRIS ATTACK ON BIDEN COULD BACKFIRE: Kamala Harris might be reveling in her sudden burst of attention after roasting Joe Biden over racial issues on the debate stage last week, but a backlash is already brewing (Politico). Biden supporters and Democrats who have attended the former vice president's events in the days after the first nationally televised debate, are describing Harris' assault on Biden as an all-too-calculated overreach after she knocked him on his heels in a grilling over busing and his remarks on segregationist senators. "She played low ball, which was out of character. And he didn't expect it, nor did I," said Lee White, a Biden supporter who attended his remarks at the Jesse Jackson Rainbow PUSH Coalition. "She should not have gone that route. She's much too intelligent, she's been able to be successful thus far, why do you have to do that. One major Biden supporter from California who declined to be named for publication said Harris' direct attack on Biden was a mistake that would haunt her. "It's going to bite her in the ass," the supporter noted. "Very early on there was buzz ... Biden-Kamala is the dream ticket, the best of both worlds."

TRUMP APPEARS TO BE ACCEPTING DE FACTO NORTH KOREA NUKES: From a seemingly fanciful tweet to a historic step into North Korean territory, President Trump's largely improvised third meeting on Sunday with Kim Jong-un, the North Korean leader, was a masterpiece of drama, the kind of made-for-TV spectacle that Mr. Trump treasures (New York Times). But for weeks before the meeting, which started as a Twitter offer by the president for Mr. Kim to drop by at the Demilitarized Zone and "say hello," a real idea has been taking shape inside the Trump administration that officials hope might create a foundation for a new round of negotiations. The concept would amount to a nuclear freeze, one that essentially enshrines the status quo, and tacitly accepts the North as a nuclear power, something administration officials have often said they would never stand for. It falls far short of Mr. Trump's initial vow 30 months ago to solve the North Korea nuclear problem, but it might provide him with a retort to campaign-season critics who say the North Korean dictator has been playing the American president brilliantly by giving him the visuals he craves while holding back on real concessions.

MORE ON U.S./NORTH KOREA SCUFFLE: President Trump escorted Kim back to the South as a scuffle broke out between reporters and North Korean security guards, with officials shoving and trying to block the press from capturing the moment (AP). The jostling intensified as the leaders moved to the Freedom House on the southern side of Panmunjom, where they made brief remarks to reporters and then met for roughly 50 minutes. A photographer was knocked to the ground and one reporter was seen in tears. At one point, incoming White House press secretary Stephanie Grisham side-checked a North Korean guard who was blocking reporters from the room while others security officials frantically tried to cordon off the area with yellow rope. Grisham ended up with bruises from the fracas. The U.S. Secret Service intervened in the pushing and shoving match

PENCE SAYS NOTHING 'COMPASSIONATE' WITH OPEN BORDERS: Vice President Mike Pence told a gathering of conservative Christian activists Saturday night that the Democratic policy goals relating to border security are "morally wrong" and would only enable the abuse and assault of migrants being trafficked to the southern border (Christian Post). Speaking at the Faith & Freedom Coalition's annual gala dinner at the Omni Shoreham Hotel in Washington D.C., Pence didn't hold back in responding to a week filled with criticism of the Trump administration following unfavorable mainstream media reports of conditions facing migrant children at the southern border. As conservative evangelicals continue to be chastised by Democrats for their support of the Trump administration and immigration agenda, Pence suggested to donors of the leading national conservative evangelical grassroots organization that securing the southern border and building a wall is the morally appropriate response. "After spending the last six months denying there was a crisis at our southern border and doing nothing while our courageous and compassionate Customs and Border Protection personnel were overwhelmed by that crisis, now some Democrats want to lecture us about their moral concern," Pence griped. "There's nothing compassionate about refusing to change the laws that human traffickers use to take advantage of poor families," he continued.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: When it comes to legalized marijuana, Gov. Eric Holcomb and legislative leaders would be wise to set up a task force and explore what has occurred in medicinal and recreational states. Short of legalization, the state should explore decriminalization. As HPI reported last week, marijuana arrests are increasing here at a time when it is legal in some form in more than 30 states. - Brian A. Howey

MACER MAKES A PITCH TO THE CORNFIELD CONFERENCE: State Rep. Karlee Macer (D-Speedway) addressed a crowd of Democrat activists and community leaders Saturday at the Tri-State Cornfield Conference (Howey Politics Indiana). "Being here with you all today, and seeing the tremendous leadership showcased across our state by activists like yourselves, reassures me that it won't be this way much longer. I've never been more confident in our candidates, our policies, and the future of our state than I am today," said Macer. Macer of Indianapolis has formed a gubernatorial exploratory committee, but has not decided on whether to seek the nomination to challenge Gov. Eric Holcomb. State Sen. Eddie Melton of Gary also addressed the conference. Dr. Woody Myers is expected to enter the Democratic race in early July.

Presidential 2020

A WIDE OPEN DEMOCRATIC RACE: For months, the Democratic presidential primary has been dictated by Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders. That primary is now over (Politico). After an eventful month and the conclusion of the first round of Democratic debates, there is a new top tier — and a sense among many campaigns and Democratic operatives that Biden and Sanders are suddenly within reach in a race that has broken wide open. "Bernie and Biden were largely living off of inertia," said Colin Strother, a veteran Democratic strategist. Now, he said, voters are becoming aware that "other [candidates], they have a lot of other things to offer." The campaign's evolution came gradually at first — then violently amid the debates. Biden, already damaged by his shifting views on abortion and his one-time work with segregationists, withered under Sen. Kamala Harris' filleting of his record on busing for school desegregation. Sanders committed no such error. Yet he was weakened by contrast — his forgettable debate performance versus the proficiency of Sen. Elizabeth Warren, a fellow leftist previously untested in a presidential campaign. She is slowly rising in the polls, just as Sanders — a rival for the progressive vote — is seeing his numbers tick downward. By the weekend, Warren was rallying thousands of supporters in Chicago, while Harris was raising record sums of money for her campaign.

HARRIS PICKS UP BLACK CAUCUS ENDORSEMENTS: Two more members of the Congressional Black Caucus are backing Kamala Harris's bid for the presidency: Reps. Bobby Rush of Illinois and Frederica Wilson of Florida. ... With these two new supporters, Harris now has six endorsements from the CBC.

Sunday Talk

GRAHAM HOPES FOR IRAN TALKS: Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina urged President Trump to prepare to send the "strongest signal possible" to Iran if the government in Tehran fulfills its threat to breach the limits on uranium supply established by the 2015 nuclear agreement next week. "I hope the president understands that if they begin enrichment on July the 7, that he needs to get ready to send the strongest signal possible that this cannot be tolerated," Graham said on "Face the Nation" Sunday. The South Carolina Republican, considered a hawk on foreign policy, did not elaborate on what kind of "signal" he would support if the Iranian government passes the uranium supply cap.

KLOBACHAR SEES UNITY: Minnesota Sen. Amy Klobuchar downplayed concerns that many of the other 24 Democrats vying for the presidential nomination are embracing progressive policy proposals that may alienate some voters and push moderates like herself away from the party in 2020. "I think there's room in our party for a legitimate debate," she said on "Face the Nation" Sunday. "I just think it's important to realize there's a lot more that unifies us than separates [us], that there's a lot more that unifies us than there is that divides us."

Congress

DONNELLY NAMED UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO FELLOW: The University of Chicago Institute of Politics' six new fall fellows: Univision's Enrique Acevedo; Jane Coaston, senior politics reporter at Vox; former Sen. Joe Donnelly (D-Ind.); Heather McGhee, senior fellow at Demos; former Rep. Tom Rooney (R-Fla.), who is also an NBC News analyst; and Navtej Sarna, former Indian ambassador (Politico Playbook).

GOP LOOKING TO BRUISE MUELLER: Democrats have been dying to hear directly from special counsel Robert Mueller for months, but they're not alone. President Donald Trump's GOP allies in Congress are salivating at the chance to bruise Mueller's reputation and cast doubt on the integrity of his work (POLITICO). "Mueller's intensely anticipated July 17 testimony will bring him face to face with the Republican lawmakers who have savaged his reputation and called him the ringleader of a 'coup' against Trump. While Democrats attempt to squeeze morsels of new information out of the notoriously tight-lipped investigator, these Trump defenders are signaling that they'll use the historic moment to try to undercut his credibility and paint him as a political pawn in Democrats' efforts to undermine the president."

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB LAUDS CATALENT - Bio-manufacturing company Catalent is expanding its Bloomington facility. The company announced Friday a new warehouse will be built that will produce vials, syringes and cartridges. CEO John Chaminski says the facility will create 200 new jobs. "What we try to do from a Catalent perspective, is we provide on boarding services for those new employees to get them familiar with Catalent," he says (Indiana Public Media). Governor Eric Holcomb says his administration is working with universities and colleges to make sure their graduates are turning out workers qualified for jobs at Catalent. "These aren't just jobs, these are careers, these are life changing opportunities, and they're right here," he says. Bloomington city officials say Catalent received a tax break in exchange for promising to invest $100 million into its Monroe County operations. This is the company's second major investment in the area, following the completion of a $14 million enhancement to its Bloomington Biologics packaging capabilities.

COURTS: APPEALS COURT OVERTURNS MURDER SENTENCING - The Indiana Court of Appeals has ordered a new sentencing hearing for a Gary man serving 183 years in prison for two gang-related murders he committed when he was 16 years old (NWI Times). In a 3-0 decision, the appellate court said a 2012 U.S. Supreme Court ruling, all but prohibiting life sentences without the possibility of parole for juvenile offenders, similarly applies to de facto juvenile life without parole sentences, such as the one issued to Donnell Wilson. Wilson, now 22, was 16 years old in 2013 when he shot and killed two brothers, Shaqwone Ham, 19, and Charles Wood, 18, in a gang territory dispute in Gary's Glen Park neighborhood. He also committed an armed robbery shortly before the murders, according to court records.

HEALTH: HIP RECIPIENTS WILL START LOGGING WORK HOURS - Hoosiers who receive health insurance through the Healthy Indiana Plan, or HIP, may have to start logging work hours (Indiana Public Media). An estimated 70,000 to 80,000 people on HIP, Indiana's Medicaid expansion program, may have to comply with work requirements if they don't meet certain exemptions. Indiana's Family and Social Services Administration, FSSA, has been reaching out to people through mail and email to let them know about the new Gateway to Work program. Covering Kids and Families of Indiana helps organizations and consumers navigate health insurance. Policy director Mark Fairchild says they've heard little from people on HIP. "Some maybe are getting a letter from the state, they want clarification of what it means, whether they should report or not, the numbers are nowhere near what we would have expected," says Fairchild. Starting July 1, people who aren't exempt need to report 20 hours a week of work, volunteer, school and other activities. The reporting can be done by phone, computer or in person.

AGRICULTURE: SOYBEAN PLANTING DOWN 10% - The USDA issued its June 1 Acreage and Stocks Report last week. USDA is estimating that U.S. farmers planted 80 million acres of soybeans, down 10 percent from last year (Hoosier Ag Today). That number represents the lowest soybean planted acreage in the United States since 2013. Compared to last year, acres planted to soybeans are down in all 29 reporting states. Corn planted area came in at 91.7 million acres, three percent higher than last year. The all-wheat planted area for 2019 is estimated at 45.6 million acres, five percent lower than 2018.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP TO ADDRESS NATION ON JULY 4TH - Trump's splashy makeover of D.C.'s traditional Fourth of July festivities will include a secured area in front of the Lincoln Memorial for VIPs, friends and family, the WashPost reports (Axios). The White House will distribute free tickets. The Secret Service says the VIP section "will stretch roughly from the steps of the memorial to the midpoint of the reflecting pool," according to The Post. "It is in front of the spot from which Trump plans to address the nation as part of his rebranding" of the celebration into a "Salute to America." The Navy's Blue Angels will fly over, per AP: Participants will also include the Old Guard Fife and Drum Corps, U.S. Army Band, Armed Forces Chorus, U.S. Marine Corps Silent Drill Team and others. Interior Secretary David Bernhardt says Trump will use his speech to honor the military.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump's schedule for the week: Monday: Trump will have lunch with Vice President Pence. Thursday: Trump will deliver Fourth of July remarks at a Salute to America celebration at the Lincoln Memorial. Friday: Trump will spend the weekend in Bedminster, New Jersey.

OPIOIDS: PURDUE PHARMA STRUGGLING - OxyContin maker Purdue Pharma LP is struggling with slumping sales, a shrinking workforce and restructuring challenges as it battles lawsuits related to the opioid crisis, according to people familiar with the company (Wall Street Journal). Purdue's revenue is expected to drop below $1 billion this year for the first time in more than a decade, as employees leave and a potential bankruptcy filing looms, people familiar with the matter say. Controlled by members of the billionaire Sackler family, Purdue has also been reviewing the corporate structure of at least two dozen entities affiliated with the company that are under government scrutiny for possible fraud, according to some of the people familiar with the company. Purdue has previously said that it may file for bankruptcy but hasn't made a decision.

OHIO: YOUNGSTOWN NEWSPAPER CLOSES - The only daily newspaper in Ohio's ninth largest city has announced plans to permanently cease publication in August after 150 years (AP). The Vindicator in Youngstown announced the decision in a letter to readers published Saturday. Publisher Betty J.H. Brown Jagnow and General Manager Mark Brown wrote the move stems from financial struggles and the inability to find a buyer. They called the decision "gut wrenching." The announcement comes just days after the paper marked its 150th anniversary.

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

Forfeiting the high ground?

Supremes hear Timbs on remand; rule on forfeitures and school fund

In a pair of cases decided at the end of June, the Indiana Supreme Court takes another shot at deciding issues related to asset forfeiture, a facet of the law which has proven remarkably difficult for the court to fully resolve over the past few decades – and year.

In Horner, et al., v. Curry, et al., No. 18S-PL-333, the Court finally determines – apparently definitively – that the state civil forfeiture statute (and Indiana Constitution) properly allows some diversion from the Common School Fund (CSF) and recovery of costs to law enforcement agencies and county prosecutors. As the Indiana Prosecuting Attorneys Council (IPAC) explains to county prosecutors, before July 2018, Indiana's forfeiture statutes allowed for case-specific reimbursement of "law enforcement costs," with any excess directed to CSF. Effective July 1, 2018, a specific formula calculates law enforcement costs, including but not limited to, reimbursement of attorney fees for private counsel hired by prosecutors. Any funds remaining after the reimbursement of these costs is directed to the Fund. A group of taxpayers challenged the old version of the statute, then amended their challenge to include the new version, claiming both violated Art. 8, § 2 of the Indiana Constitution, which says the CSF "shall consist of [among other things] all forfeitures which may accrue" The group did not believe the Constitution allowed any diversion of forfeiture proceeds into anything but the Fund.

The Supreme Court upheld both statutory versions of reimbursing law enforcement and prosecutor costs following forfeiture, but, just like in the past, it is not neat and tidy. "There are three different opinions and four different voting alignments, and complex discussion regarding standing and constitutional history," as IPAC notes. You need a scorecard to untangle the alignments. Justice Mark Massa authors the opinion, and Justice Christopher Goff concurs. Justice Geoffrey Slaughter concurs in the judgment with separate opinion. Chief Justice Loretta Rush concurs, concurs in result and dissents with separate opinion. Justice Steven David concurs and concurs in result and partially joins the CJ's opinion.

The Court finds Art. 8, § 2 of the Indiana Constitution applies to civil forfeitures, and "that the General Assembly may decide how and when forfeiture proceeds accrue to the Common School Fund." Thus Indiana's civil forfeiture statute is not unconstitutional. The bottom line is that the Court holds – as one former veteran prosecutor boils it down for colleagues – "Keep Calm and Forfeit On" . . . as long as they reimburse forfeiture costs for both the prosecutor and law enforcement agencies involved.

With that overarching issue resolved, the Supremes turn to Hodges v. State, No. 19S-MI-117. We've told you about this case as it moved from the Marion County Superior Court through the Court of Appeals. "Here," the Chief Justice writes for a unanimous Court, "a shipped box raised the suspicion of an interdiction officer: it displayed hallmarks of parcels containing drugs and drug money, and the officer's canine partner indicated the package bore the scent of narcotics. The officer successfully sought a warrant authorizing a search of the package and seizure of, among other items, proceeds of drug trafficking. When officers opened the box, they found U.S. currency wrapped in multiple layers of sealed packaging. After a canine alerted that the money itself—not just the packaging – contained the odor of narcotics, officers seized the cash and obtained a court order to turn it over to federal authorities."

What a drag it is . . .

INPRS return rate dips; commodities key

As of May 31, the Indiana Public Retirement System defined benefit portfolio has returned 4.05% net of fees on a fiscal year-to-date basis. That puts INPRS on track for the lowest rate of return since Fiscal Year 2016.

Private equity has been the top performing asset class, returning 20.01% for the fiscal year-to-date, representing the strongest performance in the private equity portfolio since FY 2006.

Stock holdings, which comprise 20% of portfolio investments, are down 1.19% as of May 31. Domestic stocks are up by 1.04%, while international stocks have tumbled by 3.48 percent.

But by far, the biggest drag on portfolio performance has been commodities, which are off by 11.85% for the first 11 months of the 2019 fiscal year.

During FY 2018, commodities were the best-performing asset class with returns of 21.96 percent.

Over the past five years, commodity holdings have generated negative returns of 10.51% . . . even as the INPRS portfolio overall has posted a 4.67% return over the five-year period.

We told you months ago that Michael Hodges, the person who shipped the parcel, was an attorney and sports agent, and asserted that he was sending $60,990 “to a World Series ticket holder in a lawful exchange for expensive tickets.” Hodges “argues that the seizure was unlawful because it exceeded the warrant’s scope – making the turnover of the cash improper. We disagree,” writes the CJ for the Court. “The totality of the circumstances established the necessary probable cause to believe the money was proceeds of drug trafficking.”

But the CJ acknowledges that the ruling only seeks to “address a narrow question: did probable cause support the seizure of property that a court later ordered state police officers to turn over to federal authorities?” While the justices unanimously answered this question affirmatively, “we cannot – and do not – speculate about whether civil forfeiture of the property would be appropriate,” leaving the appropriateness of that to be decided in future federal proceedings.

There’s still another rub.

The Court effectively adopts a “totality of circumstances” test here: “The totality of the circumstances established the necessary probable cause to believe the money was proceeds of drug trafficking.” But in doing so, they seem to largely overrule their own decision from just last year, one which we followed closely for you in these pages, and one in which the Supreme Court of the United States declined to review, despite strong urging from Attorney General Curtis Hill (R). In a footnote – not even the body of the ruling – the Chief Justice acknowledges that “Hodges relies heavily on Bowman v. State, 81 N.E.3d 1127 (Ind. Ct. App.), modified on denial of reh’g (Ind. Ct. App. 2017), trans. denied sub nom. Murphy v. State, 96 N.E.3d 578 (Ind. 2018) (table), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 68 (2018). To the extent Bowman conflicts with our decision here, we disapprove it.” But the Court here failed to explain just how Bowman – a case which involved the same transfer facility, same police officer, and same canine officer, and which was decided unanimously at the intermediate appellate level with a tight opinion from the court’s most experienced panel of former trial court judges – may conflict with Hodges, and which aspects of Bowman the Supremes might now take issue with after fairly recently denying transfer (on probable cause, the actual search and seizure, or forfeiture and return of the cash). That means a lot of questions remain to be answered about the practical aspects of the process . . . even as we seem to have a better understanding of the Common School Fund’s status in civil forfeiture matters.

In case that didn’t satisfy your appetite for forfeiture fodder, the Indiana Supreme Court heard oral argument June 28 in State v. Timbs, No. 27S04-1702-MI-00070. This was the case remanded back to the Indiana Supreme Court by the Supreme Court of the United States, which wants the Indiana courts to determine if the 2013 seizure of Tyson Timbs’ $40,000 Land Rover – purchased with proceeds from an insurance policy from his late father and used in a small drug transaction – was excessive. In February 2019, the nation’s high court unanimously ruled that the Eighth Amendment’s prohibition of excessive fines is an incorporated protection applicable to the states under the Fourteenth Amendment, Timbs v. Indiana, 586 U.S. ____ (2019), clearing up confusion.

The big national battle over how to measure when fines are excessive shifted back to Indiana, and the Indiana Supreme Court was flooded with amicus briefs from a passel of states and entities ranging from the American Civil Liberties Union to the Cato Institute.

Even after the nation’s high court affirmatively confirmed that the Eighth Amendment applies to civil forfeiture, during oral argument, the Office of the Attorney General contends the test used to determine whether a seizure is excessive is not one of proportionality, but rather whether the government can prove a nexus between the asset sought for forfeiture and the alleged illegal activity . . . effectively making it open season for law enforcement seizure if a straight-faced argument could be made about a connection.

But if you recall us telling you about the oral argument on Timbs before the nation’s high court, Justice Stephen Breyer asked Indiana Solicitor General Tom Fisher if it would then be constitutional to seize any vehicle exceeding the speed limit – Bugatti, Ferrari, or Mercedes, in his hypothetical – regardless of the nature of the infraction or the value of the asset.

Indiana Chief Justice Loretta Rush took up the same line of questioning Back Home with Solicitor General Fisher, pressing him over “where’s the limits? If the State decides you’re going over ‘X’ miles per hour so we’re going to take your car, is there any limit to that government power?”

“No,” Fisher responded. “Look, I’ve gone out on a limb on the Bugatti, and I don’t think I’m going back. This is the position that we already staked out in the Supreme Court when I was asked by Justice Breyer whether a Bugatti can be forfeited for going over five miles over the speed limit,” he elaborated. “Historically the answer to that question is ‘yes,’ and we’re sticking with that position here.”

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

- In CD 03, Dr. Chris Magiera (R) announces his primary challenge from the right (yes, the right) to U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R). The Warsaw gastroenterologist is the husband of Dr. Pamela Galloway (R), a former Wisconsin state senator who ran against Banks for the then-open CD 03 bid in 2014. She finished fourth in the six-candidate field, garnering 7.0% of the vote (less than 25% of the top two candidates) with significant local tea party support.

- Dr. Magiera blasts the 39-year-old Rep. Banks, who was elected to his first local office in 2008 – and who is serving his second term in Congress, as a “career politician.”

State Office Races . . .

- We’ve tried to emphasize for you just how off-message Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R) has been with Republican legislative leaders and the Governor, and now it looks like the “marriage” can’t be saved as Sen. Eddie Melton (D) announced that Dr. McCormick will be joining him at several stops along his “statewide listening tour” and participating in his “Hoosier Community Conversations” town halls to discuss the state of education in Indiana.

- Of course, Sen. Melton, a former member of the State Board of Education, announced just a few weeks ago that he was establishing a gubernatorial exploratory committee, and would embark upon a series of town hall-style events “to listen to the priorities of Hoosiers as he discusses the need to invest in education, create economic opportunity, raise the minimum wage, and restore faith in the Department of Veterans Affairs.”

□ Because Sen. Melton is so openly exploring a gubernatorial candidacy and using his listening tour to advance his political goals, this is not a simple matter of bipartisan cooperation among officials who are simply looking (and looking out) for what's best for Hoosier students. This is not akin to, for example, Dr. McCormick joining the Indiana Legislative Black Caucus in its own statewide listening tour in recent weeks (events in which she did not participate). Despite how anyone might choose to position it, Sen. Melton is riding the political circuit, and Superintendent McCormick seems to be continuing to relish her role in poking the tiger through the cage . . . even though she claims not to be attending the events in her official capacity (which raises as many questions as potential problems it forecloses).

□ "I am excited that Dr. McCormick will be joining our Hoosier Community Conversations and sharing her expertise and passion about education across the state with me," said Sen. Melton in revealing the most interesting road tour of the Summer outside of Billy Ray Cyrus teaming with Lil Nas X. "It is an honor to share this platform with Dr. McCormick, who has been an advocate for Indiana's students and families."

□ For her part, the outgoing superintendent – in what can only be interpreted as a slap in the face to the GOPowers that be – said "Indiana needs more statewide leaders who value the voices of practitioners and community stakeholders, as demonstrated by Sen. Eddie Melton," said Dr. J. "As State Superintendent of Public Instruction, I am optimistic that a potential 2020 gubernatorial candidate has the foresight and the willingness to elevate educational issues and work collaboratively. This next election will direct the future of our state for generations to come. Decisions regarding the education of our children must be at the very heart of that future."

□ The Melton campaign release, in turn, praised the lame duck super as "[a] nationally-recognized educator and innovator," and "an advocate for children, dedicated to using her experience to improve educational outcomes for Hoosier students." Melton's missive also notes that the office McCormick holds "was abolished as a democratically elected position this year by Governor Eric Holcomb and the Republican supermajority in the state legislature. The resulting effect is that politicians, not Hoosier parents, now decide who develops Indiana's education policies."

□ Recall as well that after HEA 1005-2019 passed, making her post appointed after the 2020 election (on which she had already taken a pass, making it "safe" for lawmakers to move up the abolition date by four years), Superintendent McCormick had pointedly told Hoosiers, "The 2020 gubernatorial race will deserve greater attention as our students' futures are dependent upon it."

□ After holding fire for 3½ years, the genteel Holcomb Administration clearly had enough with the McCormick shenanigans. Indiana Republican Party Chair Kyle Hupfer – who would not fly solo on something of this import – issued a formal statement after the tour announcement without being asked, saying that the "announcement seems to confirm the rumors of the last few weeks: that Jennifer McCormick is auditioning for a new job – including as the lieutenant governor nominee on the Democrat ticket in 2020. After being on stage at our Republican Conventions in 2016 and 2018, running on GOP ideals in 2016 and accepting campaign aid from thousands of Republican Party supporters across the state, it begs the question whether Jennifer McCormick is still a Republican. I'm sure someone will ask her that soon." "It doesn't deserve a response from me," Dr. McCormick told Chris Sikich of IndyStar.com. "They've been nonexistent in support for me. I'm not sure I owe them anything."

□ After the respective appearances of Sen. Melton and Rep. Karlee Macer (D) – another Democrat exploring the possibility of a gubernatorial bid – out of their respective neighborhoods and comfort zones at the Tri-State Cornfield Conference in Kendallville, a picture hit the media of Melton and Macer that looked a good bit like a campaign ticket portrait . . . and it seemed to excite some Democrats. The ticket would be the most youthful in generations at just the right time in history – Melton is not yet 40, Macer under 50 – and the racial, gender, and geographic balance would be epic for Demos. But when you swap out McCormick for Macer as a potential candidate for lieutenant governor, you get virtually the same demographics and geographics – and McCormick has already been elected statewide, is a hero of sorts to public school teachers, and would bring some excitement as part of a largely unprecedented fusion ticket.

□ Does she want to run? Probably not. Would rank-and-file Democrats accede to an LG nominee coming from outside the party? If the gubernatorial nominee was popular and insisted upon it, 2020 might be the year. The national political situation might be so topsy-turvy, and the prospect of toppling a popular governor so unlikely that it would take something out of left field to change the dynamics – and having someone who ran and won statewide on the Trump-Pence ticket four years earlier certainly is a jump the shark moment. And we haven't even raised the question yet of whether Sen. Melton will ultimately decide to run (he would have to relinquish his Senate seat, after his predecessor, Earline Rogers (D), held off her retirement for as many as three terms until she felt confident she had identified a worthy successor) . . . or whether he's even the person around whom Democrats would coalesce (and remember what we told you about Lake County never having nominee for governor?). But since nothing seemed to happen this week in CD 05, the chattering class has to have something to speculate about.

● Bill Levin, a fixture in the Broad Ripple community and the founder of the First Church of Cannabis, green lights a bid for the Libertarian Party of Indiana's nomination for governor.

□ Levin, who sought the shelter of the Religious Freedom Restoration Act as a means to using marijuana as a sacrament for his “church,” lost all of his arguments in that court case.

□ Here is how LPIN gubernatorial nominees have fared in recent years (Libertarians did not run a candidate for governor in 1992 or 1988 – the years in which Evan Bayh (D) was the Democratic nominee for governor):

Year	Candidate	Vote %
2016	Rex Bell (L)	3.20%
2012	Rupert Boneham (L)	3.95%
2008	Andy Horning (L)	2.12%
2004	Kenn Gividen (L)	1.29%
2000	Andy Horning (L)	1.76%
1996	Steve Dillon (L)	1.70%
1984	Jim Ridenour (L)	0.32%

● The Governor’s Eric Holcomb for Indiana campaign committee receives some major infusions dated June 26, including a $50,000 contribution from Alliance Coal, LLC of Tulsa, Oklahoma. In addition to $10,000 from the American Electric Power Committee for Responsible Government, the Guv’s campaign coffers also reap contributions of $10,000 each from engineering mogul Robert Bowen of Indianapolis; retired health care executive Dan Evans of Indianapolis; retired audio company founder Fred Klipsch, now of Orlando; and railroad heir William Elder of Indianapolis . . . Faegre Baker Daniels LLP makes a $10,000 contribution on June 30 to the Lieutenant Governor’s Friends of Suzanne Crouch campaign committee.

IN Legislative Races . . .

● The HD 30 vacancy selection caucus will be held July 30 at the Marion Ivy Tech facility. Grant County has 40 counties in the district, followed by 12 in Blackford County, six in Wells County, and fewer in Delaware County. At least one-half-dozen Grant County hopefuls have indicated some level of interest to Grant County Republican Party Chair Darren Reese in making a bid for the seat later this month.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

● Will Republicans – without a top-tier candidate – be able to make headway in an open-seat South Bend mayoral race in which the Democratic nominee is tied closely to outgoing Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D)? And while the June police shooting and police force diversity issues are the major political and policy issues in SB, and the murder and shootings are perhaps the top issue in the Indianapolis mayoral race, the more mundane topic of trash collection seems to be top of the list in the Fort Wayne mayoral race. Hoosier mayors can at least be glad that we don’t share the early (late February) mayoral primary election date in Illinois, where incumbents pray for no snow removal problems (40 years ago in Chicago, an incumbent lost the 1979 primary because of this).

● Hammond Republicans scrounge up a challenger to Hammond Mayor Tom McDermott, Jr. (D), who seeks a record fifth term. Edward Lipkovitch, Jr., (R), a 37-year-old engineer who ran for the Hammond City Council as a write-in candidate, is the GOP standard-bearer. The Hammond native is, like Mayor McDermott, a Navy veteran. On his WJOB 1230-AM radio show, Mayor McDermott blamed the Governor and former Rep. Dan Dumezich (R) for recruiting his opponent. Mayor Tom believes that his public criticism of new casino investor Dumezich and the Governor’s political ties to casino investors led to the GOP filling the vacancy.

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● You know the fundraising numbers are top shelf when the campaign chooses to blast out emails touting the bottom line fewer than six hours after the fundraising quarter ends and 15 days ahead of the filing deadline. That’s just what the campaign of South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) did, with Hoosier Mike Schmuhl, still the homeboy campaign manager, dominating campaign press coverage July 1 with the news that “Over 400,000 people have invested in this campaign, and in this quarter alone, Pete for America raised approximately $24,800,000” from more than 294,000 Q2 donors. The average second quarter contribution amount was $47.42, giving the campaign lots of room for subsequent asks that may not be the case for other, more established beltway candidates who may have maxed out among many donors. The big bottom line was the new Demo benchmark of sorts, more than triple his Q1 fundraising total, more than any Democrat raised in Q1, and establishing him as a top-tier candidate who now has cash to spend on organization. U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders (D-VT) brought in “only” $24 million ($18 million of which was actually raised from March through June; $6 million was transferred in from previous campaign accounts) from his vaulted base, and former vice president Joe Biden (D) raised only $21.5 million during the same quarter (with an average contribution of $49). For wonks who want to parse the numbers, only about $832,000 of the Team Pete take to date is restricted to spending in the general election. Buttigieg opened July with $22.6 million in cash on hand. The Wall Street Journal’s Julie Bykowitz puts it in perspective for Hoosiers who may have had Mayor Pete on their radar screens for more than a decade: “Pete Buttigieg had no national network of wealthy political donors when he began his long-shot presidential run. Not six months later, he is one of the strongest fundraisers among the 24 Democrats seeking the nomination” . . . the Buttigieg bucks kept him in the national conversation in spite of lukewarm post-debate critiques . . . consultants suggest his straightforward unemotional persona, while working in most formats and interactions, does not serve him work well in debates where several candidates clamor for attention . . . U.S. Sen. Kamala Harris (D-CA) attracted more tweets than any other candidate in the second debate, according to Sprout Social data provided to Axios, which says this matters because “That online velocity is likely to translate beyond social media to polls, fundraising and other engines of momentum in the crowded field Tweets mentioning Harris’ Twitter handle generated 23% more interactions – likes, comments, retweets – than those about the next closest Democrat, Pete Buttigieg. Buttigieg generated the second-most interactions and had the most interactions per tweet” . . . hizzoner will headline the evening general session on Thursday, July 18 at the 2019 Young Democrats of America Convention in Indianapolis . . . post-debate CNN polling shows a big dip in Buttigieg numbers, well back into the single-digits and the second-tier, with just four percent (the poll’s margin of error), trailing Biden (22%), Harris (17%) Warren (15%), and Sanders (14%), falling like Biden and Sanders, while Sens. Harris and Warren gain. Similar numbers are found in a national Quinnipiac poll. A poll from USA Today/Suffolk University poll in Iowa shows Buttigieg in fifth place in that caucus state at six percent . . . seeking to engage a “sense of connection to others ... that young Americans should be able to gain without having to go to war,” Mayor Pete proposes national service via “A New Call to Service, a plan to dramatically expand service opportunities across the country” and tie them to incentives. He plans to “immediately triple service opportunities from 75,000 to 250,000, targeted towards America’s high school graduates, community college, and vocational students.”

IN Political News . . .

- Marion County Republican Party Chair Bryce Carpenter resigns his post effective July 30 after just seven months.
- Axios takes a deep dive into the Democratic presidential post-debate numbers for both media attention and interactions (likes, comments and shares) on Facebook and Twitter, and finds something that you should keep your eye on in the next gubernatorial race and potentially also a high-profile race such as the open CD 05 seat (we have no U.S. Senate seat up for election in 2020). Axios identifies a “gulf between the coverage that is most visible with the coverage that generates the most intense interest. Coverage that emerges from a high-profile television event can be high-volume, low-engagement, while policy proposals that can be invisible until surfacing in social feeds can have an extraordinary velocity.”
- Kentucky Democrats nominated Sheri Donahue (D-KY) for state auditor from a field of three candidates, one of whom, Chris Tobe (D-KY), was a native of Floyds Knobs. Donahue earned her BS in Industrial Engineering from Purdue University and currently serves on the Purdue Engineering Alumni Association Board of Directors. She spent 20 years working for the U.S. Navy and served as program manager for security and intelligence, and has most recently spent her career working in cybersecurity for Humana’s Enterprise Information Protection Department.
- Communications consultant Kate Snedeker files as an independent candidate for the Westfield City Council. She is a former House Republican caucus media director and a Daniels Administration appointee to the State Lottery Commission of Indiana.
- The Governor and Lieutenant Governor and U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) will join Evansville Mayor Lloyd Winnecke (R) in Evansville on August 9 for an evening fundraiser benefiting GOP city council candidates in the Pocket City.
- The Indiana Green Party (INGP) will field more candidates – six – in 2019 than the three it has in total since 2002. All six are running for city council in different communities.
- U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) uses his weekly update in late June to detail media appearances nationally that included an op-ed for the Washington Examiner “urging Democrats in Congress to put aside partisan squabbles and provide funding to relieve the humanitarian and security crisis on our southern border, which has deteriorated to the point that even the New York Times Editorial Board is calling for action”; Breitbart (which focused on the Braun-Scott proposal to “get Washington working for the American people again” by withholding congressional pay if lawmakers fail to pass a budget); an appearance on the Guy Benson Show on Fox News Radio where he delivered “his take on Mayor Pete Buttigieg’s attempts to conceal his liberal positions that ‘don’t sync with most Hoosiers’”; and a sit-down with Breitbart’s Sean Moran to discuss the state of populism in Washington following the 2016 presidential election and like-minded business leaders from outside the establishment in 2018. “Despite President Trump’s election and his own to Congress, Braun said he believes that populism continues to fight against the more entrenched establishment forces in Washington, D.C., including many establishment Republicans. Sen. Braun contended that many members have continued to resist necessary changes in health care, government spending, leaving the Democrats to continue beating the GOP on these and other issues.”
- U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) and U.S. Rep. Raul Ruiz (D-CA) formally introduced H.R. 3502, their bipartisan measure to amend the Public Health Service Act and Title XI of the Social Security Act to protect health care consumers from surprise billing practices. The bill features 40 cosponsors, including U.S. Reps. Jim Baird (R) and Jim Banks (R).
- U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) writes to constituents, “In February, Rep. Maloney from New York introduced H.R. 1327, the Never Forget the Heroes: Permanent Authorization of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund Act. Currently, funding for the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund, which offers compensation for any individual who suffered physical harm or was killed as a result of the September 11 attacks, will expire in December 2020. If signed into law, H.R. 1327 would authorize funding for the 9/11 Victim Compensation Fund through Fiscal Year 2090.” His “Question of the Week: Do you support authorization of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund Act through Fiscal Year 2090 when it comes before the full House for a vote?”

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

- U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) introduces the “Investing in Main Street Act” with U.S. Sens. Tammy Duckworth (D-IL), and Jim Risch (R-ID) a measure aimed at increasing investment in small businesses by permitting banks to invest up to 15% of their capital in Small Business Investment Companies (SBIC). SBICs have invested more than $451 million dollars in 135 Hoosier small businesses over the last 10 years, and Sen. Young lauds the SBIC program as “one of the great successes of the Small Business Administration” . . . Sen. Young continues to tour the state touting his tough stance on tobacco use and vaping by young people, and relates this anecdote to hosts Tim George and Ed Breen on WBAT 1400-AM’s Good Morning Grant County in Marion on June 28: “I had my 12-year-old daughter come home from a recent school function indicating that all the remaining school functions at her school had been canceled for the rest of the year because there had been e-cigarettes passed around at a recent event. Somebody evidently received one from their older brother or sister.”

● U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) continued his years-long record of advocacy on the issue by leading more than 100 members of Congress (including U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky (D)) in a bipartisan letter to U.S. Secretary of Transportation Elaine Chao supporting the installation of secondary cockpit barriers, and urging full implementation of safety requirements authorized last year in the Federal Aviation Administration Reauthorization Act of 2018. “Installing secondary cockpit barriers provides a cost-effective, efficient, and safe solution to an issue that is dear to our hearts: protecting the flight deck,” Rep. Carson said. “It ensures the safety of the flight crew and passengers. With the addition of these barriers, the general public will have peace of mind to know that sensible precautions have been taken to ensure their safety.” While the Federal Aviation Administration has required cockpit doors to be heavily fortified since 2001, there are no barriers in place to protect the flight deck when pilots open the compartment to stretch or use the lavatory, thus leaving the flight deck vulnerable and pilots defenseless to potential attackers looking to seize control of the plane . . . Rep. Carson is an original cosponsor of the “To Offer Refugees College Help (TORCH) Act,” introduced by U.S. Rep. Jared Huffman (D-CA). As explained by the author, the legislation would support “young refugees who have legally immigrated to the United States, fleeing war and persecution in their home countries. would expand affordable access to a college education for refugees, people who have been granted political asylum, and Special Immigrant Visa (SIV) holders who assisted U.S. armed forces from Iraq and Afghanistan, by providing for in-state tuition in the states they have made their homes.” The TORCH Act would make these individuals eligible to pay in-state tuition rates in the first state in which they live after admission to the United States . . . Rep. Carson is also an original cosponsor of a measure introduced by U.S. Reps. Chuy García (D-IL) and Ro Khanna (D-CA), the “Reward Work Act,” a companion to legislation introduced by U.S. Sen. Tammy Baldwin (D-WI). This bill addresses corporate stock buybacks in the post-Tax Cut an Jobs Act era by affording workers a voice in choosing how their companies are run by requiring public companies to directly elect one-third of the company’s board of directors and banning open-market stock buybacks.

● U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) applauded the President’s signing of the bipartisan Taxpayer First Act into law. H.R. 3151, bipartisan legislation to overhaul the Internal Revenue Service, contains legislation she introduced in the 115th Congress, the “IRS Information Technology Accountability Act,” which aims to prevent delays and cost overruns by strengthening accountability measures and codifying the role and responsibilities of the IRS chief information officer. “This is great news for the American people,” Rep. Walorski said. “It overhauls the IRS so taxpayers always come first, and it includes my legislation to bring the IRS’s antiquated IT systems into the 21st century. These commonsense reforms will build on the tax cuts that have led to bigger paychecks, more opportunity, and a simpler tax code for hardworking Americans.”

IN State Circles . . .

● Sometimes we think that we may be spending too much time telling you about litigation, but it seems as though in the past few years the courts in Indiana have increasingly become a vehicle for challenging legislation . . . or used by elected officials and interest groups as a platform of sorts for political statements within the context of lawsuits (in-state or nationally). We also find that there are many cases which might not come to your attention elsewhere, or which might only be covered by trade or otherwise specialized publications or websites that we believe you would want to learn about.

□ So while it may seem that some issues of your favorite newsletter may cover an inordinate amount of court action, we have no control over who files what . . . and whatever your view of judges as “super-legislators,” they only deal with cases and controversies filed in their respective courts, and many of them these days seem to be related to the proverbial “stuff of government.”

● The constitutionality of SEA 516-2019, which legalizes the commercial production of hemp in Indiana – but specifies that a person who possesses, manufactures, finances the manufacture of, delivers, or finances the delivery of smokable hemp commits a Class A Misdemeanor – is being challenged by the Midwest Hemp Council, Inc.; The CBD Store of Fort Wayne, L.L.C.; Indiana CBD Wellness Inc.; C. Y. Wholesale Inc.; Indy E Cigs LLC; 5 Star Medicinal Products, LLP; DREEM Nutrition, Inc.; and El Anar, LLC. In C. Y. Wholesale, Inc., et al., v. Holcomb, No. 1:19-cv-02659, attorneys from Bose McKinney & Evans LLP (Paul Vink, Tyler Moorhead, and Midwest Hemp Council President Justin Swanson) seek declaratory and injunctive relief from the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana.

□ The plaintiffs tell the court “This is a lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of a recent state statute that conflicts with federal law by impermissibly narrowing the federal definition of hemp and criminalizing the manufacture, financing, delivery, or possession of smokable hemp despite federal laws declaring all hemp derivatives to be legal.” They explain that the new law, which became effective July 1, exempts “smokable hemp” (which includes derivatives hemp bud and hemp flower) from the definition of “hemp” under federal law, and renders it a crime to manufacture, finance, deliver, or possess smokable hemp “even though it is a legal hemp derivative under federal law. SEA 516 also criminalizes the transport of smokable hemp despite federal law explicitly stating that states have no power to do so.” The petitioners seek a preliminary injunction, later to be made permanent, enjoining Indiana from enforcing portions of SEA 516 that criminalize the manufacture, financing, delivery, or possession of smokable hemp.

● As the discussion of a world-class intermodal port facility at Buffington Harbor in Gary continues to lose any momentum it may have had when the legislative session opened, the Ports of Indiana issues a Request for Proposals (RFP) for professional consulting services for the partially federally-funded project at the Port of Indiana-Burns Harbor in Portage for a major project. The overall project scope includes: (A) a new bulk transload facility and expansion of the east side rail yard; (B) dock and apron improvements and new west side rail yard; and (C) new truck marshaling yard, at the Port (which, unlike Gary, does not have an adjacent international airport).

● Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana issued a 53-page order in Bernard, M.D., et al., v. Indiv. Members of the Indiana Medical Licensing Bd., et al., No. 1:19-cv-01660-SEB-DML, enjoining HEA 1211 from becoming effective on July 1. Judge Barker grants a preliminary injunction (without bond) sought by an Indiana University School of Medicine Clinical Obstetrics & Gynecology professor affiliated with Indiana University Health University Hospital in an action brought by the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana, which has now been successful in nine of its past 11 lawsuits against assorted anti-abortion legislation enacted by the General Assembly (appellate courts gave the State a partial victory on to different parts of the 2016 anti-abortion law).

□ Judge Barker, a Reagan appointee, opened her ruling by observing that “In recent years, several states have adopted statutes prohibiting an abortion procedure known to medicine as ‘dilation and evacuation’ (‘D&E’) and referred to by its political opponents as ‘dismemberment abortion.’ Among these statutes is Indiana’s House Enrolled Act 1211 (‘HEA 1211’), enacted on April 24, 2019. We begin by noting that every federal court to consider these prohibitions have preliminarily or permanently enjoined them as violations of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Today, we join them,” the senior judge added. “HEA 1211 prohibits physicians from utilizing the most common, safest, often most cost effective, and best understood method of second trimester abortion, requiring instead resort to alternatives that are medically riskier, more costly, less reliable, and in some instances simply unavailable, while accomplishing little more than expressing hostility towards the constitutionally fundamental right of women to control their own reproductive lives” under Roe v. Wade, she explained. No more than one-dozen such procedures were performed in Indiana in 2018, according to Indiana State Department of Health data released without fanfare on June 30.

□ Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) expects to appeal the ruling to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. “I continue to believe that Indiana has a compelling interest in protecting the value and dignity of fetal life by banning a particularly brutal and inhumane procedure,” he says.

□ Rep. Peggy Mayfield (R), who authored the measure, was equivocal in her reaction. “I’m disappointed the judge issued an injunction on a portion of the new law that would stop dismemberment abortions in the second trimester. I support the attorney general’s recent indication that the state will appeal this ruling. There are still portions of the law that do go into effect ... which includes added reporting requirements of abortion complications. This will help provide the ... most comprehensive and medically accurate data on the risks involved in these procedures. This is one more effort to protect the health and safety of Hoosier women and their unborn children” . . . Rep. Christy Stutzman (R), who “co-authored this law defending the dignity of an unborn life and providing more safety for mothers and it received bipartisan support” (three Democrats voted for it in the House; none in the Senate), said after the injunction was granted, “The federal courts’ decision to block a life-saving provision that we passed in the last legislative session is disappointing and very concerning. The brutal practice of dismemberment abortion on a living child in the womb is disturbing and has no place in Indiana Despite this ruling, I will continue to fight for those who cannot protect themselves and I am thankful that our state attorney general has challenged this ruling” . . . House Committee on Public Policy Chair Ben Smaltz (R), also a co-author and chair of the panel that vetted the measure, added on July 1, “Indiana’s unborn could have been better protected starting today. “While I am disappointed in the court’s decision and believe this is an issue of states’ rights, the remainder of the bill is intact and I am hopeful that the attorney general will vigorously appeal this ruling we now have a greater duty to continue to be the voice for those unable to speak for themselves.”

● The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit schedules oral argument Thursday, July 11, in Whole Woman’s Health v. Hill, No. 19-2051, the case in which Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) challenges the ability of an abortion clinic to open in South Bend without a license after Senior Judge Sarah Evans Barker of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana allowed opening under a June preliminary injunction.

● The Indiana State Department of Health releases its Terminated Pregnancy Report 2018, and it discloses that there were 8,037 abortions in Indiana during 2018 compared to 7,778 in 2017, an increase in numbers for a second consecutive year, attributed by Indiana Right to Life to the 2016 ultrasound law “which is now before the U.S. Supreme Court, remain[ing] blocked by an activist judge.” The new ISDH data show that almost two-thirds (65%) of the increase in abortion numbers is due to non-Indiana residents.

□ The report details that “The average age of a woman who obtained a termination was 26.7 years (SD = 6.2) with a median age of 26 years. White women made up the majority of those who sought terminations. Of the women seeking terminations in 2018, 85.34% were unmarried and 36% had a high school diploma or GED. More than half (55.6%) of all terminated pregnancies occurred during weeks 7-8 gestation with most seeking termination during the 7th week of gestation. Surgical terminations were reported more frequently than non-surgical terminations. Almost one-third of women reported at least one previous terminated pregnancy. Marion County had the highest number of terminations,” followed by Lake County. Chemical abortions continue to rise. In 2017 the state recorded 2,805 such abortions (36%), a number which rose to 3,296 in 2018, comprising 41% of all abortions.

□ Indiana Right to Life observes that “from July through December 2016, while the ultrasound law was in effect, there were 3,317 abortions in Indiana. During the same period of July through December 2017, after the ultrasound provision was blocked, abortions spiked to 3,813 in Indiana, a 13 percent increase compared to 2016.”

● A new Indiana University Public Policy Institute report prepared for the Indiana Criminal Justice Institute not only finds “high” rates of fatal crashes involving drugged drivers – but that among drivers killed in fatal collisions (who had reported drug and alcohol test results), a greater percentage (45%) tested positive for one or more drugs than the percentage (38%) who were alcohol-impaired. In 2018, alcohol-impaired drivers were involved in only 1.6% of Indiana property damage crashes and 3.2% of injury crashes, but fully 8.0% of fatal crashes. There were 83 people killed in alcohol-impaired collisions, representing 10% of Indiana traffic fatalities. Approximately one-quarter of passenger car drivers and motorcyclists in Indiana’s 2018 fatal collisions were alcohol-impaired. Rates of alcohol-impaired crashes in Indiana were highest on weekends between midnight and 4:00 a.m., the same time when the rate of traffic deaths and serious injuries were highest. Vehicle drivers (and not passengers) comprised two-thirds of road users killed in alcohol-impaired crashes; some 75% of alcohol-impaired drivers in fatal crashes were male.

● A new call for projects is open in the Community Crossings grant program for shovel-ready local road construction projects, open to all local government units in the State of Indiana. Community Crossings is part of the Next Level Roads program, the State’s 20-year, fully funded plan to enhance highways and local roads. Projects eligible for Community Crossings funding include road resurfacing, bridge rehabilitation, road reconstruction, and Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) compliance in connection with road projects. Material costs for chip-sealing and crack-filling operations are also eligible for funds. Proposals submitted to the Indiana Department of Transportation for funding will be evaluated based on need, traffic volume, local support, the impact on connectivity and mobility within the community, and regional economic significance.

- The beleaguered Indiana Department of Veterans' Affairs recalls a proposed rule that would establish qualifications and criteria to receive grants for veterans' services, a program that was the subject of numerous investigative report by the Indianapolis print and television media.

- Department of Child Services Director Terry Stigdon issues a statement responding to the federal class action lawsuit filed against her agency. From the relevant core of her video statement: "It is easy to cherry-pick our most challenging cases to support a narrative suggesting this is every child's experience, when in reality, the average number of homes a foster child lives in while in DCS care is two. And we will continue to work toward permanency for every child. While I cannot comment on the details of pending litigation, I feel it is important to assure our communities of our commitment to protecting Indiana's most vulnerable children. In that vein, there are some recent changes in our agency that are critical to highlight - and keep in mind this is hardly an all-inclusive list. Our agency has undergone a transformation since I stepped into this position 18 months ago. Put frankly, DCS is simply not the agency it used to be. And continuing to rely on an outdated inflammatory account is misleading and harmful to children and their families."

□ Stigdon adds, "The child welfare system is far from perfect, but Indiana is steadfastly moving in the right direction. As people who work tirelessly every day to protect children, we assure you we understand the frustration that change is not instantaneous. We, too, would like to see things change overnight. The complete turnaround of a 4,600-person agency currently serving more than 22,000 children takes deliberate and persistent effort. Anything less would suggest superficial change - and that's not the promise we made to Hoosier children and their families."

- In Official Opinion No. 2019-4, released last week by the Office of the Attorney General, the AG's Office answers a question presented by the chair of the Indiana State School Bus Committee and the director of transportation for the Indiana Department of Education about liability issues arising from the use of extended school bus arm signal devices.

□ The question presented: To whom does liability attach should the State School Bus Committee approve an extended stop arm or arm signal device for a school bus and a driver of a motor vehicle, in violation of Ind. Code § 9-21-12-1, hits the arm signal device? The brief answer: "Indiana law prohibits the driver of a motor vehicle from passing a school bus in either direction when a school bus arm signal device is in use. A driver of a motor vehicle who passes a school bus when an arm signal device is in use would be liable for any resulting property damage or personal injury."

- The Indiana Department of Insurance will hold a public hearing July 29 on annual privacy notices to customers. The proposed amendments clarify that a licensee of the Department subject to the annual notice requirement is not required to provide annual privacy notices when the licensee has not changed its policies and practices which were disclosed in its most recent notice to consumers.

- On August 13, the Division of Mental Health and Addiction will be hosting a provider meeting at the Indiana Government Center South Conference Center. You can expect the topics covered to include updates on Medicaid and documentation; a review of Indiana's American Society of Addiction Medicine (ASAM) expectations; and availability of tobacco resources.

- New numbers released Monday by the Indiana Department of Transportation reveal that the I-80/I-94 (Borman Expressway) in Indiana carries a prevailing annual average daily traffic (AADT) of 180,000, ranging from 170,000 to 200,000 vehicles per day. Heavy trucks generally comprise 30% of the daily traffic stream, and 20% of peak-hour traffic.

- The Indiana Supreme Court weighs in on some technical issues involving the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission and interpretation of the controversial Transmission Distribution System Improvement Charge (TDSIC) in NIPSCO Industrial Group v. Northern Indiana Public Service Co., et al., No. 18S-EX-475. The 2013 TDSIC statute allows power companies to collect upgrade costs immediately from customers in certain circumstances rather than through the regular lengthy IURC base rate increase procedures.

□ In a 3-2 ruling, the Supremes side with the Commission, reversing an intermediate appellate court opinion in favor of NIPSCO's major industrial users (recall that NIPSCO has a larger industrial base than any other state utility). The majority holds that the Commission's findings are sufficient to support the agency's ruling.

□ "Here," the majority opinion explains, "the process started off well but eventually broke down. The parties to this appeal agreed to two expansive, multi-year settlements regarding rates and infrastructure investments under the TDSIC Statute, and they asked the Commission to approve the agreements, which it did. These agreements specified how, in the utility's periodic petitions to the Commission, rate increases should be calculated and allocated among the utility's various rate classes. Despite being a party to the underlying agreements, a group of some of the utility's largest industrial customers opposed the utility's second periodic petition, arguing that the utility's rate calculation and allocation based on the underlying agreements was contrary to the TDSIC Statute. The Commission rejected this argument, and the customer group sought judicial review. This case, at its core, involves a party to and proponent of two complex administrative settlement agreements raising a challenge to specific parts of those settlements in a later proceeding. Concluding that the customer group is estopped from raising this delayed challenge and further concluding that the Commission's order contains sufficient findings, we affirm the Commission."

□ As framed by the Court, "The primary issue in this appeal is whether the Commission improperly approved of the use of customer class revenue allocation factors based on total load rather than firm load as required by the TDSIC Statute. See I.C. § 8-1-39-9(a)(1) (requiring that Section 9 petitions 'use the customer class revenue allocation factor based on firm load approved in the public utility's most recent retail base rate case order'). The Industrial Group also presents us with a secondary argument challenging whether the Commission's TDSIC-2 order contained specific findings supporting its ultimate conclusion in approving the TDSIC-2 petition."

□ Justice Geoffrey Slaughter dissents, joined by Justice Steven David. Justice Slaughter explains, "this case concerns an issue of law the court of appeals decided correctly, and not a matter of regulatory discretion warranting agency deference. On the merits, I agree with the court of appeals that the utility regulatory commission exceeded its statutory authority by approving a rate adjustment based on allocation factors computed on total load rather than firm load. I would either deny transfer or summarily affirm the court of appeals' opinion."

● Just as a new study by WalletHub ranks Indiana sixth on a list of most energy-expensive states in the nation, Duke Energy files a request to increase rates with the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission. The proposed new rates – an overall average increase of $\approx 15\%$ averaged across all customer classes – will be directed toward a range of upgrades, improvements, and innovations. If approved, the increase will be added to bills in two steps, $\approx 13\%$ in 2020, and the remaining two percent in 2021. If approved by the Commission (action is anticipated by Summer 2020), Duke's average residential customer using 1,000 kilowatt-hours per month can expect a monthly bill increase of approximately \$23, about \$275 annually. Duke's residential customers would bear the brunt of increase according to the rate hike request:

Customer Class	Average Rate Increase
Residential	19.0%
Commercial	16.7%
Industrial Low Load Factor	16.3%
Industrial High Load Factor	11.3%

□ Duke cites as key drivers of the increase request the addition of almost 100,000 users to its 840,000 customer base since the last full-scale rate review; the expense of transitioning to cleaner energy and advancing the retirement dates for some of its coal-fired power units; investments in tree-trimming and vegetation management and replacing some wooden poles to as well as adding line sensors to increase reliability and reduce power outages; costs of managing coal ash and closing coal ash basins (even as the Trump Administration revealed last week that it will not impose an Obama era proposed rule to protect against coal ash spill costs); and continued installation of smart meters.

● In the last issue of our Hannah sister newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, we tipped that draft sports wagering regulations were likely to be released last week by the Indiana Gaming Commission. Sure enough, the Gameboys posted a 26-page draft set of regulations for retail sports wagering (mobile wagering will likely have to take a back seat to allow in-person bricks-and-mortar sports betting operations to open by the September 1 target date) for informal stakeholder review and input on Tuesday, fewer than eight weeks after the organic legislation was signed by the Governor. Public comment on the proposed framework is open until August 1.

□ Two big discretionary decisions: The Commission draft does not require use of official league or sanctioning body data to settle any type of wager ... and there seems to be a need for operators to work with an "independent integrity monitoring provider."

IN the Economy

● The May unemployment rate in Indiana remained unchanged from April at 3.6%, stagnant for the third month in a row after March's one-tenth of a percentage point increase from February's 3.5% - marking the only change in the unemployment rate since May 2018. The Indiana unemployment rate has not improved for 17 months, since November to December 2017 - the longest stretch of no improvement we have endured on record. May sees a marginally higher unemployment rate than the 3.5% unemployment rate one year earlier (up by 0.1 percentage point).

□ By contrast, the national unemployment rate has seen a decrease by two-tenths of a percentage point since May 2018, and has now been tied with Indiana since April 2019 at 3.6 percent. Before April, with the exception of one month (October 2014, at a hefty 5.7%), Indiana's rate had held below the national rate for a remarkable 66 months.

□ Indiana is tied for 25th nationally among all the states And Washington, D.C. in lowest unemployment rates – down from 23rd in April – and down five places from our 2019 best ranking, posted in January (when we were tied for the 20th lowest rate). There were 25 states (including Washington D.C.) with higher May unemployment rates than Indiana. There were 24 states with a lower unemployment rate than the national rate in May; Indiana and three other states tied the 3.6% U.S. unemployment rate (which also remained steady from April).

Monthly Unemployment Rates, Indiana vs. Neighbors

	05/19	05/18	04/19	03/19	02/19	01/19	Monthly	Annual
Indiana	3.6%	3.5%	3.6%	3.6%	3.5%	3.5%	0.0%	0.1%
Illinois	4.4%	4.3%	4.4%	4.4%	4.3%	4.3%	0.0%	0.1%
Kentucky	4.0%	4.4%	4.0%	4.0%	4.1%	4.2%	0.0%	(- 0.4%)
Michigan	4.1%	4.2%	4.1%	4.0%	4.0%	4.0%	0.0%	(- 0.1%)
Ohio	4.2%	4.6%	4.3%	4.4%	4.6%	4.7%	(- 0.1%)	(- 0.4%)
National	3.6%	3.8%	3.6%	3.8%	3.8%	4.0%	0.0%	(- 0.2%)

□ None of our surrounding states sustained increases in the unemployment rate from April to May. Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, and Michigan saw rates stay unchanged, while Ohio enjoyed a decrease for the fourth straight month. Indiana remains at the top of the pack for lowest unemployment rates compared to our neighbors for a 33rd consecutive month.

□ Indiana has now experienced over-the-year growth in the unemployment rate for a seventh consecutive month, up by 0.1 percentage points from May 2018 benchmarked data. Indiana is joined only by Illinois in experiencing an increase from prior-year rates, while Kentucky, Michigan, and Ohio all enjoyed over-the-year decreases for the month of May. The Indiana unemployment rate is, however, still 7.0 percentage points lower than the 10.6% rate in July 2009, the high point of unemployment experienced in the state during the national financial crisis.

□ While our neighboring states have seen their respective unemployment rates decline (with the exception of Illinois remaining stagnant) since the beginning of 2018, Indiana has seen a growth of 0.3 percentage points. Since the new administrations respectively took office in Indiana and nationally, our unemployment rate is down by 0.2 percentage points, which continues to be a less impressive decrease than that which any of our neighbors recorded ... and while we can no longer claim that our rate is at the lowest it had been since 3.1% in December 2000, it does remain lower than that of any of our neighbors for a period quickly approaching three full years. The gap between Indiana's May unemployment rate and that of our closest neighbor-state remains at 0.4 percentage points for the third consecutive month.

Rate of Change in Unemployment Rate

	05/19	01/18	01/17	vs. 01/18	vs. 01/17
Indiana	3.6%	3.3%	3.9%	0.3%	(- 0.3%)
Illinois	4.4%	4.4%	5.2%	0.0%	(- 0.8%)
Kentucky	4.0%	4.3%	5.2%	(- 0.3%)	(- 1.2%)
Michigan	4.1%	4.5%	5.0%	(- 0.4%)	(- 1.1%)
Ohio	4.2%	4.5%	5.2%	(- 0.3%)	(- 1.0%)
National	3.6%	4.1%	4.8%	(- 0.5%)	(- 1.2%)

□ The number of May unemployment claims (14,296) fell by 20% from April claims (17,914), sliding down to the lowest level to date in 2019, likely because of the impact of seasonal hiring. Unemployment claims have decreased by 40% since they hit a high this year in February (23,992).

□ Indiana's total labor force – the number of people who have a job or are actively looking for one – fell for the first time in 14 months, experiencing a net decrease of 10,677 individuals. The Department of Workforce Development attributes the loss to a decrease of 2,312 unemployed residents and 8,365 additional employed residents in the state.

□ Indiana's seasonally adjusted total labor force now stands at 3,404,900, down from the record high of 3,415,523 set in April – and the first decline we have seen in more than two years (27 months) . . . potentially a sign of concern about the direction of the economy. This follows Indiana's overall April-to-May decrease in the total labor force. An estimated 98,798 Hoosiers are currently unemployed and seeking employment, down by 5,155 from 103,958 in April (and a decrease of 9,797 from a benchmarked 108,595 in May 2018).

□ The state's 65.0% labor force participation rate decreased slightly from April's 65.08%, but remains above the national rate of 62.8% (which was unchanged). Indiana's labor force participation rate has now outperformed the national average for five full years – 60 consecutive months.

□ After nine successive months of expansion from June 2018 to March 2019, private sector employment in the Hoosier state finally declined in April and continued downward in May. Total private employment saw an over-the-month decrease of 1,200 – a second straight month of decline; however, private sector employment has increased by 32,900 over the year. The over-the-month decrease brings total private employment down to 2,742,100, which is still 10,000 above the December 2018 peak. The Department of Workforce Development attributes the monthly decrease principally to losses in the Leisure and Hospitality (- 1,000, while Kentucky's leisure and hospitality sector added 1,800 positions from April to May) and Financial Activities (- 900) sectors, but cites gains in the Manufacturing (900) and Private Educational and Health Care Services (900) sectors as offsetting factors. There were 3,269,725 Hoosiers employed overall during May, down from 3,303,027 in April and 3,295,784 in benchmarked May 2018 numbers.

□ Vermillion County led the state in May unemployment rates, at 4.5% unemployment, down from 5.1% in April, and down by 2.5 percentage points from its 2019 high of 7.0% in February. Lake County rises back up to the second highest unemployment rate in the state at 4.1%, with Howard and Miami Counties' falling back from their respective top two spots in April, down to 16th and 19th respectively for May (Howard County continues its trend of leading the state in a given month and then falling well back on the ladder in the next month). Fayette and Sullivan counties take the third and fourth place spots for May with 3.9% and 3.8% unemployment respectively. In January, 50 counties were above the 4.0% threshold. Rates for the highest unemployed counties dipped drastically from April to May, with only two counties above 4.0%, compared to nine counties in April (of which, four were over 4.5% and three were over 5.0%).

□ Fifty-five Hoosier counties enjoyed an unemployment rate below 3.0% for May, up by five from April. Dubois County takes the honors for lowest unemployment at 2.1%, with Gibson and Bartholomew counties tied for second best at 2.2%, after Bartholomew gained one-tenth of a percentage point from April. Recall that no counties were below 3.0% unemployment in January, with only two hitting 3.0 exactly. Besides the April 2019 showing, the last time a majority of counties (52.17%, or 48 counties) were below 3.0% was one year earlier, in April 2018.

● In accordance with HEA 1001-2019, marketplace facilitators must register and collect Indiana sales, county innkeeper's and food and beverage taxes (if applicable) effective July 1, 2019.

□ Marketplace facilitators are businesses or people who: (1) own, operate, or otherwise control a "marketplace;" and (2) facilitate a retail transaction. Marketplaces can be either physical or electronic. The seller's products may include tangible personal property, specified digital products, rooms, lodgings, or accommodations, or enumerated services. A "marketplace" means a business that is: (1) Listing, making available, or advertising products; (2) Transmitting or otherwise communicating an offer or acceptance of a retail transaction of products between a seller and a purchaser; (3) Providing or offering fulfillment or storage services for a seller; (4) Setting prices for the seller's products; (5) Providing or offering customer service to a seller or a seller's customers, or accepting or assisting with collecting and taking orders, returns, or exchanges of products sold by a seller; or (6) Branding sales as those of the marketplace facilitator.

□ Marketplaces facilitate transactions when they do any of the following on behalf of a seller: (1) Collect the sales price or purchase price of the seller's products; (2) Provide access to payment processing services, either directly or indirectly; or (3) Charging, collecting, or otherwise receiving fees or other consideration for transactions made on its electronic marketplaces.

● A state government sector profile released by Moody's Investors Service at mid-year finds that 30 out of the 50 states reduced their net tax-supported debt (NTSD) in the past year. Indiana ranked as the 14th-lowest state for net tax-supported debt at $1,804,332,000, while ranking 21st for lowest gross tax-supported debt at $4,216,187,000 (net to gross ratio of 2.34). The mean NTSD was $10,461,320,000 (net to gross ratio of 2.05), while the median was $4,146,966,000 (ratio of 1.30). Median NTSD as a share of personal income fell to 2.2%, a 16-year low. Indiana has the sixth lowest debt per capita, with NTSD as a percentage of 2017 personal income at 0.6 percent. Continued decline of this ratio is thought to indicate expanded economic capacity to service long-term obligations, □ State median debt service ratios – the revenue flow available to pay current debt obligations – has increased slightly from 2017, up one-tenth of a percentage point in 2018, now sitting at 4.1 percent. This ratio peaked in 2014 at 4.4%, with the average debt service ratio for states at 4.3% in 2018. The range of debt service ratios for states expands from 0.1% (Wyoming) to 13.5% (Connecticut). Indiana has the fifth-lowest debt service ratio among the 50 states, sitting at 1.1% in FY 2018 – down one-tenth of a percentage point from FY 2017 and FY 2016. Moody's analysts observe that continued low debt service ratios over time can free up resources to address pension liabilities, which are generally much larger than net tax-supported debt.

- Compound annual per capita income growth in Indiana has increased at a faster pace during the first nine quarters of the Trump Administration (3.3%) than in the last term of the Obama Administration (2.6%).
- The Indiana Field Office for the U.S. Department of Agriculture National Agricultural Statistics Service estimates Indiana's total hog and pig inventory on June 1 at 4.25 million head, up 300,000 head from one year ago.
- A U.S. Department of Agriculture projection suggests that 91.7 million acres of corn have been planted this year, higher than the 89.1 million acres planted at the same point in 2018. Indiana is estimated to have actually planted more corn this year than last year according to the report, despite the incessant rains and flooding. The outsized estimates roiled the commodity futures markets, and USDA says it will take another stab at the corn acreage forecast in several states, - including Indiana - which seemed to defy credulity.
- Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch (R), in collaboration with the Indiana State Department of Agriculture, Indiana Office of Tourism Development and Indiana Economic Development Corporation, follows up a trade mission to Canada by leading a delegation of Indiana agriculture and tourism leaders to Mexico to develop economic partnerships, strengthen agricultural ties, and showcase Indiana as a tourism destination. The delegation was scheduled to depart Indiana on Sunday, July 7, and return on Thursday, July 11.
- Agricultural producer sentiment rebounded in June as farmers' expressed a more optimistic outlook toward the future of the ag economy, according to the Purdue University/CME Group Ag Economy Barometer, based on a mid-month survey of 400 agricultural producers across the nation. The increased Purdue index rose to a reading of 126 in June, up 25 points from a record plunge from April to May. Regardless, the past three months have produced the lowest combined index levels since July -September 2018.

□ Both of the barometer's sub-indices, the Index of Current Conditions and the Index of Future Expectations, improved in June compared to the prior month. The largest increase was in the Future Expectations Index, which rose 33 points compared to a 13-point improvement in the Current Conditions Index.

□ The rise in the Index of Future Expectations effectively wiped out the two-month decline in future expectations during April and May, pushing the index back up to the level observed in March. This, however, stands in contrast to agricultural producers' sentiment regarding current economic conditions which, although improved from May, remained well below that of earlier this Spring. The June reading of the Index of Current Conditions stood at 97, which was still 23 points lower (- 20%) than in March.

● The State's contract economic consulting firm, IHS Markit, told members of the State Budget Committee as part of the revenue collection forecast in April to keep an eye on new car sales and general manufacturing statistics as the canary in the Hoosier coal mine that could indicate an economic downturn.

□ IHS Markit's principal automotive analyst reviewed June's new car sales and found a "modestly declining market," and according to the seasonally adjusted IHS Markit final U.S. Manufacturing Purchasing Managers' Index, "June data signaled a further near-stagnation of operating conditions across the U.S. manufacturing sector. The rate of overall growth held close to May's near-decade low."

● TASUS, a supplier of plastic molded components, decals and nameplates, and distributed products to the global automotive market, announces that it plans to renovate its 30-year-old manufacturing plant and North American headquarters in Bloomington. TASUS, a subsidiary of the Japan-based Tsuchiya Group, explains that "with the investment and focus on this renovation, we find it necessary to delay our plans to build our Design and Development Center and Headquarters in the Trades District. And while we still hope for this in the future, it did not seem the right decision to hold onto valuable land that might benefit another employer and creator of jobs in the Trades District, and thereby benefiting our City" - which does not sound like the company plans to follow through on the build-out of the $9.2 million project at the former Showers Furniture Company complex that was scheduled to commence more than one year ago. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offered TASUS Corporation up to $300,000 in conditional tax credits and up to $43,750 in training grants back in 2016, when the project, which was expected make TASUS the first private investor in the city's downtown technology park and create almost 20 new jobs, was announced, and the City of Bloomington sold almost an acre in the complex to TASUS for $1. TASUS top exec Melanie Walker, who announced the decision to reverse course, was appointed to the IEDC Board of Directors and the Indiana University Board of Trustees during the Pence Administration (she was just reappointed to the IU board at the end of June).

● Universal Dedicated of Fort Wayne, a full-service provider of customized transportation and logistics solutions and a wholly owned subsidiary of Universal Logistics, plans to invest $25 million to expand its Indiana footprint, building out approximately 10 acres in Roanoke to serve as a holding yard and house transportation assets and dispatch operations offices. Universal Dedicated expects to create up to 130 new jobs in Allen County by the end of 2020. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offers Universal Dedicated up to $1.35 million in performance-based tax credits. Northeast Indiana Works will provide hiring and training assistance. The Allen County Board of Commissioners offers other support.

IN Transition

● Dr. Katie Jenner will succeed Dr. Lee Ann Kwiatkowski as the Governor's senior education advisor Dr. Kwiatkowski leaves state service to become the director of public education and CEO of Muncie Community Schools. The Governor also recommends State Board of Education Chief of Staff Brian Murphy replace Dr. K as SBOE's executive director.

□ Dr. Jenner began her career in K-12 public education in 2005 as a career and technical education teacher in Kentucky. From 2009 to 2018, she worked for Madison Consolidated Schools as an assistant principal and assistant superintendent. Since then, she has served as vice president of K-12 initiatives and statewide partnerships for Ivy Tech Community College, leading statewide college strategies toward partnerships between K-12, Career Centers, and Ivy Tech. Dr. Jenner also serves on the Next Level Teacher Compensation Commission.

CENSUS COULD MEAN $18B FOR INDIANA: Nearly $18 billion is on the line for Indiana — roughly $2,710 per person. That's how much in annual federal funding the state receives based on population data from the U.S. Census Bureau (Columbus Republic). And those population numbers are about to change. The Census is preparing to launch its 2020 count, and the data collected will determine how much the state could receive for the next 10 years. The fewer people counted, the less money allocated to Indiana's 6.7 million residents. The dollars fund giant programs like Medicaid, food stamps, federal student loans and highway projects, but also things like low-income housing, school lunches, foster care and adoption support, and unemployment insurance administration. The census affects political redistricting, congressional apportionment and even where businesses might decide to locate. That's why — even though the first census mailings are still months from landing in mailboxes — some local and state leaders have been busy helping the Census Bureau update addresses and brainstorming ways to encourage participation. "The challenge is, if we don't get everybody counted in Indiana, that's never good for us," said Carol Rogers, deputy director of the Indiana Business Research Center and the governor's liaison to the census. "Let's get our fair share back from Washington. Let's make sure we get our fair share of congressional seats."

TRUMP JOB APPROVAL AT ITS HIGH IN ABC/WAPO POLL: Bolstered by a strong economy, Donald Trump reached the highest job approval rating of his career in the latest ABC News/Washington Post poll and runs competitively for re-election against four of five possible Democratic contenders. Yet he remains broadly unpopular across personal and professional measures, marking his vulnerabilities in the 2020 election. Forty-four percent of Americans approve of Trump's overall job performance, up a slight 5 percentage points from April and 2 points better than his peak early in his presidency. Among registered voters, his approval is 47%. Still, 53% disapprove, keeping him at majority disapproval continuously for his first two and a half years in office, a record for any president in modern polling.

BIDEN LEADS TRUMP BY 10%: Even while it's up, President Trump's historically low approval rating makes him vulnerable in the 2020 elections — but hardly a pushover, according to the ABC/Washington Post Poll. Among all adults (there's plenty of time to register to vote), Joe Biden leads Trump by 14 points. But that narrows among the other four Democrats tested against Trump in this poll — an 8-point lead for Kamala Harris, a slight 7 points for Elizabeth Warren, 6 for Bernie Sanders and 4 for Pete Buttigieg. The latter two don't reach statistical significance. Among registered voters, moreover, Biden still leads, by 10 points, but the other races all tighten to virtual or actual dead heats — Trump a non-significant -2 points against Harris, -1 against Sanders and exactly tied with Warren and Buttigieg.

BUTTIGIEG RAMPS UP HIS STAFF: Before the first Democratic presidential debates kicked off last week, close to 100 Pete Buttigieg supporters and donors sheltered from the Miami heat in a Hilton hotel conference room, where Buttigieg's senior staff briefed them on the campaign's transformation from shoe-string operation to $25 million enterprise (Politico). The officials didn't reveal Buttigieg's field-leading second-quarter fundraising total then, but what they did discuss is more important in the long run: how Buttigieg plans to spend the money. For months, the South Bend, Ind., mayor has run one of the more frugal 2020 campaigns, eschewing on-the-ground organizers in early caucus and primary states and instead focusing on fundraising, media appearances and the candidate's travel. But Buttigieg is now rapidly expanding his campaign's footprint to try and build on his gains in the first half of the year. In Iowa, Buttigieg's campaign added 30 organizers at the end of June, filling out what had previously been a four-person skeleton crew. A dozen staffers are now on board in New Hampshire. And by the end of the summer, there will be many more: The campaign plans to swell its staff to 300 people by Labor Day, according to multiple people briefed on its plans. "The whole point of all that fundraising is making sure we have the organization we need to win," Buttigieg continued. "Obviously, we've got great news on that front. Now we've got to get to work."

BUTTIGIEG'S BLACK SUPPORT FELL IN 2015 REELECT: As Mayor Pete Buttigieg contends with the fallout from the shooting of a black man by a white police officer in his city, a POLITICO analysis of data from his earlier mayoral elections shows he struggled to win the confidence of the city's black voters following a series of controversies in his first term (Politico). Detailed precinct results from South Bend's 2011 and 2015 mayoral races show Buttigieg repeatedly lagging behind black primary challengers in many of western South Bend's predominantly black neighborhoods. And while Buttigieg still managed to win those precincts in two general elections against white Republican opponents, his support in these areas fell after his first term. In the 2011 general election, Buttigieg had some of his highest margins of victory in these neighborhoods — a typical result for a Democrat facing a Republican opponent in South Bend. But by 2015, western South Bend gave him his weakest results after his support plunged by more than 20 points in some precincts.

QUESTIONS RAISED ABOUT SGT. O'NEILL'S FUNDRAISING: An online Fraternal Order of Police fundraiser has now collected more than $75,000 for South Bend police Sgt. Ryan O'Neill — ostensibly to help defend the officer in court after his fatal shooting of Eric Logan last month (Sheckler, South Bend Tribune). But whether O'Neill will be on the hook for any out-of-pocket legal fees is in dispute, with some lawyers arguing the city will almost certainly pay for his defense. The questions about the purpose of the fundraiser come after three tense weeks in which the reaction to Logan's shooting has created a racially and politically charged atmosphere. Mayor Pete Buttigieg, running for the Democratic presidential nomination, has faced criticism over the police department's relationship with minorities, as well as accusations by the FOP that he is demonizing the police to score political points. During an interview with Fox News' Tucker Carlson, local FOP president Harvey Mills slammed Buttigieg and accused the online fundraising site GoFundMe of being anti-police, after the company removed the union's account for an apparent violation of the site's policies. A GoFundMe spokesman has said the company prohibits fundraisers for legal defense in cases that involve a person's death. The FOP moved its page to the site Fundly, where the fundraiser for O'Neill had collected $77,085 as of Saturday afternoon. "He may be responsible for hundreds of thousands of dollars in fees and costs," the police union said in a news release announcing the fundraiser, adding that O'Neill and his family "don't have the means to cover such fees and costs."

23% OF AMERICANS WON'T RETIRE: Nearly one-quarter of Americans say they never plan to retire, according to a poll that suggests a disconnection between individuals' retirement plans and the realities of aging in the workforce (AP). Experts say illness, injury, layoffs and caregiving responsibilities often force older workers to leave their jobs sooner than they'd like. According to the poll from The Associated Press-NORC Center for Public Affairs Research, 23% of workers, including nearly 2 in 10 of those over 50, don't expect to stop working. Roughly another quarter of Americans say they will continue working beyond their 65th birthday. According to government data, about 1 in 5 people 65 and older was working or actively looking for a job in June. For many, money has a lot to do with the decision to keep working. "The average retirement age that we see in the data has gone up a little bit, but it hasn't gone up that much," says Anqi Chen, assistant director of savings research at the Center for Retirement Research at Boston College. "So people have to live in retirement much longer, and they may not have enough assets to support themselves in retirement."

EVA KOR DIES IN POLAND: Independence Day has brought us another historical irony with the passing of Eva Mozes Kor at age 85 in Poland. She died not far from the Auschwitz concentration camp that dramatically altered the life of her and her family. But she rose from the most searing atrocity in the history of mankind and defined her life with forgiveness, humility and education (Howey Politics Indiana). She had been tweeting on her last trip to Poland on July 3, saying, "Can you believe that today I can get chicken McNuggets near Auschwitz? That would have been wonderful 75 years ago. They taste the same in every country and were delicious." She had big plans for the future as she prepared to observe the 75th anniversary of her liberation, tweeting on June 22, "If any of you want to go with me, you have a great opportunity in January 27 2020 - 75 years to the liberation of the camp. We will see you next year!" Gov. Eric Holcomb, who honored Kor with the Sachem Award in 2017, said, "The world just lost a giant with Eva Kor's passing. Janet and I loved and adored her. Everywhere she went, Eva brought light into darkness and provided comfort to those in pain unlike anyone we've ever met. From her against all odds survival as a young girl in Auschwitz to her peace spreading message based from home in Terre Haute, Indiana, her relentless and optimistic example inspired the world. Holcomb added, "Her angelic spirit will live on in the countless souls she saved from ongoing confusion and torment. Janet and I are reminded just how blessed we are to have her as a friend. We will miss her laughter, her wisdom and her passion. We call on every Hoosier to look above on this Independence Day and say a prayer for Eva and the family and nation she leaves behind."

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: That Eva Mozes Kor would die so close to her birth home and the Auschwitz camp that changed her life but would not define it was another historic irony. Her Candles Center observed, "Rather than allowing the darkest moments of her life to define her, she moved forward headfirst into a life of purpose." Rest In Peace, Eva. - Brian A. Howey

JENSEN ANNOUNCES NOBLESVILLE TRANSITION COMMITTEE: Noblesville Republican mayoral nominee Chris Jensen announced the organizing committee for the transition of Noblesville city government (Howey Politics Indiana). Chaired by former Hamilton County Superior Court Judge Steve Nation, the committee will gather community input to help ensure a successful and prosperous next chapter for Noblesville. "I'm ready to work with this group of Noblesville leaders who are willing to give their time and expertise to our city. My door is open to anyone who has positive ideas to make our city a better place to live, work, and play," Chris Jensen said. "This is a strong first step in a process to ensure a transparent and effective city government for every Noblesville resident."

PELOSI TO KEYNOTE YOUNG DEMS IN INDY: The Young Democrats of America (YDA) and Indiana Young Democrats (IYD) announced Sunday that Speaker of the United States House of Representatives Nancy Pelosi will headline the 2019 Young Democrats of America Convention here in Indianapolis (WIBC). Speaker Pelosi is the 52nd Speaker of the House of Representatives and was first elected Speaker of the House in 2007, making history as the first woman to serve with the title. Pelosi is now in her third term as Speaker. She is set to join the National Convention on Friday, July 19th for the General Session at 7pm. This will be the first time Indy hosts the National Convention and the first time the YDA has come to Indiana in over 25 years. "After a period of record growth, IYD has worked for nearly two years to bring the largest gathering of young Democrats in the country to Indiana and we are incredibly honored to have a groundbreaking leader like Speaker Pelosi join us," says Katherin Chi, member of the YDA National Planning Committee and Vice-President of the Marion County Young Democrats.

COLUMBUS CANDIDATE TO ADDRESS YOUNG DEMS: One of Columbus' own young professionals will address a room full of young Democrats later this month (Columbus Republic). Grace Kestler, 29, was named a panelist at the Young Democrats of America National Convention in Indianapolis July 17 through 20. The Columbus City Council at-large candidate will speak about Run for Something's "How Indiana Changed What a 2019 Candidate Looks Like" discussion panel. "I realized as a young person that I have a lot of years left to enjoy my community," Kestler said. "I want to be a part of shaping my generation's future and supporting those who have lived in Columbus as well as considering how we can attract new people to live in our city."

4TH ANDERSON MAYORAL CANDIDATE EMERGES: A fourth candidate has entered the race to be elected the next mayor of Anderson, but Thomas Dubrick is not associated with a political party (de la Bastide, Anderson Herald-Bulletin). Dubrick filed the necessary paperwork with the Madison County Clerk's Office on Monday to run as a write-in candidate in the Nov. 5 general election. Dubrick's name will not appear on the municipal ballot.

Presidential 2020

BUTTIGIEG HAS THE MONEY. CAN HE WIN? Pete Buttigieg stunned the Democratic presidential field with a nearly $25 million second-quarter fundraising haul. Now he needs to figure out how to use that money to build a campaign that can go the distance against nearly two dozen rivals—many of them better known—and ensure that enthusiasm from donors is matched by support from voters (AP). That poses big challenges for the 37-year-old mayor of South Bend, Indiana, who lags several of his top opponents in the number of staff on the ground in early states. He also has significant work to do to earn support of African American voters, a crucial constituency in the Democratic presidential primary. Buttigieg said much of his emphasis will be on retail politics—more days like Thursday, when he blitzed across Iowa for a parade and picnics and one-on-one interactions with voters. The campaign also says it plans in coming months to add 100 people to a staff that started with six employees and now has about 200, as well as enlist a larger number of volunteers. "The whole point of all that fundraising was to make sure that we have the organization we need to win," Buttigieg told reporters after a town hall meeting in a sweltering Sioux City, Iowa high school gymnasium. "Obviously we got great news on that front, now we've got to put it to work."

BUTTIEIG ADDRESSES ESSENCE FEST: Black women have been "at the tip of the spear experiencing" the consequences of systemic racism in America, according to Mayor Pete Buttigieg, one of several Democratic candidates to address the crowds on the Power Stage during the 25th anniversary of Essence Festival. "I stand here aware that Black women are not just the backbone of the Democratic party, but the bone and sinew that is making our democracy whole," Buttigieg said. "We have seen time and time again, especially in the last couple elections, that when Black women mobilize, outcomes change, and we need some new outcomes in a time like this." Rising incarceration rates amongst Black women, gerrymandering and disenfranchisement, the wage gap, White Nationalism and the American healthcare system all work to maintain institutional racism, Buttigieg said in his opening remarks. "There's been too much talk about Black problems, and not nearly enough about Black solutions," Buttigieg said. "Empowerment leads to greater empowerment."

BIDEN ADDRESSES RACE: On Tuesday, Joe Biden told his advisers he wanted to give a speech in South Carolina to address, and preempt, the mounting attacks on his record concerning race and civil rights. Sources close to Biden told Axios he was still rewriting the draft on Saturday in the car en route to Sumter, South Carolina, where he gave the speech to a mostly black audience. "Given the coverage we got coming out of the debate ... we could die by death by a thousand cuts here," said a source familiar with the thinking in Biden's camp. "So it was either you wrap it all up in a bow and you say, 'Look, this is who I am. Barack Obama picked me, so if it was good enough for Barack Obama it's good enough for me' ... or we could have fought each one of these battles individually."

HICKENLOOPER VOWS TO STAY IN RACE: Former Colorado Governor John Hickenlooper returned to Iowa Sunday night pledging to continue his presidential campaign after a major shakeup of his campaign staff last week. Hickenlooper, who has had trouble polling above 1 percent, acknowledged his struggles as a candidate and explained why he is continuing his bid for the Democratic nomination when there is a Senate race in his home state that pundits say he would have a good shot at winning (Politico). "I don't think that's my calling," Hickenlooper told reporters about running for the Senate after a "meet and greet" event in Perry. Hickenlooper admitted he has discussed it with his staffers, saying they have told him he would be a "lock" to defeat Republican Sen. Cory Gardner.

STEYER TO ENTER DEMOCRATIC RACE: Tom Steyer, the billionaire environmental activist who toyed with a 2020 presidential run before deciding against it, has told people he plans to announce that he's entering the race for the Democratic nomination, according to three people familiar with his plans (Politico). Steyer held a private conference call last week to announce to people who work for Need to Impeach, NextGen America and Steyer's Sacramento office that he was planning to run, according to one of the people.

Sunday Talk

AMASH WON'T RULE OUT PRESIDENTIAL RUN: Rep. Justin Amash (Mich.) doubled down on both his support for impeaching President Trump and his decision to leave the Republican party on CNN's "State of the Union" Sunday. Amash, who had previously been the only Republican member of Congress to support impeachment proceedings, told CNN's Jake Tapper Sunday that senior officials have privately thanked him for his public stance. "When I was discussing impeachment, I had fellow colleagues and other Republicans, high-level officials, contacting me, saying, 'Thank you for what you're doing,'" Amash said. "So there are lots of Republicans out there who are saying these things privately, but they're not saying it publicly, and I think that's a problem for our country." Amash also declined again to rule out a third-party presidential run. "I still wouldn't rule anything like that out. I believe I have to use my skills, my public influence, where it serves the country best. And I believe I have to defend the Constitution in whichever way works best," he said.

AMASH SAYS GOP WAS BROKEN BEFORE TRUMP: Rep. Justin Amash, just days after he announced his departure from the Republican Party, said Sunday he would have left even if Donald Trump weren't the president but insisted that this term in Congress was what "really broke it for me." "Over the years, I've seen that people are just falling in line behind the leaders, including people in my own caucus, which I left," the five-term Michigan lawmaker told host Jake Tapper on CNN's "State of the Union." "So it has gotten worse and worse and I think this was the term that really broke it for me." Amash said he has been bothered by the way Trump expects Republicans to be first and foremost loyal to him, not the party itself. "I think he's really identified what I talked about in my op-ed, which is, he thinks that people owe loyalty to him," Amash said. "But people are elected to Congress with an oath to support and defend the Constitution, not an oath to support and defend one person, the president, who happens to be from your own party."

KLOBACHAR WON'T MAKE PROMISES JUST TO GET ELECTED: Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) defended her policy proposals, which some progressives have criticized for being too centrist when compared to many of her fellow 2020 Democratic presidential candidates. "I look people in the eye and I tell them the truth, that I'm honest about how we think we can move forward," Klobuchar said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press." "I think there's a lot of people making promises and I'm not going to make promises just to get elected. I am not running for chair of the Democratic National Convention, I am running for president of the United States and that means you bring people together and find that common ground in our own party," she said.

MERKLEY, HURD WARN ABOUT BORDER CONDITIONS: The congressional stalemate about how to handle the influx of migrants along the southern border, amid a spate of new reports detailing the harrowing conditions there, was on full display on "Meet the Press" this morning. Sen. Jeff Merkley, D-Ore., decried the conditions as "horrific," and Rep. Will Hurd, R-Texas, warned that America needs to handle people "with care and humanity when they are in our custody." But there's far from a consensus on the root cause, which makes it even more difficult to fix it. Merkley claimed there's an ethical problem within the Trump administration, accusing officials of abiding by a "philosophy that says, 'Let's discourage immigration by mistreating refugees.'"

DELANEY SAYS MEDICARE BEING 'HIJACKED': Former Rep. John Delaney (D-Md.) on Sunday blasted his fellow Democratic presidential candidates' support of Medicare for All proposals, saying the voters "will reject" them. "This is [Sen.] Bernie Sanders's [I-Vt.] plan, it will take private insurance away from half the people in this country," Delaney said on CBS's "Face the Nation," adding that Democrats who support such proposals have "outsourced" health care policy to the Vermont senator. "They've hijacked the good name of Medicare and applied it to a law that will cause upheaval in our health care system," he added. "Now we're seeing the debate change on this issue as people start to realize."

COONS SAYS BIDEN SHOULD BE JUDGED ON CAREER: Sen. Chris Coons (D-Del.) on Sunday defended former Vice President Joe Biden's record on civil rights after Biden said last week that he was "wrong" for speaking fondly of his working relationship with segregationists in the Senate. "His lifelong record of standing up and fighting for civil rights is what he should be judged on," Coons said of Biden, who caused controversy in recent weeks after speaking of the "civility" of his work in the Senate with Sens. James Eastland (D-Miss.) and Herman Talmadge (D-Ga.). Coons also defended Biden's failure to apologize when confronted on the issue in the first June Democratic primary debate, saying "one of the challenges of the debate stage is everybody's got 60 seconds to address very complex issues." "It's important that he gave a speech in which he acknowledged" the harm caused by the remarks, Coons added.

BENNET SAYS ECONOMY MAY NOT HELP TRUMP: Democratic presidential candidate Michael Bennet said Sunday that Donald Trump will not be able to coast to re-election on the strength of the U.S. economy alone, and will have to answer for his "war with American tradition" while in office. "I don't think it's been much better, Dana. I think it's been what it was: It's been fine, it's been good," the Colorado senator said of the economy during an interview with Dana Perino on "Fox News Sunday." "So it has improved, just as it's improved from 2009 when Barack Obama took over," Bennet continued. "What we don't need — in my view, I think — is a president who's so at war with American tradition.

HOUSE PREVIEW: The House will take up the 2020 National Defense Authorization Act — must-pass legislation that outlines defense budgets and policies, per a senior Democratic aide (4x/05). This legislation will take up most of the week given there are roughly 300 amendments to the bill. What to watch: The Iran-related amendments, as tensions rise with Tehran.

SENATE PREVIEW: The Senate plans to consider four tax treaties that were reported out of the Foreign Relations committee in late June, per a Republican leadership aide. The aide said the Senate will also confirm the following nominees in this order: Daniel Aaron Bress as a judge for the Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit. T. Kent Wetherell II as a judge for the Northern District of Florida. Damon Ray Leichty as a judge for the Northern District of Indiana. J. Nicholas Ranjan as a judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania. Robert L. King as an Assistant Secretary for Postsecondary Education in the Department of Education. John P. Pallasch as an Assistant Secretary of Labor. Peter C. Wright as Assistant Administrator in the EPA's Office of Solid Waste.

CHAMBER RELEASES GRADE REPORT: The Indiana Chamber of Commerce released its annual report scoring state legislators on how they voted on key business legislation in the recent General Assembly. For 2019, lawmakers' scores ranged from 27% to 100% (Kelly, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). "The Legislative Vote Analysis is how we hold lawmakers accountable for their voting records and is an important source of information for employers and citizens across our state," Indiana Chamber President Kevin Brinegar said. "The report's purpose is to keep Hoosiers informed about what's going on at the Indiana Statehouse and how their legislators are voting on issues vital to Indiana's economic future. This report makes it clear which legislators support pro-job growth and pro-economy issues and which legislators do not."

AGRICULTURE: HOOSIER FARMERS FACE MARKET, CROP VOLATILITY - A week after the controversial USDA acreage report, the market is turning to crop conditions. New numbers on just how much corn and soybeans have been planted this year will not be available until August. In the meantime, the weekly crop conditions ratings which are released every Monday afternoon will be the guiding force for market prices, says Bob Utterback, with Utterback Marketing (Truitt, Hoosier Ag Today). "We had a historically high amount of corn emerging the last week of June," he stated. "This means we have about 20 million acres of this corn that is very late, and we will need almost perfect weather from now on to get any kind of respectable yield." He added that the good to excellent ratings, which have been at very low levels, will have to start showing consistent improvement. But emergence and crop development are only part of the story. Mike Silver, with Kokomo Grain, told HAT a host of agronomic problems will continue to plague crops this summer, stating, "All kinds of agronomic issues are beginning to manifest themselves in the field, from nitrogen deficiency to shallow rooted corn to compaction issues." He said, for many growers, this is the worst year they have ever experienced. As a result, extreme market volatility is like to continue. Utterback said, "There is a lot more market volatility ahead of us. Farmers must position themselves to be able to handle this volatility and, yet, still be able to take advantage of rallies."

INDOT: I-65 CLOSURES IN INDY - he Indiana Department of Transportation will be continuing their roadwork on the city's south side next week, starting with lane closures on southbound I-65 (WIBC). July 12 @ 9 p.m. - July 22 @ 6 a.m.: All lanes of SB I-65 from the South Split to I-465 will be closed. July 26 @ 9 p.m. - Aug. 5 @ 6 a.m.: All lanes of EB and WB I-70 from I-465 to the South Split will be closed. Additional closures will be added on the weekends, according to INDOT. INDOT says the closures are in response to rain delays crews experienced in May and June.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP MAY USE EXECUTIVE ORDER ON CENSUS - Senior administration officials told me on Saturday afternoon that they expected the president to take executive action early this week to force the citizenship question onto the 2020 Census (Axios). Sunday afternoon, Trump spoke briefly to reporters as he was about to board Air Force One to leave New Jersey after spending the weekend at his Bedminster golf club. On the Census, he said: "We are moving forward. We have a couple of avenues." Trump also said Attorney General William Barr is exploring several options. "We can do a memorandum. We can do an executive order."

WHITE HOUSE: FACEBOOK, TWITTER EXCLUDED FROM SOCIAL MEDIA SUMMIT - The White House has not extended invitations to Facebook and Twitter to attend its social media summit on Thursday, people familiar with the matter said (CNN). The people, who spoke to CNN Business on the condition of anonymity, suggested it was not surprising. They said they believe the summit would amount to a right-wing grievance session and was not aimed at seriously discussing some of the issues facing large technology companies. A spokesperson for the White House declined to comment.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - Monday: President Trump will have lunch with VP Mike Pence and give a speech about "America's Environmental Leadership." He will also attend a dinner hosted by Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin in honor of the Emir of Qatar, Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad Al Thani. Tuesday: Trump will meet with Al Thani. Wednesday: Trump will speak about kidney health. Thursday: Trump will speak at the Presidential Social Media Summit.

PENTAGON: ADMIRAL POISED TO BE NAVY SEC RETIRES - The four-star admiral set to become the Navy's top officer on Aug. 1 will instead retire, an extraordinary downfall prompted by what Navy Secretary Richard Spencer on Sunday called poor judgment regarding a professional relationship (AP). Spencer provided no details about the unnamed individual, but other officials said Spencer was referring to [Adm. William] Moran having recently taken public affairs counsel from Chris Servello, who was removed from his position as public affairs adviser to Richardson in 2017 and given a non-punitive letter of reprimand for drinking and fraternizing with junior officers during and after a December 2016 Navy Christmas party.

JUSTICE: JEFF EPSTEIN ARRESTED IN NEW YORK - Federal prosecutors appear to have resurrected a federal sex crimes case against the billionaire financier Jeffrey Epstein by focusing on accusations that he sexually assaulted girls at his mansion in Manhattan — more than a decade after a widely criticized plea deal shielded him from similar charges in Florida (New York Times). Federal prosecutors are expected to unseal the new charges on Monday accusing Mr. Epstein, 66, of running a sex-trafficking operation that lured dozens of underage girls, some as young as 14, to his Upper East Side home, according to three law enforcement officials. He was arrested on Saturday at Teterboro Airport in New Jersey, after arriving on a private flight from France, two law enforcement officials said. The sex trafficking charges carry a combined maximum sentence of up to 45 years in prison.

OHIO: BILLS WOULD DECRIMINALIZE MARIJUANA - Bills working their way through the Ohio Legislature would reduce punishment for some drug crimes while favoring treatment over automatic prosecution (AP). The measures are part of a national debate over reducing prison populations while responding to the nation's opioid addiction epidemic. A proposal passed by the House last month expands the use of a program allowing judges to order treatment instead of prosecution for defendants facing low-level drug charges. Judges could deny treatment requests but would have to list reasons why they feel jail, fines or both are a better option. The legislation would also make it easier for Ohioans to seal records involving low-level nonviolent and non-sexual offenses to help them move forward with their lives. A pending Senate bill would reduce low-level drug possession crimes from felonies to misdemeanors, and also allow treatment instead of prosecution. The court could put the misdemeanor cases on hold until offenders undergo treatment. "And if they complete that treatment, then the case is never prosecuted, never part of that person's record," said state Sen. John Eklund, a Republican from Portage County and Judiciary Committee Chairman and co-author of the bill. "If they screw up, they'll be convicted or prosecuted on a unclassified misdemeanor."

SPORTS: U.S. WOMEN WIN WORLD CUP - The United States women's soccer team was as good as American players promised — maybe even better (AP). Especially Megan Rapinoe, the pink-haired captain who emerged with the Golden Ball as top player, the Golden Boot as top scorer and a world-wide stature as a champion for gender equity. The U.S. won its record fourth Women's World Cup title and second in a row, beating the Netherlands 2-0 Sunday night when Rapinoe converted a tiebreaking penalty kick in the second half and Rose Lavelle added a goal. Rapinoe scored in the 61st minute after a video review determined Stefanie van der Gragt had fouled Alex Morgan with a kick to the shoulder in the penalty area.

IRAN SURPASSES URANIUM LEVELS: Iran has surpassed the cap on uranium enrichment set by a 2015 nuclear deal with world powers, a spokesman for Iran's Atomic Energy Organization said Monday, warning that Tehran would take further steps to reduce its commitments under the accord (Washington Post). Speaking to local news agencies, Behrouz Kamalvandi said Iran has exceeded the 3.67 percent limit and was now enriching uranium at 4.5 percent, a rate far below the 90 percent needed to produce a nuclear weapon. He said, however, that there were no obstacles to Tehran enriching at even higher levels.

CITIES: PERU PD TO WEAR BODY CAMS - A northern Indiana city has become the latest community in the state to require police officers to wear body cameras. The Peru Police Department implemented its body-camera program last week after its Board of Works approved policies detailing the cameras' use. The Kokomo Tribune reports that officers must now wear a camera at all times and record every encounter they have with a citizen in the city of about 11,000 residents. Officials say the cameras will decrease resident complaints, use-of-force incidents by police and help the city avoid costly lawsuits. Peru Police Chief Mike Meeks says the department began considering using body cameras a few years ago, but pressed ahead after Indiana lawmakers passed new guidelines on their usage.

CITIES: ST. JOHN PAYS $200K TO SETTLE HARASSMENT SUITS - The town has paid $202,000 to two women to settle sexual harassment lawsuits, while a third woman's lawsuit remains pending in federal court, records show (NWI Times). The two settled cases led to former Cmdr. Michael Fryzel's retirement from the St. John Police Department in March 2015, days before the sexual harassment allegations the lawsuits detailed became public.

CITIES: TERRE HAUTE'S CASINO 'RACE' WITH DANVILLE, ILL - If there is a race between Terre Haute and Danville, Illinois, to see which city will be first with a casino, Danville is in the lead, a member of that city's casino steering committee said (Taylor, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). "As far as the timing perspective, I think so," said Vicki Haugen, president and chief executive officer of Vermilion Advantage, a business and economic development organization. Haugen cited the requirement for Vigo County voters to approve a Nov. 5 referendum before any casino plans can move forward. Illinois has no such requirement. But Terre Haute officials downplay the idea of a "race." Mayor Duke Bennett said the city is in a good position for a casino and industry observer Ed Feigenbaum, publisher of Indiana Gaming Insight, agreed. Solicitations of interest to prospective operators of a Danville casino went out Wednesday and responses are expected in about a month. An operator selected by the city must then apply for a state gaming license by Oct. 28.

CITIES: MICHIGAN CITY PD WANTS PLATE SCANNERS - The Michigan City Police Department is seeking permission from the city to purchase license plate reader technology as an additional means of combating crime (Michigan City News-Dispatch). Police Chief Mark Swistek asked the Common Council on Tuesday for just shy of $32,000 to purchase three Vigilant Solutions cameras to be mounted outside an unmarked police car. As that car travels, the chief said, the specially designed cameras would engage in a constant collection of data – from license plate numbers to vehicle makes and models, and more. The cameras also possess facial recognition abilities, but Swistek said the MCPD would not use them for that purpose. "As the vehicle travels throughout the city, the vehicle is recording data from every single vehicle that it passes on a roadway," he said. "If it is a four-lane highway, it will capture the majority of those vehicles as well. If the officer comes to a stop at a traffic light, anything that is nearby, it will record.

CITIES: KILROY'S TRIED TO REMOVE ALCOHOL CHIEF - Kilroy's on Kirkwood tried and failed to convince state officials that the Monroe County Alcoholic Beverage Board's president had been biased in her review of the popular college bar's liquor license, and that she should be removed from future proceedings (Christian, Bloomington Herald-Times). In April 2018, the local alcohol license review board responded to residents' concerns that Kilroy's promotes binge drinking and the objectification of women by renewing the bar's alcohol permit for one year instead of the standard two. Indiana Excise Police Officer Lonnie Gibson and Board Member Karen Howe Fernandez voted in favor of the probationary renewal, while Board President Kitty Liell voted to cut Kilroy's off from selling alcohol altogether. At the end of the hours-long meeting, Liell cited the hundreds of police calls to that bar as evidence of the establishment being a public nuisance.

CITIES: NASHVILLE HIRES CONSULTANT OVER TOWN MANAGER - The City of Nashville will not have a town manager for the foreseeable future (Turner, Indiana Public Media). Instead, the town council is hiring a consulting firm to handle the duties of previous town manager Scott Rudd. Rudd accepted a position with Lt. Governor Suzanne Crouch's office last year. Under the agreement, the town will pay MS Consultants $3,250 per month. Nashville Town Council President Jane Gore says the city is temporarily testing the agreement before signing a long-term contract. "We're kind of testing the waters and so far I think we're pretty comfortable with the results that we're getting," she says. "It's early on." Dax Norton is one of the consultants working with the city. He believes there are numerous communities across the state that are in need of strategic leadership. "How long have we been trying to answer the question of rural Indiana? I think upwards of 60 of the 92 counties lost population," he says. "Are we getting these communities prepared for a different economic future?"

Gary casino ready to Rock (Hard)?

Spectacle secures I-80/I-94 site; big name casino partner as well?

A bit of poking a round has revealed some interesting potential details about the off-footprint inland casino move within Gary by Spectacle Entertainment, LLC. Some of what we've learned can be gleaned from public records, but much remains speculative . . . though there is lots of loud local whispering.

Spectacle has formally filed an application for zoning with the City of Gary, seeking a resolution of support for a planned unit development, and seeking to get things tied down in advance of what will be a very busy meeting of the Indiana Gaming Commission on August 28 (that's where the draft sports wagering regulations are expected to be up for approval).

Back in 2011, when then-mayor Rudy Clay (D) was honchoing the push to move one Gary license inland – four years before land-based casino gaming was ultimately legalized – SB 41 was the vehicle, and it was authored by then-Sen. Earline Rogers (D) of Gary, with then-Sen. Luke Kenley (R) of Noblesville as second author, and Sen. Ed Charbonneau (R) of Valparaiso as third author. The bill was heard in the Senate Committee on Public Policy, and Gary city officials and their construction and financial advisors made a detailed presentation that outlined a new land-based casino located on the southeast quadrant of the I-80/I-94 (Borman Expressway) interchange at Broadway and 30th Avenue, a site that most have continued to assume was the City-preferred plot.

However, we've learned, the application for zoning calls for the new casino to be sited on privately owned land on the southwest quadrant of the Borman interchange at Burr Street, about 1½ miles closer to Chicago than the Broadway proposal. The site is also about 1½ miles south of the Indiana Toll Road and the Gary/Chicago International Airport.

The brownfield site (partially forested and partially a pair of cleared former industrial sites) is heavily traveled and highly visible from the Borman. New numbers released July 1 by the Indiana Department of Transportation reveal that the Borman Expressway in Indiana carries a prevailing annual average daily traffic (AADT) of 180,000, ranging from 170,000 to 200,000 vehicles per day. Passenger vehicles generally comprise 70% of the daily traffic stream, and 80% of peak-hour traffic.

The preliminary casino complex proposal sketched out for senators eight years ago included a pavilion, restaurant, parking facilities, and a performing arts theater. In its legislative presentations earlier this year, Spectacle had outlined a somewhat more extensive and detailed vision that also included a major hotel.

Word in the Steel City is that Spectacle has signed a letter of intent with Hard Rock International USA Inc. to have Hard Rock develop, brand, and manage the Gary inland casino. As we understand it – but cannot confirm – while Hard Rock would also brand a Vigo County casino if Spectacle is successful in landing the license, Spectacle would actually retain responsibility for developing and managing that West Central Indiana property.

Hard Rock could well be the value-added needed in Vigo County to discourage a high-profile operator from making a play in nearby Danville, Illinois – which is already setting its sights low, largely resigned to a small regional operator at best.

Cheap gas, cigs, and fireworks!

Could IL gas tax hike boost Lottery sales?

Expect Lake County sales for the Hoosier Lottery to take a jump in July as Illinois' 19¢ per gallon gas tax increase became effective July 1, and early anecdotal information suggested that lots of Illini drivers were headed east across the Indiana border to fill up.

The ubiquitous gasoline stations and attendant convenience stores just across the border have traditionally done strong gas and lottery business, and large stations along Indianapolis Boulevard in Hammond in particular have been major lottery retailers, initially as Indiana sold Powerball tickets when Illinois did not, and then more recently as gas prices and taxes in Illinois have edged up.

Since lottery purchases are associated with gas fill-ups, look for Indiana to pull in a portion of multistate draw game sales from Illinois.

The reopening in early July of 134th Street (also known as Boy Scout Road or State Line Road), a popular shortcut between Hammond and Chicago's southeast side (Hegewisch) may also boost sales; many on the Chicago side had used the pothole-pocked route to take a quick trip to Indiana to purchase gas and cigarettes.

Keep an eye on K&D Marathon in Hammond as the canary in the coal mine; while lottery sales there have lagged over the past three months, it could now be poised for growth.

Hard Rock operates venues in 75 countries, including more than 180 cafes, 24 hotels, and 11 casinos. Of those casinos, nine are in the United States, scattered across seven states from coast to coast (Iowa is closest to Indiana).

Having a big name like Hard Rock – which has not publicly kicked any tires to date in Indiana – on its side will allow the Gary property to better compete against (if not scare off) potential competition from the City of Chicago and its south suburbs.

Don't expect Hard Rock to be involved, however, in the operation of the current Majestic Star Casino boats (nor, apparently in a Vigo County casino); the former Centaur Gaming core team will continue to manage the two casinos at Buffington Harbor until the license is relocated (and then again if a new license is granted to Spectacle for Vigo County). Several key Centaur execs and managers had substantial full casino management experience, and the company ran a full-fledged casino (with a hotel) in Colorado in addition to the racinos . . . and the responsibility of operating a pair of parimutuel horse-racing tracks and satellite wagering facilities posed its own set of complicated management and operational challenges.

Assuming that Hard Rock does become formally involved, however, the company will brand and build the new Gary property to its specifications.

One of the specs, we hear, will seemingly not include the initially proposed hotel tower. The intervening Illinois gaming mega-expansion measure has created considerable uncertainty, and a hotel has apparently been deferred until a second phase. The picture should become clearer by year's end as to what casino operators will pursue a Chicago casino in what location, and who may also site a pair of smaller casinos in what communities close to the Indiana line – intelligence that is a condition precedent to a larger investment.

Speaking of the investment, despite the hotel tower apparently not being part of the initial project, the number being touted locally is still $300 million thanks to new expenses, additions, and features not initially contemplated. The hotel would boost the cost of the project significantly down the line, and this is in keeping not only with what we have seen in Indiana with initial casino complex investment projections always falling well below the final cost, but also what we have seen recently from the former Centaur team and their willingness to invest in upgrades at the two racinos.

We hear that the complex will include an entertainment venue (as originally envisioned in the 2011 plans, but not an item discussed in any detail in the 2019 legislative conversations).

This facility becomes more practical for and attractive to Hard Rock – which is identified with musical acts, exhibits, and live concerts – with the demolition of the Star Plaza Theatre in Merrillville, even though The Venue at Horseshoe Casino Hammond is being upgraded before Labor Day, and the City of Hammond continues to pump dollars into an increasingly popular outdoor facility at nearby Wolf Lake, which straddles the Illinois border.

The new facility would also include a sports book . . . and you should also expect the current Majestic Star Casino complex to add retail sports wagering once it becomes legal in Indiana.

What does surprise us is the seeming dearth of discussion between Spectacle and the Gary mayor-apparent, Lake County Assessor Jerome Prince (D) . . . though those involved in assorted local efforts suggest that he has not been brought into many pending projects.

That should not be a problem in the long-run, however, and though Prince did not weigh in on casino-related matters during his successful mayoral primary campaign (or since), no one suggests he will be an obstacle to a project of extreme importance and value to his city (and as county assessor, he knows how much value would be added to the tax rolls from a new inland casino complex in his city!).

Prince also had a private sit-down at Gamba Ristorante in Merrillville with several area mayors organized by Hammond Mayor Tom McDermott, Jr. (D) to discuss issues, process, and relationships . . . and gaming was part of the discussions among The Region chief execs.

In a perfect world, you might expect the new Hard Rock NWI (Da Region Hard Rock?!) to open by the beginning of 2021, but this is Lake County – and Gary – and things are complicated by the state of flux a few miles west in Illinois, so don't write the date down on your calendar with a Sharpie quite yet.

IN General

- On the day of the Indiana Derby at Indiana Grand Racing & Casino (for which former Indianapolis Colts Ring of Honor inductee Jeff Saturday will serve as the official chairperson), the Indianapolis Colts bring their new Colts In Motion traveling experience to Ellis Park, the Thoroughbred race track in Henderson, Kentucky, but north of the Ohio River, and a chip's throw from Evansville's Tropicana Casino. The high-tech 40-foot mobile unit debuted this month, and this will be only the fifth stop for the mobile exhibit that features experiences, history, and memorabilia. Colts In Motion includes state-of-the-art virtual reality, an interactive gaming center, and exclusive photo opportunities for visitors. By the way, Caesars Entertainment Corporation, the parent of Indiana Grand, is the first-ever Official Casino Sponsor of the National Football League.

IN Illegal Gambling

- Marion police report that they were called to a robbery on Monday, July 8, at approximately 12:27 a.m. in which a 52-year-old man in the 700 Block of West 1st Street reported that he had been running an illegal dice game out of his garage when he was robbed of more than $1,000 by three men. The alleged victim claimed that "a man known as 'Tre' grabbed a rifle from a shelf in the garage and pointed it at him," while another member of the trio "pulled out two handguns." He alleged that the three men "demanded the money bag," which he turned over to them, and then they fled. Marion Police Department Capt. Stephen Dorsey reports that the victim told police "the three men were regulars to the gambling in his garage."

● Looks like we finally have closure in Operation Grand Champion, a multi-jurisdictional federal dog fighting investigation which commenced in 2015. The last of 12 defendants convicted for their roles in multi-state dog fighting conspiracies were sentenced July 3 in federal court in Trenton, New Jersey. Among the final three (although sentenced at the end of May) was Dajwan Ware, 46, of Fort Wayne, sentenced to serve 24 months in prison. A federal court jury had convicted Ware last Fall of one felony count of conspiracy to violate the animal fighting prohibitions of the federal Animal Welfare Act after a three-week trial.

□ Operation Grand Champion resulted in the convictions of 12 defendants in four federal districts sentenced to a total of 315 months in prison. As a result of the investigation, 113 dogs were rescued and either surrendered or forfeited to the government. According to trial evidence and court documents filed in connection with the cases, the defendants and their associates regularly fought dogs – including regularly to the death – and repeatedly trafficked in dogs with other dog fighters across several states, including Indiana, so that those dogs could be used in dog fights. They also maintained significant numbers of fighting dogs and substantial dog fighting equipment. The case was investigated by the U.S. Department of Agriculture – Office of Inspector General, the U.S. Department of Homeland Security – Homeland Security Investigations, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

IN Sports Wagering

● The draft sports wagering regulations that we told you to expect in our last issue were soon thereafter posted on the Indiana Gaming Commission website with the expectation that stakeholders – who had already participated in roundtables with Commission staff – would offer any additional input by August 1, before the Gameboys consider the formal promulgation of the package at the August 28 Commission meeting.

□ This tentative timeline (and recall that sports age wri ng applications are already being accepted by the Commission) would allow sports wagering to be implemented – at least at the retail level – in time to meet the September 1 start date authorized by lawmakers. This means that Hoosiers could begin laying down bets locally on the opening weekend of the National Football League season, and key early collegiate football games . . . and be another feather in the cap for the Commission and its staff – given the extremely tight timetable.

□ As we told you to expect, the draft regs, which would be promulgated as emergency rules, benefit from two decisions: (1) Borrowing as much as possible from successful regulatory schemes in other states and not reinventing the wheel; and (2) Affirmatively postponing implementation of potentially more complicated mobile gaming rules to allow brick-and-mortar sports wagering to get underway on the authorized start date.

□ There are a few items of interest – both inclusions and omissions – that some have noted which could prove important going forward. While lawmakers punted on the use of official league or sanctioning body data and reserved the issue for the Commission – and some other states have required official league or sanctioning body data to be used for in-play and certain other types of wagering, the IGC package does not include requirement for the use of any official data to settle any type of wager . . . through there is also, of course, no ban on any such voluntary agreements being reached. The Commission reserves the right, however, “to disapprove of the source of data for any reason, including but not limited to, the type of wager and method of data collection.”

□ The aspirational emphasis on integrity becomes tangible with requirements for internal system integrity audits and the directive that each operator partner with an “independent integrity monitoring provider” – an independent individual or entity approved by the Commission “to receive reports of unusual betting activity from a sports wagering operator for the purpose of assisting in identifying suspicious wagering activity.”

□ Since there is a requirement that “All independent integrity monitoring providers shall share information with each member and shall disseminate all reports of unusual activity to all member sports wagering operators,” you should look for the Sports Wagering Integrity Monitoring Association (SWIMA), a collective organized late last year by a diverse coalition of industry stakeholders, to be responsible for that function.

□ The draft regs also provide that “a sports governing body may request” that the Commission “prohibit a particular event or making wagers of a particular type upon a demonstration of good cause.” The rules as drafted say “To demonstrate good cause, the sports governing body should provide, in writing, information that indicates a specific and credible threat to the integrity of sports wagering which is beyond the control of the sports governing body to preemptively remedy or mitigate,” and such requests “should” be submitted at least 72 hours before the event. Some suggest that this provision could be used by, for example, the Indianapolis-based National Collegiate Athletic Association to seek such a ban when Indianapolis hosts the NCAA men’s basketball Final Four in (next scheduled locally for an eighth time in 2021 and again in 2026) – or even the 2020 Midwest Regional. However, the Commission would be empowered to evaluate whether other remedies exist that would mitigate the potential threat.

□ In terms of financial integrity, a sports wagering operator will be required to “maintain a cash reserve of not less than the greater of $500,000 or the amount necessary to ensure the ability to cover the outstanding sports wagering liability.”

□ There will also be a self-restriction program for potential problem gamblers (for one year or five years) similar to the current casino system, and operators will be required to prominently feature responsible gambling information, including a direct link to the Indianagamblinghelp.com website and other internet resources dedicated to helping people with potential gambling problems as directed by the Commission; a link to the self-restriction program; and “A clear statement of the online sports wagering operator’s policy and commitment to responsible gaming along with a link to the sports wagering operator’s specific self-exclusion program.”

● Some intelligence for you on early plans by Caesars Entertainment Corporation for sports wagering at its two casinos, two racinos, and three satellite wagering facilities:

□ Horseshoe Casino Hammond is already in the process of moving slot machines on the casino floor and will begin constructing walls this week for a 5,300 square-foot sportsbook on the casino floor. Seeking to capitalize on the foot traffic, the facility will be sited in a highly visible location at the base of the escalator to The Venue, where the promotions desk had been situated.

□ Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana, as we told you, is planning for and starting the build-out of a sportsbook in its new Caesars Southern Indiana land-based facility, but until that venue opens, short-term plans all for a facility on the casino vessel in the gaming area.

□ Indiana Grand Racing & Casino will be expanding its Winner’s Circle Brewpub & OTB in the heart of the casino to include a sports book . . . while Harrah’s Hoosier Park Racing & Casino will incorporate a sports book into the grandstand.

□ The trio of Caesars satellite wagering facilities in New Haven, Clarksville, and Indianapolis will all be configured to feature sports books. While Caesars officials acknowledge that it is “a heavy lift” to even get seven such facilities up and running by the anticipated September 1 start date of legal sports wagering in Indiana, “We would love to get the two unused OTBs up and running,” says Dan Nita, the Caesars regional president. We had told you during both the sale process from Centaur Gaming and the legislative debate on the sports wagering bill that there was significant interest on the part of Caesars in revisiting the OTB licenses gathering dust. Nita says that while Northwest Indiana remains attractive to the company (Hoosier Park once operated a Merrillville OTB, while Indiana Grand’s predecessor owner ran one in Evansville), decisions will be made on supply and demand and legislative efforts (local legislative bodies must approve such facilities). He hints that a new OTB could be located in a community which has not previously been home to such a facility, but confirms that no legislative bodies in any such community has yet been contacted.

● Don’t be surprised to learn that Chicago-based Rush Street Interactive (RSI) is applying for an Indiana sports wagering license. RSI is an affiliate of Neil Bluhm’s Rush Street Gaming, which has developed and operates Rivers Casino in Des Plaines, Illinois – the biggest current competitor to Horseshoe Casino Hammond – as well as casinos in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, and in Schenectady, New York.

● Majestic Star Casino is now offering high-limit blackjack 24 hours per day.

● Spectacle Entertainment, LLC quietly closed the $17 million hotel at Majestic Star Casino effective July 1. Despite its lakefront location, the hotel never was a particularly valuable asset for the casino (there was never any serious talk about branding it as a Trump property when Trump Entertainment, Inc. operated one of the two casinos at Buffington Harbor), and as the 300-room lodging facility, which opened in September 1998, physically deteriorated in recent years, the feedback from patrons and online reviews also fell precipitously.

● Expect Majestic Star Casino to soon complete some upgrades to what used to be its “front door,” and begin to encourage patrons to park on the surface lot and enter the pavilion via the porte-cochère.

● More “casino cafes” could be popping up just across the border in Illinois. In 2015, Will County (read: Joliet) enacted a freeze on the expansion of video gaming terminals in unincorporated areas. At the time, a small number of establishments that already had the devices were grandfathered in. On July 18, the Will County Board is scheduled to vote to lift the ban on new video slot machines in the unincorporated regions . . . which happen to adjoin south Lake County in Indiana (from about the latitude of Schererville to the north to Lowell to the south).

● Hammond Republicans scrounge up a challenger to Hammond Mayor Tom McDermott, Jr. (D), who seeks a record fifth term. Edward Lipkovitch, Jr., (R), a 37-year-old engineer who ran for the Hammond City Council as a write-in candidate, is the GOP standard-bearer. The Hammond native is, like Mayor McDermott, a Navy veteran. On his WJOB 1230-AM radio show, Mayor McDermott blamed Governor Eric Holcomb (R) and former Rep. Dan Dumezich (R), now of Schererville, for recruiting his opponent. Mayor Tom believes that his public criticism of new casino investor Dumezich (Spectacle Entertainment, LLC) and the Governor’s political ties to casino investors led to the GOP filling the vacancy.

● Illinois has already missed the first legal deadline in its new gaming law. The Illinois Gaming Board was to have selected an independent consulting firm by July 10 to examine “the feasibility of, and the ability to finance, a casino in the City of Chicago” . . . but the state contracting procedures had not yet been completed by press time, and the process was already behind schedule, a positive for Indiana (the firm selected for the study has only until mid-August to complete its work under the terms of the organic law).

● Prosecutors in Hamilton County, Ohio (Cincinnati) indict five people involved in an alleged check fraud ring, charging them with theft of more than $1 million dollars from Fifth Third Bank, as well as money laundering, telecommunications fraud, and forgery.

□ Between May 17, 2018 and June 28, 2019, the four men and one woman are alleged to have deposited bad checks into various Fifth Third Bank accounts. Before the checks cleared, the suspects would withdraw the funds from Fifth Third Bank ATMs, Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg, Belterra Park in Cincinnati, JACK Cincinnati Casino, and check-cashing establishments.

□ The Ohio Casino Control Commission took credit for uncovering and investigating the activity, assisted by Fifth Third Bank and the Cincinnati Police Department.

● In Blevins v. Gaming Entertainment (Indiana) LLC, et al., No. 4:17-cv-00083-TWP-DML, Judge Tanya Walton Pratt of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana rules on three motions in limine (legal motions which seek to limit or prevent certain evidence from being presented by the other side at trial) filed by Rising Star Casino • Resort in a lawsuit brought by Tammy Blevins who alleged that she fell from a stool while gambling at Rising Star and suffered an injury. She claims Rising Star was negligent in failing to take steps to protect her, as an invitee, from being injured due to a dangerous stool.

□ At the time of the incident, Blevins's daughter, Stephanie Blevins, was with her at the casino, but Stephanie testified that she did not see what caused her mother to fall as it was happening. Rising Star filed motions to "Exclude Lay Opinion Testimony of Stephanie Blevins," to "Limit Plaintiff's Testimony," and to "Prevent Introduction of Incident Reports for Prior Accidents." Blevins did not respond to the motions in limine.

□ With respect to excluding testimony of Blevins's daughter, "Stephanie testified in deposition that she did not see what caused her mother to fall as it was happening. Rising Star seeks to exclude the unsupported and uncorroborated lay opinions of Stephanie, regarding the issue of causation. Since federal rules of evidence only permit a witness to testify to a matter of which she has personal knowledge, 'she is not qualified to give lay testimony,' and 'The Court will exclude Stephanie's testimony at trial as it relates to alleged design or style defects to the stool Blevins was sitting on.'"

□ The Rising Star legal team also "anticipates that Blevins will offer testimony or argument that the stool she was seated on was 'wobbly' or 'unstable'," and "seeks to limit and/or preclude testimony or argument regarding the condition of the stool at the time of the incident because no evidence has been presented demonstrating the stool was in fact, 'wobbly' or 'unstable' at any time prior to the fall. When asked if she noticed the stool to be 'wobbly' before sitting on it, Blevins admits she did not There may be inconsistencies in how Blevins described the stool, however those inconsistencies go toward the weight and not admissibility of this evidence. Court finds that Blevins possessed the personal knowledge required" to comply with the rules of evidence. "Blevins' testimony that the stool was wobbly is based on how the stool felt when she sat on it and when she fell off of it. The Rules of Evidence allow Blevins to testify about her experiences as she perceived them."

□ Finally (and we've omitted some internal citations here), Blevins' exhibit list includes 14 incident reports "associated with other injuries incurred at Rising Star's casino which detail accidents in which other guests of the Defendants' casino fell while using stools provided by the casino," while "Rising Star argues the prior incident reports and associated summaries and statements (1) constitute inadmissible hearsay, (2) are not relevant, and (3) are inadmissible under Federal Rule of Evidence 403." Judge Pratt finds that "The incident reports here were compiled by emergency medical technicians employed by Rising Star, who spoke with the guests at the scene of an incident to determine if they needed medical assistance, and to inquire as to the cause of their accident. However, Rising Star is not in the business of security, nor does it provide investigatory services. Rising Star is not in the business of providing medical treatment for people who sustain injuries on its premises. Rising Star is a casino, whose incident reports are made ... only when an unusual accident occurs. Because they were made in anticipation of litigation by an employee of the defendant business, and they are not made regularly the incident reports appear to be inadmissible hearsay and as such are not admissible at trial." As to relevance, "Rising Star argues that any purported evidence that guests fell from a stool other than the stool upon which Blevins was sitting should be excluded because it is not relevant Blevins does not allege that all stools at the casino were defectively designed, nor does it specify that all stools that appear similar to the stool at issue are dangerous," but "that her particular stool presented an unreasonably dangerous condition which caused her injury, and Rising Star negligently maintained the premises by failing to remove it The prior incident reports are probative of the fact that Rising Star negligently maintained the premises of the casino. Within a ten month period from July 11, 2014 to April 25, 2015, Rising Star had a reported 14 instances in which an individual fell from a chair on the premises. Although in some instances the chairs were deemed adequate, other chairs were pulled from the floor after the staff determined they might be defective. These incidents might alert Rising Star that some of its chairs may be dangerous. Because the evidence may be probative of the fact that Rising Star knew it had defective chairs on its casino floor, the Court will not exclude the prior incident reports" Rising Star argues that if the incident reports are not inadmissible hearsay and are deemed relevant, they must still be excluded from evidence because their probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice to Rising Star. According to Rule 403 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, the court may exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of one of the following: unfair prejudice, confusing the issues, misleading the jury, undue delay, or needlessly presenting cumulative evidence. Rising Star argues that Blevins has not asserted that Rising Star was on notice that each and every one of the stools was dangerous based on the incident reports she intends to introduce as evidence. And it argues that admission of such evidence would prejudice a jury because the similarity between stools described in the incident report and the stool at issue in this case is so great. It appears that the reports are inadmissible hearsay as they consist of employee-generated reports made with the knowledge that the incident may result in litigation. Although the prior incident reports are relevant, and the prejudice associated with them does not clearly outweigh their relevance, the incident reports are inadmissible hearsay"

IN Vigo County Casino News . . .

● The Vigo County Election Board approved the inclusion of a casino referendum on the Fall ballot in Vigo County, which means that not only city and town voters, but also those in jurisdictions without any municipal elections, will have a reason to vote on November 5 (the Vigo County School Corporation also decided last week to add a property tax hike referendum of its own to the ballot, which could complicate turnout patterns). To facilitate voting, the board also added four more additional vote centers (to the regular 10) outside the limits of the City of Terre Haute – one at each point of the compass – including one in Seelyville and one in West Terre Haute to accommodate more exterior county residents, and ensuring that no voter will be more than a 15-minute drive from a regular polling place or vote center.

□ Two centers will open 28 days prior to the election, six more will open one week prior to election day, and all will be open on November 5.

● Backers of a casino in Vigo County are anxiously watching developments in Danville, Illinois – their big competition of sorts – as Danville seeks to be first to the gate in all aspects of the process. While Danville has chosen a casino process facilitator and solicited expressions of interest from potential operators, that facilitator is a local entity with no significant gaming industry background, and even though the timetable there seems accelerated, you should anticipate a problem finding a top-tier operator (unlike Indiana) as other more attractive opportunities are open to operators in Illinois, and the process will get stalled at the state gaming board level while umpteen new applicants are reviewed statewide . . . and Danville also will not be first in line. And did we mention that the Illinois Gaming board chair resigned earlier this month and the governor there must also appoint other new board members? Terre Haute should not be overly concerned if the Indiana process proceeds apace as we expect.

● Expect Spectacle Entertainment, LLC to contribute to the newly formed Advance West Central Indiana (AWCI) political action committee in Vigo County, which will be active in the pro-casino referendum campaign . . . and you should also keep an eye on the PAC's coffers for an indication as to whether any other casino operators – particularly Full House Resorts, Inc. – choose to make any similar investments. Bear in mind that the proverbial movers and shakers of the Terre Haute community are behind Advance West Central Indiana, and as casino operators and key officers and investors are barred from directly contributing to candidate campaigns, this is a good alternative way to cash in some political capital.

□ On Tuesday, the entity launched a CasinoTerreHaute.com website as well as a fundraising effort for the referendum campaign. The site also seeks volunteers for phone banking, yard signs, door-to-door campaigning, writing letters to the editor of local papers, and working on election day.

□ The AWCI website claims that a new local casino will generate 150 construction-related jobs and 300-400 new jobs; create “millions of dollars in economic growth”; offer “nearly $500,000 per year in new money for Vigo County schools”; and be responsible for “increased tourism which supports local businesses and generates tax revenue.” The group envisions a “$100-$150 million construction project” and expects “nearly $500,000 per year for the West Central 2025 initiative,” a regional economic development program.

● Is Caesars Entertainment Corporation now interested in extending its Indiana empire to include Vigo County? “We can’t comment on that,” Dan Nita, the Caesars regional president, told us Thursday.

Hoosier Lottery

● We're picking up indications that the Hoosier Lottery ended the 2019 fiscal year with a strong sales month in June, pushing overall sales for FY 2019 to a new all-time record high of more than $1.3 billion.

● The Hoosier Lotto jackpot for Saturday, July 13, grew by the minimum increment of $300,000 to $41.8 million, adding to the most lucrative top prize up for grabs in the hometown draw game in close to 12 years. The jackpot topped $40 million on June 22, a key milestone because – as we've reminded you – that's also the starting jackpot amount for both Powerball and Mega Millions. That means the Hoosier Lotto would feature a larger jackpot than either Powerball or Mega Millions the next time one of the multi-state draw games resets – a rare occurrence that last happened more than three years ago.

□ The jackpot has now grown at the minimum rate of $200,000 on Wednesday and $300,000 on Saturday in all but two of the draws since mid-May. By comparison, the jackpot increased by greater than the minimum in eight of the 11 draws before that. The jackpot growth of $1.6 million seen in the three-draw period beginning with the draw last Halloween has not been matched since then – and typically has been only about one-half as much. The last three Hoosier Lotto draws have increased by a total of just the minimum: $800,000.

□ The current jackpot is the largest available since the game's matrix changed in May 2014 (the previous high under the revised format was the $25.5 million jackpot of October 14, 2017). The all-time record is $54.5 million from November 7, 2007, so we're still another 20 weeks or so away from potentially making history. Second place is much closer: $42.0 million won on June 5, 1999, an amount which could be overtaken as soon as Wednesday, July 17 if players remain "unlucky" (there have been 4,692,755 winning Hoosier Lotto tickets of some sort sold since January 1). The current jackpot has been growing since February 10, 2018, so it has now gone unclaimed for more than 17 months.

□ As it has since the draw dated April 10, the Hoosier Lotto jackpot currently ranks as the nation's fourth-largest domestic jackpot, trailing only the two multistate draw games and California's SuperLotto Plus. The Hoosier Lotto jackpot had ranked third-largest from January 24 until April 10 when the Golden State game posted a $34 million jackpot compared to Indiana's $33.7 million stake.

□ The California SuperLotto Plus jackpot for the drawing scheduled on Saturday July 13, is $61.0 million . . . and that jackpot is far higher than it has been in many months as well.

● Receipts for the month of June show that Silver Express in Indianapolis maintains the lottery sales lead for a 10th consecutive month, and continues its remarkable run of not having been lower than first or second statewide since a third-place finish way back in November 2015.

□ Silver Express had held the top spot statewide during a strong run from December 2015 through October 2017 and now again from January through June. Southside Marathon LLC in Fort Wayne – which has been steadily on the rise since January – moved up into second place from its fourth-place finish in May. MCR Short Stop in Portage slips by one place into third after three months of posting its highest ranking since we started monitoring retailer sales in detail in 2013.

□ Troy Foods Inc. in Indianapolis, which had placed first or second in each month since it transitioned from Buck's Market ownership in the mid-July 2018 buyout (and had largely been on the podium with Silver Express for years before the change), dropped to third place in February and maintained that position through May until the June numbers dropped it down into fourth place. Troy had jumped from 10th to first in August 2018 following the ownership flip one year ago. The Troy Foods predecessor, Buck's, had finished first in June 2018. Bolton Tobacco & NASCAR at West Morris and South Belmont streets just south of I-70 in Indianapolis rockets into fifth place – a completely new face in the top 10 list since we started recording the numbers in 2013. A fifth place showing is a feat for a first-time entrant.

□ Plainfield Dairyland slips off the leader ladder for only the third time in 19 months displaced by Bolton Tobacco & NASCAR. The Hendricks County venue first fell off the list in February after 15 consecutive months of top 10 showings, then regained a 10th place position in May before being ousted once more.

9 (3) K & D Marathon - Hammond	7	9	4	5	5	5
10 (6) Phillips 66 - Indianapolis	6	5	5	6	4	4

□ Lucky's Mart LLC in Speedway moves up three slots into sixth place, sitting one rung higher than it reached in June 2018, but down three places from its all-time high of third in August 2018. The Hen in Crown Point takes seventh place in June, its best showing since a peak of fourth place in October 2018.

□ Grand Food Junction dropped down into eighth for June, a low point since November 2018 when it vaulted into fifth from a 10th place finish in the prior month. K & D Marathon, adjacent to the Illinois state line in Hammond, slides back down two places into ninth where it stood in April – the lowest position on the top 10 rubric it has seen since we began keeping detailed track of sales rank in 2013. Phillips 66 in Indianapolis also dropped several places, finishing in the number 10 spot for the first time since February 2018.

□ Only four different counties are represented among the top 10 retailers for June, down from five in May and six back in February – creating one of the least diverse groups of counties earning top 10 honors that we can recall. Five of the top 10 retailers can also be found in Marion County, the first time that any county has had more than four stores in the top honors since we began keeping close track in 2013. Allen County and Lake County tie with two retailers each, while Porter County maintains its average showing of one retailer in the top 10 ranks.

□ The respective properties are touting minimum pay of $20 per hour (base + tokes) through December 31, 2020, "which would be the combination of the hourly base wage for hours worked and tips calculated monthly" . . . with more pay for experience. New dealers start at a $5.00/hour base + tokes, with "knowledge pay" added to base pay for every game the new dealer successfully learns – Blackjack (25¢); Craps (50¢) and Roulette (25¢). They are also offering medical, dental, and vision benefits; bonuses; a 401K program match; tuition reimbursement, on-site wellness programs, and team member dining rooms.

□ Dealer schools will begin mid-September and typically run four hours per day, five days per week. Each school will be about 10-12 weeks in length. Each dealer school will include training on one or two games, depending on the game. Additional schools will be offered for other games.

IN Bingo and Charitable Gaming

● On July 3 the Indiana Gaming Commission officially promulgated a set of emergency rules regarding charity gaming to effect the mandates in the new charity gaming code overhaul under HEA 1517-2019 (and the smaller revisions made under SEA 393-2019).

□ New guidance from the Indiana Gaming Commission reminds charity gaming organizations that they can now apply for and receive a two-year gaming license to conduct annual casino game night activities, but "after the organization has received a two-year gaming license, they must still, on a yearly basis, submit, maintain, and complete all required financial and other reports, and pay an annual fee as set by rule of the Commission. Failure to correctly file the required reports and pay the annual fee may result in disciplinary action against the organization up to and including suspension of the approved two-year gaming license [emphasis in original]."

● Between June 10 and July 13, the Indiana Gaming Commission Charity Gaming Division staff had scheduled 10 training sessions on the new charity gaming law in seven different cities across the state.

IN Horse Racing & Racinos

● The Grade III $500,000-guaranteed Indiana Derby attracted 41 nominations for the 25th running of Indiana's richest horse race on Saturday, July 13 at Indiana Grand Racing & Casino. Of the horses nominated, 10 three-year-olds competed in at least one of the Triple Crown races in 2019 leading into the Indiana Derby.

● Indiana Grand Racing & Casino and Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino are running radio spots in Central Indiana seeking dealers for their table games when the two racinos go live with table games on January 1. The spots tell prospective dealers, "we'll pay for you to attend dealer school," with the associated website explaining that those who are not currently a Caesars Entertainment Corporation team member will be paid $7.25 per hour to attend with a bonus if they successfully pass the school and complete 90 days of employment.
